

MINUTEMEN BEGIN 2008 CAMPAIGN. PAGE C1 | SUMMER MUSIC FESTIVAL COVERAGE. PAGE B1

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 88 LO: 59 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | BACK TO SCHOOL FALL 2008

Like it or not, first year housing invoked

BY STELLA CERNAK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Over 4,000 freshmen will become acquainted with the University this week, bringing to the forefront an issue that has both plagued and pleased many of the University's older students for years: all-freshmen residence halls.

Once a housing option for freshmen living on campus in years past, all-freshmen residence halls are a required living arrangement for all of this year's first-year students.

According to the University's director of news and information Ed Blaguszewski, UMass has gradually implemented its plan of having all first-year on-campus students living together over the past five years.

This is apparent to senior and Student Government Association President Malcolm Chu, who, like many of the University's upperclassmen, saw the number of all-freshmen residence halls climb first hand from four halls in 2005 to 15 halls this year. Five of these halls — Cance, John Adams, Mary Lyon, Crabtree and Knowlton — became first-year-only this semester.

Newly elected Chu and his running-mate and current SGA trustee Lindsay McCluskey have taken a hard stance against making the first-year halls a requirement. Last year, the two tried to stop the University from implementing the policy but saw no success.

"I feel personally pretty strongly that it [required all-freshmen housing] limits choice, limits our ability to have a say in where we live. We should have a choice to live in freshmen housing – it's not for everyone," Chu, who lived in a first-year hall his freshman year, said.

Sophomore Yurleni Velez, who lived in an all-freshmen residence hall last year, agreed.

"From my experience people tend to be inconsiderate and loud. Freshmen tend to be less mature than people from a higher school level. Immaturity plus immaturity equals more immaturity."

Despite Chu and McCluskey's efforts, UMass Residence Life expanded the first-year hall program

See FRESHMEN on page A4

UMass freshman Ariel N. Hendershot, center, stands outside Butterfield with family members Gary Hendershot, left, and Scott Hendershot, right.

Cheers, Dr. Cole

UMass president Jack Wilson addresses a crowd gathered at former interim chancellor Thomas Cole Jr.'s farewell dinner. Administrators spoke on his short, but well-regarded, time at the University.

The last minute chancellor leaves University amid praise of his administrating efforts

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A year has past since Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole stepped onto a campus with a steep learning curve and little room for error. Now, new chancellor Robert C. Holub, faces much of the same as he makes UMass a more permanent home.

While Cole was only at UMass for a short time, his connection with many of the faculty and staff was evident, with over 100 people showing up this past July for his official going away event.

Among them were UMass president Jack Wilson, interim vice chancellor for student affairs Esther Terry, Domenic J. Sarno and even sign guy — yes, that sign guy. He came to cheer, with a signature sign that said "Team Cole" and sported a large No. 1.

Nobody had anything but praise for Cole, who, as Wilson explained, was thrust into the position near the beginning of the school year, as time was running out for UMass.

"The overwhelming sentiment is you would be hard pressed to find someone better," said Terry in her speech.

Nearly all the speakers mentioned Cole's wit and willingness to listen to concerns.

"If you look up gentleman in the dictionary, you'll find a picture of Thomas Cole," said Sarno, who called Cole a "kindred spirit."

Here, Cole continued the Amherst 250 plan, which calls for the hiring of 250 more professors. Started in 2006, Cole said he was most proud of continuing that project.

Terry also mentioned how connected Cole was to the students. She recounted how, when Cole was at the NIT cheering on the UMass Basketball

See HOLUB on page A4

MASSGrant budget increased, PHENOM looks for more

BY LISA DEBENEDICTIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This summer, Massachusetts' public schools received new plans for a progressive future and immediate aid to public higher education, ones that could result in changes at the University of Massachusetts.

On June 23, Governor Deval Patrick revealed his strategy to reform the state's approach to public education. For the state's colleges and its university network, education professionals look to incorporate 21st century skills into higher education to prepare students for careers in the global economy. It includes an increase in need-based financial aid beginning in 2010, the potential for accelerated graduation and early entry into college for eligible students and even a long-term plan for free community college.

Additionally, a proposal was passed on May 28 to increase, by $3 million, the state-funded financial aid program, MASSGrant.

The locally-based Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts [PHENOM] views the moves as a step in the right direction. PHENOM, founded in 2007, worked to add an amendment to increase MASSGrant, even organizing a spring rally and lobby day at the State House.

"It is significant, especially in a year where most budget lines are being cut and few are being increased," said Ferd Wulkan, Lead Coordinator of PHENOM. "It means that more students will be able to access MASSGrant."

Wulkan said it will help a number of students but added it is a small move in what needs to happen to make higher education more accessible.

"Every year, the Board of Education looks at requests. The MASSGrant wasn't providing a whole lot for the students who need it most," said Lindsay McCluskey, a UMass student and member of the Board of Directors of PHENOM.

The group proposed an increase of $17 million, citing the dramatic effects more money could have on the program.

"We organized campaign meetings twice in person and also

See STATE on page A4

Vassell pretrial postponed

New attorney forces early semester date

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jason Vassell will now have to wait a bit longer to learn his fate.

Vassell, 23, charged with aggravated assault with a dangerous weapon after a Feb. 3 incident on the University of Massachusetts campus, walked into Hampshire Superior Court on July 24 expecting a trial date and to be one step closer to his freedom.

But the court appointment lasted just minutes, as the pre-trial date was moved to Sept. 8 at 2 p.m. An attorney in the District Attorney's office took over the case a few days prior, necessitating more time and the later date.

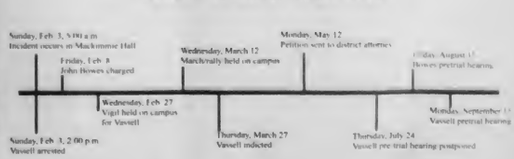
Vassell did receive good news, though. His curfew was eliminated, which allows the former University of Massachusetts student to work mornings. The DA's office had no objection.

At the new pre-trial hearing, any outstanding discovery issues will be addressed, the status of both sides in regards to trial preparation will be assessed and any pre-trial motions will be heard in before Judge C. Brian McDonald. Also, a trial date will tentatively be set. Vassell's lawyer, David B. Hoose, expects that to be sometime in Nov. or Dec., perhaps later.

The courtroom was at full capacity during the short hearing, and a group of over 100 supporters convened with Vassell, his family and his lawyers afterward in a separate courtroom to discuss the case. Vassell's sister, Tiffany, spoke briefly and thanked those in attendance.

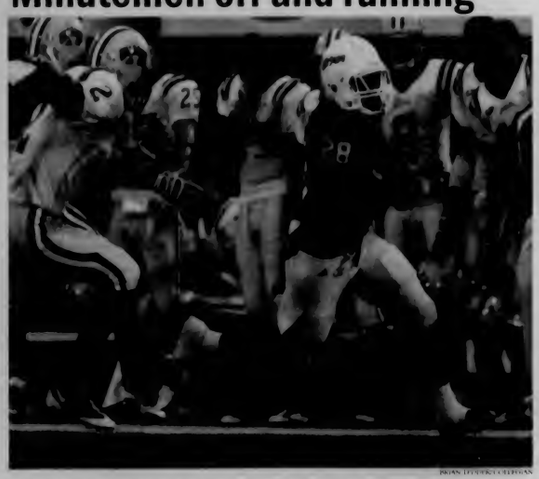
"It means so much to have all of you here," she said crying. "The past seven months have been difficult, but we've been pulling through. We'll just pray that you guys continue to support us because we really need it."

The incident, which occurred at approximately 5 a.m. on Feb. 3 at Mackimmie Residence Hall in Southwest, ultimately resulted in two arrests. Vassell was arrested about nine hours after the incident, while John Bowes, 20, was later charged with assault and battery with purpose of civil rights violation. Jonathan Bosse, 19, was never charged.



Bowes and Bosse, both Caucasian non-UMass students, allegedly started yelling racial epithets at Vassell, an African-American. They then gained unwanted access into Vassell's dormitory, and a

See VASSELL on page A4



Jason Vassell stands next to his sister Tiffany Vassell, front, at a meeting following his court date.

JASON VASSELL TIMELINE

Minutemen off and running

BRIAN LITCHFIELD/COLLEGIAN

UMass tailback Tony Nelson is chased by Albany's Jean Juste, front left, in the second quarter of Saturday's the Minutemen's 28-16 win over the Great Danes. Check page C1 for complete coverage.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
BACK TO SCHOOL ISSUE
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasetczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COMICS EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Gerber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenowsky
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mulholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kozwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Waxman
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cernak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Turtunen
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAYS THROUGH FRIDAYS DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED FIRST PLACE BY THE ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS FOR GENERAL EXCELLENCE EACH YEAR SINCE 1984. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITORS
Michael King, Joe Meloni

COPY EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan, Kate Olesin

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

ADVERTISING PRODUCTION
Katherine Shea

UMPD prepares for worst

University of Massachusetts Police Department Officers Brian Kellogg, rear left, and Sean Ward, rear right, demonstrate a room-entry, while Allen Silva, left, holds Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald, front right, hostage.

UMass Police Department officers Brian Kellogg, Sean Ward and Randy Kershaw, front to rear, prepare to enter a classroom where Aleen Silva simulates a hostage situation.

By Adam Coulter
Collegian Staff

In the face of violent outbursts at UMass and other college campuses the University of Massachusetts Police Department conducted "active threat training" this summer.

Nationwide and locally, the past two years featured shocking campus violence. From the Virginia Tech shooting, which attracted the international press, to instances at UMass, this reality signaled a need for a multifaceted approach to curbing the dangerous trend.

Former Virginia Tech student, Seung-Hui Cho, killed 32 people and wounded scores of others before killing himself. In his wake, the school's administrators were criticized for failing to notice Cho's bizarre behavior, and questions were asked concerning how Cho was able to carry out two separate attacks that day, hours apart. Reports from public and private groups detailed campus police's response and shocked many who read them.

The UMass campus experienced its own scares this past school year. A concentrated number of them occurred in a three-week period in February. Besides the expected misdemeanors such as property damage and graffiti, there were assaults, two separate stabbings, an attempted rape and an attempted murder.

"I've been on campus 20 years and we still see the trends of graffiti and destruction of property," said UMPD Deputy Chief of Administration Patrick Archbald. The minor offenses will likely continue, so the UMPD entered the Isenberg School of Management early in June to begin training to prepare for more serious circumstances.

"Active threat training" is not a new exercise. It goes back roughly five years. But the unpredictability of burgeoning crimes makes clear a need to adapt police strategies.

"We did this exact training in the Mullins Center in 2002 and 2003, but what we did post Virginia Tech was to involve the whole department," said Deputy Chief Archbald. "Before it was just the tactical team, but Virginia Tech taught us that you can't wait for the tactical team. Research has shown, a shooting happens in minutes, and you have to have vital officers available. You have to have every officer available and ready because the shooter will act quickly without much notice."

The training was held in Bartlett Hall last year with 63 officers participating and 3-to-4 officers instructing groups of between 5- and-8 people. The same number applied this year, but as two UMPD deputy chiefs agreed, the training should be, and is, different each year.

"This is an opportunity to refresh and reinforce skills and to train, and the utilizing of different buildings on campus is good for officers to become familiar with the whole area," said Deputy Chief Johnny Whitehead.

Archbald added, "Every closet and every cubby represents a challenge to officers. We utilize everything, and we are refining and building on skills from last year. We are basically adding to the diversity of the training."

While no "active threat" instances have occurred at UMass, there were two stabbings last year might have required the acquired skills.

"These were the two closest, though the situations were well contained, and officers were on scene immediately," said Archbald. In late April, students in a Journalism 300 class asked then-Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole Jr. to comment on the campus crime. He told them "UMass is like a small city; and for a small city, the crime experienced is relatively normal." Deputy Chief Archbald agreed with Cole's statement and revealed a plan for possibly curbing some campus problems this year.

"We are working with the freshman class closely. With a class of 4,000-5,000, it's a much larger size than where they're coming from," he said. One of the lessons taught is how the entering class can best protect themselves in a new, larger environment.

"We work on setting expectations when students arrive," said Ed Blaguszewski, the University's public information officer, when asked about the collaboration.

Two tools in use this year are the Subscription Text Message Service and the "Party House Bylaws," — a result of the spring initiatives. The text message service was introduced and tested last April and will be in operation again this year.

"In the fall there will be an aggressive enrollment campaign to grow the number of participants," Blaguszewski said. As of this past April, 4,000 people were registered.

To deter off-campus crime, administrators are hoping new "Party House Bylaws" will help to quell violence's effect on campus. The aim is to hold the owners of off-campus houses more accountable for parties through legal sanctions.

"All of us are part of the community, and when off-campus parties are held, our responsibility doesn't end," said Blaguszewski.

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

UM alumnus named new director of Stockbridge school

By Katherine Nethert
Collegian Staff

The Stockbridge School won't only be welcoming a new academic year this September, but after a two-year national search, the school chose alum William L. Mitchell to be its new director.

Mitchell earned both his undergraduate and graduate degrees in landscape architecture from the University and is being awarded the Fred P. Jeffrey Professorship, which is supported by an endowment by Alpha Tau Gamma. The endowment was named for the school's director from 1954 to 1971 and ensures that Stockbridge School will always have a director.

After graduating from the Department of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning with a master's in landscape architecture in 1975, he worked as an associate professor of landscape architecture at the University of Maine.

Mitchell first learned about the position at Stockbridge when he attended a meeting at Michigan State University in the spring of 2007 at which Stockbridge Professor Michael Davidsohn mentioned that there was going to be a national search for a new director. For Mitchell, this was a dream come true.

"I was sitting in Dean [Jack] Denison's office just before I left for my new job at UMaine when he asked me what my long-range goals were," Mitchell said. "Without thinking and in jest, I said, 'I want your job.' Well, it never entered my mind that I would return someday to my alma mater as the Assistant Dean/Director of the Stockbridge School."

Associate Dean of the College of Natural Resources and the Environment Martha Baker worked as the interim director for the past two

See STOCKBRIDGE on page A5

New Stockbridge director, William L. Mitchell

'Welcome' waiver helps combat vets

By Josh Walovitch
Collegian Staff

Over 1 million troops have served in Operation Enduring Freedom since 2001, and upon their arrival home these soldiers are expecting reasonable compensation in return for honorably serving their country.

This past June, the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees approved the "Welcome Home Waiver Program" in hopes of aiding the education of Massachusetts' veterans who have served in combat since Sept. 11, 2001.

Veterans who are accepted into the university become eligible for an annual mandatory fee waiver of up to $2,000 for a maximum of eight semesters.

Additionally, the United States government provides compensation in the form of the GI Bill. The original GI Bill was first drafted in 1944 by the American Legion to honor those who fought in World War II.

"The GI Bill enabled me to attend college at the Illinois Institute of Technology for free, which would have been tough to pay for on my own," said Staff Sergeant Leon Poteshman, who served overseas during World War II.

Recently, modifications have been made to the GI Bill in an attempt to improve its educational benefits. The new GI Bill increases payment rates, extends the expiration date and provides other additional benefits.

Several veterans who attend UMass do so with the aid of the GI Bill.

"After my second tour overseas, I was ready to go to college," said UMass senior and Staff Sergeant Solomon Black. "Attending college would allow me to be a more productive member of society."

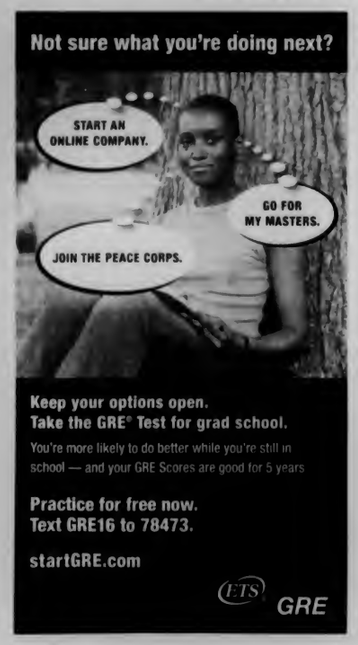
Black, who is currently benefiting from the GI Bill, is receiving $1,250 a month and will continue to as long as he is enrolled as a full-time student, which require a minimum of 12 credits per semester.

It is estimated that since 2001, some 26,000 Massachusetts residents have been in active duty and are potential candidates to qualify for benefits similar to Black's.

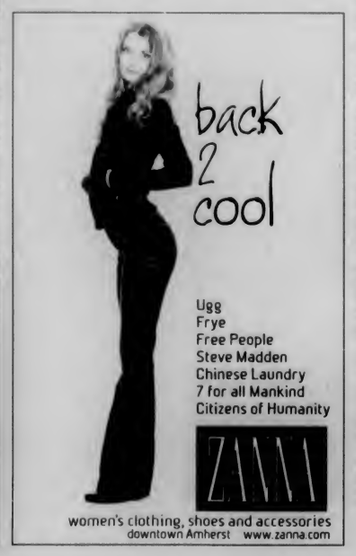
Aside from all the beneficial modifications of the new GI Bill there are still some returning veterans who are weary of its flaws.

"The MGIB is a fantastic help, and now with the new 21st Century GI Bill signed into law these benefits will only get better. But as I said, the initial sticker shock of college, even a state school, was not something I was ready for," said UMass junior and Lance Corporal Jacob Petrie.

College may still be difficult to afford because the GI bill payment rates are intended to cover undergraduate tuition rates, which means that veterans who plan to attend graduate school will need to pay the difference of the costs, something some veterans cannot afford. Additionally housing stipends are not available for students taking non-traditional classes.



The new GI bill has payment rates that are based on a soldier's length of post 9/11 service. An active-duty veteran who served five years in the military, only 14 months of which occurring after 9/11, will only get 80 percent of the new payment rate.



"The education benefits and the chance to attend college while I serve was a big attraction," said Mathew Turner, currently a Cavalry Scout. The terrorist attacks of 9/11 inspired Turner to stand up and defend his country.

Turner was promised a $6,000 enlisting bonus, free tuition to state colleges and universities and the 1606 Reserve GI Bill. Turner has since received all of these benefits.

"Though I have been very fortunate in receiving the educational benefits that were provided to me through my service in the Massachusetts Army National Guard, there have been friends of mine from other branches of the service that have not been as lucky," said Turner.

Josh Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@student.umass.edu.

UMass researchers don thinking caps

By Stephanie McPherson
Collegian Staff

Most students know that the University of Massachusetts has a reputation for partying. That number is declining, however, as about a dozen schools do so harder than UMass.

What some students may not know is that while the party rank is declining, UMass is becoming more well-known for another, very different reason. Over the past few years, due to a combination of its research facilities and faculty, UMass has made a respected name for itself in the world of research.

"We are a world-class research intensive university," said Paul T. Kostecki, the Vice Provost for research at UMass.

UMass is not only world class, with a number of departments consistently ranking in the top 20 in the country and world, according to U.S. News and World Report and the Institute for Scientific Information, among other organizations. Its research efforts cross both state and international borders.

There are UMass geosciences faculty members working in Eurasia on the climate change issue. Researchers are also developing radar that will detect weather and atmospheric events that are occurring at and below 1,000 feet above the ground. Other sensors only look at these factors starting at 1,000 feet. This closer look at our atmosphere and weather patterns could help weather experts predict tornados and other severe weather events.

People are also trying to develop nanotechnology-based detectors, which are microscopic sensors that will sense when a machine is going to break down. Work is also being done on the folding of proteins in the brain, which is the cause of diseases such as Alzheimer's and Mad Cow disease.

Projects are generally determined by funding. An agency will put out a project proposal with a given amount of money, and researchers find the projects that best suit their own skills and those of their laboratories.

Because agencies gear their preferred projects toward issues of national interest, the main effort of recent years is clean energy and the life sciences.

"When people get interested in things that benefit society, what tends to happen is those funding agencies budgets tend to go up," said Kostecki. "If [there's] an outcry for looking for new fuels or homeland security, then what you see is an increase in funding."

With an increase in funding comes an increase in research and development. Even though community interest in general is increasing in certain key social issues, the funding UMass is enjoying isn't there for all universities.

"This year our counterparts at other New England state universities are all experiencing declines in research activity, and we actually have increased," Kostecki said. "I believe it's [because of] our reputation and speaks to the high quality of researchers we have."

With that high quality, there is research occurring in both the hard (physics, chemistry) and soft (linguistics, sociology) sciences. The highest number of dollars, however, goes toward life sciences and alternative energy.

Two examples of ongoing energy research based out of UMass are the "Q-microbe" and wand blades. Most of the research for the "Q-microbe," whose scientific name is Clostridium Phytofermentans, was done in 1998 by microbiology professor Susan Leschine and her research assistant Thomas Warnick. They discovered a microscopic organism that can transfer plant matter into ethanol, a substance that can be used as a biofuel, without excessive expenses or use of heat.

With the research conducted by Leschine and Warnick, the Amherst-based company SunEthanol was created to further production of this "Q-microbe."

Wind turbine blades have been in the public eye for a long time, and according to Marla Michael, the director of Research Liaison and Development at UMass, said in an e-mail that UMass is home to one of the best facilities in the country for this type of research.

"The Wind Energy Center (renamed from the Renewable Energy Research Lab) is one of the premier research centers in the country on this subject," she said. "With continued support from the campus, the Mass Tech Collaborative's Renewable Energy Trust, and the Dept of Energy, the WEC is continuing its efforts with towns to erect turbines (particularly Hull) and educate the next generation of mechanical engineers for this exciting technology."

Michael said the University research department tries to steer clear of specified themes, allowing the faculty members to focus on the research and not try to mold their efforts to fit into the theme. There are, however, some links between the projects, which are highlighted in each year's research report.

"The theme for the FY08 report is 'Connections,'" she said. "The report is ... focusing on faculty members' research that connects the campus with the community, between disciplines, with industry, with other countries, etc."

With the current energy crisis, Gov. Deval Patrick's recent signing of a $1 billion life sciences bill and UMass' upholding its reputation as one of the foremost research universities in the country, the theme of "connections" is one any department can embrace.

"We're certainly doing research on this campus that has global ramifications," Kostecki said. "Anything you can think of, we probably have some work being done."

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@dailycollegian.com

Oxford seminar founder, 84, dies earlier in summer

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

Ernest Hofer, founder of the Oxford Summer Seminar, died this summer in Brighton England at 84 years old.

He was a retired associate head of the English department at UMass where he began teaching in 1964. In 1966 he started the Oxford Summer Seminar, a program that sends students to the University of Oxford to study for the summer in small classes with world class professors.

This program was one of the first U.S. programs at Oxford, which now hosts around 30 such programs, according to Jen Adams, current director of the seminar and assistant professor in the English department.

"[Hofer] continued to run it for 27 years, and he was instrumental at getting high-profile faculty to teach for the Seminar," said Adams.

Frank Hugus, associate provost and director of the International Programs Office, said Hofer was always very supportive of the university's international programs. "He helped this campus become much more internationalized," Hugus said in a UMass news office press release.

Hofer was born in Morristown, N.J., and he spent most of his early years on Staten Island, N.Y. He attended Brown University, where he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa and earned an A.B. and M.A. in English. He received a B. Litt. from Oxford University, where he was a Fulbright Scholar in 1952 and earned a Ph.D from Cornell University in 1960.

His academic career began in Heidelberg, Germany, where he was an administrator for the University of Maryland's overseas program for American service men and women in Europe and North Africa. At UMass he taught classes on Henry James and modern British fiction. He also served as associate dean of Humanities and Fine Arts.

"I'm honored to be directing the program that he founded so many years ago," said Adams, "and I feel confident that it will survive for decades to come."

Plans are in the works for a memorial service sometime this fall.

Ben Williams can be contacted at bwilliams@dailycollegian.com

Hofer founded the Oxford Summer Seminar as a member of the English Department.

Vassell awaits his day in court

New pretrial set for early Sept.

VASSELL from page A1

fight followed that resulted in a broken nose for Vassell pocket knife stab wounds for Bowes and Bosse.

Bowes's charges were reduced to a charge of a civil rights violation. He faces a December trial in Belchertown District Court. The D.A.'s office will likely need Vassell's cooperation to prosecute the matter, but Hoose is advising his client not to do so.

"Frankly it's nothing more of a sham of a prosecution. It's a joke," Hoose said. "I can't think of a more wrong-headed, indefensible decision by a prosecuting authority that I've seen in 28 years.

"We would cooperate if the D.A. would re-assess who the criminals are in this case."

According to Hoose, much of the incident was caught on tape by dormitory surveillance, leaving some aspects of the case clear in his mind. Vassell was minding his own business in his dorm room when Bowes and Bosse started yelling at him through his window. Hoose said they entered the dormitory with intent to follow through on their threats, they struck Vassell first, and when Vassell tried to hide behind closed doors, Bosse and Bowes continued the attack.

"All that should be enough for the prosecutors to take a look at and realize that they've got things backward," Hoose said. "The Commonwealth of Massachusetts is making a grave mistake. I can honestly not imagine what is going through their minds.

"We're working hard but unfortunately we don't have a lot to show for it at this time."

At the end of the approximate 30-minute meeting, Hoose asked the gathering to consider what the prosecutors would do in this case if the races of the people involved in the incident were reversed.

"We all know that it would be handled markedly different than this case has been," he said.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Holub starts as head

HOLUB from page A1

team, he learned a student committed suicide on campus. Rather than attend his scheduled meeting in Boston, Cole returned to campus and met face-to-face with students.

The crowd gave him a standing ovation when he ended with, "Thank you all for your support and for coming today and most of all for your love for UMass. Go UMass."

To follow that act Holub will have to put in quite a performance, but he certainly has plenty of opportunity on his plate to show he is a leader with the kind of vision UMass is looking for.

He showed glimpses of what is to come at his first address to the campus last spring.

"Public higher education, in my view, is the most powerful dimension of the American Dream, which allows individuals with talent and ambition to achieve success no matter where they start in life," said Holub, who went on to address number of issues that raised concerns for students and faculty.

Holub also looks to continue the Amherst 250 Plan, which has seen mixed success.

There has also been significant progress made in fundraising both by Chancellors Cole and Lombardi who got alumni and other donors to support the campus.

There has also been an influx of money and infrastructure aimed at advancing UMass as one of the top research facilities in the world, which in turn bring in more money and professors. At many of the open meetings held last year by the chancellor search committee, faculty stressed the advancement of UMass as a research facility as one of their top concerns.

Holub expressed his feeling that no antagonism exists between great teaching and research.

"More often than not, I think that the people that are doing pioneering and cutting-edge work in their fields are better teachers because they're very excited about the research and very excited about communicating it to students," he said.

There are also continuing conflicts with graduate students, who held protracted contract debates last year and with undergraduate students who held and organized a two-day boycott of classes this past November. Both are looking for cooperation and openness from the chancellor.

S.P. Sullivan contributed to this story.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliams@dailycollegian.com.

UMass President Jack Wilson greets new chancellor Robert C. Holub earlier this year.

Freshmen move in despite mixed reviews on housing

FRESHMEN from page A1

this year due to positive feedback it received from freshmen who participated in the program in years prior.

"At UMass Amherst, and throughout the country, students have found that when they live and study together they do better academically, form lasting friendships and have a more satisfying college experience," Blaguszewski said.

This was certainly the case for recent UMass graduate Richie Kenney, who worked as a Resident Assistant in a first-year hall and lived in one of the halls his freshman year.

"The first-year experience halls are most definitely a positive experience for the students. For many of them this is their first time away from home, so having other students around them that are experiencing somewhat of the same emotions and experiences is greatly beneficial for them," he said.

He also admitted that had he not lived in a first-year hall, where he established strong friendships his freshman year, he would have had a very rough sophomore year.

Although forming strong social ties is a large part of the first-year residential experience program so are academics. Most floors in the all-freshmen halls are also Residential Academic Program floors, where students with similar majors and academic interests are grouped together. These floors also feature live-in peer mentors, older students who the University trains to help freshmen with academic and personal issues.

Despite recognizing the benefits of the University's expanded first-year program, Chu feels that the first-year hall requirement still lacks what he believes is an important part of a students' experience at the University: choice.

"When you force people to live in certain kinds of housing, you're taking away our choice and our ability to take control of our spaces. Dormitories are becoming less our space, which outweighs any benefits that I can see," he said.

Sophomore Emily Cutts, who lived in Van Meter, an all-freshmen hall, as a resident last year and as a peer mentor this year, disagreed.

"I think that an all-freshmen dorm is the best decision for the first-year students. Many freshmen are not sure what exactly is offered in the dorms and still cannot necessarily make the most informed decisions for themselves. My freshman dorm allowed me to create a base for myself from which I could branch out onto campus and make the most of my first year at UMass."

Stella Cernak can be reached at scernak@dailycollegian.com.

PHENOM looks for state to deliver on higher ed reforms

STATE from page A1

through e-mail and over the phone. And we had students with us who have powerful stories. They talked about the ways they pay for their education, the loan amounts they'll have when they graduate," McCluskey said.

She added many students limit their career goals according to the amount of aid they receive and the education they can afford.

PHENOM spoke on its affecting the Education Action Agenda's policies toward public higher education.

"We certainly support the higher education aspects. As a matter of fact, the idea for free community college; PHENOM put that out there and he [Patrick] adopted that. But we do take a different twist – it should also be two free years at public colleges," said Wulkan.

The goals of the Education Action Agenda exude confidence and promise. Its slogan reads: "The New Promise of Public Education: Ready For 21st Century Success"

But Wulkan looks for the state to deliver on it.

He said the program can be very successful, but financing it is the problem.

"It will come down to taxes, and this legislature has been awful on taxes. Massachusetts has this reputation as "Taxachusetts," and that is really not true. People support taxes on education," said Wulkan.

McCluskey said the plan looks strong, but the senior looks for quicker results.

"We need swifter action. I do applaud his initiatives especially the plan for free community college and increased access to college. He [Patrick] is prioritizing education in a big way," added McCluskey.

Shelley Etkin, a UMass sophomore who plans to pursue a career in teaching public education, also supports the efforts of Patrick and PHENOM.

"There is a severe and unfortunate lack of funding and support for public education, college students and education in general in the history of Massachusetts," Etkin said.

She said Patrick is addressing this reality and has good ideas that she hopes will create major change in education.

"I am very pleasantly surprised and relieved, by his plans for revitalizing and supporting education, particularly public education. He says that he believes that 'education is society's great equalizer,' and I completely agree that it has the potential to be that," Etkin said.

Despite these goals and PHENOM's continued work on improving public higher education in Massachusetts, its cost, UMass included, continues to rise. Currently the state budget for financial aid is $83 million, which covers an average of 4.8 percent of a student's bill. The major grant program awards around $780 per student.

Suzanne Peters, UMass' director of Financial Aid Services, said the state funding for the MASSGrant program increased for 2008-2009, but details as to where students will see the increase are still unavailable.

"Regarding the governor's Education Action Agenda, we will have to wait to see the details regarding the increase in need based financial aid for [fiscal year] 2010. Hopefully this will have a positive effect on UMass-Amherst students," she said.

"There can never be enough [state funding for financial aid]," Peters said.

She added that while the state has done little to increase funding for MASSGrant, which made it difficult for families to cope, it should be noted the University has increased its funding of need based aid each of the last five years.

UMass indeed increased funding, fitting part of the bill from its own pockets. Doubling its direct aid to students over the past five years, UMass now gives $24.6 million, while the amount it gets from the state budget has remained at $7.4 million.

With nine of PHENOM's long-term goals ultimately being free public higher education, Wulkan emphasized his belief on the importance of increased state funding.

He said because schools take money from of their own budgets, fees increases are the unfortunate result.

"I think part of it [the lack of state funding] has to do with how many private colleges there are in the state and that fewer legislatures have gone to public schools. I think another is just choices that have been made and in particular that Massachusetts used to have this reputation that taxes were higher. So they cut and cut, and the whole tax budget is dramatically underfunded. As a result, higher education gets the short end of the stick," he said.

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebened@student.umass.edu.

Gov. Deval Patrick on Founder's Day last year. He released his public education reforms this summer.

THE COLLEGIAN'S "OLD NEWS"
-a Friday Podcast featuring the week's highlights, hosted by MDC editors and guests

Better
It's what we do...

Helping you feel better...
- routine, same-day and urgent medical care
- mental health care
- eye care and optical services
- physical therapy
- acupuncture
- mind/body medicine
- specialty care
- allergy clinic
- full-service pharmacy
- faculty/staff assistance program
- onsite laboratory and radiology services
- and more

Helping you live better...
- health education
- substance abuse prevention programs
- tobacco cessation
- nutrition and eating disorders services
- athletic health services
- travel medicine clinic
- support and therapy groups
- volunteer, outreach and academic opportunities
- online health information, resources
- big discounts on eyewear, pharmacy products and more

Taking better care of you...
- college health specialists
- convenient campus location
- open 24/7 during the semester

University Health Services
577-5000 • www.umass.edu/uhs
UMASS AMHERST

Smith's gift bails out Noho

By Adam Coulter
Collegian Staff

In response to reports that the city of Northampton's public schools will encounter a considerable budget shortfall this next fiscal year, Smith College recently announced a one-time gift of $100,000 to provide time and support for a strategic planning process that aspires to improve the schools.

The Northampton Mayor's office released the FY2009 Budget, and according to the accompanying online Mayor's message, the city will receive $600,000 fewer in school aid this year than in 2003. Northampton Public Schools are proposing a reduction in teachers, aids and custodians, the message reads.

"The state has really put us behind the eight-ball by cutting school aid," said Northampton Mayor Mary Higgins.

But amidst the deluge of negatives, the one-time gift from Smith College has meant the salaries of three teachers.

Smith College President Carol T. Christ said, "From the beginning, Smith College's founders envisioned a college integrally linked to the life of the city." The offering of free college-level courses to be taken at Smith is one such program. "They've done a good job partnering with the high school, allowing classes to be taken at the college has been a home run for the kids," said Mayor Mary Clare Higgins.

In the May 28 letter, Christ wrote that by providing the gift, a pressing social need for Northampton is being addressed.

But the chief purpose for the money is the development of a rigorous planning process geared toward the strengthening of the public schools.

Those involved include a parent and a teacher from each school, as well as six community members and the mayor.

"This will primarily help to reduce class size at the elementary level," said Mayor Higgins.

In giving the city a gift of this size, Christ writes in her letter, "We affirm that supporting K-12 education is your highest priority now and for the near future."

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

Mitchell heads Stockbridge

STOCKBRIDGE from page A2

years and assisted in the candidate selection process.

"Bill brings enthusiasm and experience to the Stockbridge School," Baker said. "As a graduate of Landscape Architecture at UMass Amherst, he is returning to his alma mater, and I know he is excited about his new position and is looking forward to working with students, faculty, alumni and industry members."

Steven D. Goodwin, dean of the NRE said Mitchell is an excellent choice to lead the Stockbridge School.

"Over the past few years, with the support of Stockbridge School alumni, the college has been able to build an endowment to support the director as part of a campaign we called 'Stockbridge Forever.'"

He said the endowment allowed the school to conduct a national search for a new director this past year.

"Hill has years of experience as the director of the Landscape Horticulture Program at the University of Maine. He has a real feel for the aspirations of our students and for the needs of agriculture and the green industries in New England," said Goodwin.

Aside from Mitchell's personal goal to sell his home in Maine, he said his most important as director is "to develop a strong network with the UMass community, alumni and supporters of the Stockbridge School and UMass."

He said his most significant contribution is his relationship with students.

"There's a lot of inspiration that goes unseen when you develop those relationships with the student body," he said. "A lot of success happens that way."

Mitchell didn't dream of becoming a professor at first. In fact, when he graduated from the undergraduate program in 1973, it was the last thing in his career plans.

Mitchell started as a teacher's assistant in the department and enjoyed working closely with students and professors, who quickly became mentors and encouraged him to pursue graduate school. Things shifted from there.

"My department head at the time was Ross Whealy, who encouraged me to take a number of courses in education and hooked me up with Bob Sinclair," added Mitchell. "While this was happening, Jack Dennen, Dean and Director of the Stockbridge School hired me as an instructor to teach a number of courses in the Landscape Operations program. During my last year as a graduate student/instructor I was the recipient of the 'Outstanding Professor' award for the academic year 1974-1975. Having professors in my life as a student at UMass who believed in me and gave me the opportunity to 'test drive' a profession totally changed my career goals."

Katherine Neubert can be reached at kneubert@student.umass.edu.

Nightlights a fixture at McGuirk

More evening games expected to brighten future of football

By Gisel Saillant
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts got its own "Friday Night Lights" for this semester as McGuirk Alumni Stadium readied itself for more nocturnal activity.

The summer project, headed by Facilities and Campus Planning, featured the installation of Musco Light-Structure-Green stadium lighting fixtures.

According Shane R. Conklin, deputy director of Facilities and Campus Planning, the "green" lighting system saves energy, by allowing light levels to be adjusted. Conklin said that everything depends on the needs of the activities. Practices and night games require different levels of energy ranging in kilowatt demand between 87.58 to 247.11 kilowatts per hour, he said.

The lights were ready for kickoff Aug. 30 and, according to Athletic Director John McCutcheon, are expected to set a trend of more frequent night games.

"Having permanent lighting will make night games and late afternoon games possible on a regular basis. We anticipate a combination of day, late afternoon and evening games in future schedules," said McCutcheon.

Energy efficient does not mean cheap, he added.

"The installation, which includes significant upgrades to the lighting around the stadium and infrastructure, is estimated to be approximately $1.8 million.

McGuirk Stadium did not have permanent lighting previously. Temporary lighting structures have been used in the past, however.

Funding sources for the light are being sought from private and public sectors.

If money is available, McCutcheon said there are more improvements to be made to the support building, locker rooms, rest rooms, meeting spaces, concessions areas, press box and parking lots of the stadium.

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu

McGuirk Alumni Stadium received new lights this year that will enable the University to host night games. Formerly, temporary lights did the job, but these energy efficient fixtures are permanent.

for breaking news.
dailycollegian.blogspot.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

BACK TO SCHOOL FALL 2008

"FREEDOM OF SPEECH IS OF NO USE TO A MAN WHO HAS NOTHING TO SAY ..." - FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Blamin' the name

S.P. Sullivan

Would a state university by any other name still smell as cheap?

That's what University of Massachusetts-Amherst officials are asking themselves and the alumni who have a staked-interest in increasing the value of their diplomas.

Recently arrived Chancellor Robert Holub and other top UMass administrators are examining what impact the hyphenated "UMass-Amherst" name is having on its national image.

In short, UMass is having an identity crisis of Prince caliber.

This August, the state university formerly known as UMass-Amherst began to consider sexing up its image, according to a recent Boston Globe article.

It is well known that UMass Amherst is moving up in the world, despite its reputation as being the last resort for in-state students or the big mistake for out-of-staters ("You mean it's not in Boston?"). It is no surprise then, that alumni and administrators have begun scratching their heads trying to figure out how to make UMass look like the Best Research Institution. Ever.

And the quickest way to do that, apparently, is to copy the big guys: The University of Michigan and Penn State. What towns are they located in? It doesn't matter, because you'll find them. They're among the Best. Research. Institutions. Ever.

But bear in mind that this name change idea is from the school that brought you "New Dirt," those scattered piles of earth that sit for weeks around campus — one of which is currently sprouting vegetation in front of Morrill Science Center.

Here's a thought: if it supports life, it ain't that new. These people are no good at calling it like it is, let alone naming things.

I'm not convinced that any name change is going to elevate our prestige. If anything, being pegged with "Amherst" causes outsiders to confuse us with Amherst College. That's name recognition, for a couple grand less than the kids at AC are paying.

Of course, the town of Amherst doesn't carry the kind of name recognition as the host cities of other major public institutions, such as the University of Tennessee-Knoxville, UC Berkeley or the University of Texas-Austin. Outside New England, not a whole lot of people have heard of UMass' hometown.

In fact, anybody outside the Bay State pronounces the 'h' in Amherst, as well as all of the letters in "Worcester."

I'm from New Jersey and some of my friends still ask me, "How's Boston?" whenever I'm home. How's Boston? Why not ask the kids at UMass Boston, who don't seem to have any insecurities about being tied to Bean Town?

UMass is having an identity crisis of 'Prince' caliber.

Then again, their school isn't vying to be the Best. Research. Institution. Ever. Though technically, they're paying for UMass Amherst too. Thanks, taxpayers.

The school itself seems unsure as to what it's called. Perusing the UMass Web site, one finds "The University of Massachusetts Amherst," "UMass," "UMASS" and even the typographically unsightly "Umass." Most schools go by several different names, and the Globe story was the first place I can recall seeing "UMass-Amherst" — hyphenated in all its glory — as the preferred term of reference.

Of course, if you didn't read The Globe article on the controversy, this is probably the first you've heard of it. UMass undergraduates weren't asked their opinions on the matter over the summer, though I'm sure everyone got their bursar bills.

UMass administrators don't ask undergrads anything until they go on strike. Then they ask: Why the hell are you striking?

I did ask some undergraduates, getting them where I knew I'd have their undivided attention: their Facebook news feeds.

I conducted a painfully unscientific Facebook poll to test the waters of this experiment in nomenclature. The responses ran the gamut from "who cares?" to support of keeping the Amherst in the name by virtue of the fact that it tells you where the place is.

Perhaps former Collegian staffer Chris Martin put it best when he said, "a keg by any other name is still going to end up at UMass," which totally infringed upon the pun I worked so hard on to begin this column.

Mr. Martin has a point, though. Regardless of what the name of the institution is, if the numbers don't show promise, the money and top-notch students won't pour in as hoped.

The issue made a splash in the blogosphere, where asinine arguments reign supreme, finding its way to the Penn State section of College Off The Record, or Collegeotr.com, a collection of school-specific blogs. One anonymous poster pointed to USNews' 2008 college rankings, which put UMich at 25, Penn State at 48 and UMass at 96.

"Gotta do more to improve academics and reputation than change your name," the poster said.

Ouch, Anonymous.

It hurts, but it's true.

I say the Amherst stays, and let's clean up our image elsewhere. Like the Campus Pond, for starters.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com

An American student in Cairo

Greg Collins

One group of people hail primarily from the Middle East, they commute to school in a dirty, dusty, smelly city of 20 million people and eat falafel and shawerma daily.

The other group of people come from all over America. They live on or right off campus, and their dietary patterns are dictated by Pita Pita and Domino's "5-5-5." deal.

At first glance, there is a distinct contrast between the former — the student body at The American University in Cairo (AUC), where I studied last spring — and the latter — the students at the University of Massachusetts Amherst.

Among the most obvious of the differences is the religious factor. The vast majority of AUC students are Sunni Muslim, the predominant branch of Islam in Egypt.

Here, of course, there are a variety of religious sects practiced openly and promoted by various student organizations, such as Islam, Catholicism, Protestantism, Orthodox Judaism and Reform Judaism.

In addition, many females at AUC wear hijabs, the veil worn over the shoulder and hair, as a sign of modesty. While here clothes of both males and females are worn more liberally.

Most AUC students commute to school by either a family car or by a driver hired by their family to transport them (many of the cars these drivers operated were the Jaguars of the Middle East in comparison to the dilapidated taxis I rode in frequently).

At UMass, students are required to live on campus for their first two years, and then they can choose whether or not to live off campus.

AUC students were among the most privileged people in their age group in the Middle East. Many of their parents were diplomats or held high positions in lucrative Gulf oil companies, enabling students to travel around the world to places like the United States, Russia and Australia.

The sad reality was that many other Egyptians and Arabs did not have the same opportunities as these students because of the limited socioeconomic freedoms in the region.

In contrast, UMass students come from all different socioeconomic backgrounds, one of the truly great virtues of state institutions and an indication of America's healthy social mobility.

The fact that your parent is a diplomat or truck driver does not hinder your ability to do well in grade school, be accepted to this University and flourish academically.

The fact that your parent is a diplomat or truck driver does not hinder your ability to do well in grade school, be accepted to this University, and flourish academically.

The fact that your parent does not have connections with the federal government does not mean that you won't have educational opportunities at UMass, or at any other American university for that matter.

Yet by no means do these differences cloud the similarities both student bodies hold. Even though they do not do it as often as students at UMass or other American universities — AUC students do drink and party.

I remember one anecdote from a friend who explained how she and some of her friends had drank toilet-papered a house and to her dismay, had been caught by her parents.

If there ever were a universal principle applicable to the behavior of college students of all different ethnicities and religions, this is it: we are very smart, but sometimes we are also very dumb.

AUC students loved American pop music. In particular, they were fond of overly sentimental tunes, such as Celine Dion and the whole Titanic soundtrack (all male readers, join me as I shake my head in disgust). They also enjoyed hip-hop and R&B.

But the most important difference between the two student bodies is that AUC students did not study in an environment which fostered a free flow of information.

For example, at a school considered to be the most prestigious in the Middle East, and one which is funded by USAid, I rarely heard professors or students praise the American government or military, much less Israel. Both countries undoubtedly deserve to be criticized for some of their actions, but they also deserve to be commended for other actions.

Yet even though I heard criticism leveled at both countries daily, rarely did I see a professor or full-time AUC student challenge the common assumption held there that the American government is evil and its soldiers are terrorists.

This lack of debate reflected largely on professors' dictation of class discussion and selection of course readings skewed toward one political perspective. To be sure, UMass suffers from a politically-correct, intellectual environment also, but it is nothing in comparison to what I experienced overseas.

So to incoming freshmen and returning upperclassmen, cherish the opportunity to study at UMass. And of course, count your blessings that you can eat at Pita Pit. I got sick of shawermas after a while.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

"THE YAK" NEEDS A HOST!

The Daily Collegian presents UMass Yak Back! on UVC-TV 19 is looking for a host for its upcoming season. Applicants don't have to be quadripedal, but it's a plus.

UVC TV 19

OPEN AUDITIONS 7-9 P.M.
WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 3
& THURSDAY, SEPT. 4
@ UNION VIDEO CENTER
IN THE STUDENT UNION

Students too dizzy with busywork

Well, the new semester has begun, and with it the academic year. We've all — hopefully — found our new classes and professors satisfactory. We've begun finding old friends again who we haven't seen since last May. The corruption of a new generation of innocent freshmen can begin. Uh, and we even have a presidential election coming up.

Eli Gottlieb

We're busy, busier and busiest. I for one, need to get my grades up over last semester's, after finally getting away from some serious health issues. So if I seem to be eating sour grapes during this column, go ahead and demand that I make wine of them. Though, if I must have metaphorical wine, can I have a white German Riesling?

But honestly, I do feel that I have a legitimate kvetch in one area. I truly and honestly think that we students get graded on our homework far too often.

OK. I heard you jump just now. All of you doing it at the same time caused a minor earthquake, but let me explain. When I say "homework," I almost exclusively mean weekly papers, questions answered on textbook reading, problem sets and in general anything that requires extremely little thinking.

And I don't even mean that we shouldn't receive homework. It helps us study. But I don't think we should receive a grade for it. Receiving a grade for getting answers correct when studying for only our own benefit just doesn't make any sense.

In contrast, we most definitely should receive grades for term papers, oral presentations, programming assignments, engineering projects, scientific labs, proofs of theorems and any research assignments. These represent substantial accomplishments, and professors currently assign them rarely enough that students can put real work into them instead of having to ever compromise between multiple courses.

Why should teaching assistants or professors have to grade a bunch of papers every week?

So now that we can distinguish between the point I'm making and the various points I'm not making, we can get into the nitty-gritty details of the implementation and consequences.

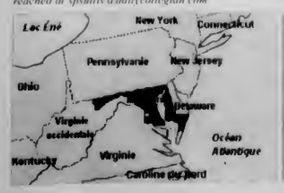
Firstly, eliminating graded homework reduces work for everyone except the worst students. Why should teaching assistants or professors have to grade a bunch of papers every week? In practice, they often pass the work off to computer-grading systems that never quite seem to work correctly, and enable the teaching staff to give far more homework than they would willingly grade themselves.

Why should good students have to do more work than they need to in order to bring their knowledge up to the professor's standard? Besides, grading for having done homework amounts to grading for effort, and grading for effort just causes grade inflation, which makes the good grades — which students in really hard subjects manage to get — much less valuable.

Back in high school they graded for having done homework to instill good study habits. But here in college, students should be treated like adults who know how much to study. Losing points off our grades because we didn't get the right answers on 30 math problems just seems like a horrible idea.

Now we have to figure out what professors can do instead of grading homework to make up the lost portion of our grades. Well for a start, they can hold more in-class quizzes. I had high-school classes that made this work extremely well; you did your homework not because you would receive a grade for it but because you wanted good quiz grades. That policy saved me hundreds of hours of my life.

Professors could also give more of the "big" assignments that actually matter, though I admit that some classes simply lack such assignments. Despite everyone asking more about the Negev desert than Kenya during my Dean's Book presentation on ecotourism last semester (I will never understand why people wanted to hear about a place labeled with the words "barren, rocky, hellhole" over the verdant African bush), the assignment actually worked great for ensuring not only that I read the Dean's Book, but that I worked to comprehend it and integrate it into my thinking. Math classes can assign proof problems, perhaps as take-home quizzes, instead of long series of repetitious problems.



Of course, don't let anyone think I'm telling the professors of this noble University what to do. I'm just expressing preferences on a relatively timeless topic. I'm about to take one of the most proof-heavy math courses I'll ever take, so I really have no complaints, since proofs obviously fall into the realm of worthwhile work.

So, welcome back to UMass-Amherst, everyone from last year. And welcome to all the new freshmen. If you've got any questions at all about UMass, feel free to write to me at my email, or just ask anyone not in freshman year. We're very friendly and not at all hard to find if you look outside your freshman classes. Look in the Library, the DCs, the Campus Center or the Student Union.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

ED/OP FANTASY BATTLE #1
MARYLAND V. ESTONIA

Lessons of a hard summer

Parisa Saranj

The first few weeks of fall semester when students run into each other and cheerfully ask how their summer was, is what I hate the most. It is just too painful to get the words out. My summer wasn't just so boring or ordinary that I would feel less cool to say "it was OK." My summer was inhumane. It was a brutality that no young college student should ever face.

My summer was full of things that might be somewhat unfamiliar to the readers. It began with a Kafan. It is a white, simple, cotton cloth wrapped around the dead body of a Muslim for burial which Islamic laws demand in order to promote simplicity in life and after death. As simple as that cloth, there was an empty bed which I was told my mother once laid upon. So, my summer went on with days and nights of feeling soulless and dead inside. And to make it perfect, there were long, dry and heated afternoons with few hours of daily power outage.

My summer was spent where 70 percent of the population is under the age of 30. They live in a country that has the highest prevalence of opiate abusers in the Middle East. So, my summer went on showing me how some of that 70 percent to numb the pain of living in anxiety, unemployment, inflation and decades of American embargoes.

I felt betrayed the most by my summer when I met a favorite cousin after many years. She is a young, unemployed woman in her early 30s who was forced to give up education years ago due to her family's financial problems, and did not choose to take refuge in drugs as many in her situation are doing. She looked into the distance and said, "I have no hope or desire for life." How naive I felt at I told her about my endless growth and adventures in the great U.S.A. and she told me how life has been for her. I had forgotten how life had stopped long ago for thousands of women like her in Iran and millions others in the world.

I remember how excited young boys and girls asked me about America and I felt ashamed to tell them I had been called a terrorist there.

So once again, life granted me inside wisdom. This time time it took the hard way as much. It took my mother to remind me of great love and sacrifices. I was surrounded with Life showed me its perished yet hopeful country to warn me how vulnerable nations are to the dirty game of politics and the profit of the greater powers.

Now, I stand here on top of a high hill where I can see UMass beneath my feet. It is like the day I stood and watched my country, Shiraz, many changes that speak of a new generation and city. I looked at it like a tourist and found that place is more different from what the outside world thinks of it. I saw a nation that struggles to survive with no time left to think that Americans are evil, or nuclear power is a necessity for wiping out Israel. How violence and neglected its people were.

I remember how excited young boys and girls asked me about America and I felt ashamed to tell them I had been called a terrorist there. I just don't ever want to make an inhumane image of any one from any color or religion in the world.

I rom here, I see the light and dark of everything. However, I will spend the rest of my summer figuring out how I can put all these observations into fulsome words somehow so it doesn't seem too cruel or uncivilized. Then, I wouldn't worry that once these words get out, some could justify an attack on Iran.

Maybe I will decide to only talk about the exquisiteness of struggle for life, on how human youth walk hand in hand with their friends, wear trendy clothes, listen to English songs, fall in and out of love and find ways to be happy, despite the fact that the world is discussing their country's unpopular government officials or possible military attack.

Maybe I will only talk about how glad I was to see some women driving taxies, waiting tables, riding bikes, playing volleyball with boys in public and working in professional, classified jobs. And for sure I leave the drastic wrong influence of the Western, MTV culture on the youth. Or I will not speak about this piercing pain of my loss that seems to stay with me for the rest of my life only because I must learn to celebrate the beauty of compassion and embrace the difficulties in life.

I go to school and close my eyes and ears to those cheerful summer greetings and remember that a brutal summer too is part of life; it is making me who I am. Finally, I will not stop writing until I change at least few minds about how different the world, cultures and beliefs are from the information we are constantly given.

Parisa Saranj is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at pmsa300@yahoo.com.

ED OP

back in black and white.

COLLEGIAN ED/OP
ELECTION COUNTDOWN
64 DAYS

John McCain ch-ch-ch-ch-changes

John McCain, at one point, was the nation's most popular politician. He was a straight-talkin' maverick who stood up to Wall Street and did the heavy lifting to craft bi-partisan, legislative coalitions. The press loved him. As the Washington Post's Howard Kurtz once said, "we're his base."

Scott Harris

Some of that reputation was earned through McCain's 2000 fight over the GOP's abortion plank and his work in 2002 with campaign finance reform. But, if this campaign has taught us anything at all, it is that the John McCain of then is nowhere close to the John McCain of now.

The lobbyists that John McCain once decried are now atop his campaign. McCain's campaign manager, Charlie Black, helped keep dictators in the Congo and Philippines in the good graces of Washington. Advisors like Rick Davis have been publicly condemned by the U.S. State Department for "interfering with national security interests."

Phil Gramm, McCain's top economic advisor, was a key figure in the deregulation of banks which allowed the subprime mortgage mess to come about, and then was a key lobbyist for UBS, working with McCain to roll back SEC-backed predatory loan restrictions. Gramm was still a registered lobbyist for UBS when he joined McCain's campaign, and helped formulate his radically pro-UBS economic policy.

Rick Schmidt, who had been George Bush's campaign manager in 2004, joined the McCain camp earlier in the summer.

As soon as McCain captured the Republican nomination, he sold his campaign to the same political thugs who have made upwards of 80 percent of Americans believe that our nation is on the wrong track.

Not surprisingly, McCain has also begun to adopt the same campaign tactics he once scolded his own party for using.

Not surprisingly, McCain has also begun to adopt the same campaign tactics he once scolded his own party for using.

In 2004, McCain lashed out at the Swift Boat Veterans for Truth (and John Kerry) for using Vietnam service as a soundbite. Now, in 2008, McCain uses "I was a P.O.W." to get out of any gaffe. In response to a recent controversy about his inability to recall how many lavishly expensive houses he owned, McCain's campaign sent out a statement that read: "McCain is ... a guy who lived in one house for five and a half years ... in prison."

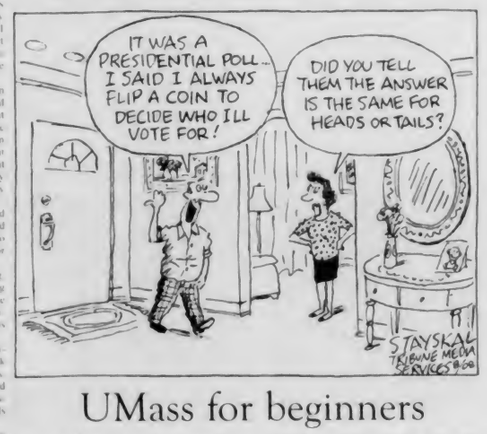
Howard Fineman of Newsweek said the P.O.W. meme is becoming a "crutch for the campaign ... he risks trivializing it." Time Magazine's Ana Cox wrote that the constant P.O.W. past spewing is "weird" and "bordering on irrational."

In early 2007, McCain told David Letterman that he would quit the campaign before he allowed himself to resort to the same old "politics of personal destruction." In 2008 though, McCain's disagreements with Obama over Iraq policy have led him say that his "ambition to become President" is overriding his "responsibility to the American people to secure our nation."

John McCain, indeed, should be familiar with that feeling. In his 2002 memoir, McCain wrote about his failed 2000 campaign.

"I didn't decide to run for president to start a national crusade for the political reforms I believed in or to run a campaign as if it were some grand act of patriotism," he wrote. "In truth, I wanted to be president because it had become my ambition to be president."

As early as the beginning of this year, McCain called upon the Republican and Democratic nominees to ratchet down the rhetoric and come together to "debate only the issues important to the American people." Yet, McCain's primary strategy thus far has been to tie Barack Obama to Paris Hilton and Britney Spears.



Last time I checked, energy, education and national security were far higher on the list.

Undoubtedly, McCain and the GOP's various gophers will be doing much the same at the Republican National Convention. No big ideas, no innovative, no bi-partisan solutions to the United States' myriad of problems in transitioning to a new world economy. Nothing like that.

My question to John McCain is: Will it have been worth it? When Obama wins comfortably in November, will you look back and wonder whether or not it was worth soiling your Straight Talk Express persona for a couple of extra points in the polls? For your "ambition to be President?"

The John McCain of yesterday wouldn't come close to recognizing the John McCain of today.

Scott Harris is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at sharris@student.umass.edu.

UMass for beginners

Like one-fourth of our undergraduate population, last year I was a freshman. Unlike most undergrads, however, I was part of that puzzling subspecies: the out-of-state student. Right from the start I was set apart as a cultural outsider, unfamiliar with the ways of Massachusetts and the Bay Staters.

Matt Robare

For instance, in Vermont, drivers rarely stop for pedestrians who want to cross the street, most people (at least in my hometown) are middle-aged, not to mention the people who talked about doing things regularly, like going to the beach or to certain places in Boston, that I would consider vacation activities.

The other thing was loneliness. I grew up in a town where just about everyone knew someone in my family, where I had friends. My first month or so at the University of Massachusetts I felt lost and alone. I knew people who had dozens of their high school friends come with them or were just plain not as shy as me. But the loneliness did not last forever. Very soon I had a bunch of good friends whom I have been waiting all summer to see again.

Nothing is as good as comedy at staving off home sickness and getting one out of their dorm room and their roommate's disgusting taste in music.

For us out-of-staters, not accustomed to the environment here, boredom can come easily. Joining a political cause is one of the most interesting and potentially rewarding campus activities, although the extremist activism can be unsettling. One of my friends was told he was "not white enough" to be a Republican by someone from the ALANA Caucus. I myself have founded a libertarian club. The enthusiasm even trumps reason and research. For those less inclined to politics there are parties and I-Mass' flourishing theater community, best represented by the comedy powerhouse that is Student Valley Productions.

Practically the whole of my memorable freshman experience revolved around Friday and Saturday nights in Herter laughing myself higher than any drug. My first experience with long form improv comedy involved falling out of my chair (onto the concrete floor) because I was laughing so much and so hard. Nothing is as good as comedy at staving off home sickness and getting one out of their dorm room and away from their roommate's disgusting taste in music.

Roommates are fairly hit-or-miss. It is important to get off on the right foot with them. Politeness, courtesy and tolerance are very important, as is establishing a dominance hierarchy. Among males this is accomplished in two ways: fighting for the desk closest to the phone/Internet jacks or by comparing sexual exploits. I emales emphasize the first three more than the dominance hierarchy, but it dominance is required it is exercised by successfully combining traditional notions of femininity with proficiency in perceived masculine dominated areas (such as mathematics and physical sciences).

I think it is best to describe a relationship with a roommate as a marriage. It involves an unusual degree of intimacy between total strangers, sharing of personal space, sharing of possessions and continuous compromise staving off total war. The best way to do this is to avoid seeing your roommate at all costs. Sleep in the same room at night, say "hi" when you see each other, maybe even talk on the way to the dining commons, but that's as far as it should go.

The dining commons are where many UMass students spend their meal times. The food is decent, but it's easy to get lost when one is free from more usual meals. In my own experience I gained 80[illegible] pounds by the end of my second semester. The stress of school, exams, homework and all that, likely has much to do with the freshman 80 too, so be healthy, and be happy. Physical activity is an excellent way of dealing with stress, so take a break from studying and walk your laundry down the stairs instead of taking the elevator. Every little thing helps.

Finally, and I cannot repeat this enough. Do something. Don't stay in your dorm room all semester when you're not eating or at class. I was basically like that for my first month or so and I regret it. There is so much to explore ... so much to see.

Take of the time during your freshman year to explore, not only the activities, but the academics. Maybe the major you have your heart set on is not for you. Branch out, take risks. Do not be afraid to do what you love and what helps you love more. A lot of people seem to think that coming to college is all about preparing for a job and a career, but that's a narrow-minded point of view because the real world is so much stranger than that, so much scarier, so much crazier than that and so much better too.

Matt Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

In Amherst, an Obama plan

John Glaser

Barack Obama has a plan to fix the tax system in this country. He would raise the capital gains tax from 15 percent to 28 percent, set the rate for estates of more than $3 million to 45 percent, raise the income tax for those earning over $200,000 to 36 percent and of some higher brackets to nearly 40 percent of an individual's income. No longer, he says, should the tax burden be laid on those who earn modest incomes. We need to further progressivize our tax system so that the rich pay more and redistribution of benefits becomes a higher priority.

Since the overwhelming majority of University of Massachusetts students will undoubtedly vote for Obama, I'm confident most of you will find yourselves in agreement with the following, consistent with Obama's plan for the country: a New Deal for I-Mass.

I propose the institution of a progressive grading system here at I-Mass Amherst. The wealthiest of earners should have a certain percentage of their hard earned GPA points taken by school administrators to be redistributed to students in need of more stable grade-point averages for the greater collective good. The growth of grade inequality at this University is such that we can no longer allow the high earners to capitalize from their privileged positions.

Obama frequently points out the gross injustice from Exxon's income of $11 billion last quarter. Exxon paid 42 per cent taxes on that income. The top 1 percent of income earners in this country pays nearly 40 percent of income taxes and the top 10 pay 70 percent. It is only just for the government to tack up those taxes on high earners every further and I-Mass should follow suit.

Performance in college can have implications for the rest of one's life. Do we really want to leave that up to some invisible hand to work out? Do we really want to leave the inherent biases in the grading system, unaddressed by administrative oversight? We can't let this competitive dog-eat-dog mentality of every man for himself determine the trajectory of success in our students' lives. Without a safety net for those who can't make it we will continue to exemplify that evil capitalist approach that each ought to be afforded according to his abilities rather than his need.

We can't let this competitive dog-eat-dog mentality of every man for himself determine the trajectory of success in our students' lives.

We all know someone, or know of someone, that has let their priorities slip, had to deal with debilitating personal issues, health problems, money problems, and has thus faced academic probation or even dismissal. It works like this: students who earn below a 2.0 are put on probation and if they earn below a 2.0 in any subsequent semester they face suspension and sometimes academic dismissal, which the University handbook refers to as "permanent separation from the University."

Is this the kind of school you want to attend? Where the able and hard-working are treated like royalty and the less fortunate are denied the most important opportunity for upward social mobility, a college degree? Surely ardent Barack Obama supporters know, as he reminds us in his speeches, that we are our brother's keepers and that we are loathe to simply sit and watch while our fellow I-Massers fall by the wayside due to the compassionless, archaic traditions of competitive academic performance.

I mentioned my philanthropic proposal to a friend, beaming with pride at how noble and caring it would make me seem (a maverick for equality I'd hoped), and he arrogantly rejected it, claiming it was presumptuous of me to claim that the fruits of one's labor belong not to him, but to the whole of the UMass community. He excoriated that those grade points ought to be left to those who have earned them. I defiantly countered, explaining that low grade point earners can't be blamed for their status. They try hard, it just isn't their fault and it is more just to punish productive high earners for succeeding academically. I think Obama and I won that battle. This is change I-Mass can believe in.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jeglaser@student.umass.edu.

OnCall
URGENT CARE CENTERS

WALK-IN MEDICAL CARE
Open 365 days a year
9am - 9pm Monday - Friday
9am - 5pm Saturday & Sunday

Services provided include:
- General Medical Care
- Occupational Medicine
- School, Sports & Camp Physicals
- Flu Shots and more!

Healthcare. At your convenience.

OnCall Urgent Care Centers offers convenient walk-in medical care by board-certified Emergency Medicine Physicians and Emergency Medicine Physician Assistants that are available to treat any non-life threatening illness or injury that requires immediate attention.

OnCall Urgent Care is a convenient alternative when:
- ✓ You can't get a timely appointment with your physician,
- ✓ You do not have time to wait in a hospital emergency department or
- ✓ Your regular clinic is closed, or you are away from home.

THESE ARE SOME OF THE CONDITIONS WE CAN TREAT:

Abscesses, Allergies, Asthma, Back Pain, Bites, Bladder Infections, Blood Tests, Breathing Problems, Burns, Cough, Car Accidents, Cuts & Sutures, Ear Pain, EKG, Flu Shots, Fractures, Headaches, High Blood Pressure, IVs, Nausea Vomiting, Physicals, Pink Eye, Suboxone, STDs, Work Related Injuries

We can help!

Open 365 days a year
9am - 9pm Monday - Friday
9am - 5pm Saturday & Sunday

THERE ARE NO WAIT TIMES, WE WILL SEE YOU NOW!

OnCall
URGENT CARE CENTERS
51 Locust Street
Northampton, MA
(directly across from major hospital)
(413) 584-SICK ~ (413) 584-7425

www.OnCallUrgentCare.com
info@OnCallUrgentCare.com

MOST MAJOR INSURANCE PLANS ACCEPTED!

The road to green

Stacia Marcelynas prepares for her road test during a "supermileage" competition in Michigan. Her specialized car can get up to 683 miles per gallon.

University students, researchers driving forces behind environmental movement

By Jessica Sacco
Collegian Staff

This past spring in Marshall, Mich., University of Massachusets senior Stacia Marcelynas drove a car that got 683 miles per gallon.

That's more than most cars get because she was a part of the engineering team from UMass that competed in the annual "supermileage" competition by building its own car and traveling around the Eaton Corporation track in a race for the highest MPGs.

For several years, mechanical engineering students could opt to take an elective class in which they design a small vehicle which can carry one person while getting the highest gas mileage per hour.

Although these vehicles are designed for use on a track, the technologies used to build the car are readily available to car and scooter manufacturers.

One year, students created a vehicle that could travel 35 miles per hour and had 1,100 miles per gallon.

However, they're so much smaller than a regular car, said David Schmidt, assistant professor of mechanical and industrial engineering. He added a truck could run over it and not even notice.

"It could safely operate on quieter roads [though]," said Schmidt who was involved in the making last year's vehicle.

But you don't have to travel 800 miles to Michigan to see UMass trying to make a dent in the gas-driven economy.

Recently, a team of researchers from the University received a $440,000 grant from the National Science Foundation for its research in biofuels.

The team will focus on the conversion of biomass, things naturally grown on Earth like plants and trees, and how the use of biologically derived fuel, also known as biodiesel, can be used in any engine or house.

Instead of relying on fossil fuels like petroleum, researchers will look at biofuels, gathered from simple waste products generated on campus, such as the fryer oil used at the dining commons.

Depending on how efficient the process becomes, it could replace 60 percent of petroleum derived fuels, cutting down on the need for petroleum while also saving money. UMass currently pays around $4 per gallon for petroleum-based diesel, but with the use of biodiesel, it would cost fewer than 50 cents per gallon.

The project, called "Microwave Enhanced Catalytic Production of Biofuels," will focus on two ways of improving the process of making biofuels.

Normally biodiesel energy is created through methods like electric heating or natural gas, but through the use of microwave heating, the amount of energy needed for production, as well as the time it would take, would decrease by up to 80 percent.

The team is also looking at the use of a heterogeneous, or solid, catalyst to cut down on costs.

Usually sodium hydroxide is used to produce biodiesel. However sodium hydroxide cannot be put in an engine, and removing it takes energy. But the sodium hydroxide doesn't need to be removed with a heterogeneous substance.

Researchers have been working on this project for about a year and a half with much success.

"This is going to work. No question about it," said William Connor, a professor of chemical engineering. "We will improve the process [of efficiently producing biodiesel]. Maybe we improve 20 percent or a 1,000 percent. It depends on how far we go."

Connor is also involved in obtaining a biodiesel plant for UMass that would produce 600,000 gallons of biodiesel fuel per year from used vegetable oil.

For the past six months, Connor has been investigating costs and logistics of the plant, and although it will take $850,000 to implement, it would pay for itself within three years, according to Connor.

The plant will also serve as a research facility by helping with modifications to creating biodiesel.

"We're not just doing things on paper. We're doing it," said Connor.

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu.

Marcelynas and her car, "The Homewrecker," can get 683 miles per gallon.

Write for
DAILY COLLEGIAN NEWS
Get the experience you need by working for one of the largest daily college papers in the country.
NEWS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION
Want Fun? Join us, enter by
Flag Football (M/W/C).....9/8
Soccer (M/W).....9/8
Co-ed Softball .....9/9
Field Hockey (W).....9/9
Ice Hockey (M/W).....9/11
www.umass.edu/campusrec
LATE ENTRANTS SHOULD CHECK FOR EXTENSIONS IN BOYDEN 215

Community Clips

WMUA Poster Sale
WMUA-FM sponsors this year's annual poster sale. Thousands of posters to choose from in a number of sizes.
Monday, Sept 1 to Friday Sept 5, 2008
Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

Hillel BBQ
The Hillel House on 338 N. Pleasant St. is hosting a free barbeque. Enjoy typical BBQ while learning about the area's Jewish community.
5:00 – 7:30 p.m.

Daily Collegian Open House
Come by the Campus Center Rm. 174 for an introduction to New England's largest collegiate newspaper. Writers, photographers, graphic designers, artists, advertising representatives and anyone curious are welcome.
Tuesday, Sept. 2
6:45 p.m.

Minutemen Mall Mania
The Hampshire Mall stays open late exclusively for college students. It's a good time to pick up anything that wasn't packed. BestBuy, Target, Steve and Barry's, J.C. Penny and more.
Tuesday, Sept.2
9:00 p.m.

Valley Scrabble Club Meeting
Test your skills against people of all ages. Barnes and Noble, Mt Farms Malls, Hadley
All skill levels welcome. Free Boards provided. 253-4841
Sept. 2, 7 p.m.

Student Bridges Recruitment Event
This student-initiated outreach program connects UMass students with local community-based organizations and schools through tutoring-mentoring partnerships, college awareness activities, and policy advocacy. The program has primarily partnered with schools and programs in the Holyoke-Springfield area.
Campus Center - 917
7-9 p.m.

LGBTQA Games Night
Lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, and ally (LGBTQA) students are invited to a night of pool, board games, and snacks. Come hang out, make new friends and learn about the resources that UMass Amherst has to offer LGBTQA students.
Union Billiards, Student Union
9-11 p.m.

UMass Yoga
Free classes hosted by campus recreation.
Boyden 10
Tuesday, Sept. 2 – Thursday Sept. 4
M/W 2:00 - 3:15 & 3:30 - 4:45
T/Th 1:00 - 2:15, 2:30 - 3:45 & 4:00 - 5:15

Free Ice Cream
Stop by for a scoop of ice cream and the scoop on University Greek life.
Library Promenade
Wednesday, Sept. 3, 2008
4:00 p.m. – 7:00 p.m.

Activities Expo
How to get involved in the University's 250 clubs.
Library Promenade
Wednesday, Sept. 3
4 – 7 p.m.

Cultural Connections: A Move the Crowd Battle of the DJ's
Sponsored by the Office of Programs and Services for AHANA Students and the Black Student Union
5 - 7 p.m.
Library Lawn
We'll See You Under the Tent!
Come out, listen and dance to multicultural rhythms - live and recorded. Featuring prominent DJs, local musicians, and student organizations. We provide the refreshments, you provide the fun!

Stonewall Center Open House
Meet new and returning students and check out UMass's lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, and ally center. All are welcomed!
Friday, Sept. 5
5-7 p.m.
Stonewall Center (Crampton House, SW)

Live Music
The Mark Ricker/Jimmy Burgoff Duo plays jazz.
Black Sheep Deli, 79 Main Street, Amherst
No cover charge. 256-6800
Friday, Sept. 5 at 6-8 p.m.

UMass Amherst Comedy Night
featuring Charlie Murphy and Bill Burr
Fine Arts Center
Saturday, Sept. 6
Shows at 7 p.m. and 10 p.m.

Concert of New Music
UMass music faculty performs new works by Bruce MacCombie, Robert Stern Michael Simonelli
Bezanson Recital Hall, UMass Fine Arts Center, Amherst
$12 general, $7 student, seniors, youth under 18; $3 UMass students (413) 545-2511
Sunday, Sept. 7
4 p.m.

Amherst College Jazz Concert
Amherst College jazz faculty and instructors perform
Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College, Amherst
Sept. 7, 7:30 p.m.
Free

Giant Used Furniture Sale to benefit the Amherst Survival Center
Gently used desks, chairs, sofas, tables and more for sale on the Amherst Town Common. For more information, or to donate furniture, call 413-549-3968 or e-mail survivalcenter@verizon.net. Sept. 12 from 1PM-5PM and Sept. 13 from 9a.m.-1p.m.

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE

Most Images Only $7, $8 and $9

MESSAGES FROM THE BURSAR'S OFFICE

PAYMENT INFORMATION

A new online system called QuikPay is available for all students to view and print their bills and make payments online! Features include the ability to make online payments 24/7 via check or credit card (processing fees apply to credit card transactions,) authorize third parties to view and pay bills, view and print current and past bills, be notified by e-mail when new bills are available, and confirm payment immediately. To access Quikpay log on to your SPIRE account (http://spire.umass.edu) and navigate to Student Center →Finances→'View/Pay Bill'.

EXCESS EXPRESS

Don't wait in line to pick up your refund check! Sign up for Excess Express and have your refund automatically deposited into the U.S. bank account of your choice. To enroll, log on to SPIRE, navigate to the Student Menu→ Finances→'Excess Express'. There you will follow the instructions and enter your banking information. Check our Website at www.umass.edu/bursar for more details!

FERPA

The Family Education Rights and Privacy Act protects the privacy of a student's education records. Students are able to waive their right to privacy through the FERPA waiver panel on SPIRE, enabling us to discuss their billing record with people of their choosing. If you are not a student, you will be asked for FERPA waiver code assigned to you by your student before we can provide any detailed information regarding a student's Bill.

MASS PIRG/CHILD CARE WAIVERS

Mass Pirg and Child Care can now be waived online. Log on to SPIRE. On your Student Center, click the Mass Pirg/Child Care Waiver link under the Finances heading.

WAIVING STUDENT HEALTH INSURANCE

All students are required to have health insurance in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. If you are covered under a comprehensive plan and do not want the Student Health Insurance Plan offered by the University of Massachusetts, your are entitled to waive the plan. Visit www.spire.umass.edu or www.aetnastudenthealth.com for links to the online waiver process. The insurance plan is an annual plan and if not waived by the deadline the premium will be billed to your tuition bill for both semesters. The Student Health Fee is a mandatory fee and cannot be waived. Visit www.umasss.edu/uhs for information regarding health plans. If you have questions with the waiver process, call Health Services at 413 577-5192.

Eligible Graduate Student Employees (Those in the GEO Bargaining unit who qualify for SHIP Fee Exemptions) who do not waive SHIP are entitled to a 95% reduction of the SHIP Health Fee for an individual. Indicate at the bottom of your bill or notify the Bursar's Office at Bursar@admin.umass.edu that you will be enrolled in SHIP and qualify for the 95% reduction of this fee.

Don't forget you have access to your bill at all times through SPIRE (HTTP://SPIRE.Umass.edu) it is your responsibility to monitor your bill to ensure that all payments, waivers, and financial aid are credited accordingly.

HOW TO CONTACT US

The Bursar Teller office hours are Monday through Friday from 9:00am-4:00pm and the Customer Service Hours are 9:00am-5:00pm.

The Bursar telephone number is 413 545-2368 or you can contact us by e-mail at bursar@admin.umass.edu.

A special day for local law enforcement

Dressed in blue, Cadet and UMass student Jess Norton holds the State Police Academy flag as State Police Officer Mullaney looks on. Local police gathered to support the Massachusetts Special Olympics.

Student's model tests drivers, waters

By Alyssa Montalbano
Collegian Staff

On Tuesday, Feb. 5, an 8-year-old girl was hit by an SUV in front her elementary school. An 86-year-old man was driving the car. She suffered from a fractured skull, a broken leg and internal injuries. As a result of this accident, and other ones as well, there have been debates on whether there should be more restrictions given to older drivers in Massachusetts.

Although drivers of all ages are required to pass a mandatory vision test every 10 years, there are currently no restrictions against older drivers in Massachusetts. Consequently, Heather Rothenberg, a doctoral candidate at the University of Massachusetts and a project coordinator and lead analyst at the UMass Traffic Safety Research Program, is working on developing a computer model that will identify older drivers with a high risk for severe accidents. Unlike more elementary models, hers is based on driving histories rather than age.

The hope with this model is that it will be able to identify high-risk drivers and will develop safety programs on risk factors other than age. The model will look into the history of the driver and observe whether they are capable of driving based on previous crashes, citations and suspensions, among other factors.

"What we are hoping we can do is to identify the older drivers who are at a greater risk of getting in a crash," said Rothenberg. "This information could then be used a variety of ways, rather than trying to apply a blanket 'all older drivers need extra testing' type approach."

As of now, the Massachusetts Motor Registry of Vehicles forbids discriminating against elderly drivers and cannot require them to get additional vision tests or accelerated license renewals.

According to national studies, the percentage of fatal or incapacitated injuries increases with age. The studies also show that for people age 25-64, 10 percent of injuries are fatal or incapacitating, compared to 12 percent for occupants age 65-84 and 15 percent for occupants age 85 and over. The trend showed confirms that with older age comes higher risk for possible injuries.

Along with working on the computer model, Rothenberg will also study other states and the restrictions that they have on older drivers as well as ways to provide transportation to older people who lose their licenses. For example, private taxi companies in Washington State give older people discounted fares because they are providing them with more business.

For many people, the issue of putting restrictions on older drivers is a sensitive subject.

"One of the critical issues to keep in mind here is that we aren't interested in developing a model with the idea that we are out to take away licenses," said Rothenberg. "The results of the model might be used to promote educational initiatives, alternative transportation methods, etc."

In February, Gov. Deval Patrick announced that he was in favor of requirements for older drivers being tested to see if they can handle driving behind the wheel. This model may be one step forward in developing some restrictions.

On a final note, Rothenberg added, "We should be making policy decisions based on good information rather than emotion."

Alyssa Montalbano can be reached at amontalb@student.umass.edu

Heather Rothenberg developed a system to test at-risk drivers.

Brobama.org makes politics safe for the common bro

By Matthew Ritger
The Dartmouth Daily Dartmouth Collegian

An image of Barack Obama grinning beneath a backwards hat and a pair of Wayfarers greets visitors to Brobama.org, a new Web site devoted to clarifying what the presidential candidate means to "the common bro."

Brobama.org is the brainchild of Dartmouth College fraternity brethren and rising seniors Lee Cooper and Scott Henning. The pair was inspired to launch the site this summer, while working at political internships in Washington D.C. Cooper is a member of The Dartmouth staff.

"We had heard people use 'Brobama' around Dartmouth and elsewhere," Cooper said. "So one day on the Metro home from work we decided it would be funny to expand upon the 'Brobama' concept in a more substantive way."

The site is essentially a sieve, translating important political news into "bro" colloquialisms.

Take the recent scandal over The New Yorker's ill-received Obama cover-art, for example. Brobama.org summed up the entire commotion in 42 words, under the headline "Dudes need to chill."

"We thought we might be able to better translate campaign coverage and political news for people our age who might not otherwise be interested," Henning said.

Obama himself was a graduate of Columbia University and Harvard Law School.

During his presidential campaign, Obama's opponents have raised doubts about his ability to appeal to the white male voters of Middle America.

The image of Obama daintily too daintily sipping his beer at a campaign event in a bar caused a stir in the media this spring, while the Republican campaign continues to seize any opportunity to paint Obama as prissy and out of touch with the American public.

Brobama.org depicts Obama not only as in touch, but also in the language of "broters," or voters of the college-age set.

The Web site summarizes each new campaign issue by breaking the politics down into brolitics: "News," "Context" and "What this means for the common Bro."

The perceived miniscule attention span of the common bro is clearly a top concern, though the issues sometimes seem glossed over a little too heavily.

An update on Obama's foreign policy concerning Iraq, titled "On the Broffensive" boils the politician's speech down to: "War is real tough, and neither Obama nor McCain can change that, but Obama wants to refocus our efforts."

Cooper, who was himself a candidate for president of the student body at Dartmouth this past spring, is currently working at a D.C. think tank, the Hudson Institute.

Henning is currently interning for his district's congresswoman on Capitol Hill. Both Henning and Cooper are brothers in Alpha Delta fraternity.

"Launching the site took quite a bit of time," Cooper said. "But now that it's running more or less smoothly we spend about an hour per day on the site and entries, plus the time required to keep up with election news."

Currently, the site is updated every two or three days.

"We're limited right now just because we're working," Henning said. "Hopefully updates will become more frequent."

The creators of Brobama.org hope that their site can fill the need for political media that is both appealing and informative for college students, or bros and bru-ettes, the terms they prefer to use.

The current perception, according to Henning, is that college students have either rallied blindly to Obama's cause without any real understanding of the issues, or are disinterested. Brobama.org hopes to change both of these problems.

"Politics need to be more brocessible," the site proclaims, hoping to take advantage of the largely untapped political leverage of sites like Facebook and YouTube to draw more college students into the discussion on the 2008 presidential campaign.

In a post titled "McCain Has No Brogramming Skills," about the recent revelation that John McCain considers himself computer "illiterate," the bros behind Brobama.org come to the heart of the issue.

In explaining what this gaffe of the McCain campaign means for their target audience, they write: "Computers aren't just for nerds these days. They can help a good bro communicate better."

University strips Mugabe's degree

Board reverses sentiment for 'moral monster'

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees unanimously revoked the honorary law degree given to President Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe on June 12.

This is the first time the Board has taken such action. Board Chairman Robert Manning told members of the press "rescinding an honorary degree is a step to be taken in the rarest and most grievous of circumstances."

Mugabe's role as a political activist catapulted him to power with the support of the Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU), an organization originally aimed at ending the white minority rule in the former Rhodesia.

Mugabe joined ZANU in 1963, the same year it was formed and emerged as its leader in 1974 after serving for 10 years as a political prisoner.

In 1979, Mugabe took part in the three-month-long Lancaster House Agreement. Signed on Dec. 21 of that year, the agreement ended white minority rule and declared Zimbabwe an independent nation.

Zimbabwe's first general election was held in February of 1980, and Mugabe was elected Prime Minister.

"At that time, Mugabe was universally regarded as one of the bright lights of African leadership having successfully led a protracted, agonizing liberation against an unapologetically racist regime," said African-American studies professor Michael Thelwell, who took part in the discussions leading up to UMass' giving him an honorary degree in 1986.

In 1987, Zimbahwe abolished the position of Prime Minister and Mugabe became the nation's President, which granted him additional executive power. He has now been in power for 28 years.

Talks among the Board members regarding Mugabe began in June of 2007. The board decided the most appropriate action would be to reprimand the African president. Robert Connolly, vice president of communications at UMass, described the message as a "very blunt and very harsh critique of Robert Mugabe and his policies in Zimbahwe." The board also told Mugabe it would "continue to monitor and study his actions and reserve the right to take additional action," said Connolly.

The Washington Post reported that in the first round of general elections on March 30, 2008, Mugabe's rival political party, the Movement for Democratic Change (MDC) won the majority of Parliament. The Post also reported that Mugabe called for a run-off election with a new campaign strategy code-named CIIID, which stands for coercion, intimidation, beating and displacement.

"Robert Mugabe ... resorted to an increasingly anti-democratic repression of his own population as he clung to power," Wikipedia describes him as "an outspoken, controversial and polarizing figure."

President Robert Mugabe

Mugabe has been accused of numerous human rights violations. In 1983, the New York Times reported that hundreds of civilians were killed in an incident in the Matabeleland province. In recent years, the State Department released a statement saying as many as 20,000 could have been killed.

BBC News has reported organized violence against whites in Zimbabwe. Peter Hain, the United Kingdom's former Foreign Office Minister told the BBC in 2000, "there is clear evidence of racist, anti-white attacks, which is especially disturbing coming from a party which came to power 20 years ago on a tide of anti-racist sentiment." Mugabe is also held responsible for the downfall of Zimbabwe's economy due to hyperinflation.

"This is not only a disappointment, but a colossal tragedy in human terms," said Professor Thelwell, "The Mugabe of today has become a moral monster and a scourge to his people."

Last year, the University of Edinburgh in Scotland revoked its honorary degree given to Mugabe in 1984. Michigan State University is currently pursuing the same course of action for a similar degree awarded to him in 1990.

A spokesman for Machivenyika Mapuranga, Zimbabwe's ambassador to the United States, told the Boston Globe "They [the honorary degrees] don't have any meaning to him. I mean, come on, I don't think he even remembers it."

Lucas Correia can be reached at lpcorrei@student.umass.edu

Building to show true colors of student art

By Sara Afzal
Collegian Staff

Starting this fall, the new $26 million Studio Arts Building at the intersection of Infirmary Way and North Pleasant Street will reveal more than its multicolored lights to students and faculty.

Funded by the UMass Building Authority, the 47,394-square-foot-building will bring the Studio Arts Program under one roof. Previously students and faculty were scattered across campus in different outdated facilities in the Fine Arts Center, Art Barn and Munson Annex.

On the first day of classes, students will be in an environment with new art supplies, studios and classrooms.

Students will use new equipment, including saws and drills for woodworking, metal-cutting machines, a transport system for heavy metal sculptures and pottery wheels and a kiln for ceramics.

The art studios are either private or communal and designated by seniority.

"I am really looking forward to having my own space in this social environment. It will enhance my experience in the art department this year," said senior art major Irene Ushomirsky, who will be working with oil and water based painting this year.

The communal studios will give students the opportunity to interact with others in diverse artistic backgrounds.

"It's awesome when undergraduates and graduates come together because it lets everyone kind of get real," said senior art major Kyle Nilan. This semester, Nilan will work toward his thesis by experimenting with different media and printmaking.

Another space for social interaction is the Student Commons, located under the glass cube on the upper level. The museum-style hanging walls in the commons will be used to display artwork.

Art Department Chair Bill Oedel said the building brings the art department together as one community.

Faculty will lead its classes in instructional studios for painting, sculpture, ceramics, printmaking and photography. Each classroom has a digital overhead with an automatic screen for projection.

On the first floor, the instructional painting studio has a pedestal in the center of the room for a model to pose upon. Above the pedestal, there is a radiating heat panel for the model's comfort.

In the half basement level, there are instructional studios for digital and print photography. The darkroom has new enlargers and a film drier that dries wet film in just 10 minutes. Also, a stainless steel sink with a ventilation panel rids the room of the toxic fumes from the chemicals used for printing.

Safety measures like ventilation panels, emergency showers and storage compartments for flammable and toxic materials are present throughout the building. And it's no accident.

"Safety is a huge concern in the art world and a prime driver in the design of the building," said Capital Project Manager Burt Ewart, of Facilities and Campus Planning.

Art students are required to participate in safety training before they are allowed to work in the studios. During the one-hour tutorial, students must sign an agreement to abide by safety rules issued by UMass Environmental Health and Safety.

Oedel said the new building is critical in sustaining the art department because of the safety issues posed by the old facilities. According to Ronald Machaud, art professor and former department chair, the areas most affected by outdated materials were photography, three-dimensional studies, ceramics and digital arts.

In the building's design, principal designer Laura Cabo incorporated "green" concepts like occupancy sensors that automatically turn off lights when rooms are unoccupied and alarms that will report unnecessary levels of energy use. Cabo is an associate of Gund Partnership in Cambridge.

The entrance of the building has pivoting walls that slide together to give a view of the terrace or can lock into place to make an art critique room.

"It's important to have open wall space," said Oedel.

Most of the walls of the building are made of Sheetrock, where art pieces can be easily tacked. However, behind the Sheetrock there is a layer of thick plywood that can be drilled for hanging heavier artwork.

The Studio Arts Building will be dedicated on Sept. 19. To celebrate the opening, a glass sculpture by artist Shan Shan Sheng, who received her MFA through the art department in 1987, will be displayed in the Student Commons.

"The quality of the environment and community has been improved and the art program will be enhanced," said Oedel.

Sara Afzal can be reached at safzal@student.umass.edu

The new building will play host to the University's Studio Arts department, which was formerly scattered across campus. Besides its light display, the space will allow for the showcasing of student art.

Electronic waste piling up, as technology races past

By Pamela Lawn
Collegian Correspondent

Electronic equipment surrounds students of this generation. Many consider it an essential tool for day-to-day life.

The average lifespan of a computer is 2-4 years, far shorter than the average human's, so what to do with that toilet water soaked cell phone or the broken laptop?

The Massachusetts department of environmental protection states that electronic waste [e-waste] is now the fastest growing category of waste in Massachusetts.

E-waste piles up between two and three times faster than any other waste stream in the United States according to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

UMass student Josh Stoffel, environmental studies major and the founder and president of the Students for Environmental Awareness and Action is worried about this trend cluttering the minds and dumpsters of America.

"The home computer has become commonplace and individual laptops in a household are also becoming a trend," he said. "What this all means is that the amount of e-waste coming from the U.S. has only skyrocketed in the past 15 years."

When electronic waste is put in landfills, the toxic substances are released onto the air, soil and water.

Lead poisoning has been linked with learning disabilities, behavioral problems and, at very high levels, seizures, coma and death.

The natural choice is recycling, which on average creates 1,000 times more jobs per ton than mining or disposal even death, so the importance of recycling it seems clear.

Lorenzo Macaluso, the Special Projects coordinator at the UMass office of waste management explained the current laws in place in Massachusetts. He said "waste bans" prohibit most e-waste from being disposed of in the average colored trash bins around the University.

Anything with a back-lit screen will be prohibited from typical disposal due to the screens' mercury content. Like anything else containing the substance, handling the electronics even after they stop working, becomes a delicate matter.

"Unwanted computers from academic and administrative areas are first removed from the University property management system and brought to the recycling facility at Tillson farm," she said.

"We take great care to make sure our recycling vendors are not shipping materials overseas and therefore causing environmental damage to other countries," Macaluso said. "In FY07, the UMass campus recycled about 90 tons of electronics from campus."

On a wider scale, Stoffel thinks it is important for society to pressure big companies to take back their old electronic products for recycling.

"If a company produces a product and sells it to Joe Average, then that company must take back the product when Mr. Average is done with it and safely dispose of it," Stoffel explained. "If such a program was mandatory and fines were in place for anyone who did not comply, the amount of e-waste would be greatly reduced."

Students who wish to recycle are allowed to bring one full computer set up or one TV per year free of charge. The computer set up includes a printer, a keyboard, a CPU, a monitor and other accessories. The facility is open Monday to Friday, 7a.m.-2p.m.

Pamela Lawn can be reached at plawn@student.umass.edu

BRUEGGER'S
BAKED FRESH
Get wired & go wireless!
WHO DOESN'T LOVE A FREE CUP OF COFFEE AND FREE WI-FI?
FREE WiFi!
Brueggers serves Fair Trade Certified coffee every day—ask for it!
Amherst
170 North Pleasant Street
413-253-5713
WITH THIS COUPON GET A
FREE small coffee with any purchase
BRUEGGER'S BAKED FRESH
One coupon per person, per visit. Not valid with any other offer. Only original coupon will be accepted. Photo do not include tax. Valid at all participating locations. Expires 12-31-08 PLU 899
BRUEGGER'S BAGELS

Grad trapped in Georgia

BY KELSEY RYAN
THE BULLETIN (EMPORIA STATE UNIVERSITY)

An Emporia State University grad student is trapped in her Georgian hometown because of the fighting with Russia.

"It was three in the morning when they started bombing," the student, Mika Manjgaladze, said in an e-mail interview. "We were sleeping and the first thing we heard was sound of airplane and then it was such a huge sound that our apartment complex started shaking like [in] an earthquake ... We were safe, but after bombing, apartment windows were broken. We are emotionally depressed and afraid."

Manjgaladze graduated in 2008 with a bachelor's degree in business administration with a concentration in international business and was accepted into the MBA program for this semester. She was also granted a graduate assistantship at the Center for Student Involvement.

Known to many on the ESU campus as Miranda, Manjgaladze was trapped while visiting her hometown of Batumi, a port city on the Black Sea. In last week's interview, Manjgaladze was unsure if and when she would be able to come back to the U.S.

"The U.S. embassy stopped issuing visas for 10 days," Manjgaladze said. "My return ticket [was for] Aug. 25. There are no international flights because it [the airport] was bombed. So right now I am not sure if I will be able (to come back)."

Manjgaladze lost her chance to acquire the correct visa when U.S. embassy workers were evacuated along with other Americans in Georgia, according to a staff member of the International Education office in the Memorial Union.

"She can't do anything," said Gloria Swift, administrative specialist in the office of international education. "She can't get out because she can't get a visa."

Manjgaladze was an exchange student during her senior year of high school and graduated from school in Olpe in 2004. She was involved in several organizations during her undergraduate years, including the International Choir and International Club.

"We're really concerned about her," said James Harter, assistant vice president for international education. "We want to know that she's safe .. we want to get her onto her graduate program and allow her to continue with her goals and we want to be a part of that."

According to Harter, Manjgaladze's circumstances are not uncommon.

"This happens every year, depending on where there is an unforeseen circumstance like this one," Harter said.

Students and staff on campus are worried for Manjgaladze's safety.

"I've come to think real highly of her, and I'm worried about her," said Mary McDaniel, assistant director of student wellness.

"She's just such an optimistic person and a very religious person as well," McDaniel said. "A lot of her messages to me are just requests to pray for her and for the country and for the situation. It's been kind of limited contact, but I've been glad to hear anything at all."

For McDaniel, knowing someone overseas who is directly affected by this conflict has had a tremendous effect on her world view.

"I guess what really has been the biggest thing to me is that I think we've been kind of insulated in this country because these kinds of conflicts or wars or whatever you want to call them crop up all the time," McDaniel said. "It never has really struck me with the intensity that it has this time because this is the first time that I've had someone that I really knew and care about who is involved. It makes a big difference and it really makes you stop and think about how fortunate we have been."

Although various reports and statements by the Russian Federation claim that they have pulled the troops out of Georgia, Manjgaladze says otherwise.

"No, it is not true [that they left] after that fact they were still bombing," Manjgaldze said. "They bombed Gori, Poti and Borjomi forest. Russian soldiers are robbing everything from invaded territories."

The conflict began on Aug. 7, after Georgian troops attacked separatists in the breakaway province of South Ossetia. After that attack, Russia sent in troops to confront the Georgian troops within the province. Although there was a peace agreement between the two countries, several counties, including the U.S., have accused Russia of breaking the ceasefire agreement.

"We're trying our hardest to get her back over here," said Lynda Denson, Manjgaladze's high school host mother. "Everything has got to fall into place, but we're hoping to have her back here by the fourth of September."

The Denson family hired a private plane to take Manjgaladze from Batumi to Tbilisi, the capital of Georgia. Manjgaladze is unable to travel by train because bridges between the two cities have been bombed.

She plans on staying in Tbilisi for several days with relatives until she can get her visa. The Densons have also arranged Manjgaladze's flight from Georgia to the U.S., which could cost up to $10,000. On Sunday, a U.S. destroyer carrying humanitarian aid in the form of baby food and bottled water reached Batumi. Denson is concerned that Manjgaladze and her family may not be safe after the destroyer leaves because of the possibility that Russia may attack the city in an act of retaliation.

"She's come through things people in our country have never had to experience," Denson said. "This kid has had major miracles in her life.... She has a very strong faith in God."

While an exchange student at Olpe, Manjgaladze shared a room with another student who was from Russia. Although the girls did not get along at first, Denson said, they became more accepting of each other over time. According to Denson, who keeps in contact with both students, the Russian student does not believe that Georgia has been attacked; instead, she believes that the attacks are U.S. propaganda.

"The only thing we have left is a strong faith," Manjgaladze said. "We all pray and we believe in God. Church is our strength."

Board to review HUPD

BY JAMISON A. HILL
HARVARD CRIMSON (HARVARD UNIVERSITY)

An incident earlier this month has raised concerns about Harvard University Police Department's treatment of racial minorities on campus, leading University President Drew G. Faust to announce the creation of a six-member committee to review HUPD's practices.

"The review will include consideration of HUPD's diversity training, community outreach and recruitment efforts, as well as the ways in which Harvard's past experience as well as best practices elsewhere can help inform our future practice," Faust wrote in an e-mail to faculty and senior-level administration.

The committee will be led by Ralph C. Martin II '74, the former Suffolk County district attorney and currently a managing partner at the Boston law firm, Bingham McCutchen.

Faust wrote the review was in part prompted by an incident that occurred Aug. 8th in which HUPD officers, responding to a call, confronted a person attempting to remove a lock from a bicycle with tools.

According to the HUPD police log, the individual was found to be the owner of the bicycle and an affiliate of the University after questioning by officers. The person has since been identified as a black high school student from the Boston area working at Harvard for the summer, according to The Boston Globe. Faust wrote that an investigation into the interaction between the officers and the student has been launched.

HUPD spokesman Steven G. Catalano wrote in an e-mail that the department is enthusiastic about the review.

"The review will provide the department with an invaluable opportunity to benefit from Mr. Martin's expertise and to hear in new ways from the Harvard community about how we might better serve our diverse population," he wrote. "We look forward to any recommendations generated by process that will help ensure the HUPD remains as effective as possible."

Joining Martin on the committee are William F. Lee '72 , a former member of the Harvard Board of Overseers and co-managing partner of the large Boston law firm WilmerHale; Mark H. Moore, a professor at the Harvard Kennedy School; government department chair Nancy L. Rosenblum; Matthew I. Sundquist '09, president of the Undergraduate Council; and Harvard Law School professor David B. Wilkins '77.

This marks the second racially-charged incident the department has faced in recent memory.

In May 2007, Harvard students participating in a field day hosted by black student organizations on the Radcliffe Quadrangle were asked by HUPD officers if they had permission to be there, causing an uproar among black students and faculty.

FBI seizes computers from Internet cafe

BY ASHLEY TROTT
THE DAILY CALIFORNIAN (UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, BERKELEY)

Two days after University of California Police Department and members of the FBI's Joint Terrorism Task Force raided a community cooperative where social activists often gather, community members said they are still in the dark as to why the officers seized dozens of computers and data storage devices believed to be the source of threatening e-mails.

Campus officials said "more than a few" threatening e-mails were sent from the Long Haul Infoshop to UC Berkeley faculty and staff, leading the campus to seek a search warrant for various data storage devices at the shop.

While threatening e-mails to the campus are generally uncommon, most of the recent ones are about "hot-button issues" like the tree-sit and animal research, said campus spokesperson Robert Sanders.

Though Sanders would not say how long this particular series of e-mails has been going on, he said it "usually takes more than a week to get a warrant."

Campus officials said e-mails are considered threatening when they make a threat of physical harm, loss or damage.

"These are people that are doing part of their job," Sanders said. "These e-mails could potentially be harmful."

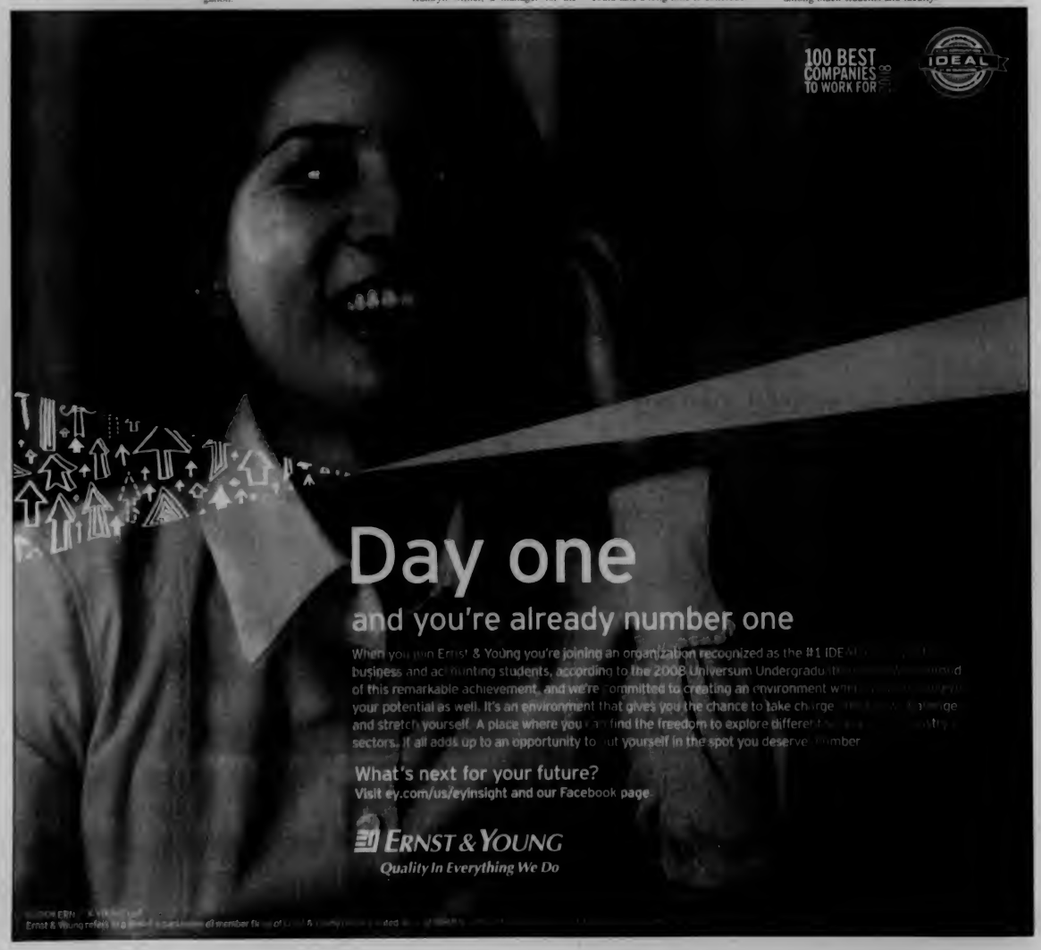
Officials remain tight-lipped about what the threatening e-mails are about as to not compromise the ongoing investigation.

According to Assistant Police Chief Mitch Celaya, UCPD, the main investigators of the threatening e-mails have been working with the FBI's Joint Terrorism Task Force on the case.

The shop provides free Internet to community members as well as meeting space for local liberal groups like Food Not Bombs and the Anarchist Study Group.

Police confiscated 15 computers and various flash memory drives, memory cards and CDs. Nearly all of the items, except some used exclusively by shop volunteers, had been designated for public use.

Celaya said it is not yet known whether the e-mails were sent by an individual or by a group.



Kathryn Miller, a manager for the shop, received a call from her landlord shortly before 10:30 a.m. when he informed her that police had entered the building.

Miller said the shop is a public access Internet room that does not keep track of who uses the computers.

Civil rights attorney Jim Chanin, whose office is located one block from the shop, was summoned to the scene by supporters as officers searched the shop.

According to Chanin, employees of the shop were given the part of the search warrant saying what the police were seizing, but not the part the affidavit that explains under what grounds the equipment was seized. Chanin said the space for the warrant number was left blank.

Celaya said that the investigation could take a long time to conclude.

'Oh, oh - listen to the music'

...on July 12, this former ... has become a dizzying array ... in all shapes, sizes and colors. ...nstrinic trappings like a 20-foot ... littered with balloons. Those ...said about it, to ensure that after the music, campers will navigate safely to their site.

Aside from the occasional chain-link fence, this unending throng of cars, tents and human beings is uninterrupted as far as one can see, even with the aid of standing on the nearest motor vehicle.

With an electric excitement in the air, the environment is extraordinarily conducive to casual interaction. Neighbors assist strangers with tent setup and even offering those nearby the opportunity to make cozy common rooms with tent poles and space tarp.

Though the performances don't start until 5 p.m., people need to explore the overwhelming amount of smells and sounds. A giant Ferris wheel towers above the entrance, and along the way, food locations are already being staked out for what will eventually become a long string of canvas for festival-goers to adorn with artwork.

See BONNAROO on page B6

Not just content on capturing a mainstream perspective, the festival continues to dig even deeper into the alternative spectrum offering traditionally media shy artists such as M.I.A, Radiohead and Beck chances to play to full

Joining Martin on the committee are William F. Lee '72 , a former member of the Harvard Board of Overseers and co-managing partner of the large Boston law firm WilmerHale; Mark H. Moore, a professor at the Harvard Kennedy School; government department chair Nancy L. Rosenblum; Matthew I. Sundquist '09, president of the Undergraduate Council; and Harvard Law School professor David B. Wilkins '77.

This marks the second racially-charged incident the department has faced in recent memory.

In May 2007, Harvard students participating in a field day hosted by black student organizations on the Radcliffe Quadrangle were asked by HUPD officers if they had permission to be there, causing an uproar among black students and faculty.

Music lovers unite in Windy City

BY ALEX BUTLER
CRIMSON CORRESPONDENT

(Editor's note: This is part one in a series about the Lollapalooza festival.)

CHICAGO — As I sit in the lobby of Chicago's O'Hare international airport, I'm struck at how much the terminal reminds me of Lollapalooza. The resemblances are almost uncanny: dazed and confused people roaming around in all directions, everything is overpriced, all types of people huddled in groups trying to figure out some sort of schedule, and absolutely no one over the age of 40 is having a good time.

But Chicago's most prominent music festival is now packed up and gone, and the music has stopped. A tornado is blowing through the Windy City and I will spend the good part of a day sitting in this exact gate, waiting for a plane that will never come and recounting the three days that rocked the Midwest.

Now, Chicago has a lot of things wrong with it. In addition to the mounting crime rate and ungodly weather patterns, the city remains one of the nation's most segregated. Drive on one long strip, and it's possible to touch base with the city's countless boroughs — through Italy, Pakistan, Korea, Poland, Sweden, Ukraine, Thailand, Spain, China and India to name a few.

In each neighborhood, I'm told, it's possible to live life as you would in any respective country. Traditions are kept intact and English is secondary in most of these areas — but around Loyola College in Roger's Park, diversity is well understood. Roger's Park takes great pride in the student population and its respective influence around the area.

See LOLLAPALOOZA on page B5

Points scored in festival's premeire

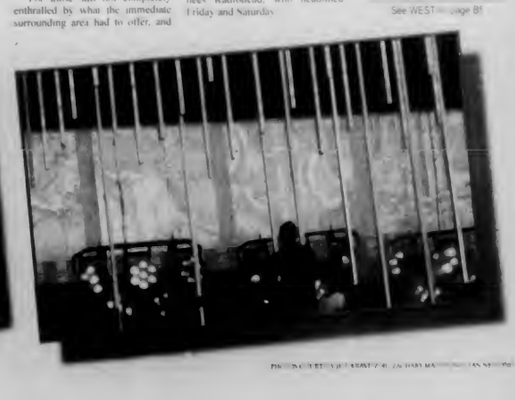
BY IAN NELSON

JERSEY CITY, N.J. — For those braving the Amherst summer, the second weekend of August offered its usual slew of things to do in the Pioneer Valley, including the wet combover and gin-and-tonic-defined Neil Hamburger, America's Funnyman, at the Iron Horse in Northampton.

For the more ambitious, one could have upped the ante dropped at least twice as much cash (for ticket as well as covering the midsummer's exceeding gas prices), and hopped over to Worcester's Palladium to check out CSS and The Go! Team combine forces, surely prodding all in attendance to dance the night away.

For those still not completely enthralled by what the immediate surrounding area had to offer, and those willing to skip on one date on even more precious dollars, a coming light-staff eventful — in the form of a three-day music and arts festival in New Jersey.



All Points West, despite its Pacific-leaning name, took place Aug. 8-10 at Liberty State Park in Jersey City — right across the river from the famed New York skyline.

The festival provided options for cutting the concert-goers' teeth to attend, including running single-day passes for all three days as well as letting their "green" hang out in offering discounts for carpooling parties.

The most surprising aspect of All Points West was not only its location, but the fact that it boasted two consecutive nights of perennial greatest-current-rock-band nominees Radiohead, who headlined Friday and Saturday.

See WEST on page B5

Mother of a movie musical

'Mamma Mia' film entertains with humor, catchy tunes

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

During a summer that had hordes of moviegoers filing in to see much-awaited films like "The Dark Knight," someone had the courage to remake the Broadway musical "Mamma Mia!" based on the music of ABBA, for the silver screen. And it worked out beautifully.

Universal Pictures, in partnership with Playtone and Littlestar, took the stage musical by Benny Andersson and Björn Ulvaeus, added dynamite talent like Meryl Streep, Pierce Brosnan and Colin Firth and created a toe-tapper for this generation to enjoy.

The movie takes place on the small Greek island of Kalokair, where Sophie Sheridan (played by the beautiful Amanda Seyfried) lives with her mother Donna (Streep), who runs a hotel named Villa Donna.

Sophie, a 20-year-old, fatherless bride-to-be grew up never knowing the true story about her dad. But after reading her mom's diary she learns that she has three potential fathers. When Donna's mother found out she was pregnant, she told her not to bother coming home – so she stayed in Greece and opened her own villa, trying to make ends meet by hosting tourists. And now, shortly before Sophie is set to marry Sky (Dominic Cooper), the love of her life, she wants nothing more than to have her daddy walk her down the aisle. But which one is it?

The first scene has Sophie rowing to a mailbox with three letters, addressed to Sam Carmichael (Brosnan), an American architect, Harry Bright (Firth), a British banker and Bill Anderson (Stellan Skarsgård), a Swedish sailor and travel writer. She writes the letters as her mother, asking the men to come to the wedding. All three agree.

Sophie and Donna then welcome their best friends, all of whom have made the trip from far-off lands to be at the wedding. Donna takes the car to the local boating dock to pick up Tanya (Christina Baranski), a wealthy, three-time divorcee and Rosie (Julie Walters), an author of culinary arts books. Both give wonderful performances. One can feel the connection between the friends almost instantly as they catch up, take playful verbal jabs at each other and reminisce about old times, including when they sang together in a group called Donna and the Dynamos.

After exchanging her best-friend handshake with her friends Ali (Ashley Lilley) and Lisa (Rachel McDowall), Sophie reads them her mom's diary entries and tells them of her plan. They are initially taken by surprise but then get excited and agree to help Sophie in any way they can.

One bond that forms during the film is that between the three possible fathers. The three meet while trying to get to Kalokair and immediately click. They all admit to knowing Donna and to not having spoken to her in about 20 years, but all are oblivious to the level of intimacy the others reached with her.

Like most other films, however, "Mamma Mia!" is not without its inconsistencies and vagueness. It is never explained how Donna and Sophie meet their good friends, what Donna was doing in Greece when she got pregnant or how exactly she met each of the men. This still does not harm the film too much, however, as it surpassed "Hairspray" as the record-holder for the biggest sales on the opening weekend for a movie musical. In fact, on Aug. 18, it became the fourth-highest grossing movie musical in American history, surpassing "The Rocky Horror Picture Show."

The acting is great but what really holds the movie together is the catchy music. Seyfried and Cooper have fantastic voices and can really belt out a good tune. Streep's voice is pleasantly surprising – not worthy of Carnegie Hall but still gentle on the ears. Baranski and Walters are also not hard to listen to.

The music hits a snag, however, when it's time for the three possible dads. It is clear Brosnan, Firth and Skarsgård were meant to act on screen and leave the singing alone. It's a far cry from anything you'd see from the worst of the worst of American Idol, but their voices aren't exactly harmonious. But the amateurish sound never makes the music any less captivating.

But it's not just a sappy chick-flick musical. There is plenty of humor and comic relief. Baranski and Walters had a chemistry that made for hysterical jabs and one-liners. Lines exchanged between Sophie and her friends and the three fathers are also quite funny.

With songs like "Dancing Queen," "Lay All Your Love On Me," "SOS," and of course, "Mamma Mia!" this film makes you crack a smile every time the music starts playing.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli00@gmail.com.

Based on the music of ABBA, "Mamma Mia" tells the story of a young girl (Amanda Seyfried) trying to find her father.

Nolan's 'Knight' conquers decades-old Batman franchise

In this July's highly-anticipated release "The Dark Knight," Heath Ledger plays the evil and insane Joker. The villain ruthlessly terrorizes Gotham in attempts to rid the city of "the bat-man."

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

By now, you've probably seen Christopher Nolan's "The Dark Knight." In fact, you've probably seen it in IMAX. But being the massive blockbuster that it was, no back-to-school edition of The Daily Collegian would be complete without a few musings on the strengths and weaknesses of the summer's breakout film.

It's been a long time coming, but Christopher Nolan's much-hyped sequel finally gives audiences the real "Batman" story they've been craving. Fans forced to soldier through the goth overload of the Burton era, and then the camp of the Joel Schumacher years, no doubt cracked a smile upon the release of Nolan's 2005 original, "Batman Begins."

As franchise reboots go, "Batman Begins" starts strong, pulling from graphic novels and the original comics to form much of the film's storyline.

At times, though, the treatment is a little grim. You may find yourself wondering, why so serious, Christopher Nolan? While "Batman Begins" takes no pause to laugh at itself, "The Dark Knight" is all laughter. Crazy, psycho laughter, that is.

"The Dark Knight" pits Batman against arch-nemesis the Joker. Since his 1940 inception at the hands of Bob Kane and Bill Finger, the Joker's been the de facto alpha villain of the Batman mythology. So it makes sense that Nolan would set him loose here, as Bruce Wayne/Batman takes his struggles to new extremes.

"Knight" is very much a tale of extremes – of morality, sanity and good. On the flip side of the coin, there is madness, immorality and pure evil. At all times, there are questions and consequences.

For Bruce Wayne, questions override consequences. Can he sustain his dual identities much longer? Unlike Clark Kent or Peter Parker, Wayne's superhero role is always optional. He has to put on the mask in order to become his alter ego, the mask doesn't wear him. Or does it?

Meanwhile, even the public wonders. Is Batman a hero or is he just some freak running around in a bat costume?

Christian Bale scores again as the angst-filled Caped Crusader. As the rich and aimless piece of the Batman puzzle, he plays Bruce Wayne with all the wastrel entitlement first glimpsed in "Batman Begins." Michael Caine and Morgan Freeman round out the good guys, charged with playing science wiz Lucius Fox (Freeman) and butler Alfred Pennyworth (Caine).

When "Begins" wrapped, Gotham seemed on the verge of change. But crime, as it turns out, won't let up so easily in the city. Batman or no.

In "Knight" Sal Maroni (Eric Roberts) has taken over for Carmine Falcone as head of the Gotham underworld. Even with new management, the underworld's got problems. With the help of Batman, Lt. Jim Gordon (a stellar Gary Oldman) has been cutting into their cash supply. Facing extinction, Gotham City's fading mafiosos enlist the Joker (Heath Ledger) to go to work on their little dilemma.

As the Joker, Ledger's performance is one already steeped in legend. Ledger went into seclusion for a month while he prepared for the role, using the time to perfect the Joker's voice and gait. This has led to much speculation. Could Ledger's total submergence in a role so unsettling have been the cause for the prescription drug use which eventually took his life?

That last part we may never know. What is clear since viewing "Knight" is that Ledger's performance is every bit deserving of legend. He's Johnny Rotten meets Malcolm McDowell in "A Clockwork Orange," and far, far removed from the campy clown popularized by Jack Nicholson and Cesar Romero. This is the Joker as he was always meant to be portrayed.

The Joker takes the job but he's got his own agenda. For a man without a plan, he acts out with alarming decisiveness. He doesn't target "the Bat-Man" directly – that would be too obvious – instead, he targets Gotham's public officials.

The Joker's deeds carry sinister consequences. With his serpentine tongue and festering face paint, he strikes a grisly image for Gothamites and for us. His cackling hyena laugh emanates throughout the theater as he wreaks havoc across the screen. No Gotham official seems beyond his reach, but the Joker especially has it out for District Attorney Harvey Dent (Aaron Eckhart).

As the white knight of Gotham, Dent has taken up the public face of crime-fighting while Batman skulks in the shadows. Bad enough he's already got the girl (Maggie Gyllenhaal) now Dent seems to want glory too. Wouldn't it be terrific to drive him insane? Taking a page from Alan Moore's "The Killing Joke" (except in Moore's original, the object is Jim Gordon), the Joker sets out to show that it doesn't take much to turn even the sanest person stark raving mad.

For all its grandeur, "The Dark Knight" has some untapped resources. Maggie Gyllenhaal brings personality to the thankless role of love interest/plot device Rachel Dawes. For an actress with her range, it's disappointing to see Gyllenhaal confined to a character so thinly drawn. If only she'd been able funnel some of "Secretary" into Rachel, it'd be easy to understand where both Bruce Wayne and Harvey Dent see the appeal.

For action sequences, Nolan shot several in the IMAX format. This is put to great use, especially in the opening heist. With Nolan's creative capers, it's a wonder the director hasn't stuck strictly to crime-dramas. His direction, however, can become disorienting during more involved action scenes.

See KNIGHT on page B6

SAVE $$$ ON YOUR COURSE BOOKS.
BUY THEM HERE.
LOWER PRICES ON THESE BOOKS AND LOTS MORE!!!

| Course | Title | Course | Title | Course | Title |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| AnSci 101 | Intro to An Science | Engin 110 | Intro To Chem. Engin | MIE 210 | Statics |
| AnSci 360 | Farm Animal Care | Engin 111 | Intro. To Civ. & Env. | MGT 260 | Intro To Law |
| Anthro 100 | Human Nature | Engin 112 | Intro to IE/OR | MGT 301 | Principles of Mgt. |
| Anthro 102-A | Arch. & Prehistory | Engin 113 | Intro to Mech. & Indus. | MicBio 160 | Bio. Of Cancer & |
| Anthro 103-A | Human Origins | Engl WP 111/112 | | Music 100 | Appreciation Intro |
| Anthro 104-A | Culture Soc. & People | EnvSci 101 | Intro to Env. Biology | Music 101 | Lit. of Music |
| Art Hist 100 | Survey Ancient & Med. | EnvSci 112 | Fund. Of the Environ. | Music 103 | History of Jazz |
| Art Hist 115 | Intro. To Visual Arts | EnvSci 213 | Intro. To Environ Policy | Nursing 100 | Pers. Of Nursing |
| Astron 100 1/4 | Intro To Astronomy | EnvDes 335 | Plants & Design | Nursing 210 | hum Growth & Dev |
| Astron 101 | Exploring the Universe | FnMgt 250 | Quant. Tools Mgt. | Nursing 301 | Pathophysiology |
| BioBiochem 285 | Cell & Molec. Biology | FnMgt 300 | Fund. Of Finance | Nursing 315 | Physical Assessment |
| Biochem 420 | Elem Biochemistry | FnMgt 301 | Corp. Finance | Nursing 327 | Mental Health Nurs. |
| Biochem 471 | Elem. Physical Chem | FnMgt 304 | Info. Tech. Finance | Nutr 130 | Under Nutrition |
| Biochem 523 | General Biochemistry | FnMgt 320 | Investments | Phil 110 | Intro. To Philosophy |
| Bio 100 A1-A4 B H | Intro to Biology I | Forest 528 | Forest & Wetlands Dyd | Phil 164 | Medical Ethics |
| Bio 103 | Plant Biology | French 110/120 | Elem. French I | Physics 100 | Concepts Physics |
| Bio 105 | Biology of Soc. Issues | GeoSci 100 | Global Environ. Change | Physics 125 | Seeing the Light |
| Bio 106 | Human Biology | GeoSci 101 | Earth | Physics 131 | Intro to Physics I |
| Bio 108 | Biodiversity | GeoSci 102 | Human Landscape | Physics 132 | Intro to Physics II |
| Bio 200 | Evolution | GeoSci 103 | Intro. To Oceanogra. | Physics 139 | Intro to Physics |
| Bio 287 | Intro to Ecology | GeoSci 105 | Dynamic earth | Physics 152 | General Physics II |
| Chem 110 | General Chemistry | Ger 110/120 | Elem. German | Physics 181 | Physics I - Mech |
| Chem 111/112 | Gen Chem Sci. Majors | Hist 111 | World Hist 1500-Pres | Physics 281 | Comput. Physic |
| Chem 261/262 | Organic Chemistry | Hist 140 A | Western Thought | Physics 421 | Mechanics I |
| Chem 269 | Org. Chem Lab | Hist 114 | Hist. of China I | PolSci 101-B | American Politics |
| Chem 471 | Elem. Phys. Chem | Hist 150 | Des. Of Amer Civ-1880 | PolSci 121 B | World Politics |
| CmpSci 105 | Intro To Comp. Sci. | Hist 151 A | Des of Ameri. Civ II | PolSci 162 | Constitutional Law |
| CmpSci 120 | Problem Solving w/Inte | HT Mgt 100 | Intro to Hosp. & Tour. | PolSci 255 | Am. Foreign Policy |
| Cmpsci 187-A | Program. W/ Data Struc. | HT Mgt 150 | Food Pro. Mgt. | Psych 100 1-9 | Intro To Psychology |
| CmpSci 287 | Prog. Lang. Paradigms | HT Mgt 250 | Food Service Mgt. | Psych 240 A-C | Stats. For Psych |
| Comm 118 | Intro to Interpers. Comm | HT Mgt 260 | Hosp. Personnel Mgt. | Psych 241 | Methods of Inquiry |
| Comm 121 | Intro to Media & Culture | Hum Dev 270 | Child Development | Psych 320 | Learn & Think |
| Comm 240 | Modes of Film Comm. | Kin 100 | Intro to Kinesiology | Psych 330 | Phys. Psychology |
| ComDis 210 | Intro To Comm. Disor. | Kin 110 | Human Perf. & Nutrit. | Psych 335 | Behav. Endocrin. |
| ComDis 211 | Anat & Phys. Speech | Kin 215 | Prevent. & Care of At | Psych 350 | Child Development |
| ComDis 315 | Speech & Lang. Disor. | Kin 297 A, C | Anatomy & Phys. II | Psych 380 | Abnorm. Psychology |
| Econ 103 A-F | Intro To Microeconomic | Kin 380 | Diets, Supple. & Ath. | Soc 106 A, D | Race, Gender Class |
| Econ 104 | Intro To MacroEcon. | Kin 440 | wellness in The Wor. | Span 110/126 | Elem. Spanish I |
| Econ 203 A-B | Intro. Microecon Theor. | Math 100 | Basic Math Skills | Span 126 | Elem. Spanish II |
| Econ 204-B | Intro Macroecon The | Math 101-104 | Prep'ale Algebra | Span. 311 | Ad. Grammar |
| Econ 305 | Marxian Economics | Math 113 | Math For Elem. Teach. | | |
| ECE 572 | Optoelectronics | Math 121 | Linear Meth. & Prob. | | |

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St. Amherst
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop) 253-3870, 253-7816
Rush Hours: 8:30-8 M-Sat, 12-5 Sun Sept. 1 - Sept. 15

WELCOME BACK STUDENTS!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.org 413-256-4071
Fall Special!
$2 off All Greens Fees
Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
Walk on anytime!
No Tee Times Necessary!
Must Present This Coupon and a Student I.D.
Valid Through Fall Closing 2008

Mythbusting: tried and true Irish tradition

Beer dude explores history of Guinness

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

With a new school year upon us, the beer column is back to teach and talk everything and anything beer.

This July, I had the opportunity to go to Ireland for a week. Ireland is an outstanding place, full of history, scenic sights and, of course, good beer. The best beer in Ireland was Guinness, so I figured it was fitting to devote my first beer column of fall 2008 to Guinness and its excellence.

History

The history of Guinness could be a column – or even a book – in itself, but don't worry; I won't get too into the details. I'll give you the Cliff Notes instead.

Arthur Guinness started brewing beer in 1759 after purchasing a brewery in Dublin. At first, Guinness was solely brewing ales. It wasn't until the 1770s that Guinness decided to brew porters, which had become a popular English import in the late 18th century. The new porters outsold the Guinness ale, which ceased production in 1799.

In 1801, Guinness brewed a beer named West Indies Porter. This beer was the precursor of today's Guinness Foreign Extra Stout. The brew had 3 percent more alcohol than traditional Guinness. Two years later, Guinness passed away and left the company to his son, Arthur Guinness II.

Arthur Guinness II began exporting the porters to other countries. By the 1820s, Guinness was served in Portugal, Trinidad, Sierra, Barbados and the Guernsey Islands.

Benjamin Lee Guinness took over the company after the death of his father in 1850. Under his leadership, Guinness finally crossed the Atlantic and reaches the United States' New York, to be exact.

Guinness was one of the main employers for the Irish during the first half of the 20th century. The brewery employed 3,240 Dubliners in 1906 alone. This number continued to grow as economic hard times hit the country for many years.

Today Guinness continues to be brewed in Dublin, as well as in many other countries such as Jamaica, England and Nigeria. In all, Guinness is brewed in 49 countries.

The original brewery at St. James's Gate in Dublin is still in operation today, but the main function of the location is as the Guinness Storehouse. The storehouse has daily tours and comes across like a Disney attraction for beer fans. At the top of the storehouse is Guinness' Gravity Bar that gives out one free pint with each adult ticket stub at the end of the tour. Go early in the day to appreciate the panoramic view or otherwise you'll be jammed in, since this is a popular tourist attraction and spot to start pub crawls.

Myths

Besides the important history of Guinness, Guinness is also known for its popular myths. One of my friends told me before I left for Ireland that the Guinness brewery only pays a pound a year in taxes because the building is so old. Another myth I have heard over the years was the darker the beer, the larger the alcohol content in each pint. The most popular myth I've heard is that Americans do not know how to properly pour a pint of Guinness.

None of those stories are true.

Arthur Guinness did sign a 9,000-year lease, but his taxes were never a pound a year. His annual rent was 45 pounds a year.

The alcohol content myth is even further off than the first: The color of a beer has nothing to do with its alcohol content. And while we are on the subject of color, Guinness is not even black. Next time you are at a bar, hold your glass to the light; you will notice the beer is actually a ruby red color.

But, where was I? Oh yes, the alcohol content. Guinness is a stout and stouts are traditionally dark in color because of the roasted barley. The alcohol content for a traditional Guinness draught is 0ϵ¿ 4.2 percent. To put this in context, your buddy's Keystone Light also has an alcohol content of 4.2.

The last myth is told more on the Irish side than the American side. Since the Irish are the original drinkers of Guinness, they do know how to pour a perfect glass. But the finer bars in America can pour a close second best.

If you really want to impress someone and pour a Guinness the Irish way, just follow these simple directions. First, pour the pint about halfway, and then let it settle. After two minutes, continue pouring until you have reached the top. At this point, pull the tab (these are bar instructions, by the way) the opposite way (toward the patron) briefly and then let the Guinness settle for another two minutes.

Yes, a pint of Guinness takes effort and four minutes to pour, but it is worth it. Trust me.

Limited Edition Failure

Not everything Guinness pours is a success. In 2005, Guinness introduced a Brewhouse Series of limited edition brews. Each beer was to be served on tap in local pubs for six months. The first in this series, Brew 39, was released from late 2005 to around March 2006. According to local bartenders, this stout tasted very similar to traditional Guinness except for some added hops in the aftertaste.

The second brew was the Toucan Brew, named after the famous Toucan from Guinness advertisements. This beer contained three times the hops as regular Guinness.

North Star was the third and final brew of this series. According to my bartender at the Knights Bar, North Star was the only successful beer of the series and Guinness abandoned the series at its discontinuation.

Taste

Guinness comes in many types, but the subject here will be the Guinness Draught, since it is the most available type of Guinness in the United States.

If you buy it in a bottle or nitro can, it says to serve this beer extra cold. Ignore that suggestion. Simply refrigerate the beer for a couple hours after you get back from the liquor store and it will be fine to drink.

While it is fun to drink straight from the bottle, this beer is best served in a nice tall glass. The bottles and cans come with a nitro cap, helping the beer pour correctly every time, even if you just simply pour directly into the glass.

Now that it's in the right glass, it's time to drink. Guinness draught goes down smoothly, with a hint of coffee and chocolate. Unlike most dark beers, Guinness is not heavy on hops like India Pale Ale or anything Sam Adams.

The smoothness makes this beer perfect for all seasons – yes, even summer. Guinness goes great with spicy barbeque and calzones. It's not a party beer, but it's definitely good for a get-together with friends at the Grad Lounge.

Help Wanted

Beer column writing and drinking alone is never a good thing. But my friend and fellow beer dude Derrick Perkins graduated last May, leaving me to write this column alone. But instead of calling it quits, I ask you, the reader. Do you want to be a fellow beer dude or dudette for a column or two? E-mail me if you have any questions or suggestions.

Tim McCall can be reached at tmccall@student.umass.edu

The Daily Collegian's Beer Dude offers advice and shares the history of Ireland's own Guinness.

'Marriage' eloquently explored

Greer shows truths of love

By Vinh Nguyen
Collegian Columnist

Ask several people who have been in a failed relationship about their former lovers, and often their refrain will sound similar to this: "I didn't really know him/her."

But as Pearlie Cook, the narrator from Andrew Sean Greer's novel "The Story of a Marriage," so eloquently asserts, "We think know the ones we love ... But what we love turns out to be a poor translation, a translation we ourselves have made, from a language we barely know."

And it is through this theme of mistranslation that Greer, acclaimed author of "The Confessions of Max Tivoli," so beautifully crafts his imaginative prose.

Unlike most couples, Pearlie and her husband, the attractive and alluring Holland Cook, were strangers not once but twice. They first met as children living in rural Kentucky. Although World War II eventually separates them, it would also be the cause of their accidental reunion years later in San Francisco, where Pearlie works for the government and Holland returns as a sailor.

Their romance quickly rekindles and despite warnings from Holland's aunts regarding his conditions – incurable "bad blood" and a "crooked heart" – Pearlie marries him, devoting herself entirely to the duties of a housewife.

Even after bearing a polio-stricken son, Pearlie remains undeterred in her quest to maintain harmony for her family. For the sake of her husband's weak heart, she clips emotionally harmful articles from his newspaper, purchases a vibrating household phone and even manages to find a dog who cannot bark. She goes as far as sleeping in a separate bedroom, providing Holland, a sensitive sleeper, with undisturbed rest.

This family dynamic, however, changes when Pearlie meets Charles "Buzz" Drumer, a handsome, well-dressed friend of Holland's from his sailor days. Buzz delivers a proposition to Pearlie that not only reveals how little she knows about her husband but also how little readers know about the characters; there are subtle quirks about the Cooks that will baffle most readers. And the revelation of why the Cooks are so different will piece all the previous nuances together like a puzzle, demonstrating Greer's true genius in storytelling.

Greer's prose reads as smoothly as his sentences are striking. He has a flair for the unconventional – he describes ice as "shivering" and poignantly compares carrying a painful memory to wearing a "string of pearls."

While their desires and motives seem unclear at times, the characters appear quite real. Greer's accuracy in portraying each individual is almost unsettling, particularly in Pearlie Cook, where Greer presents one of the most fascinating and intelligent literary protagonists to date.

Pearlie's struggles and sacrifices throughout her tumultuous year bring readers through a cathartic exploration in truly understanding what it means to love and marry someone, whether it is out of necessity or passion. At times, though, her actions and compromises straddle the borderline between being either overly altruistic or farfetched. Nevertheless, it often seems unimaginable that Greer was able to create such a natural, distinctly feminine viewpoint.

To read "The Story of a Marriage" is to listen intrusively in on some of the truly most intimate – often painfully sad – conversations and secrets of others. Greer effortlessly surprises readers with what would be soap opera scenarios, but writes his twists with such adeptness and an uncanny perception of the racial, social and sexual limitations of the 1950s that they seem more believable than clichéd.

Vinh Nguyen can be reached at vnguyen@student.umass.edu

Giant Furniture Sale
A huge collection of gently used couches, tables, chairs, desks & bureaus
Comfy, Experienced, Affordable
Friday, September 12 & Saturday, September 13
2pm-5pm 9am-1pm
Amherst Town Common
Home delivery available for a small fee. Donations accepted on-site on day of event.
Call (413) 549-3968 for more information.
All proceeds benefit The Amherst Survival Center
Providing food, clothing, and community to Pioneer Valley families in need since 1975
Principal Sponsor: Hart and Patterson Financial Services and the UMass Five College Federal Credit Union

Stress-free back to school

By Joe Stahl
Collegian Staff

The first week of college can be pretty overwhelming. With all the goals and aspirations for the upcoming semester, getting it all done may seem unrealistic. How is it possible to make the Dean's List, make new friends, get involved on campus and learn how to save money all at the same time? Reaching these competing goals can cause excessive stress.

In a 2003 study of 13,000 college students by researchers at Kansas State University, the percentage of students with stress and anxiety problems nationwide rose from 36 percent to 62 percent over 13 years.

To avoid being a statistic, staying organized is the first step in avoiding stress. No, not in the way your mom wants you to be organized (picking clothes up off the floor or keeping your pencils in your top desk drawer). It is about organizing the thoughts that are scrambling through your head.

Find a quiet place to think and ask yourself "What do I need to do first?" If to-do lists have helped your struggles with stress in the past, then pull out a pad and pencil. Just let the priorities pour on to the paper without being conscious of their rank. When you finish your list, prepare to be overwhelmed by the results. After review, decide what things need to be done first.

There may be an urgency to cross off all of the to-dos, but it will not happen. It is imperative to realize that not all of your goals can be met or even started on in the first week. Patience and sensibility are virtues when completing tasks. There will be distractions that occur in daily life which will stonewall you. Good sensibility and intention toward achieving goals will help keep you moving forward.

Most college students are unable to say "No" – particularly during the first week. Elizabeth Scott, M.D., a stress management and [illegible] coach has three tips on how to say the challenging word, "No."

1. Be firm – not defensive or overly apologetic – and polite. This gives the appearance that you are sympathetic, but will not easily change your mind if pressured.

2. If you decide to tell the person you'll get back to them, be matter-of-fact and not [illegible]ing. If you lead people to believe you'll likely say "yes" later, then it's more disappointing with a later "no."

3. If asked for an explanation, you may just say "No". Remember that you needn't owe anyone one. "It doesn't do with my schedule" is perfectly acceptable.

Stressors like money will be prominent the first week back. Do not get discouraged by excessive spending; moving can be costly. Students that are returning for their second or third year have the ability to look back on expenditures from pre-

See STRESS on page B7

ATTENTION STUDENTS:
Come see what you've been missing out on!
ATKINS FARMS
Country Market
While grabbing your weekly groceries, stop by our...
• Sushi Bar
• Deli Bar
• Extensive Salad Bar
• Bakery
• Full Service Florist
COME CHECK OUT OUR SPECIALTY FALL PRODUCTS...
Homemade Caramel Apples
Apple Cider
Homemade Fudge
Cider Donuts
ALSO AVAILABLE:
Take - Out Food
Student Care Packages
Corner of Route 116 & Bay Road
South Amherst, MA 01002
(413) 253-9528 * WWW.ATKINSFARMS.COM
JUST A SHORT DRIVE FROM UMASS

Grunge-rock lives at Comcast Center

Pearl Jam delivers during last performance of summer tour

By Chase Wheeler
Collegian Correspondent

MANSFIELD — The final two dates of the grunge rock giant Pearl Jam's June tour saw a combined 40,000 fans fill the Comcast Center for two nights of electrifying performances.

Riding on the success of their self-titled 2006 release, the band's eighth studio album, the Seattle-based Pearl Jam scheduled a 13-date tour of the eastern United States that began on the hot sands of West Palm Beach, Fla., and concluded amidst the dense forests of Massachusetts.

When doors opened at 6 p.m. Saturday, June 28, the night of the first show, the isolated open-air venue was flooded with fans and followers, mostly concentrated between the ages of 20 and 50.

Around 7 p.m., those already inside the compound were treated to a surprise one-song preopener by Pearl Jam lead singer Eddie Vedder. Taking the stage alone, Vedder played his version of Australian band Hunters & Collectors' "Throw Your Arms Around Me," which he humorously renamed "I Will Kiss You in 155 Places".

When finished, Vedder introduced the opening act, Ted Leo and the Pharmacists, before exiting the stage to tumultuous applause.

Hailing from Washington, D.C., lead singer and guitarist Ted Leo and his band mates performed an hour-long set of fast-paced punk and indie rock songs. The band's loud and unrelenting sound set up Pearl Jam's entrance well, as the crowd was buzzing with anticipation during the intermission.

Shortly after 9 p.m., the lights onstage went down and the sold-out crowd roared as Pearl Jam's five-man team crept onstage in the darkness. Vedder, who also played rhythm guitar to back up his vocals, was joined by energetic lead guitarist Mike McCready, bassist Jeff Ament, somber rhythm guitarist Stone Gossard and former Soundgarden drummer Matt Cameron.

The band opened with the B-side "Hard to Imagine", which was originally cut from the band's "Vs." album, before launching into the "Ten" classic, "Why Go." Vedder, swaying slightly with a bottle of red wine in hand, then greeted the crowd and stated that the band would make the most of the long two-hour set it had in front of it.

Pearl Jam took the audience on a full tour of its musical career, digging up decade-old hits such as the dark and hard-edged "Once," and the melodic and bittersweet "Black" from "Ten," while giving more recent singles like "Comatose" from 2006's "Pearl Jam" play as well.

One of the most memorable performances of the night was an extended version of "Even Flow," the band's second single off of its acclaimed debut album "Ten." Leaving the moderate tempo heard on the studio version behind, rhythm guitarist Stone Gossard (the original composer of the song's main riff) charged into the track's opening lick, setting a blistering tempo for the rest of the song.

Vedder encouraged the crowd to sing along, and, at times, even allowed fans to sing large portions of the hit's verse and chorus. The explosive energy that Gossard produced at the onset mounted throughout the song and culminated in a long, yet meticulous and inspired guitar solo from McCready. Amidst his runs and jumps around the stage and various acknowledgements to the screaming crowd, McCready placed his Gibson Les Paul guitar behind his head while playing to add flare to his solo.

After a couple more solid, but not particularly memorable songs, the band waved goodbye to the packed venue and left the stage only to be brought back for an encore by resounding applause and cheers. Vedder, now on his second bottle of wine, belted out The Who's "Love, Reign O'er Me" with the assistance of the crowd before receiving an unexpected five-minute ovation during "Vitalogy's" "Better Man" that left the singer so stunned that it took nearly five minutes for him to regain enough composure to finish the song.

Pearl Jam lived up to expectations during their two night stay in Mansfield. The group played hits spanning their career.

The band then once again left the stage, with an emotional Vedder returning solo to perform "No More", a song he had written in tribute to a soldier and friend who had suffered from Post Traumatic Stress Disorder upon his return from the war in Iraq.

Vedder then took advantage of the subdued and reflective crowd to express his anger over the fact that there was an Air Force recruiting station inside the grounds of the Comcast Center. Thick sarcasm filled his voice as he asked, "What better place to sign up for the military than at a concert?"

The intense mood Vedder created quickly switched back to fanatical excitement as the rest of Pearl Jam rejoined the singer onstage to conclude the concert with a rendition of the band's first released single, "Alive". Vedder's triumphant lyrics were underscored by the rise and fall of Gossard's cutting guitar riffs and accented by a sharp and calculated solo from McCready at the finish.

Pearl Jam is among the few prominent survivors of the grunge-punk 90s, and to see the band live cemented that assertion. They didn't put on the flashiest show – no props, no pyrotechnics, no unorthodox stage antics – but it hardly made a difference; a large, softly lit banner of an ocean sunset hanging in the stage background provided the atmosphere and a talented group of musicians supplied the entertainment.

"I'm still alive!" Vedder sang during the band's final song 'We know, Eddie,

We know.

Chase Wheeler can be reached at cwheeler@student.umass.edu

June dance program reaches back to roots

By Stephanie McPherson
Collegian Staff

Spoken word. Hip-hop. Jazz. Gospel. Blues. Spirituals. The history of American music and dance is intricately bound to the evolution of African music. There is not a beat or refrain that can be heard on a modern radio station that has not, in some way, been influenced by a genre of the African tradition.

The story of African-influenced music is long and deep. It dates back to before Kanye graduated, before Louis Armstrong blew South Side Chicago away, before slaves kept their spirits alive in song, to the rhythms of ancient African percussion.

In the University of Massachusetts' Fine Arts Center this June 24 through 27, a group of students from across the country took the journey through musical history in the annual workshop/performance series "Sankofa."

Coming from the Akan people of Ghana, "sankofa" is a word of layered meaning. The 1993 film of the same name defines the word as, "we must go back and reclaim our past so we can move forward; so we understand why and how we came to be who we are today."

The students of the 2008 "Sankofa" did just that. They explored African roots in American dance with four days of workshops, led by renowned choreographer George Faison.

The stage of the Rand Theater was decorated with traditional African-woven blankets in rich blues, reds and oranges. The word "Sankofa" was stretched across the back screen. The show opened with a timeline-style train of dancers, starting with traditional African dance moving all the way through hip-hop.

A band was tucked off to the side of the stage, providing a soundtrack for much of the evening.

Faison introduced each act by explaining a new facet of the word on which the show was based. Between acts, a poet stepped into a spot light to set the mood, spewing rhythmic poetry about everything from African spirituals to the ambiance of Harlem.

The students performed social dances like the Charleston, the Lindy Hop as well as a hip-hop number. Professional artists performed between the students' acts, the most notable being Maurice Chestnut, a superb tap dancer who earned not only tumultuous applause but a rousing standing ovation.

After a brief intermission, Jon Hendricks, famous blues and jazz artist, treated the audience to a song that told the story of African music. Starting with tribal, Hendricks spoke to the beat of the live band behind him. They worked their way through the music's history, including Calypso, spirituals and blues, treating the audience to sample songs of each style.

"Sankofa" began in 2007 with the performance of Ron K. Brown's "Exodus" by the UMass touring dance company. Summer of 2008 welcomed the Tony-winning Faison to choreograph and work with students across the country, ages 15 to 54. Next summer, Chuck Davis will be working with a new group of students.

Maryann Lombardi, the managing director of "Sankofa" and a professor in the drama department, says the ever changing program keeps things fresh.

"It's very exciting artistically and educationally because it's a different experience every time," she said.

This summer's experience was led by a master in the dance world. Faison has been dancing professionally since 1966. He has

See SANKOFA on page B6

Students from across the U.S. met at UMass this summer to learn about African influences on American dance through the program "Sankofa."

GET A 5% REBATE ON TEXTBOOKS

5% rebate on textbook purchases from the UMASS Textbook Annex

Here's how it works:

Step 1: Purchase your books from the UMass Textbook Annex.

Step 2: Bring your receipt and UMASS I.D. to the UMASS University Store in the Campus Center between the fourth week and last day of classes.

Step 3: Get a 5% rebate credit to use on anything at the UMass University Store.

Rebate offer is good only on textbook purchases. Valid I.D. required. Returned books not eligible for rebate. Textbook receipts must be presented during the semester purchases where made. Store rebate credits expire at the end of the semester they where received. Rebate not to exceed $50.00 per semester. See store for details.

UMass University of Massachusetts University Store and Textbook Annex

follett

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™

Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!

A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS

Your life will NEVER be the same!

••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN

Fall Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights

You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!

6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)

Campus Center Room 168C • Sept. 8 (Mon) • Sept. 9 (Tues) • Sept. 10 (Wed)

•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Sept. 11 @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!

Volunteer, *while earning credit!

Bonnaroo reminiscent of classic rock era

BONNAROO from page B1

Inside the area is difficult to navigate. The maze-like set up of the concert's center is a labyrinth of side streets with vendors selling art, food and clothes among even larger set ups where companies vie to lest out their new products on the vast pool of consumers.

Not everyone comes to Bonnaroo for the music. Many entrepreneurs come simply out of the desire to settle into the booths that will eventually form the guidelines for the busy walkways in Bonnaroo's own bustling economic center, "Centeroo."

Along these streets you are liable to come across anything from people selling everyday items like clothes and accessories to booths where you can build a bongo drum, buy art and glass work and even dress up your baby in the latest tie-dyed kid's wear.

Others offer services to the crowds. Didn't bring a razor? Garnier Fructis has its own hair care center where you can get a free shave and complementary shampoo. Hungry? The nearest cart might provide anything from corn dogs, pitas and lemonade to traditional Jamaican and African food. There is even a fully functional arcade powered by your good friends at Microsoft to promote everything X-Box.

The site is almost deliberately set up to foster this sort of disorientation, further compounded by the five major stage names - the What Stage, Which Stage, This Tent, That Tent and The Other Tent. Names that would leave any person intoxicated enough to be unable to find adequate directions to their proper destination.

All this confusion gives concert goers the ability to travel wherever their ears will take them. Thus younger bands are given a chance to prove themselves, keeping artists on top of their game with constant reminders that there is always some other hidden treasure waiting to be discovered.

A sentimental Jerry DePizzo, guitarist and saxophone player for O.A.R, touched in on one of the festival's many press conferences. He says that he is always impressed by the festival and the many challenges that it offers bands.

"I think Bonnaroo is a place where the cream of the crop from the touring community comes and you have to bring you're "A" game," he said. "This is the first time we're on one of the larger stages. That's the way you turn 10 people into 10,000. You have to go out and make an impression."

DePizzo, like many of the artists is eager to make an impression on the crowd. Many of the young bands were conscious of this necessity as they hoped to garner the credibility boost that accompanies crafting a memorable concert experience. While some bands did this with solid sets, others sought more extreme tactics.

One of the more intimate stages at Bonnaroo, the Sonic Stage, gave many small bands the opportunity for a short half hour set that busy attendees might be forced to miss later. The stage also gave die-hard fans a chance to see the band twice within the same day.

There, Broken Social Scene, a Canadian acoustic rock group, tried one of the more ridiculous attempts at crowd interaction. Despite its attempts to rile the crowd into a "put down your bong and vote for Obama" sing-a-long it proved to be an awkwardly bizarre moment that seemed in poor taste.

While some tried to go over the top, others decided to let their music speak for them. Matt Morris graced the stage on Saturday with his guitarist and new album producer Charlie Sexton. Morris was out to promote his new album "The Un-American," out this fall. It will be the first release on Justin Timberlake's Tennman Records.

When asked about the possibility of trying a newer approach to album sales, such as viral marketing, Morris insists that he wants to avoid the "Radiohead rout." Onstage he woos the crowded with a surprisingly crisp falsetto and melodic sense.

"What's really great about Bonnaroo as a first timer is the people who come here love music, and just connect to the bands," Morris said. "They want to come and enjoy themselves, so as a performer it's great. There's never a dead audience."

Commenting on the hectic nature of the event and often elusive nature of the crowd, Comedy Tent performer Janeane Garofalo even likened it to performing in a circus tent.

"I'll tell you what, nothing is better for comedy than doing it during the day, [while] having all this ambient noise behind you, and being in a circus tent," she said. "So it's been going very well."

The first day of the festival was meant to be a platform for aspiring bands. Many were hoping their hype would translate into a positive reception at the festival. Thursday night included the much anticipated sets from such indie favorites as MGMT and Vampire Weekend, both of whom delivered on their promises.

Anticipation was high inside the tent for MGMT, where even the roadies drew applause for coming out and retesting some equipment. Coming on at 8:30 p.m. and entering with the song "Weekend Wars," MGMT arrived as a five-piece band, a far cry from the studio where it produces its elaborate soundscapes with only two members. Doubts about the ability of the new lineup to accurately reproduce the studio recordings proved to be accurate, though only on occasion, as the band fell in and out of a comfortable synchronization onstage.

After a few more high-energy songs, including the bands rock radio staple "Time to Pretend," it was time to catch the main event of the night, Vampire Weekend. On stage the band, hailing from Yale, showed its quirky personalities, charming the crowd as it tried to eat up some of its impossibly long set time.

After dedicating a host of songs to the likes of "Boston," "Lil Jon" and "those tropical Irish girls" the band showed no signs of slowing down, even when showcasing new material. A new song that has recently surfacing on YouTube entitled "White Sky" was the true highlight of the night.

The currently-unreleased song successfully proved that these kids aren't one album wonders but serious musicians capable of reproducing their unique synthesis of African tribal music and indie rock into a seamless live set filled with energy and spontaneity all presented with a relaxed demeanor.

Vampire Weekend's performance seemed a good sign of things to come.

Comedian Janeane Garofalo likened the disorienting feeling of the maze-like set-up of Bonnaroo to being at a circus.

For more information on the Bonnaroo Music and Arts Festival, go to the Collegian Arts Blog at www.dailycollegian.com.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

All Points West proves itself in Jersey City

All Points West, a new music festival held at Liberty State Park, managed to gather an impressive selection, including Radiohead, whose set impressed the crowd with a psychedelic light show. The Canadian group Metric, pictured above, also had a great performance.

WEST from page B1

months ago, Saturday was the clear winner with the Main Stage hosting (in chronological order) Chromeo, Metric, Animal Collective, Kings of Leon and, finally, Radiohead. The rest of the stages Saturday held nothing quite as tempting as a day-closing Radiohead set, the exception being The Roots, though it was no secret who most of the ticket holders were longing to see.

The tried and true way to catch a glimpse of festival headliners is to get to their stage as early as possible with as much water as possible and to wedge oneself as close to the stage as possible and sit through all the bands preceding the golden goal.

All Points West was a bit flashier in this respect, arranging for a truly hot string of pre-Radiohead acts. Canadian group Chromeo was first to take the Main Stage, bringing its 1980s throwback dance party gems to life, even at 2:30 in the afternoon. The two members P-Thugg and Dave 1 grooved behind their respective tables which were propped up by shapely and seductive feminine legs, a solid touch to go along with their swanky style. Chromeo burned through some new material, as well as celebrated hits such as "Tenderoni," seemingly never failing to interject their name into each song.

Next on the roster was Metric, more indie Canadians with the intent to get up and move. The band's danceable songs were turned into all out rockers in the live setting, providing room for front woman Emily Haines to prance around and gyrate in her shiny gold outfit for the duration of its 45-minute set.

Haines' vocal sounded spot-on, while her band kept up note for note, all in front of a huge backdrop of crowd-scanning Jumbotron images. Highlights included the banging "Dead Disco" and the sweetness-packed ditty "Calculation Theme" from Metric's record "Old World Underground, Where Are You Now?" The latter was turned from the album's down-tempo, minimal arrangement to an all out rock 'n' roll jam.

Unfortunately for Metric, its superb performance was quickly drowned out by what was to follow. With the sun beating down from the bluest of skies, Animal Collective took the stage, perhaps out of its element performing in the light of day, though this did not alter the experience one bit.

Animal Collective's ever-evolving sound has recently been making even more turns, its newest songs nearly all electronics and sample-based. Its live shows currently consist of just three members, Avey Tare, Geologist and Panda Bear, with the absence of Deakin hardly putting a damper on their show.

Its first four numbers were all new material, with groans and blips of sound coming together to form a hypnotic brand of primordial sound. Some bordered on dance grooves, some bordered on golden psychedelics, but was for the most part far from any conceivable genre.

The middle of its set saw them re-work Panda Bear's "Comfy In Nautica" from his 2007 record "Person Pitch," a stomping, chanting mess of samples and vocal sounds. Next came "Fireworks" from its "Strawberry Jam" record, an extended take on the album's more tame and concise version. The set ended with another new song, "Brother Sport," again bringing in an array of elements to create something completely new-sounding, a tropical, world-influenced rhythm with lots of room for singing along to the harmonies or shouting along to the shrieks.

The clear low point of the day was Kings of Leon, a baffling choice to slot between Animal Collective and Radiohead. A good amount of people seemed into it, but the healthy dose of guitar wanking was just too much.

Sporting filthy facial hair and some faux-rock 'n' roll attire, Kings of Leon thrashed desperately to make a ripple, only doing so unintentionally by getting a few laughs from the gigantic "KINGS OF LEON" banner glowing from the Jumbotron.

The only thing saving Kings of Leon's credibility was the extremely visible Ed O'Brien of Radiohead rocking out to their set from the side of the stage. If Radiohead likes it maybe its not all bad, right? This was not the case, and the end of the set could not come soon enough.

Strangely enough, in a Rolling Stone interview a few years back Sheryl Crow said "seeing Radiohead was like being in church." A more perfect description of its live show is hard to come by, for it is unreal how tight and flawlessly it perform. This transcendence is matched by few, if any, bands currently, meaning any Radiohead show is bound to wow and excite.

From the moment the band took to its instruments to the moment its light show morphed together across the length of the stage, to the moment the first notes of "Reckoner" chimed out, Liberty State Park was in awe. After "Reckoner," Radiohead blazed through 24 more songs, including every song from last year's deliciously marketed "In Rainbows" (plus "Hangers & Mash" from "In Rainbows" Disc 2).

Brilliant light displays hung like stalactites glowing any color imaginable at any given time, matched perfectly with the secondary fog-enhancing light display. Since each song was so worthy to perform, and each song sounded so good, it was hard to pick out actual highlights.

There were some notable misses, such as the absence of a "Paranoid Android" or a "Karma Police," or even the rendition of Thom Yorke's "Cymbal Rush" that the band has been playing off Yorke's solo record "The Eraser," and certain songs excited more than others.

"Where I End and You Begin" was an unexpected nugget from "Hail to the Thief," and "The Gloaming" from the same record truly came to life, the band silhouetted by a stage glowing all green in the manner of an encounter of the third kind.

The second encore was truly breathtaking, starting with "House of Cards," right into the most surprising song of the night, "Planet Telex" from its second record "The Bends." This was the ultimate test for the light show and live video feeds of themselves, turning all into a twitching Technicolor rainbow. This number was only topped by the final song of the night, "Idioteque," a vigorously pulsating dance beat with all the right glitches and blips.

The two-hour-plus set was spectacular, with nothing left to be desired. Letting it all sink in while numbly herded from the Park to the street and onto shuttling New Jersey Light Rail trains, tens of thousands of people from all over cramped together waiting hours to get back to their bed. If any discomfort or weariness was felt by anyone it was not voiced, for all was right – they were just treated to Radiohead.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

Battle of Chicago

LOLLAPALOOZA from page B1

This area of the city that embraces diversity is the perfect home base for crowds from all over the country during their Lollapalooza experience a place for them to rest for the next day. Unlike the sister festival, Bonnaroo, where the idea is to camp out with fellow festivalgoers for the entire three days, Lollapalooza turns its audience loose on the streets of Chicago at the end of each night.

The city gives Lollapalooza a very unique atmosphere, as well. The shoulders of Chicago's skyline are much different than any field in Tennessee. Grant Park, where the festival was held, is located in the eastern half of the city, almost bordering the shore of Lake Michigan.

Ticket holders were able to move in and out of Grant Park easily enough during the days, too, but the impressive set list was reason enough to spend the day. Headliners for 2008 included Radiohead, Rage Against the Machine, Wilco, Nine Inch Nails and Kanye West.

Since its creation in 1991, Lollapalooza has gone through many cities, but now remains fixed at Grant Park. While the popularity of the festival has fluctuated through the years (the 2004 show was cancelled due to low ticket sales), it didn't take long for big businesses to latch onto the idea.

Chicago welcomed scores of artists of every genre to Lollapalooza, a multi-day music and arts festival held in Grant Park.

Bale vs. Ledger in summer film

Bruce Wayne (Christian Bale) questions Gotham City's need for Batman in "The Dark Knight." Wayne, Harvey Dent (Aaron Eckhart) and Jim Gordon (Gary Oldman) team up to fight the Joker's terrorism.

KNIGHT from page B2

In previous installments, Gotham City was a gothic landscape, desolate to all but the villains who ruled the night. In Nolan's franchise, the dark aesthetic has been swapped for the Chicago skyline. This lends to a feeling of realism, especially during bank heists and mob gatherings.

The Harvey Two-Face twist which any "Batman" fan saw coming from a mile away works but isn't necessary. By the time Eckhart make his iconic transformation the audience is too entranced in the Joker's chaos to care. Even though it feels unnecessary, the twist is oddly seminal. While exposing the full scope of the Joker's dimension, it also demonstrates to Wayne is willing to go to protect what he has begun.

For those who haven't done so, the IMAX experience is the way to go. Since its May release, "The Dark Knight" has amassed well over $400 million. The studio have inspired other outlets to postpone upcoming releases (like "Harry Potter and The Half Blood Prince") until next summer, where larger profits are expected to be earned.

But "The Dark Knight" isn't just a cash bat. The film is a phenomenon all its own. By venturing closer to the noir beginnings of the Batman mythology, "The Dark Knight" creates a new kind of superhero film – one that's dark, gritty, disturbing.

It should make for an exciting sequel.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu.

Community through dance

SANKOFA from page B4

since worked with Lauren Bowd, danced with the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater and started his own dance company. He won a Tony for his choreography in the Broadway show "The Wiz" and has worked on a number of concerts and TV specials.

Farmer incorporated his own personal program called "The Beyond Project" into this summer's "Sankofa." He and the other choreographers traveled to Springfield Technical Community College on May 2 and gathered about 150 high schoolers from the area to teach them about respect and rising above the influence.

Esmie Bishop, of Agawam, just retired from teaching drama at Roger L. Putnam Vocational Technical High School, one of the schools that welcomed a Tarson outreach program. She said his interaction with the children was invaluable.

"[Dance] keeps kids off the streets, gets them on the stage and makes them better people," she said. "Putnam is deep in the city and children have to belong to things and feel good about themselves."

Lombardi agrees. She believes that "Sankofa" fills a void that was in the area.

"The arts can connect people in a way that is unique to its discipline," she said. "It's a common ground, something we can connect to, whatever the reason."

Fusion will be back at the Fine Arts Center at 10 a.m. Oct. 23. The University Dancers will be performing his "Movin' On" with the Alvin Ailey II dancers. Tickets are $6 for students and can be purchased at the Fine Arts Center box office.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@dailycollegian.com.

Students catwalk onto the stage during the closing performance of "Sankofa," a four-day, intensive dance workshop.

EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS®

College Students

Get 15% OFF full-price items.

Must show valid college ID. Restrictions apply.

Hiking · Paddling · Skiing · Camping
Backpacking · Trail Running · Climbing
Travel · Snowshoeing · Biking · Rentals

Hadley
Mountain Farms Mall
413-584-3554

eastern mountain sports™
EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS

Fall into fashion with The Collegian's A-to-Z guide

By Heather Waxman
Collegian Staff

Worrying about what to wear everyday when getting back to school may be overwhelming when you're worrying about classes and friends.

That's why I've put together this complete A to Z list of this season's trends and must-haves for fall.

Argyle.
Seth Cohen isn't the only one who can rock the geek chic! You, too, can follow suit by pairing an argyle sweater over a plaid or striped button-down shirt. Don't worry about fusing patterns. Just stay within the same color scheme and you'll look sharp and savvy!

Be bold!
Don't be afraid to take a plunge with color. Pair a neutral top in black, white, cream, navy or brown with a bright pair of skinny jeans like red, blue or yellow. Add accessories in an opposite neutral tone for extra oomph without going overboard.

Cinched waist.
It has been inching its way into becoming a staple, and this season, a cinched waist is all the rage. Whittle your middle with a pair of high-waisted trousers or jeans. Tuck in a tailored blouse or leave it out and place a belt around the smallest part of you, about two-and-a-half inches below the bust, for an hourglass shape.

Doc Marten's.
Remember those gotta-have-'em, break-the-bank clonkers you begged your mom to buy for you in junior high? Well, they're back with a vengeance! This time around, opt for an edgy, laced-up boot. Go for a classic white, black or burgundy or take a risk with their new patent leather collection, which comes in all shades of the rainbow.

Edie Rose.
Yes, another actress-gone-fashion designer. But this one is something to talk about! Rachel Bilson is launching her first line of clothing, Edie Rose, as a branch off of DKNY Jeans. Named after her grandmother, Edie, and a close family friend, Rose, the line features menswear-inspired blouses and tuxedo jackets as well as signature skinny jeans and minidresses. Each piece is chic and versatile with a sweet price tag to match. You can catch the collection in Macy's, Dillard's and Nordstrom this month.

Florals.
Found in seemingly infinite patterns, it is almost impossible to go wrong with a nice floral print. Be it a flouncy blouse or flirty skirt, make the air a bit lighter and take on some flower power! Seek out vintage and thrift stores before hitting the mainstream ones for one-of-a-kind finds.

Gossip Girl.
This show became all the rage last year and now designers are creating novelties inspired by Josh Schwartz's latest teen phenom. Draw inspiration from Blair's [Leighton Meester] slightly off-kilter school girl ensemble with blazers, knee-high socks, and glammed-up head bands. Get serious fashion mileage with Serena's [Blake Lively] laid-back street style with skinny jeans, boots or pumps, and a drapier top as your staple.

Kate Bosworth's fashion sense is one to mimic.

Hike your rise!
This may be a trend, but it is certainly one that flatters all body types. Choose jeans for day or trousers for evening that cinch at the smallest part of your waist and then flout away from the body. The aim: all eyes on the smallest part of you and a killer hourglass frame!

Ivy League.
This fall is all about back-to-school style in the quintessential collegiate manner. Think Diane Keaton in the 1977 Woody Allen blockbuster, "Annie Hall." Sport a pair of skinny pants with a polo shirt and sweater vest masked beneath a long blazer. Avoid looking too "uniform" by embarking on bold colored headbands and playing footsies with a metallic flat or patent ankle boot.

Jumbo Jewelry.
This season is all about eccentric pieces. Dress up a simple outfit with a large cuff in fierce, eye-catching colors or with a chunky necklace.

Kate Bosworth.
Miss Bosworth, the newest face of Calvin Klein, never seems to miss a fashion note, managing to effortlessly take her look from day to night. For a more girlie approach, opt for a chunky cardigan over a flowy dress, leggings, and flats for class. Not a fan of the frills? Wear a graphic tee or plaid button-up with ultra-skinny jeans and pair it with a fedora and flat boots. For a quick fashion-pick-me-up, Google the actress' name and steal some tips from her "to-dye-for" wardrobe!

Long and lean!
The Fall '08 runway collections were clearly in favor of the lengthier silhouette. Stay casual and comfortable in a long sweater dress with skinny jeans or leggings tucked into boots. Option two: a long-sleeve tee tucked into high-waisted denim trousers. You'll be snug, stylish and studious!

Mixings prints and patterns.
Be liberated this season – tastefully of course. The key is to know your limits. When done right, mixing various prints and patterns looks great. Make sure to keep the colors in the same family. Do not mix patterns of similar stature. For instance, stripes and plaid: major fashion don't!

Nix neglecting your neck!
Autumn is all about accentuating the neck. Turtlenecks and cowl necks are a classic staple for a fall/winter wardrobe. They're a great option for a day when you don't feel like fretting over accessories too! Pair a button-up shirt beneath a tailored vest which draws attention to a sleek neckline.

Over and over…and over!
Layering is a must for fashion and it just so happens to translate perfectly into those bitterly cold walks by Dalton. Take note from Ashley Olsen, who wears a cowlneck sweater and matching cream scarf under a leather jacket. Pair with skinny jeans tucked into boots and you're set!

Pac-Sun Jeans.
Believe it or not, these jeans are a perfect fit and come in tons of styles and washes. Opt for a flare, boot-cut, skinny or ultra-skinny leg. They're a great deal for a college student on a budget too. Grab two for $55!

Quilt or kilts?
Neither. Well, maybe Grandma's old quilt can bring some inspiration to you now. Knits are exploding everywhere on the scene. Find a knit that makes a statement on its own with elaborate stitching or a draped neckline. Pair a long, chunky sweater over skinny jeans or leggings and a pair of slouchy boots. It's a win-win situation. You'll lengthen your frame and you don't have to worry about accessories!

Resist the sweats!
Your wardrobe reflects your attitude and who wants to be viewed as sloppy just because you're feeling a little tired? Yes, it is certainly hard to wake up for that 9:30 a.m. class, but putting in the extra effort to apply a little mascara and don a cute outfit will boost your mood and self confidence. Tip: before you go to bed, lay out your outfit for the next day!

Seventies hues.
Pay attention to the likes of Joni Mitchell and Carole King! Feel free to bath yourself in autumnal palettes such as mustard, rust, amber, chestnut and forest green. Hint: Dressing monochromatically will elongate your frame, making you look longer and leaner.

Tire the tweed.
Tweed is one of the hottest fabrics for fall. It's perfect for fall and no matter the weather, it remains versatile and accessible. Dress it down with a plain-colored tee, jeans and flats or wear it for a night out with dress pants and heels.

Ultra skinny is not for everyone!
It may be continuing its fateful trend, but just because everyone else is donning the duds doesn't mean you should too. Skinny jeans tend to accentuate the thigh region - especially ultra skinny jeans. If you're curvy, lean toward a nice straight leg or boot cut and slip into your skinnies when tucking jeans into boots.

Vests.
The androgynous look is still going strong for fall and you can find it all over the fashion map! It is understatedly sexy, from button-fronts to sweater vests to argyle. Pair it over a ruffled Victorian-inspired top and ankle boots or over a graphic tee and a pair of ballet flats for cool-class comfort.

Warm scarves.
Buy them in bulk. You won't regret it. Scarves are the perfect accessory to any outfit. They come in diverse colors

See FALL on page B10

The CW's "Gossip Girl" has inspired many fashion trends.

South Hadley's
Tower Theaters
ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW
Back to School Show - September 13
Pirate vs. Ninja Show - September 20
19 College Street, South Hadley
413-533-3456 for Reservations

Tips for combating 1st-week stressors

STRESS from page B3

semesters and know their own necessities. Freshman, don't feel the need to buy all of your goods at one time. Wal-Mart and Target are just up on Route 9 and the B43 bus isn't too terrible to travel by.

Another tip to keep in mind the first week is to avoid purchasing textbooks the instant you arrive. Most of your classes will strongly promote the text, but down the road you may come to find out that your $125 textbook from the Textbook Annex served you no use. W.E.B. Dubois Library has multiple copies of course texts that can be reserved either online or at the University of Massachusetts library. If you can't stand to go against your classes' syllabi then ask your professors if the book is all that essential for understanding and excelling in the course.

Exploring the downtowns of Amherst and Northampton is fun, as long as you don't empty your pockets doing it. The two towns are filled with restaurants that will have you salivating and stores that will enrapture you. For the first week's sake, just looking at the menus of the restaurants and browsing the shelves is a smart move. Don't just jump to eat at the first Thai restaurant you see or purchase your first used vintage cardigan at some mediocre resell shop, because a more affordable but still alluring establishment could be just a block over. In short, impulsive spending leads to going broke.

"People experiencing financial stress can be more likely to numb their anxiety by drinking, smoking, overeating and practicing other unhealthy coping behaviors. This in turn leads to more stress," said Scott.

Think about all of the time you worked for the money you accumulated over the summer. What sacrifices did you make in order to obtain your green? How many hours did you need to work in order to pay for this meal or that pair of shoes? Always think twice about all of your purchases whether they are big or small.

Like the amenity of checking textbooks out at the library, use other free resources on campus and take advantage of the ones you are paying for through the help of all of those subsidized student loans.

While keeping a tab on your spending habits is important and difficult, the process of searching for friends can also be challenging, but overall worthwhile.

For transfer students and freshman, making friends or at least acquaintances with experienced upper classmen could possibly be the wisest decision ever. If it is possible, try to meet a person who shares your major. Having a powerhouse of wisdom found in older students will help you make sounder choices and offer options that may be unthinkable to the peers at the same level as you.

Even if a friendship with these surrogate sibling types isn't desired, do your best to keep some communication with them because you may need their advice along the way.

The first week of school is a social overload. The likelihood of a student not meeting a new person at least five times a day is slim to none, especially when people bring their friends of a friend.

In the same vein, it is a fickle time to meet new people because of varying approaches to friend making. Some people use the clinger approach. These people generally have uncannily strong feelings towards you instantly, have distant friends, have short-attention spans, lack insight and authenticity.

When asked about this clinger approach, UMass senior and NSO councilor Jamie Saengsawang said, "They typically choose the grandeur of a new relationship over the sustainability of a real friendship. After all, it just adds to their friend count, and for many of these people it's quantity over quality." Beware of the fair-weather kind because you may become a victim of their tactics.

It is always important to be discerning when choosing who you surround yourself with, whether it be the first week of college or not. Maybe lady luck will be on your side and gravitate you toward good people that become close friends.

Getting involved on campus is an easy opportunity for you to mingle with other students that share similar interests. In some students' cases, this advice can kill two birds with one stone: a chance to meet new people and a chance to be active within the campus.

With the high rate of students dropping out within the first year of college, studies of college dropouts associate dropping out with the "fight or flight" formula, which basically means that students that feel a mismatch between themselves and their college distance themselves from the source of stress, the college environment. A sense of belongingness to the University is key. Otherwise, you could be included in the 50 percent of college students that don't make it to graduation day.

The list of student organizations UMass offers is outstanding. There are over 200 organizations – one is bound to be of interest to you. Many of these organizations will host their meetings within the first week so try to stay abreast on dates and deadlines.

Being one of 20,000-plus undergraduate students can make a person feel pretty small. Instead of cowering under your desk in your dorm room or apartment, take a look at the bulletin boards around campus or meander through the Student Union. You may find something to belong to.

This first week is nothing to fret over. Your slew of obligations throughout your days could potentially cause mild meltdowns, but your sanity is what will keep you afloat. With that said, keep a level head when making decisions and just don't forget to look outside and think about the successful semester to come.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu.

destress yourself

with these tips from Richard Niolon, Ph.D.

- Wake up 15 minutes earlier each morning. You'll be amazed at what you can get accomplished.
- Be prepared for anything. Having a back-up plan already in hand will make the problem seem smaller.
- Add something healthy into your daily routine. Anything from taking the stairs to eating a salad will help you feel healthier.
- Make "To Do" lists, but also have a "Finished" list. Set goals and reward yourself for a job well done.
- Be willing to forgive others. Getting rid of that baggage can help reduce your stress.
- Take lunch away from your work. Break time should be all break.
- Get up and stretch every once in a while. It will get your blood moving and energy up.

Graffiti art adds flair to bland sidewalks, stairways on campus

Some graffiti art, like the rabbits pictured above, is meant to decorate surroundings, not deface them. Many artists worry that all graffiti is categorized as destructive when that is not the case.

By Sophia Pastore
Collegian Staff

Few would argue against the beautification of our campus. Especially if said beautification came in a form that would not add any digits to our already growing tuition number. University of Massachusetts students seem to have found an answer – graffiti.

The amount of graffiti art on campus seemed to dramatically increase throughout last semester. And these spray-paintings were not the gang tags or oversized declarations of teenage love that most have come to expect.

These were different – portraits of Frida Kahlo on bus stop enclosures, "plant a tree" stenciled onto a dumpster, a globe stamped over with a barcode, a corporate skyscraper disintegrating into dollar bills.

Examples such as these have relevance. They are crafted by students who want to voice an opinion untainted by the need to be known for what they do. For these students, being known for what you do can lead to fines or arrest.

So why risk fines when your pockets are already stretched by tuition bills? And why risk arrest when you are preparing to enter the job market? Why be a graffiti artist?

One UMass graffiti artist, a sophomore who wished to be referred to as Dr. XOXO, said, "Graffiti is a medium that is alive and moving. It has an actual purpose. When I put a stencil up it's because I want people to walk past the same piece of concrete they walk up every day and see something new."

According to Dr. XOXO, graffiti is often misinterpreted because of the light placed on it by popular culture. Not all graffiti art is randomly placed, poorly drawn tags.

"There is other graffiti, from beautiful spray-paint portraits to blow-up animals placed on subway grates," he said. "The latter tend to be placed in harmless places or with the intent to give something to the area and the community."

There are many artists working currently to produce "good graffiti" outside of the UMass campus as well. This medium is one that is growing universally.

Banksy, a British artist whose graffiti ranges from the whimsical to the frightening, is typically named as one of the best currently working. His art sometimes depicts a stenciled person who seems to have created a larger painted work.

The common misconception is that graffiti is done haphazardly and without thought. Artists are fighting this stereotype and trying to prove the validity of their medium as a constructive as opposed to destructive force.

Dr. XOXO urges his fellow artists to "think long and hard about where and what you're going to do. It doesn't matter how talented you are if you vandalize someone's house or cover up other peoples' hard work."

Done appropriately, graffiti can be an addition to a community. Designated graffiti walls are a good place to start.

For now, if artists can learn to avoid private residences and historical monuments and buildings, perhaps this medium can gain the respect of a larger audience.

When asked how he felt about growing mainstream popularity of graffiti, Dr. XOXO said, "I want graffiti to gain mainstream credit. While with that there'll be a whole legion of people who will lame the whole deal up, I think it's a good trade off for wider acceptance and appreciation."

While the practice of graffiti is still illegal, there remains the fact that these works have stayed in place since their creation. As of August, even the most visible graffiti has still not been covered or painted over by UMass maintenance workers.

It seems that both parties are willing to compromise.

Sophia Pastore can be reached at spastore@student.umass.edu.

The Source

the campus auditions edition

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass

Chamber Choir
Sept. 2-5
Sign-up sheets outside John Paulson's office on the first floor of the Fine Arts Center

University Chorale
Sept. 2-5
Sign-up sheets outside John Paulson's office on the first floor of the Fine Arts Center

Dynamics a cappella
Sept. 7-9
7-10 p.m.
Herter Building

Vocal Suspects a cappella
Sept. 9-10
7:30-10:30 p.m.
Student Union Commonwealth Room/Earthfoods Café

Not Ready For Bedtime Players
Sept. 10
7 p.m.
Campus Center 163/171

YOU CAN'T MAKE UP YOUR INTERVIEW

After-grad careers, part-time jobs, and internships.

START BUILDING

CBCAmpus.com

Collegian abroad: Summers around the world

Old Oxford offers modern appeal to students in Summer Seminar

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

OXFORD, ENGLAND — It started with a flier. Not one that I happened to notice, but that I was responsible for hanging for the history department. Inviting history and English majors to come get credit, explore the English countryside, and learn the meaning of the term "pub crawl," the flyer was for the University's Oxford Summer Seminar.

As a history major, the offer sounded tempting. As Eddie Izzard once opined, "Europe - that's where all the history is." Admittedly, I'd been aching to go to England ever since I'd been old enough to stand, let alone declare a major. And so with history all over Oxford, Oxford suddenly seemed like the place I needed to be.

When the semester wrapped in May, all my energies shifted toward preparing for the trip. Having been accepted to the seminar in March, ideally, I should have handled most of the preparations by May. But I hadn't. I hadn't even bought plane tickets. And frankly, thanks to overdraft fees, I was even in the red some 40 dollars.

During the six weeks or so between semester's end and the beginning of the seminar, I worked like frantic to get the trip on course. Returning, tail between legs, to the job I had vowed the previous summer never to do again, I was able to set finances and travel arrangements in order.

Multiple 12-hour shifts later, I was ready for take-off. I was going to miss my friends, especially those who weren't too keen on e-mail, but it was all relative. To Oxford I embarked.

With Air India as guide, my red-eye flight to London felt like an eternity. "Please don't crash," I pleaded the whole way through. "Or if you do crash, try to do it over some land. I don't want to meet my maker after plummeting 30,000 feet into the watery depths below." And then I watched "Juno" about three times – I especially didn't want to die watching "Juno" – before landing in the city past dawn.

Big Ben is just one of the many tourist spots that are in day-trip distance of Trinity College in Oxford.

Arriving at Trinity College, Oxford some several hours later, I was struck by how surreal the whole experience seemed. One of the 39 colleges comprising Oxford University, Trinity College rests at the nexus of Broad Street. There was one rule that I and my fellow seminarians were immediately told to abide by during our stay: come whatever may, we were instructed to keep off the grass.

During that first day in Oxford, I made one rookie mistake. I ventured into a Starbucks. Shrugging at those who warned me about the cost, I sprang for a vanilla latte with lots and lots of whip cream. That whip cream - and the drink that came along with it - cost me almost $7. But in hindsight, it was the sort of treat that my homesick heart needed to continue on with the adventure.

The Oxford Summer Seminar endorses fun and travel, but classes come as part of the commitment. The curriculum consisted of a four-credit major course and a three-credit optional course. The major met twice a week for the six-week duration of the program. The choices for the major ran the gamut of British lit clichés, while also offering linguistics, European politics and international law courses. The optional courses, which lasted four weeks, gave more breathing room.

The first week of the seminar, money concerns weighed heavily over my mind. Not trusting my ability to correctly balance a checkbook, I went with the more time-honored, fail-proof method of living dirt cheap. Can't go wrong with a one pound, twenty pence cheese and pickle sandwich, even if it is on white bread instead of wheat. And as for books, why buy when you can search for hours in the oddly catalogued library just below your bedroom?

When I wasn't busy grumbling about the exchange rate, Oxford offered many distractions which were easy on the eyes and wallet. The Ashmolean Museum offered free admission and indispensable works of art, including matching portraits of Charles II and his brother, James.

The loveliest distraction of all, though, was my very own campus.

Dating back to 1555, Trinity College was founded by Sir Thomas Pope. From chapel to dining hall, Trinity holds onto many of its original 16th and 17th century designs. Everywhere except in my bedroom, which was a modern suite. I would have gladly sacrificed my fridge, sofa and coffee table for something a little more Tudor-like, but suffice is to say, the gods that rule Oxford housing did not grant this request.

Beyond Trinity is Christ Church Cathedral, a structure designed by Henry VIII's pre-Reformation advisor, Cardinal Thomas Wolsey.

In the opposite direction lies the Bodleian Library. Founded in 1598 by Sir Thomas Bodley, the Bodleian shelves more than 6 million original volumes and has the distinction of being the central research library of Oxford.

For the low, low price of $360 dollars, we too could study at the world-famous Bodleian. First, we'd have to take a blood oath not to harm the books, set fire to the building or make ruckuses. I passed. I like to make ruckuses.

And then the weekends arrived. I went to England in search of history and found it all around me. Although I made frequent trips into London, my first visit was the best.

Treks past Westminster Abbey, the National Gallery, Big Ben, Buckingham Palace and through the West End to spot the displays for "Spamalot," "Wicked" and "Billy Elliot" brought me closer to London than any textbook had before. Falling borderline creepy as I lingered over the Henry VII chapel at Westminster Abbey, I elbowed my way through the swarms of equally-pushy tourists to secure a prized spot over the tomb of Bloody Mary and Elizabeth I.

It was magical. And while the upkeep of non-royal tombs leaves something to be desired — poor Frances Brandon has graffiti carved all over her face – Westminster Abbey is a place of great beauty.

After the long weekends, Sundays in Oxford brought salvation, and most importantly, chocolate bars. Trinity hosted an English barbeque during the afternoon, surprisingly like barbeques back home. Hot dogs, hamburgers, chicken and salmon sizzled on the grill. On the tables was a cornucopia of fixings. We were even allowed to spread across sections of the sacred grass. Although tasty, the barbeques demonstrated firsthand why hot dogs are a fine delicacy best left to Americans.

In America, there are only a few occasions which demand formal wear. At Oxford, formal wear is a requisite accessory. High table dinner, a once weekly affair, gave us the chance to dripe ourselves in finery and hobnob with Oxford's elite.

The main selling point for England, if one is not swayed by history or academia, is the country's 18-plus drinking age. After high table, the Beer Cellar was a popular site for post-dinner celebration.

Outside of the campus, Oxford is notable for its vibrant pub scene. Among the best are The Turf, the pub where Hill Clinton infamously did not inhale, and the Duke of Cambridge, the ultra-swanky place where cocktails come half price before 9 p.m.

Whichever you decide, steer clear of [or go immediately to] the Purple Turtle. The Turtle evoked a collective shudder amongst Seminar staff but was a running gag for students. With its leather lounge and rickety foosball table, the place was far removed in ambiance from the Eagle and Child, the cozy watering hole made legendary by its list of former clientele - J.R.R. Tolkien, Lewis Carroll and C.S. Lewis were once patrons.

Sadly, the summer also marked the passing of the seminar's founder, Ernest H. Hofer. Rather than grieve, Jen Adams, program director of the Oxford Summer Seminar, insisted we celebrate. With champagne glasses clutched in our hands, we toasted the memory of a man we had never known, yet whose devotion to higher education had fueled the Seminar from the outset.

For me, six weeks in Oxford was like coming full circle with old fantasies. The trip, at once so frightening and extended, couldn't have been more fulfilling. For Anglophiles and fellow students alike, the Oxford Summer Seminar isn't just summer school — it's an experience to serve a lifetime's worth.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at shmurphy@student.umass.edu.

The 16th century Trinity College is full of history and beautiful architecture.

Say 'bonjour' to bars, shopping in Montreal

On Rue St. Denis in Montreal, Brioche Lyonnaise offers an authentic French breakfast.

By Solmaaz Yazdiha
Collegian Correspondent

MONTREAL — It wasn't halfway through the summer before my sister called me up in need of a spontaneous vacation. With little money to spend, we decided a trip to Montreal would be cheap, while still chic.

Canada is an ideal trip for a college kid on a budget. Just a five-hour ride from Amherst, the high gas prices don't dent the wallet beyond repair, and the smooth ride through Vermont gives way to some beautiful sights.

Once in the city, you're greeted with a hodgepodge of restaurants, shops, and museums. With most everyone able to speak both French and English, it's a great opportunity to refresh a little bit of that high school French. Bonjour!

Rue St. Denis is one of the best streets for dining, with outdoor cafes and restaurants lined up like dominos. Bieres et Compagnie has over 100 beers to taste, many of them locally brewed. Rockaberry is another must-visit, and with a ridiculous selection of cream pies and cakes, it's sure to satisfy even the sweetest tooth. For an authentic French brunch, visit Brioche Lyonnaise for croissants and a steaming bowl of cafe-au-lait.

Rue Mont-Royal is another important street to stroll. Looking for a stiff drink and good company? Visit Billy Kuns, a bar where locals get loco. Besides the interesting sight of ostrich heads along the walls — some with funny hats — there is a large array of beers and liquors and plenty of friendly bartenders happy to chat.

For loud and rowdy nightlife, Rue Crescent is the road to take. Dozens of restaurants line the street with plenty of seating on decks and patios, including the Hard Rock Cafe of Montreal. What better place for tourists?

Rue St. Laurent is the street for shopping, home to some of the best vintage shops I have ever come across, with bargain prices. Eva B ranks high, with a separate area for costume repair and an in-house café as well.

Besides booze and food, the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts, Musee des Beaux-Arts on Rue Sherbrooke, is an important stop. The permanent exhibit includes works from Van Gogh among many others. Until Sept. 28, the museum hosts an exhibit on Yves St. Laurent, spanning 40 years of fashion creation. Admission to the permanent exhibit is free, donations accepted. Admission to the Yves St Laurent exhibit is $15 for adults, $7.50 for students.

For those looking to gamble, the Casino de Montreal is not one of the best. Open 24 hours a day, seven days a week, it contains four restaurants, four bars and a cabaret. The down side is that alcoholic beverages are prohibited in playing areas.

Overall the visit is one worth making, with some really great food and interesting people to meet. Now, if only there was time for a vacation sometime soon.

Solmaaz Yazdiha can be reached at syazdiha@student.umass.edu.

+

BECOME THE MOST GIFTED STUDENT ON CAMPUS.

The coolest college gear, great prices and expert advice, that's your neighborhood RadioShack. Come in now and get great deals on all the stuff you need to get your year off to a hot start.

Plantronics Explorer 220 Bluetooth Headset
$29.99 Reg. $39.99
17-2836

Virgin Mobile ARC
$49.99
Totally Unlimited calling plan–
$79.99 per month
17-3598

AT&T Sierra Wireless 881 USBConnect AirCard
FREE* with qualifying new 2-year agreement for rate plans $60 or more on the primary line only. $279.99 without.
17-2762

Compaq CQ50 Laptop
$499.99 after $100 mail-in prepaid card. Reg. $599.99
25-497

Netgear Wireless-G Router
$39.99 Reg. $59.99
25-3342

4GB ReadyBoost USB Flash Drive
$24.99 25-275

Offers good 7/27/08 through 9/30/08. Availability may vary by store. See store for details.

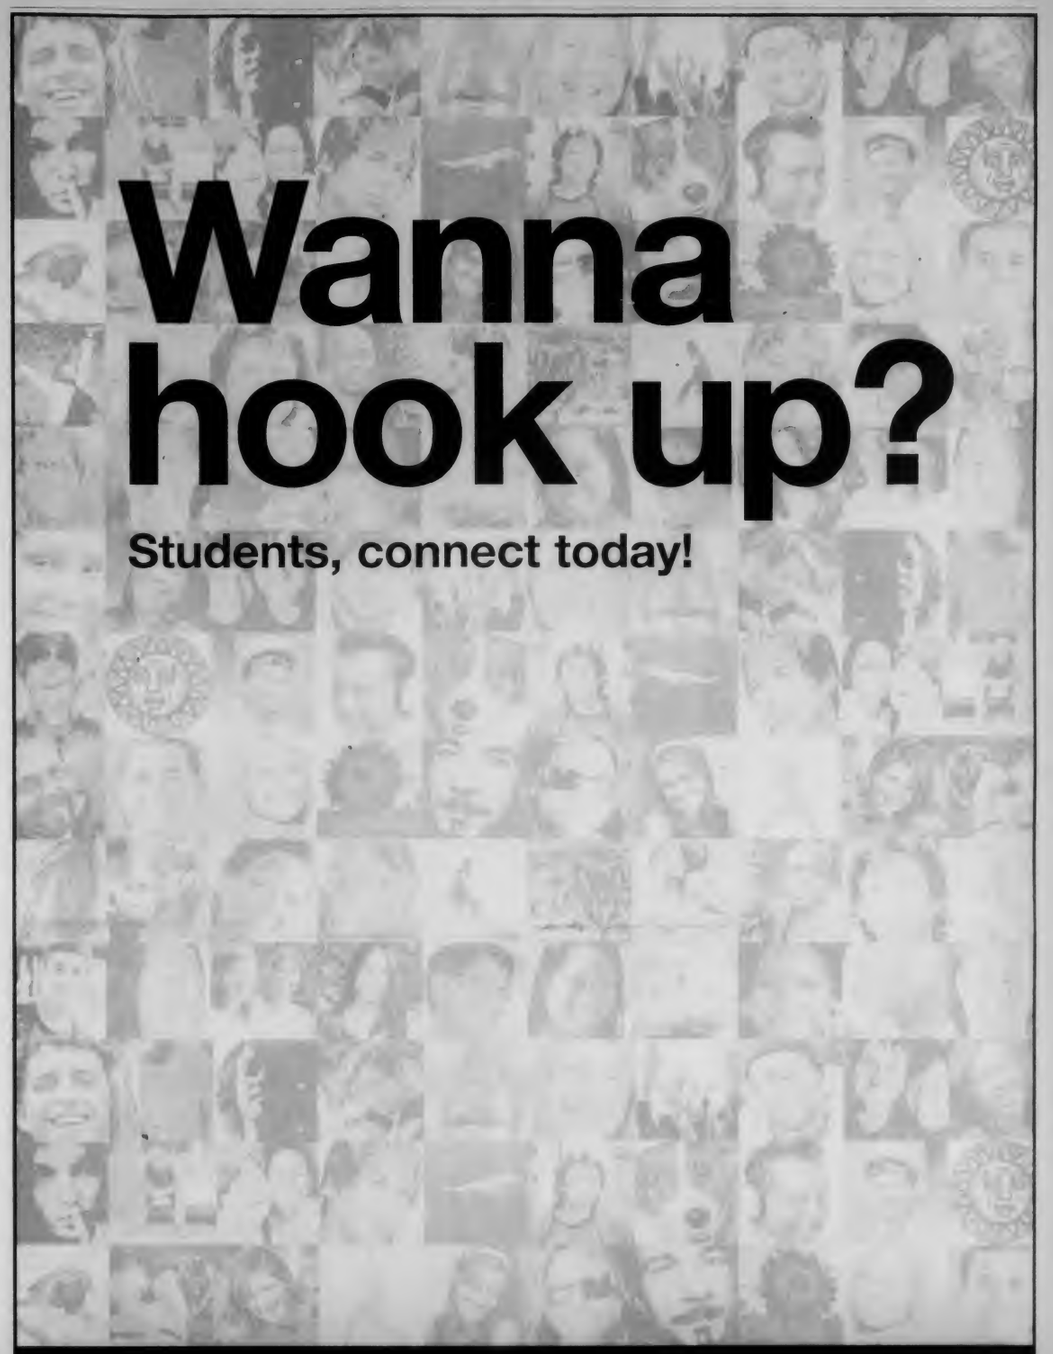
*Price requires credit approval; up to $36 activation fee and $175 early-termination fee. Monthly access and other airtime charges and taxes apply. ©2008 AT&T Intellectual Property. All rights reserved.

RadioShack. Do Stuff.® RadioShack.com

VISIT A RADIOSHACK STORE NEAR YOUR CAMPUS.

Hampshire Mall
341 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035

Campus Plaza
458 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035



Why do homework when you could be really productive?

collegian.com

Comcast Digital Cable with On Demand and Showtime®

Up to 16 Mbps of speed with Performance Plus High-Speed Internet with PowerBoost®

$84.99 per month for 9 months when you subscribe to both!

Hook up with friends and family by phone—ask about Comcast Digital Voice®!

1-800-COMCAST studentbundle.com ©comcast

Offer ends 9/30/2008, is not available in all areas (and may not be transferred) and is limited to new residential customers. Offer limited to Digital Starter and 8.0 Mbps Performance Plus High-Speed Internet service. (16 Mbps Blast! High-Speed Internet service included with offer where available. Call for details.) After the 9 month period, if any service is cancelled or downgraded, regular charges apply. Comcast's current monthly service charge for Digital Starter cable ranges from $50.39 to $63.85, depending on area, for Showtime is $19.95 and for Comcast 8.0 Mbps High-Speed Internet service is $52.95 for customers who subscribe to Comcast cable service and $67.95 for customers who do not subscribe to Comcast cable service. Digital Cable and High-Speed Internet limited to service to a single outlet. Service subject to Comcast standard terms and conditions. Equipment and installation charges, taxes and franchise fees extra. May not be combined with other offers. Cable Service: Certain services available separately or as a part of other levels of service. Basic Service subscription required to receive other levels of service. Converter and remote required to receive On Demand services. On Demand selections subject to charge indicated at the time of purchase. Not all programming available in all areas. High-Speed Internet Service: PowerBoost provides bursts of download and upload speeds for the first 20MB and 10MB of a file, respectively. Many factors affect speed. Actual speeds vary and are not guaranteed. Cable modem required. Call 1-800-COMCAST or go to www.comcast.com for restrictions and complete details. ©2008 Comcast. All rights reserved. ©2008 Showtime Networks Inc. SHOWTIME and related marks are registered trademarks of Showtime Networks Inc., a CBS Company.

Mullins to become circus tent for 'Soleil'

UMass in for spectacular sights, sounds 1st week back

By Stephanie McPherson
Collegian Staff

For three decades the name Cirque du Soleil has brought to mind bright colors, unique entertainment and unbelievable feats of human strength and agility.

Those same thoughts will fill the University of Massachusetts when "Saltimbanco" – Cirque's longest running traveling show, performs at the Mullins Center from Sept. 3-7.

Created in Canada during the early 1980s by young street performer Guy Laliberte, the human circus has kept the baroque spirit of original big top performing alive in both its permanent shows and traveling tours.

The world of "Saltimbanco," Laliberte has stated, represents a bustling urban environment, but not in a familiar sense. Many people see a city as a metropolis of mixed classes, rising crime rates and limited opportunities.

"Saltimbanco," with its broad cast of characters, shows the audience what a city could be – making the most of the diversity fostered in such a setting – and concrete. The characters in the show are living a possible future full of life in harmony.

"We wanted Saltimbanco to be a show about the future of the city," said Gilles Ste-Croix, director of creation for the show, on the Cirque Web site. "But all the material we studied was very dark, despairing. And our hearts rebelled. We said: 'You've got to believe that you're going to live in a better future – and that you can be part of that future. You've got to have hope.'"

Unlike some of the more recent Cirque creations, "Saltimbanco," which started in 1992, has no set plot, according to Michael J. Ocampo, the head coach for this run of the show. The lack of a storyline allows viewers to take what they want from the performance.

"They really wanted this to be a fun show full of life, full of color," Ocampo said. "What it does allow [for] is people to come in and have two hours of escaping."

Ocampo has been with Cirque du Soleil since 1993, starting as an artist in the show "Alegria." He has since performed in and worked on a number of performances, but "Saltimbanco" holds a special memory for him.

"For me, 'Saltimbanco' was the first live [show I saw]," he said. "I can remember sitting on the edge of my seat in awe ... I truly was on the edge of my seat with my mouth open."

Months of training goes into preparing for a Cirque du Soleil show to make things like the trapeze routine seem effortless.

Cirque du Soleil's "Saltimbanco" is set to run at the Mullins Center this week. The show includes the Chinese Poles (pictured above.)

So why is "Saltimbanco" so awe-inspiring? It could be the multitude of personalities displayed on stage – everything from typical circus caricatures to metaphoric "worms" to represent the variety of lifestyles in a city. It could be the bright, swirling colors. Or it could be the people swinging from trapezes and flipping around in the air, climbing up 25-foot poles and building human pyramids.

To successfully and safely complete such dangerous acts, more than just good casting goes into a Cirque du Soleil show.

Scouts from the company will travel to international competitions in every sport imaginable, from gymnastics to diving to extreme sports. They will then invite the best of the best to audition. Auditions are intense – they test not only the Cirque-hopefuls' athletic abilities, but their theatrical abilities as well.

After a cast is chosen, there are months of training to develop the choreography, build trust among performers and create perfect timing for stunts. After anywhere between three months and one year, a Cirque show is finally ready for the stage.

Of the 15 Cirque du Soleil shows worldwide, "Saltimbanco" is the longest running, now in its sixteenth year. That's not to say the show hasn't changed between revivals.

"Things evolve," Ocampo said. "They've evolved from two years ago, even. Always evolving."

Ocampo thinks that the success of the show is due to its freedom of ideas.

"It's one of the shows that's very bright and colorful," he said. "Some of the other shows have become very dramatic, but this is one that everyone can relate to. It's great for the whole family ... [and] pretty much everyone can walk away with their own explanation."

The show returns to the original idea of Cirque du Soleil – to introduce modernity to traditional circus-style performances.

"If some of these shows lose people are impressed with," Ocampo said. "Saltimbanco – will be performed at the Mullins Center Sept. 3 and 4 at 7:30 p.m., two performances on both Sept. 5 and 6 at 1:30 p.m. and 7:30 p.m., and one show on Sept. 7 at 1 p.m. and 5 p.m. Tickets are $38 for UMass students and $48 for others. Tickets can be ordered online at www.mullinscenter.com or at the Box Office.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@dailycollegian.com.

A-to-Z fall fashion

FALL from page B6

and patterns and you can find them at a low-cost almost anywhere! Wear them in different ways like Jessica Alba, who is infamous for sprucing up an outfit with one! Need a mani tutorial? Tie two of the ends together and make a small knot. Loop the scarf around your neck as many times as desired and adjust to your liking.

X-TRA SPECIAL FINDS.
When on a shopping trip, really take the time to treat yourself to a few one-of-a-kind items that really speak to you, such as unique jewelry or an embellished tee. Hunting for specialty items is fun and will make you stand out in a crowd. Plus, unique pieces tend to never go out of style, so your foray will be well worth it!

YODEL-AY-HEE-HOO!
We can thank Holland for one thing. OK, maybe two. Heidi (no, not Klum!) and her signature braids. Start a small French braid at the crown of your head and work it around and fasten with bobby pins. Tie your hair into a loose, messy bun on one side. It takes about five minutes to master. Don't be afraid to experiment with the braid and make it your own, like Sienna Miller.

ZOOEY DESCHANEL.
This actress/singer-songwriter can do no wrong. Her vintage-inspired wardrobe had made her a trendsetter rather than a follower. The blue-eyed beauty's frilly frocks and dresses (more often than not, paired with black tights) got heads turning and it certainly is no wonder. "I love vintage. It means you aren't going to see everyone wearing what you are wearing," Deschanel told InStyle magazine. Be it a ribboned headband or bejeweled cuff, follow her lead and make your outfits your own by adding a little something vintage to your outfits.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@dailycollegian.com.

Zooey Deschanel's quirky style comes from shopping at vintage stores where she can find one-of-a-kind items.

PHILADELPHIA 76ERS
VS
BOSTON CELTICS
WED, OCT 8 • 7PM
76ers VS BOSTON CELTICS
MULLINS CENTER
Tickets at the Mullins Center Box Office, Ticketmaster.com and 413.733.2500. Group discounts at 413.545.3332. Info at MULLINSCENTER.COM, SIXERS.COM & CELTICS.COM.
UMASS STUDENTS & STAFF SAVE $5 ON SELECT SEATS AT MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE WITH ID

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Sports

Back To School Fall 2008 Sports@dailycollegian.com

Running Start

Coen, Nelson lead Minutemen to victory to begin '08 season

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

It wasn't the prettiest of wins, but the Massachusetts football team got the job done in whatever way it could.

Playing under the newly-installed lights at McGuirk Alumni Stadium, the Minutemen defeated Albany, 28-16, in front of 15,112 in attendance (the second-largest opening day crowd).

The Minutemen (1-0) looked sluggish early, committing three penalties in the first quarter for a total of 43 yards (compared to Albany's one penalty for 10 yards), not to mention a muffed punt return that ended up in the end zone which put Albany up 9-0.

"It's pretty mind-boggling to think about it," said Albany starting running back David McCarty about his team being up 9-0. "A lot of people didn't think we had it in us. We stayed focused and knew what the task was ahead of us."

The Great Danes (0-1) went up on their first possession of the game when quarterback Vinny Esposito found tailback McCarty on a screen pass. The junior outran the UMass defense on his way to a 52-yard touchdown.

The Maroon and White answered; fueled by redshirt junior running back Tony Nelson who rushed eight times for 56 yards on the drive, helping the Minutemen march down the field to set up its first score.

Though Nelson did most of the work, Coen hooked-up with tight end Ian Jorgensen on the first of two, 2-yard touchdown passes. With most of the Great Dane defense falling for Coen's play-action, Jorgensen made the touchdown grab with his arms extended to pull the Minutemen within two. The Minutemen again scored almost five minutes later when Coen connected with Nelson from two yards out to put the Minutemen up.

Nelson's score was set up by a tipped-ball from the fingers of defensive tackle Brandon Collier and into the hands of defensive back Jeromy Miles for the interception.

With the game still within one score Nelson broke a 64-yard touchdown run.

After accepting Coen's handoff, Nelson darted up the middle. He broke the initial tackle, spun off another and sprinted through the Albany secondary on his way

See FOOTBALL on page C10

Horne boosts young receivers in opener

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

When the Massachusetts football team graduated both J.J. Moore and Rasheed Rancher, the Minutemen had huge holes to fill at the wide receiver position. Despite a 28-16 win over Albany on Saturday night, those holes were very visible.

With the five receivers on UMass' active roster combining for 18-career receptions, filling those holes stood as a major task for UMass coach Don Brown and his coaching staff.

Redshirt junior Jeremy Horne led the group of receivers with 12-career catches prior to Saturday's game with the Great Danes and was the main target of redshirt senior quarterback Liam Coen in the Minutemen's season opener. Horne led all UMass receivers with four catches, including a 17-yard touchdown reception, and 37 yards.

Beyond Horne, the only receiver with a reception was redshirt freshman Julian Talley. Coen, who completed 10 of his 20 passes for 92 yards and three scores, found his backfield to be targets on three occasions and redshirt senior tight end Ian Jorgensen for the final two.

Of Coen's 20 attempts, his target was a wide receiver for only 11 of them; six for incompletion. Two of the miscues were intended for redshirt junior Victor Cruz, one that was bobbled and then knocked away by the defender while the other was overthrown by Coen. Redshirt sophomore Ke'Mon Bailey dropped another in the end zone.

With the inexperience in the wide receiver corps, Coen looked to veteran targets. Both redshirt senior Ian Jorgenson and redshirt junior running back Tony Nelson caught 2-yard touchdown passes from Coen.

Jorgensen, who is known more for his blocking ability, has been improving his hands to help out the passing game.

See WIDE RECEIVERS on page C10

Sluggish beginning to new year won't last for UMass

Eli Rosenswaike

The only difference between the 2007 season opener and this year's were the new lights at McGuirk Stadium.

OK, not exactly. The score, opponent and starting lineups were a bit different this time – but for the Massachusetts football team, the way it earned the victory really was the same.

It was inconsistent and flawed. But once again, pure talent prevailed, and the Minutemen again started the season at 1-0 following a 28-16 victory over Albany on Saturday night.

Much like last year's season-opening, 40-30 win over Holy Cross, UMass committed unsportsmanlike conduct penalties, muffed punts, missed tackles and dropped passes.

That sluggishness will happen in nearly every facet, particularly during the first game of the season. And the Minutemen packed it up late, essentially dominating the game in the fourth quarter when it mattered most. They did it against the Crusaders in '07. They do it often. Chalk that one up to good coaching, a talented roster and clutch performances.

"It's about finding ways to win the game," UMass coach Don Brown said following the victory. "And I think we'll grow a lot from this one and there are several things that we can improve on.

"That will be the scenario this week [in practice], but at least we can do that with a smile on our faces."

UMass recovered just fine from last season's scare against Holy Cross, winning seven of its first eight games (the lone loss coming on the road to No. 12 Boston College).

Here's a message to the 15,112 fans that were in attendance on Saturday: This team will be fine, too.

Why? It's simple. Forget for a second that Don Brown's defenses are always stellar. Liam Coen is still here. That's all you really need.

The best quarterback in school history returns for his senior season to lead the offense. Sure, stars such as Matt Lawrence and the J.J.

See ROSENSWAIKE on page C7

Expectations different for UM soccer teams

Successful 2007 brings high hopes for Maroon and White

By Scott Fellman
Collegian Staff

Last year the Massachusetts men's soccer team had a classic Cinderella season.

Starting a lightly-regarded squad looking to rebuild, the Minutemen shocked everybody but themselves as they made it to the College Cup of the NCAA tournament. This year they have a reputation to protect.

UMass set a new team-record for wins with 17 and boasted a 9-1 home record at Rudd field. The team won seven straight games on its way to an Atlantic 10 championship and was two victories away from a national title before losing to Ohio State, 1-0, in the national semifinals.

Last season's magical run will remain a fond memory for the program and its fans, but it's a new season and the team must look ahead to 2008.

"We're in here with the idea that we want to go back to the Atlantic 10 tournament, that's our goal, all the other goals come off of that," said UMass coach Sam Koch.

With 18 years of experience as UMass' coach, Koch knows that every season is different and he will not allow the team to look backward.

UMass enters the season ranked No. 13 in the nation and was picked to finish second in the A-10 by the conference's coaches. The team is returning eight of its 11 starters from last season, and they carry over a wealth of experience playing and defeating top-tier opponents, evidenced by last year's upsets of Saint Louis and Boston College.

In order for a team to succeed, all 11 players must play their particular role. No individual player would look good without getting help from their teammates. The Minutemen will have

See M. SOCCER on page C2

Minutewomen hampered by injuries before year starts

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

On paper, Massachusetts women's soccer coach, Jim Rudy, has few reasons to look forward to the 2008 season.

Junior Sydney Stoll, the returning offensive threat for the Minutewomen is out for the season after she suffered a knee injury during a spring game. Stoll recorded six goals and three assists during last year's campaign.

The Minutewomen also lost junior Megan Gould, with just a slim possibility that she might return at some point this season. Gould was supposed to be a valuable contributor to the midfield with her experience, but she is out with a concussion that she's had since October in addition to a previous ankle surgery.

The graduation of last season's leader, Britt Canfield, is another gap that the Minutewomen must fill.

The team features seven freshmen – making this the young-est team Rudy has ever coached at UMass. One of the freshmen expected to contribute right away is midfielder Meghan Griffin.

Rudy believes she is one of the more versatile players on the team. She was given a lot of time at the center position in the midfield already, but she could play anywhere on defense or the midfield.

Midway through last season it looked like the Minutewomen could lock up a spot in the Atlantic 10 tournament for the first time since 1997. UMass rolled through its non-conference schedule, finishing 5-0-1

See W. SOCCER on page C4

UMass coach Sam Koch (left) will rely on his eight returning starters, including last year's leading scorer Bryan Hogan (right), to boost the Minutemen into the postseason again.

With the absence of Sydney Stoll (left), UMass coach Jim Rudy (right) hopes that the eight newcomers to his team can show leadership and a knack for scoring throughout the season.

Veterans lead No. 13 Minutemen

Simmons is team's greatest strength

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

After a record-setting 2007 season, expectations are high with eight of 11 starters returning for the Massachusetts men's soccer team. With more television cameras at practices and an increase in publicity for the team, the Minutemen have to stay focused on what's happening on the field.

Since the majority of the starters returning, the Minutemen will be a step ahead because they already know the system and what is expected of them.

The Minutemen aren't as strong as they were at the end of last year and are working to strengthen their weaknesses earlier in the season.

The incoming freshman class is energetic and excited to help move the team forward this season. They have worked hard and want to prove to the rest of the team that they can contribute and compete for a starting job.

"That's what you want, two people fighting for a spot on the field, and this freshman class will do that," UMass coach Sam Koch said.

Defense

UMass' greatest strength this season is All-American goalkeeper Zack Simmons. After a record-setting 2007 season, the Minutemen look to the redshirt senior to be one of the strongest leaders, vocally and physically.

Simmons had a 84.9 save percentage from last season and earned many honors, including being named 2007 UMBRO National Player of the Year, Atlantic 10 Tournament MVP and NSCAA/adidas All-American Third-Team.

But Simmons is only as good as the players in front of him.

If they do make a mistake Simmons is very good at covering for them. Losing defenders Kenny Cook and Doug Rappaport to graduation has created one of the biggest weaknesses on the team. The team needs to make sure they defend as a whole unit and stay compact so they don't give the opposing team scoring opportunities. The Minutemen will continue to play a 4-4-2 formation. This will maintain their strength in the defensive end of the field.

"Everyone has an invested interest in making sure Simmons is our strongest member," Koch said. "If they all do their jobs well then Simmons will have an easy job."

This year the defense will be challenged to maintain their level of performance from seasons past. Stuart Thompson, who will replace Cook, and senior Tony Bassett, taking Rappaport's spot, will have to step up. Returning for UMass is redshirt senior Chris Brown and junior Dan Lepone. Brown will be the anchor at defense for the Minutemen.

Although leadership is a group effort, Simmons, Brown and Thompson make a big impact on the team. They, along with center midfielder Mike DeSantis, are the key players and team leaders because of their positions on the field. They're able to see everything that is happening on the field, which gives them a certain advantage.

Midfield

The Minutemen's strengths are in its midfield with senior DeSantis leading the way.

Senior Mike DeSantis and the men's soccer team will try to duplicate last season's success, but being ranked No. 13 in the nation will make it difficult for them to sneak up on their opposition as they did last year.

DeSantis' quiet leadership plays a big part on the field.

"His performance speaks for him," Koch said. "You really notice when he's not there. He does so many things that don't show up on the score sheet."

DeSantis is a two-way player, contributing on both the offensive and defensive ends of the field. His ability to keep the team organized on the field makes the Maroon and White much harder to play against and his teammates respect that.

Sophomore Ben Arikian is also a strong force in the midfield. In a preseason exhibition game against Brown on Aug. 23, the opposition concentrated on containing Arikian. With more attention on Arikian, his teammates have a better opportunity of spreading themselves on the field while creating better passing lanes.

Sophomore Chris Vaccaro is replacing Greg Cirillo in the right midfield spot. Vaccaro began to show his ball handling and shooting skills in the preseason after he scored the first goal in the exhibition game against Brown.

Offense

The Minutemen are more dangerous in the attack than Koch might have expected. Six of the top seven scorers return from last season and the new players in the lineup, freshmen Bryant Craft and Chris Rosswess, are giving UMass a spark that they haven't seen in awhile.

Returning offensive starters juniors Mark DeSantis and Bryan Hogan will again lead the team. Hogan was the leading scorer from last season with eight goals; Mark DeSantis contributed to the team with four goals. In 2007, it seemed as though the UMass offense took off once Koch paired Hogan and DeSantis together at the front of his 4-4-2.

"This year's team is a solid group, solid core returning from last year," Koch said. "We had a tremendous experience last year that will only make them better."

The one thing the Minutemen don't know going into this season is how prepared other teams are going to be for them.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com

UMass Men's Soccer Team Projected Starting Lineup

| Pos. | No. | Player |
|---|---|---|
| GK | 1 | Zack Simmons |
| D | 2 | Dan Lepone |
| D | 5 | Chris Brown |
| D | 15 | Stuart Thomson |
| D | 19 | Tony Bassett |
| M | 23 | Chris Vaccaro |
| M | 17 | Stuart Amick |
| M | 3 | Mike DeSantis |
| M | 4 | Ben Arikian |
| F | 11 | Bryan Hogan |
| F | 18 | Mark DeSantis |

One player leading the Minutemen's offense in 2008 is junior Mark DeSantis. He had 16 points last season as he emerged as one of UMass' primary scoring threats.

Experienced starters, difficult schedule

M. SOCCER from page C1

a great advantage because most of the team consists of returning starters who are familiar with each other's playing styles.

"The strength of our team, is that we are a team," Koch said. "I think we have good chemistry in the group, they understand how they have to work for each other and they're very good at making sure they work together as one unit."

This experience will be especially valuable because the Minutemen have a very difficult schedule; including matchups against No. 19 Saint Louis and last year's national champion and top-ranked Wake Forest.

Last year's version of the Maroon and White was built around defense. It played a 4-4-2 formation that focused on keeping the ball in front of the defense at all times and setting up counterattacks when the opportunity presented itself. The strategy proved successful last season as the team earned nine shutouts and allowed less than a goal per game on average.

For the team to duplicate last season's success, UMass must continue to play tight defense. Redshirt senior goalkeeper Zack Simmons feels that aspect of the team will be very similar to last year's.

"It's going to be the same old hardworking UMass team," Simmons said. "We're not necessarily going to awe people and be running by people all game, but we're going to defend very well and we're going to make people beat us, we're not going to beat ourselves."

Simmons is the Minutemen's captain and possibly the most important returning player. Last season Simmons was outstanding. He set UMass records for most career wins (32), career shutouts (23) and career saves with 302. He was named the Minutemen's Most Valuable Player and Atlantic 10 tournament MVP.

To continue to play at such a high level, the Minutemen will have to replace defenseman Kenny Cook who graduated last year. Not only will they miss Cook's outstanding play, they will also miss his veteran presence. He started 65 consecutive games during his career, including all 26 last season and established himself as a leader on the field.

"He was really good at keeping everybody focused, he had a good calming effect on the team," Koch said. "He's someone that is certainly going to be missed."

It can be tough for a coach to gauge how good his team is before the season starts. But if preseason performance gives any indication, the Minutemen deserve their lofty ranking.

Their first preseason game was a 2-0 victory over Montreal. Brothers Mark and Mike DeSantis each tallied a goal. Though the Minutemen were outshot 8-7, the teams were even with three shots on net. Koch felt that although Montreal had more scoring chances than he would have liked, as a whole, he was pleased with how the team looked.

The second preseason game against No. 11 Brown showed that the Minutemen were ready to compete at an elite level. The game ended in a 1-1 tie after double overtime, but both teams had several chances to tally more goals. The play wasn't perfect, but the Minutemen were encouraged by the knowledge that they stayed even with a highly-ranked opponent.

The Maroon and White open their season on the road against last year's Patriot League Champion Holy Cross on Aug. 29.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

UMass welcomes 8 newcomers

Toulouse, Rodriguez become backbone for '08 season

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team has quite a bit of work to do after losing key players from a 9-6-2 team last season.

The Maroon and White lost Britt Canfield to graduation and juniors Sydney Stoll and Meghan Gould are likely out for the season with injuries.

UMass coach Jim Rudy calls this team the youngest he has ever seen during his 20-year career with the Minutewomen. They will have plenty of new faces for the upcoming season with eight newcomers – seven of which are freshmen.

The other newcomer is redshirt senior Vanessa Lima. She originally transferred to Salem State but decided to transfer back to UMass.

One of the positions that will feature a new face is at goalkeeper.

Goalkeepers

Junior Lauren Luckey spent much of her time on the bench during her first two years. She got some playing time at the end of last year after Kristen Walker went down with an injury. This year Rudy feels that she is ready for the starting job.

Freshman Katie Muller is the backup, unless something drastic happens that causes Rudy to lose confidence in Luckey.

Defense

Senior Melissa Toulouse and redshirt senior Tina Rodriguez will share time at center for the defense.

Rudy loves what he gets from his two key veterans.

"They're not relying on the coach telling them what to do," Rudy said.

He also appreciates their aggressiveness on defense and said they are great tacklers who can also head the ball.

Junior Katie Ruggles moved from the midfield position to give the defense some of the aggressiveness that she had when she was a forward. So far, she has transitioned quite nicely.

"Our defense isn't the biggest in the world but they are skillful," Rudy said.

Midfield

Even though the Minutewomen will be without junior Meghan Gould due to a concussion, the midfield position is deep and is the oldest of any group.

Amy Ballew, who is in her third year at UMass after transferring from Tennessee, has worked to improve her conditioning since last winter and got serious about her training.

"She got herself into the best shape of her life," Rudy said.

Ballew is going to split time with sophomore Therese Smith at the center midfielder position.

Freshman Meghan Collins is another versatile asset to the team. She is likely going to start at one of the wing positions but could also see some time at forward or in the back.

"Collins will play wherever we put her and do it well," Rudy said. "I don't even think twice about starting her anywhere on the field."

Sophomore Kelsey Anderson will get the nod from the right side. She finished the 2007 season with two goals and two assists.

The left side will feature sophomore Ashley Hamel, although Rudy feels confident enough in her and Ruggles that they might switch positions. Hamel got plenty of playing time due to injuries and kept the starting job this year by impressing Rudy.

Hamel toughed out some aggressive play against Army during an exhibition game and has gained confidence in herself during the off-season.

Forwards

Junior Sydney Stoll will not play the entire season due to a knee injury – meaning the Minutewomen will have more newcomers than veterans at the forward position.

The forward with the most experience is senior Vanessa Patry. She is the most upbeat person on the team, according to Rudy.

"Her enthusiasm is infectious and she looks like she's having a good time," he said. "It doesn't matter what [the opposition's] style is, she can play with them."

Patry will take on the role of being the go-to player as the only member on the active Minutewomen roster to have double-digit points, picking up four goals and four assists last season.

Freshman Maura Romano has made a big impression on Rudy with her left-footed play. She's accurate in serving and finishing on the left side.

Lima has drastically changed her game since coming back to UMass. Rudy said she has become more skillful and athletic but needs to get used to the speed of playing Division I soccer.

Junior Christina Adams will have high expectations after coming back from the summer in good shape. She finished the 2007 season with three goals and three assists, but should have an even bigger role on the team due to all the injuries.

Rudy describes her as a great inside-the-box player and very scrappy.

"She finds the little niches in lanes," Rudy said. "She's not really fast but she's really tough and she's good in the battle area."

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmiller@student.umass.edu.

UMass Women's Soccer Team Projected Starting Lineup

| Pos. | No. | Player |
|---|---|---|
| GK | 1 | Lauren Luckey |
| B | 3 | Maura Visconti |
| B | 5 | Tina Rodriguez |
| B | 6 | Melissa Toulouse |
| B | 15 | Katie Ruggles |
| M | 13 | Vanessa Lima |
| M | 14 | Therese Smith |
| M | 2 | Kelsey Anderson |
| F | 16 | Amy Ballew |
| F | 19 | Vanessa Patry |
| F | 20 | Ashley Hamel |

Sophomore Kelsey Anderson will look to be another contributor to the 2008 women's soccer team. As a freshman, Anderson scored two goals, both game-winners.

Senior captain Vanessa Patry will be forced to play forward this year, as forward Sydney Stoll is out for the season with a knee injury. Patry finished third last year in points (12) with four goals and four assists.

Minutewomen lose forward Stoll for season

Adjustments made to offense after scoring threat reinjured

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

When the Massachusetts women's soccer team opened this year's season, the Minutewomen hoped for one of its best offensive threats to be back on the field.

After a successful freshman season in which she played in every game, junior forward Sydney Stoll looked to build on that success for three more years.

As a sophomore, she started the first 11 games of last season and was forced to sit out the remainder, due to an injury that she suffered against Rhode Island on Oct. 11.

In the 21st minute, Stoll received a pass from a UMass defender, through the Rams' defense. Stoll secured the ball, but URI goalie Jackie Fede came out of the box to make a save. Stoll left the game with a broken collarbone, an injury that would keep her out for the rest of the season.

The Minutewomen had to make adjustments on the offensive side of the ball, having to play some players up front with little to no game experience. The next four games, the Minutewomen were outscored 6-3 by A-10 opponents, losing three of four games. The team was shut out in back-to-back games against Charlotte and Saint Louis, unable to get production from its other forwards.

Even though she missed the final six games, Stoll finished second on the team in scoring (15 points).

After the season, Stoll rehabbed in the winter and spring and prepared to pick up right where she left off last season. But in a turn for the worse, during her first game of rehab Stoll was again injured.

"She just got out of rehab when we played our first outdoor game against the touring Japanese all-star team," UMass coach Jim Rudy recalled. "She was on for four seconds, went full sprint into a challenge and blocked the ball and got sort of torqued sideways."

Stoll suffered a sprained ankle in the game and will likely redshirt the 2008 season.

"It's a big deficit for us," Rudy said. "It means now we are without our two leading scorers from last year. I can say honestly we would be much better at this point with her on the field. Everybody in the front is new."

With Stoll out for the second straight year, inexperienced players on the offensive side of the ball will have to step up and play like upperclassmen.

Senior forward Vanessa Patry, the team MVP in 2007, has taken even bigger strides as becoming a more consistent player. Senior captain Melissa Toulouse and redshirt senior Tina Rodriguez will be looked upon as veterans on a team that has, at best, freshmen and four sophomores. One player who took advantage of her redshirt year was forward Courtney Vinson. The sophomore scored five freshman point records during three games and is coming on strong lately.

"I think it's going to be effective," Rudy said. "I really like Courtney's ability to come in and play on board."

Even though Stoll is out for another season, Rudy is concerned at how she is handling her situation.

"A lot better than I thought," he said. "She is a very happy and active kid. She gravitates to Amy's [Ballew] personality and I think that's the type of player she should be."

UMass opened this season with an 2-1 overtime loss to Binghamton on Aug. 24th. Despite the defeat, Rudy believes his team can build on its nine-win season from a year ago. With a new contract and some new faces, the fourth-longest tenured UMass coach doesn't let the injuries get to him.

"I try not to dwell on it," he said. "You just move on."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Butterfly
Chinese & Japanese Restaurant
WWW.BUTTERFLYHADLEY.COM
Free Delivery
(413) 585-8989
Hadley (Min. $15.00)
Out of Town (Min. $20.00)
蝶 蝴
Vegetarian Menu Available
Enjoy drinks at the full bar!
Mon – Thurs 11:30am – 10:00pm | Fri & Sat 11:30am – 11:00pm
Sunday 12:00noon – 10:00pm
48 Russell St (Rt. 9) Hadley, MA 01035

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
Show your College I.D. for a discount | Doors open at 9 pm
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
18 Plus
SEXXXY SATURDAYS
3 Clubs/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup
Roof Top Deck Open
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413 827 9000 www.SkyPlex.us

Write For Sports!
Email Sports Editor Eli Rosenswaike at
sports@dailycollegian.com

Sophomore Alyssa Visconti (left), senior Melissa Toulouse (center) and junior Katie Ruggles (right) are among the returning players UMass coach Jim Rudy expects to play a larger role this season for the Minutewomen due to injury problems. The trio anchors an experienced UMass backfield.

UMass veterans step up

W SOCCER from page C1

prior to A-10 play.

Once the conference schedule started, injuries began to hurt the Minutewomen, limiting them to two substitutions per game. The injuries caused UMass to suffer tough, hard-fought losses, and the team hobbled its way to a 4-6-1 record, which ranked ninth in the conference.

In the A-10's pre-season poll UMass was picked to finish in the same slot, and while most of the conference has gotten stronger, the Minutewomen seemingly haven't.

The Minutewomen still would like to make the A-10 tournament, but they know this season will not be easy.

"The question is, who will score the goals?" Rudy said. "I think we're going to have to rely on a bunch of defense and hope that we can pinch a few goals in."

That will likely make the defense responsible for helping the team win games.

As much as Rudy wants to win, he knows that in soccer, winning isn't everything.

"Tie games are sort of a foreign experience for American athletes," Rudy said. "To me, the measurement of success is getting into the A-10 tournament. You don't play for a tie but if that tie will get you through then we have got to get through it."

Even if the UMass defense performs this season, it cannot bring the team to the A-10 tournament by itself.

"I'm not sure how many more 1-0 close games I can handle in my career," Rudy said.

The Maroon and White will finish the season at home, only to play two of the most competitive teams in the A-10, Saint Louis and Charlotte.

The Minutewomen have their first home game against New Hampshire on Thursday.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu

EXPRESS YOURSELF WITH HP.

$848

#524867

HP Pavilion dv9819wm Entertainment Notebook PC

Technology and fashion for your mobile, digital lifestyle

- 3GB (max. 4GB) system memory for smooth performance
- 160GB hard drive for your digital media
- AMD Turion™ X2 TL62 Dual-Core Mobile Processor for fast, powerful mobility
- 17" diagonal display for high-definition movies and photos
- Chat face-to-face online with the integrated webcam*

HP Wireless Laser Mini Mouse

Wireless technology for freedom of movement

$39.88

#521215 (black) #521179 (pink) #521201 (turquoise)

A GREAT NOTEBOOK DESERVES A GREAT PRINTER.

#533376

$69.97

Rollback

HP Deskjet F4240 All-in-One Printer

One machine can do it all—and save you serious money.

- Print, scan, copy and fax—quickly and easily
- ENERGY STAR® compliant for power efficiency

DON'T FORGET.

#524804, #524811

HP 60 Black and Color Ink Cartridges

$15.97–$18.68

More pages, great reliability, amazing value. Original HP.

#521819

HP Premium Photo Paper

$15.67

4x6, glossy finish, 100 sheets

HP 20" Widescreen LCD w2007 Monitor

#501977

- 20" diagonal viewing area
- 16:10 widescreen aspect ratio—ideal for movies or viewing documents simultaneously
- Great performance with 5-ms response time; 1000:1 contrast ratio
- Integrated rear-facing speakers to reduce desk clutter

$278

hp

Available at Walmart Save money. Live better.

Walmart.com/hp

Hadley - 337 Russell Street, (413) 586-4231

Prices valid while supplies last. See product package for complete specifications and details. 4GB memory. Up to 1GB may not be available due to 32-bit operating system resource requirements. †For hard drives, 1GB = 1 billion bytes. Actual formatted capacity is less. *High definition content required for HD performance. Internet access required and sold separately.

© Copyright 2008 Hewlett-Packard Development Company, L.P. The information contained herein is subject to change without notice. The only warranties for HP products and services are set forth in the express warranty statements accompanying such products and services. AMD Turion is a trademark of Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. ENERGY STAR is a U.S. registered trademark of the United States Environmental Protection Agency.

Interested in working for The Daily Collegian?

THEN

Come to our All-Staff Meeting, Tuesday night in Campus Center room 174 at 7 p.m. to learn how to get involved with New England's Largest Collegiate Daily Newspaper.

OR

For more information e-mail Managing Editor Joe Meloni at managingeditor@dailycollegian.com

Difficult to duplicate success

Cinderella run over, UMass must prove itself once again

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team will face many challenges this season, ranging from a difficult schedule to adjusting to the loss of key seniors. But perhaps the greatest obstacle facing the Minutemen will be escaping the enormous shadow of last season.

Last year was among the most exciting seasons ever for the program, as the team set a multitude of school records including overall wins (17), goals-against average (.790), as well as recording the second-most shutouts in school history with nine.

At the start of the season it appeared as though the Minutemen were going to endure another average season after starting 3-3 in their first six games.

However, the team began to gel, picking up six straight victories including a huge win over then No. 12 Saint Louis. The team then managed to clinch its first Atlantic 10 tournament appearance since 2002. What followed was a spectacular run that fans would not soon forget.

Following a narrow victory over Dayton in a game decided by penalty kicks, the Minutemen stormed their way through the A-10 tournament, defeating Charlotte in the finals to earn a slot in the NCAA tournament for the second time in the 75-year history of the program.

UMass then proved it was not content to simply appear in the big dance, defeating its next four opponents, including overall No. 1 seed Boston College, and advancing to the College Cup before being knocked out in a heartbreaking, 1-0 loss to Ohio State.

The Minutemen became overnight celebrities getting national coverage during their run. UMass coach Sam Koch was even invited to throw the first pitch during a Boston Red Sox game on May 19 (That game was arguably as memorable as the soccer season since Jon Lester pitched a no-hitter the same night).

As impressive as the 2007 season was, it's now just a memory as UMass must start a new journey and create new memories. Every team's record is now 0-0 a fact that Koch is making sure the players keep in mind.

"[Last year] was nice for all the recognition that all the players are getting, and it's nice for the recognition that the program is getting," Koch said. "But that's last year, this is this year, it's a new team, a new season, we have got to throw everything that we did last year out the window because it doesn't matter now."

It's extremely difficult for any team to enjoy such a successful year. To duplicate such success is even harder. The Minutemen enter this season ranked No. 13 in the nation. This means that there will be no surprise factor for UMass; opponents will have them circled on their respective calendars and every team will be sure to bring its 'A' game against the Minutemen.

No one understands this better than Koch, who feels the weight of higher expectations and wants to make sure the pressure does not get to his players.

"Well it's really hard when your show up in the pumpkin wagon," said Koch. "You know everyone knows it's them, it's the Cinderella team. It's a different challenge, it's hard. You definitely think the players feel pressure to perform and get a lead right away and to show everyone that all this publicity is true.

"It's not necessarily fair to these guys; that's last year's team, this is a new team," he added. "The main thing for us is to improve each game, get better and get ready for the conference. That's what our goals are."

Koch does not appear too worried about this task as he feels that his players have the maturity to ignore their newfound notoriety.

"We keep having other people talk about the other things as we have to stay focused, but this is a good group so I think they'll be able to handle it," Koch said.

Many of the team's captains, including redshirt senior goalkeeper Zack Simmons appear to have bought in to the message.

"I don't think we should have any special attitude this year, we haven't proved anything this year," Simmons said. "Last year is over, and we can have some swagger at the end of the season if we make it back to the final four, but until then I hope we don't [get cocky] and we stay humble until we've accomplished something."

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

While his teammates celebrate behind him, sophomore Stuart Arnick smiles after the Minutemen sealed their first-ever trip to the College Cup.

UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy signed a two-year extension during the offseason that keeps the coach in Amherst at least through the 2010 season. Rudy is going into his 21st year here as coach.

Keeping Rudy here great for program

Eli Rosenswaike

Other than a national championship, Jim Rudy's coaching resume is as complete as any college soccer coach out there.

Two Final Four appearances (with two different programs, the only women's coach to do so), one national runner-up team, 12 NCAA tournament appearances and over 300 career wins – fourth most in NCAA Division I history.

He's coached legendary players (Briana Scurry, Michelle Akers and April Kater) and over 20 former players of his are currently coaching. He is one of the best goalkeeper coaches in the country, as three of his former players suited up for the U.S. National Team. His impact is lasting, and has been felt all over the soccer landscape.

Rudy enters his 21st season at UMass, and his 28th coaching in Division I – he spent seven years directing the Central Florida sidelines before coming to Amherst. Those seven years were remarkable, as Rudy guided the Golden Knights to a 74-23-6 overall record (.748) and made deep runs in the NCAA tournament.

The past seven years here haven't gone as well. His record over that time stands at 55-61-4 (.458) and only once has he guided his team to the Atlantic 10 tournament – let alone the NCAA tournament.

So has he lost his coaching brilliance? Is he washed up?

UMass athletic director John McCutcheon certainly doesn't think so – recently extending Rudy's contract, ensuring the long-time coach of the Minutewomen will be here at least through the 2010 season.

Good move.

Although Rudy says he hadn't heard any whispers that his time was numbered here, the thought must have crossed his mind. UMass has a proud tradition in soccer, and the results (record-wise) just haven't been there lately. In college sports, if you don't win, you're gone. It's that simple.

"I hadn't heard that from anybody," he said, regarding any previous rumors he could be out as coach. "Every once in a while you'll hit the soccer forums that quote 'people in the know,' and they bounce around names and stuff. My name never came up on that."

Thankfully, McCutcheon knows what he's doing. He knows to look beyond the record and see Rudy for what he is: a phenomenal coach, a great leader and a person who does things the right way. Along with men's coach Sam Koch, Rudy is UMass soccer. It's been a long time since this program knew anybody but them, and now's not the time to find out.

It's not like his teams have been awful. He went 10-6 in 2001 and had a strong season in 2006 (11-6) before getting unfairly left out of the NCAA tournament by the selection committee. They had a six-game winning streak after dropping the season-opener, including a big win over No. 15 Connecticut. They went 3-1 on the road in conference play, allowing just one goal in four games. That team was deserving of a spot.

And last season they were 9-6-2, despite suffering injuries at an alarming rate. It was extremely disappointing for Rudy because that roster was one of the most talented he's ever had.

But you won't hear any excuses from Rudy.

"Adversity is the measuring stick of character," he said. "It's easy when you're winning everything. But the question is who you are when things are tough. If you can't improvise you're not a decent coach."

There's no doubt he's more than just a decent coach. Throughout the years other schools have tried to acquire Rudy's services. He's had some interviews, but he always chooses to stay at UMass.

And that's a good thing for all involved, especially the players.

It's a consistency that this program needs now, particularly with the adversities on the field caused by all the injuries – most notably to forward Sydney Stoll.

"It gives the players a piece of mind. I would like to hope it does for all of them – even the ones that I don't play as much as they'd like," he said with a laugh.

At some point, though, Rudy's time at UMass will have to come to an end. Hopefully his successor is someone that is already here – assistant coach Angela Napoli. Napoli, a UMass grad, has been the assistant the past three years under Rudy.

Rudy would want nothing more than to see another one of his pupils to land a great head coaching job.

"She's evolving into a great coach on her own," he said. "If I were to leave, the transition would be pretty smooth."

The Minutewomen already have a great coach. But they sure could use another one once he leaves.

And if Rudy says that someone is Napoli, well, that's good enough for me.

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

CHECK OUT THE NEW HOME FOR THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG

http://blog.masslive.com/dailycollegiansports

Stop&Shop

Head back to class with Stop & Shop!

Stop & Shop welcomes you back with special bonus coupon savings!

Exclusive Bonus Coupon
Valid Monday 9/1 - Friday 10/31/08

$5 OFF a purchase of $25 or more.

Plus! At Stop & Shop you'll find...

- A delicious variety of fresh prepared foods
- Natural and organic foods
- A Staples® aisle for school supplies
- Personal care needs
- Redbox™ DVD rentals

And so much more! All priced to fit a student's budget!

Hadley

stop&shop.com

Returnees, transfers expected to lead in '08

UMass looks to build on success from 2007 campaign

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team returns 12 players from last year's squad, including junior forward and leading-scorer Cher King. UMass coach Justine Sowry also added seven freshmen to the team.

Another variable to this year's team is the acquisition of two transfer students: Jill Powers from Rhode Island and Jackie Tait from Delaware.

Powers, a junior forward, led the Rams in scoring in two years at URI, before its program was cut. Powers concluded her 2007 season as a Ram with 16 points on seven goals and two assists.

Tait, a sophomore back, registered five points on five assists last season for the Blue Hens. Before college, Tait led her high school team to a 24-0 record, en-route to a Virginia State Championship as a junior. In terms of her skill set, she's a very knowledgeable player who should help the fluid play of the backfield. Her intelligence makes her a very deceptive player.

This season, Tait plays opposite sophomore back Jaime Bourazeris. Bourazeris had a stellar freshman campaign that resulted in a spot on both the Atlantic 10 All-Conference and All-Rookie teams. Her five goals last season tied her for second-most on the team.

Even with Bourazeris coming off a great season, Sowry admits that the back position is the team's biggest weakness. Losing three of last season's four starting backs puts the state of the team in question. One of the reasons that the Minutewomen were so successful in winning the Atlantic 10 Championship was because of their defense.

To help ease the freshmen into college play, Sowry will put junior forward Christine Rodgers on the back line more often. Rodgers filled in sparingly last season as Sowry experimented with the lineup. Sowry said that the line would probably change throughout the year until she finds the kind of continuity on this year's back line that she had in 2007.

"I certainly believe that we're recruiting at a higher level," Sowry said. "Last year we probably had three freshmen that earned starting positions over the course of the year. For this incoming year, I would think that it would be similar if not more, but they have to earn it. It's not a given right."

Sowry will experiment with her four freshman backs to fill the holes left by graduating seniors Kristina DoRosario, Kara Murphy and Erin O'Brien. The trio chipped in on the offensive end as well, combining for four goals and seven assists.

"The playing style that we have is to outlet the ball effectively," Sowry said. "Being able to pass the ball around and finding the right seams to go forward. We certainly would like to use our midfield more than we did last year because that's where our strength lies. We have a very strong midfield line."

Although the backs start the offensive transition, the midfielders are one of the major factors in Sowry's coaching. Sowry starts the season with seniors Erin Parker and Mary Shea leading the middle of the field. Parker's speed is unparalleled on the team and gives UMass an edge in its up-tempo playing style. Parker led all midfielders last year with five goals, adding five assists as well.

Makaela Potts is also a player that Sowry expects to lead the team. Although just a sophomore, Potts has great vision on the field and is expected to quarterback the midfielders and set up formations during the game. Potts didn't have any major statistics last year, but Sowry believes that she has a great attitude that players can feed off of.

Shea is someone that Potts can learn from. Shea didn't score any goals last season, but she did have three assists on the year. As captain of the team, Shea can also help Potts hone her vision and composure on the field. Potts' tremendous knowledge of the game, coupled with Shea's leadership can only help the middle line for the Maroon and White.

"She's probably one of the most consistent players we have," Sowry said of Shea. "She's played in the USA High Performance Field Hockey competition and that's really improved her skill level. She works tirelessly defensively, but her offensive play has certainly [improved by] leaps and bounds in the last 12 months."

Shea is a natural scorer but has worked on passing the ball to her teammates and her three assists last year were a career-high.

The last aspect of the team and perhaps most important is the person in goal. Becky Letourneau was a force in the net for the Minutewomen last year. Letourneau had a 1.22 goals-against average, including seven shutouts. She improved quickly from her junior season on the technical aspect of the game and started in 18 games for the Minutewomen.

But UMass won't have the luxury of her experience and strong play this season, likely turning to junior Sarah Williams to start in goal. Williams has some experience starting, but actually saw more time in 2006 than she did last season.

Her playing time was limited last year due to injury, but when healthy, she manned the goal in two shutout wins for the Minutewomen.

Freshman Alesha Widdall will push Williams for playing time. Widdall gained valuable experience while playing on the Under-21 United States National Team in Argentina in March of 2008.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Senior Katelyn Orlando is an aggressive forward, according to coach Justine Sowry. Last season she scored one goal and had three assists to total four points in her 18 games played.

Senior midfielder Mary Shea started in every game last season. The captain is known for her consistency on the field and is expected to work with Makaela Potts to run the middle.

Sowry hoping to duplicate strong first season at helm

By Nicholas O'Malley
Collegian Staff

The 2007 season featured radical changes for the Massachusetts field hockey team.

It brought new coach Justine Sowry to Amherst, who looked to lay the groundwork for the team's future success. With Sowry came a dramatic shift in the team's fortunes, culminating in the team's first Atlantic 10 regular-season championship since 2001.

The team's turnaround from a record of 6-14 (3-4 A-10), to an impressive 14-9 (6-1 A-10) came to a surprise to everyone, including Sowry.

"To be perfectly truthful, it was beyond our wildest dreams that we had the season that we did," said Sowry. "We certainly put in the effort and we were relentless and persistent with our endeavor and at the end of the day we came out with some positive results."

When Sowry was hired to replace Patty Shea at the helm, there were expectations of a transition period while the players acclimated themselves to Sowry and her system. It didn't take long, but Sowry made it clear from the get-go that success was not going to come easily.

They understood that there weren't going to be any guarantees, that maybe, down the line a few years later we would get the rewards," she said.

Now in 2008, the players have already begun to reap the rewards of success. The question for this year is: Will they be able to continue their success?

That question will be answered when the Minutewomen open up their season against Boston College in Chestnut Hill on Aug. 29. The question of whether or not the team has improved will hinge greatly upon how well they play against Connecticut in the second week of September. The Minutewomen lost to UConn twice last season, with the second defeat ending their season in the second round of the NCAA tournament.

Until then, Sowry has her players focusing on preparing for the upcoming season in the same way that worked so well for them a year ago.

"We're still preparing the same in the sense that we're working hard and the expectation is that we're going to be the fittest team," Sowry said. "Each team we play against, we want to be fitter than them."

Meanwhile the team's coach has begun to adjust to her long-term role as head coach after her time as an assistant with Team USA. It is a major change for Sowry to have a large turnover annually and to have a lot of new faces every year.

"The realization that I'm coming to, being with the USA team, is that you would get one or two new players with a team that's been there for years and you just have to fine tune things," Sowry said. "The difference with this is that we have eight new players coming in and you have to re-teach your system or your philosophy and the way you do things."

With Sowry's tenure extending, she's been able to do more local recruitment for the Minutewomen. Sowry said that she's watched much more high school field hockey since fully settling at UMass.

This year's freshmen recruiting class features two in-state players, Emily Krueger of Canton and Nicole Paricioco of Walpole, as opposed to last year's class which featured none. The team's key additions also feature a talented junior transfer from Rhode Island in Jill Powers and Delaware sophomore transfer Jackie Tait. Powers expects to play a key role in what Sowry described as a void in the team's front line.

The new talent will be vital to the team's success after the Minutewomen were hit hard by graduation last year. The 2007 Minutewomen relied on its defense and goalkeeping, allowing 1.05 goals per game to their 1.51 goals scored per game – and 8.5 shots per game to their 11.4. The Minutewomen lost three seniors in their backfield and their starting goalkeeper.

"I'm sure there will be surprises along the way," Sowry said. "I think there will be growing pains. People are still trying to learn the system, the structure and certainly get to know the players around them. I know things are changing, but I think we have the talent to be a strong contender this year and to get our feet underneath us."

Despite their youth, UMass could open the season on a strong note with winnable games at Quinnipiac, Dartmouth and Northeastern. It faces what may be the key game of the season at home against UConn on Sept. 12. The game against the Huskies also marks the beginning of a stretch of games where the Minutewomen play seven of eight at home. If they can perform well during that stretch, the team will be in a prime position moving into conference play and has an excellent shot at the A-10 crown.

Nicholas O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

UMass Sports Scores and Upcoming Schedule

| Date | Team | Opponent | Result |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aug. 24 | Women's Soccer | @ Binghampton | Loss (2-1 OT) |
| Aug. 29 | Men's Soccer | @ Holy Cross | Loss (1-0) |
| | Women's Soccer | @ Maine | Tie (0-0 2 OT) |
| | Field Hockey | @ Boston College | Loss (3-2) |
| Aug. 30 | Football | vs. Albany NY | Win (28-16) |
| Aug. 31 | Men's Soccer* | @ Boston University | N/A |
| | Field Hockey | vs. Quinnipiac | Win (3-0) |

| Date | Team | Opponent | Location |
|---|---|---|---|
| Sept. 4 | Women's Soccer | New Hampshire | Rudd Field |
| Sept. 5 | Field Hockey | Dartmouth | Hanover, N.H. |
| Sept. 6 | Football | Holy Cross | Worcester |
| | Men's Soccer | Siena | Rudd Field |
| Sept. 7 | Field Hockey | Northeastern | Boston |

 The Massachusetts Daily Collegian went to print prior to the result of Sunday's Men's Soccer game against Boston University. For final results, check tomorrow's edition of The Daily Collegian*

UMass head coach Don Brown expresses frustration late in Saturday's season-opening victory against Albany. The Minutemen trailed, 9-0, after the first quarter but picked up their play in the second half.

UMass receiver Jeremy Horne takes a knee after catching a touchdown pass from quarterback Liam Coen in the fourth quarter of Saturday's game against the Great Danes. The Minutemen won 28-16.

Nothing to worry about in '08

ROSENSWAIKE from page C1

Moore/Rasheed Rancher receiving duo are gone, but UMass replaced Steve Baylark and Brandon London just fine last year. They'll do it again.

The talent is there. Tony Nelson showed it with his 171 rushing yards. Jeremy Horne showed it at wideout with a nice game-clinching touchdown grab in the fourth quarter. The offensive line dominated the entire game, keeping Coen on his feet and giving Nelson the room he needed to make plays.

Heading into the game, Brown was concerned with how his team would play and respond to adversity – especially the younger guys on offense.

"It's not like the NFL where you get four exhibitions," he said. "We get none. So you find out a lot where you are on Week 1."

Well, Coen is fine. His 90 yards in the air on 10-for-20 passing doesn't look special, but the three touchdown passes – and no turnovers – are what really matters. He made the key throws, fooled the defense with great play-action fakes and gave the ball to the right person nearly every time.

And that person was usually Nelson. It's been a long few years for the redshirt junior tailback, who has been a reserve to two accomplished UMass running backs in Steve Baylark and Matt Lawrence.

"I told him that this is his rightful turn to be the UMass tailback," Brown said. "He's prepared. He's durable, he had a great summer, he trimmed himself down and he's increased his speed and explosiveness. He's certainly the key to our run game."

Nelson will get most of the credit for his 171-yard performance and 64-yard touchdown run to start the second half – giving UMass a 21-9 lead – but the new-look offensive line was the key.

"I thought they cloned them all somewhere," Albany coach Bob Ford joked after the game. "They are [all] 6-foot-5, 300-pounds. They were pretty much all great looking kids."

Especially considering the offensive line has three new starters this season (John Ihne, Rob Getek and Ben Cobbyn) and captain Sean Calicchio has moved from starting right tackle to center this season, they performed exceptionally well.

Nelson will follow in his predecessors' footsteps; the defense will be great as always and Coen will work with the receiving corps to help replace the losses of Moore and Rancher.

Special teams and penalties, however, were a major problem against Albany. It was a key issue much of last season, and losing a good punt returner in Moore and kicker in Chris Koeppin won't help UMass' cause this year.

New starting kicker Armando Cuko didn't attempt a field goal on Saturday, but has a good work ethic and strong leg. Punter Brett Arnold was benched last season, but was great in the opener. Sean Smalls struggled in the return game, muffing a punt which resulted in a safety. He got banged up later on a 6-yard punt return. One has to wonder why UMass would risk an injury to its elite defensive player.

The Minutemen didn't look too pleased overall after the victory with the way they played. They expect better than that.

So should you from now on.

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erosenswaike@dailycollegian.com.

UMass vs. Albany Offensive Statistics August 30, 2008

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Passing | Liam Coen | |
| | Passing attempts: 20 | Completions: 10 |
| | Yards: 92 | Touchdowns: 3 |
| Rushing | Tony Nelson | |
| | Rushes: 20 | Yards: 171 |
| | TDs: 1 | Avg: 8.6 |
| Receiving | Jeremy Horne | |
| | Receptions: 4 | Yards: 37 |
| | TDs: 1 | |
| | Tony Nelson | |
| | Receptions: 4 | Yards: 12 |
| | Ian Jorgensen | |
| | Receptions: 2 | Yards: 7 |
| | TDs: 1 | |

UMass Athletics Offseason News and Notes

Men's Basketball
- Transferred Out – Papa Le, Trey Lang, Max Groebe
- Transferred In – Sean Carter, Hashim Bailey, Doug Wiggins (expected)
- Gary Forbes signed a one-year contract for an Italian team
- Defending NBA Champions, Boston Celtics, to play a preseason exhibition on Oct. 8 against Philadelphia 76ers
- New Coach Derek Kellogg purchases former coach Travis Ford's former house

Hockey
- Recruit John Carlson elects to sign with London Knights of the Ontario Hockey League rather than play for UMass

Men's Lacrosse
- UMass will leave the ECAC after the 2009 season to join the CAA

Women's Soccer
- UMass coach Jim Rudy signs a two-year contract extension through 2010 season

Field Hockey
- Garber Field gets renovations with new bleachers and new press box before lacrosse season

Women's Tennis
- UMass coach Judy Dixon inducted into the USTA New England Hall of Fame

Women's Lacrosse
- 2008 associate head coach Angela McMahon named head coach at UConn

Women's Basketball
- 2008 graduate Kate Mills signs professionally to play in Spain
- Transfer In – Megan Zullo (Point Guard from N.C. State)

GET YOUR SPORTS NEWS ON THE GO!
VISIT THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN WEBSITE

bigwords.com
We don't sell textbooks. We find the cheapest ones for you.
"I saved $OOOOO much money by using bigwords.com!"
My textbooks would have been well over $500 just from my researching multiple sites, but bigwords.com saved me time and money.
I went to one site, bought all my books, and only paid around $200"
- Chandler From Georgia Institute of Technology
BE SMARTER
35%-45% cheaper than online stores on average*
50% cheaper than bookstores on average* *lowest price vs. average of lowest prices from all online stores. lowest prices with shipping vs. retail without shipping.
BW73

Welcome UMass Amherst Students!
First Week 2008
August 31-September 6
www.umass.edu/firstweek

UMass Amherst Comedy Night
Saturday, September 6
One Night, Two Shows
7pm & 10pm • Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Tickets are $10 for UMass Amherst students only
Bring your student ID!
Featuring
Charlie Murphy & Bill Burr

Math is for lovers.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | | 7 | 5 | | | 4 | 2 | 9 |
| | 2 | | | | | | | |
| | 9 | | | 7 | 8 | | | |
| | | 6 | | 2 | 1 | | | |
| 8 | | | | | | | | 2 |
| | | | 9 | 3 | | 7 | | |
| | | | 7 | 8 | | | 6 | |
| | | | | | | | 9 | |
| 2 | 4 | 8 | | | 9 | 5 | | 7 |

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Be careful about reading health books. You may die of a misprint."

— Mark Twain

BROTHERS WATT By William Wilson

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

BLISS By Harry Bliss

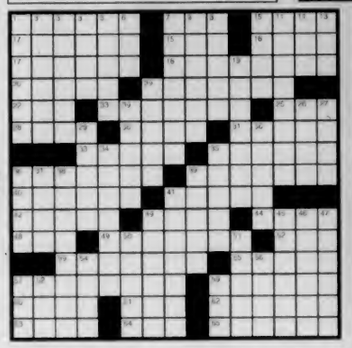
"I should have stolen a different identity."

DON'T MESS WITH LEXUS
LEXUS
TEXAS
87.900



COMICS @ DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Crave a drink
7 Linguistic suffix
10 Weather-beaten
14 "The Scarlet Letter" woman
15 Sides of a cube
16 Irish lad, jokingly
17 Not often
18 Shook
20 Clear the tape
21 Took across the river
22 Compass dir.
23 Thoroughfares
25 Pudgy
28 Big wheel on board
30 Catcher's base
31 Backbone
33 Convection appliances
35 Blows one's own horn
36 Coroner's investigation
39 Turns red
40 Intended route
41 Kiosk
42 Roy's wife Dale
43 Italian explorer
44 Pinnacle
48 ___ es Salaam
49 Class of travel
52 That woman
53 Calculates a score
55 Deck out
57 Second spouse's boys
59 Steel-gray metal
60 Yours and mine
61 R-V connection
62 Immerses
63 100 centavos
64 Abnormal weight
65 Very persuasive

DOWN
1 Beat the wheat
2 Funeral coach
3 Country created in 1948
4 AAA offerings
5 Tennis champ Monica
6 Give it a whirl
7 Thinks the world of
8 Yes or no intensifier
9 Act vigorously
10 Chanteuse Lane
11 Glass bowl inhabitant
12 Optic orb
13 Pentagon grp.
19 Lose an opportunity
21 Facade
24 Nearby things
26 Kitty stake
27 "___ of the d'Urbervilles"
29 Grieve
32 Turkish nabob
34 Nautical craft
35 Put forth flowers
38 Frosted
37 ___ Scotia
38 Living space
39 Philippines machetes
41 Crams
43 Indicates the way
45 Take your pick
46 Half-fish creatures
47 Hemingway
50 Finalize
51 Yokel
54 Lhasa
56 Medicine
57 Concession
58 Day of the wk.
59 Atlanta-based health agcy.

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SUBMIT YOUR COMICS NOW

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your day will bring you great happiness if you decide to attack your problems like an elephant stampeding a crowd of circusfolk.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Today you will be driven to compose an opera based upon the season finale of The OC, which will be a hit in Paris.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Welcoming the freshmen with a Stop & Shop cookie platter was a charming idea, but having them all over for dinner went too far.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
No, you do not insert quarters into the slot to make it work. Incorrect.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Beware of those that use you for your toilet or hair-care products.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If your great-great grandfather and great-great grandmother hadn't shared an affinity for Victorian reading rooms, you wouldn't be here reading this right now.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Pay your bursar bill in pennies this month.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't fret. It's better to have loved and lost than to have stayed with that cheating loser.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Some of the people in this very room may owe you money. Don't let them forget it, you cheap bastard.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You will eventually regret your new tattoo, once the novelty of asking "where on my body is Carmen Sandiego?" wears off.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Just remember that a "relationship" is a Facebook status, not a real world entity.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Bartending is a great way to meet new drinks.

amherst cinema
Fri Aug 29 - Thu Sep 4
Elegy 2:30 4:45 7:15 9:30 + 12pm Sat, Sun & Mon
American Teen 2:15 4:30 7:00 9:15 + 12:15pm Sat, Sun & Mon
Vicky Cristina Barcelona 2:45 5:00 7:30 9:45 + 12:30pm Sat, Sun & Mon
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst (413) 253-2547 www.amherstcinema.org

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Aug 29 - Thu Sep 4
Vicky Cristina Barcelona 3:00 5:15 7:45 9:45 + 12:30pm Sat, Sun & Mon & 10:15am Wed
MAN ON WIRE 2:45 7:30 + 10:00am Wed
TELL NO ONE 4:45 9:30 + 12:00pm Sat, Sun & Mon
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantttheater.org (413) 584-5848

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENT

Meeting Notice
Top of Campus, Incorporated (TOC, Inc.) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 802, Wednesday, May 28, 2008 at 12:00 p.m.

APT FOR RENT

6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. Contact gware@student.umass.edu

Center of Town. 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

5 bedroom $2150 Hadley. June 1st. Parking, garden, plowing, garbage included, bus stop, bike path. Marciano 413-387-0093 or marcianotalula@hotmail.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished

APT FOR RENT

New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom, 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton.
2 Bedrooms $825+
3 Bedrooms $1025+
4 Bedrooms $1225+
6 Bedrooms $1500+
584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST, Mill Valley Estates Limited Time Offer. $1000 Off Your Move-In Costs! 2 bedroom $1175, 3 bedroom $1475, 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Now Renting for Summer & Fall 2008! Call now 413-253-7377, email: millvalleyestates@winnco.com

APT FOR RENT

Subletting Puffton for the Summer! Ax about me! 508-335-0seven7seven Pretty cheap

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Moving. Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call 413-584-4746 or nfo@idealmovers.com

Summer Warehouse positions available for seasonal trucking company. Looking for warehouse workers to work two, 10-day sessions in June and August. Work with your friends for $100/day. Long hours, short session! Spend June in our warehouse and July at the beach. Call for more info. 888-949-5089

EMPLOYMENT

Boltwood Marketplace. Open air market for farmers and artists. Opens Saturday May 10th 9am-1pm. Open every Saturday through July 26th. Looking for vendors. www.boltwoodmarket.com or 253-7879.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

FOR SALE

Twin bed (brand new), computer desk & chair, dresser. Each can be sold individually or in a package. Email for more info: dexter@student.umass.edu

GENERAL

INK & TONER CARTRIDGES 30-60% LESS. ECO-FRIENDLY AMHERST 413-548-9905 NORTHAMPTON 413-517-0099

5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hook-ups, large yard, close to UMass. Contact (413) 549-4270

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

Big Y WORLD CLASS MARKET
Only The Best...:
SCORE BIG!
UNIVERSITY DRIVE, AMHERST, MA • 253-0416
WE ACCEPT OCMP!

From Our Kitchen
American Dinner Combos
19.95
SAVE ON UP TO 5
SERVES 4 TO 6!
Available Monday, Tuesday & Thursday Only.
See Store For Details.
Some Items Not Available In All Stores.

MONDAY'S COMBO
FAMILY STYLE MEATLOAF
Our Special Recipe, Made Fresh In Store

TUESDAY'S COMBO
SUPERBIRD ROTISSERIE CHICKEN
The Ultimate Rotisserie Chicken! Now Even More Value!

THURSDAY'S COMBO
8 PIECE FRIED CHICKEN
2 Drumsticks, 2 Breast Pieces, 2 Thighs & 2 Wings
We Use Only Zero Trans Fat Canola Oil

MAKE A COMBO WITH YOUR CHOICE OF ANY 3 FRESH SIDE DISHES
Garlic Red Skinned Mashed Potatoes, 2 lb • Creamy Mashed Potatoes, 2 lb
Buttered Green Beans, 13 oz • Buttered Corn, 13 oz • Buttered Baby Carrots, 13 oz
Roasted Butternut Squash, 13 oz • Gravy, 1 pint

FEED THE WHOLE TEAM WITH THESE MEALS!
FRIDAYS ONLY!
FAMILY SIZE CHEESE PIZZA
40 Pieces
$12
SATURDAY & SUNDAYS ONLY!
30" GRINDER
YOUR CHOICE OF HAM, TURKEY OR ROAST BEEF
$9
Now With 25% More Meat!
Cannot Be Combined With Any Other Offer.

UMass takes opener

FOOTBALL from page C1

to the end zone.

"Tony made a great run ... it gave us some breathing room, which we badly needed," UMass coach Don Brown said. "Every time our mettle was tested, we responded."

Nelson's run was the longest run for a UMass tailback since R.J. Cobbs busted a 84-yard run on Nov. 2, 2002.

Coming into the game a big question mark for UMass was its new offensive line. Only one member of the line is playing at their original spot. Coen wasn't sacked once and they created holes for Nelson throughout the game.

"They did a fairly solid job," Brown said. "We kept Liam [Coen] up for the most part. It's an area where we will continue to grow."

When the offense did struggle, punter Brett Arnold, made sure the Great Danes had less-than-desirable field position. Arnold punted six times for an average of 47.5 and pinned Albany inside their own 20-yard line three times.

"I was concerned especially with some of our areas of youth," Brown said. "I was concerned with how we were going to respond.

Perhaps the turning point for the defense was immediately before on an Albany fourth-and-goal at the UMass 3-yard line. Albany put the ball in McCarty's hands once again, but redshirt junior defensive tackle Brandon Collier and redshirt junior Josh Jennings met him at the line, and the Great Danes turned the ball over on downs.

"That was huge," Jennings said. "We're going to face adversity ... we all stepped up, we knew what we were facing."

When the second half was well under way you could tell the nerves from the first half were long gone. The team ran, blocked and tackled more efficiently.

In the third quarter Esposito was sacked twice, pressured more and forced to scramble out of the pocket more often. The Minutemen intercepted two Esposito passes; the first by Miles and another by middle linebacker Josh Jennings, who leapt to intercept a ball thrown over the middle in the early stages of the fourth quarter.

Coen, who threw for 92 yards and three touchdowns, connected with Jeremy Horne at the 11:12 mark of the fourth quarter to put the Maroon and White up 28-16. Coen, like the rest of his team, came into the first game not as composed as he would have liked. Before connecting with Horne for the game's final score, Coen missed him racing, uncovered across the field.

"We don't worry about the artistic wins, we worry about winning the football game," Brown said. "We needed to play a game to find out where we were at. Winning is the important thing."

The Minutemen play Holy Cross next Saturday, Aug. 30, in Worcester.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

UMass linebacker George Byrd forces Albany quarterback Vinny Esposito out-of-bounds during the third quarter in Saturday's game against the Great Danes.

UMass wide receiver Julian Talley is pushed out-of-bounds by Albany's Daniel Avery in the fourth quarter of Saturday's game against Albany. Quarterback Liam Coen relied mostly on his running backs and tight end in the passing game.

Horne, Jorgensen grab touchdowns

WIDE RECEIVERS from page 10

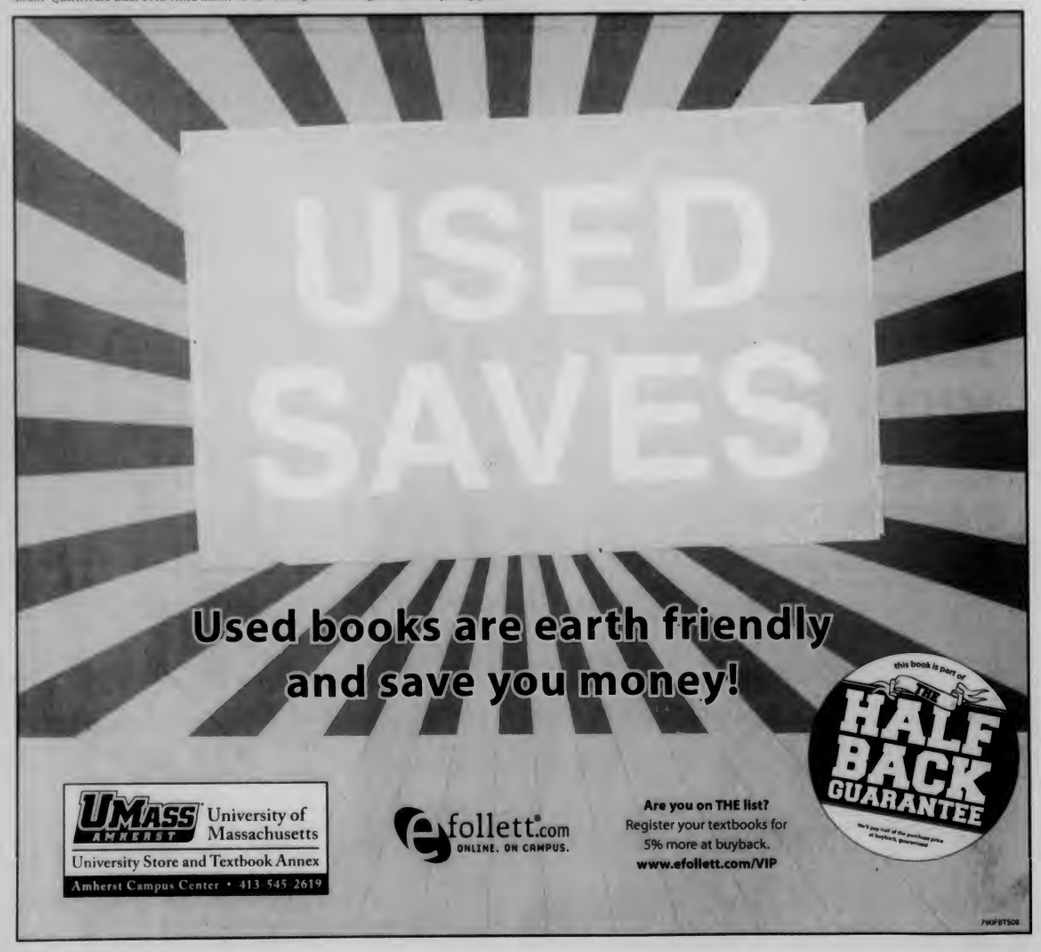
Apart from the touchdown catch, his reception deep in Albany territory on a second-and-five extended a UMass drive, which resulted in Horne's touchdown.

Jorgensen was one of Coen's favorite targets last season in the red zone, catching 15 passes, with five of them being for touchdowns.

Nelson was terrific out of the backfield for UMass, consistently finding hole in the Albany defense to extend offensive possessions.

Not only did the backfield help Coen in Saturday's win by catching passes, it opened up the field for Coen and his wide receivers. The Minutemen attacked Albany with a heavy dose of running from Nelson, which enabled the UMass offense to utilize play-action passes. UMass ran the ball almost twice as often as it threw the ball; rushing 38 times to 20 passing attempts. The overload of run made Albany's defense bite when the Minutemen employed play-action plays.

Brown doesn't expect too much from his receivers early just yet, but is confident after Saturday's game that they will make an impact this season.



"Our receiving corps will not be household names, but I still think we have some very talented young men that can help us," Brown said before the season started.

Brown later added that Cruz, Bailey and redshirt junior Joe Sanford, who is fighting for a spot at wide receiver after being converted from a quarterback, are some of those players who were not household names but could be impact players by season's end.

Brown doesn't seem too worried about the development of his young receivers, however – and for good reason.

"We have Liam Coen under center, and anytime you have Liam under center you're going to have a chance to win," Brown said.

Jeffrey R. Lannard can be reached at jlannard@dailycollegian.com.

INSIDE: BONNAROO FEATURES BIG NAMES | PAGE 7

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 84 LO: 59 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 2008

Photos to put faces to SPIRE rosters

By Vincent Capone
Collegian Staff

It has happened before at the University of Massachusetts: a student raises his hand to answer something in a well-populated classroom, and the professor may say, "Yes, Mr. ... I'm sorry I don't recall your name. But don't worry, give me a few weeks, and I'll have everyone's name down."

Getting to know the names of students can be challenging, even for seasoned teachers. But now, a new tool on the University's S.P.I.R.E. network can help professors get to know their classes faster than ever.

The Office of Information Technologies (OIT) made progress this summer with what they said will help improve the learning environment by providing professors with a photo roster on SPIRE. When given the opportunity to use this new classroom tool, a number of faculty members jumped at the chance.

The new rosters are expected to help teachers get to know their students on a more personal level.

Some professors are "face people" while others remember names better, this tool, OIT said, will place a name with the face and even allow them to quiz themselves at home.

Developers behind the photo rosters say that using such a tool could not only promote a better classroom environment, but also improve classroom security, discourage cheating and allows professors to approach students who they feel may need extra help.

However, the new roster is not necessarily improved in the minds of some students. They believe OIT's expectations could be exaggerated.

"In small classes, teachers will probably learn your name regardless," senior Katie Wilson said. "In the huge lectures, it's kind of pointless. I can't see it being a bad thing, ineffective maybe, but not a bad thing."

See PHOTOS on page 3

Textbook Annex staff member Ashley Brooks, left, helps senior Katherine Savoia, right, find her textbook at the Textbook Annex on Tuesday. Some professors were outraged after learning the Annex carried course books reserved to be exclusively sold by stores downtown.

Sze Cheng, front center, kneels with her textbooks while Pik Cheng, left, looks for more.

'Perfidy' at the Annex

Store manager reprimanded after posing as parent to intercept professors' reading lists

By William McGuinness
Collegian Staff

Amherst's battle over books has become an ugly one.

According to downtown bookstore owners, the rush to sell student textbooks is marked with deceit and business ethics that have corroded too greatly.

Ken Kahler, the director of the University of Massachusetts bookstore, was caught posing as a parent of a UMass student inquiring which textbook professor Suzanne Daly required for her class. In the e-mail, he said his daughter was enrolled in the class. He asked for the title, author and ISBN number of the text.

The e-mail was from a Kahler account not affiliated with the University, though he uses the Daly grew suspicious after replying to the message and found Kahler's daughter's name. He did not reply.

Daly immediately confronted Amherst Books employee Neil Herold via e-mail.

"I visited the Textbook Annex and on the shelf was a card with my name and textbook on it, stating that the book was on order," she wrote in her correspondence. "When I demanded an explanation from the textbook manager, her assistant first said that they had 'ordered the book to

See TEXTBOOKS on page 3

Ofosu, Minutemen kick off season

Senior forward Prince Ofosu helped the Minutemen stun Boston University on Aug. 31 with a last-second goal to send the game into overtime. UMass is 1-1 this season after reaching the College Cup in 2007.

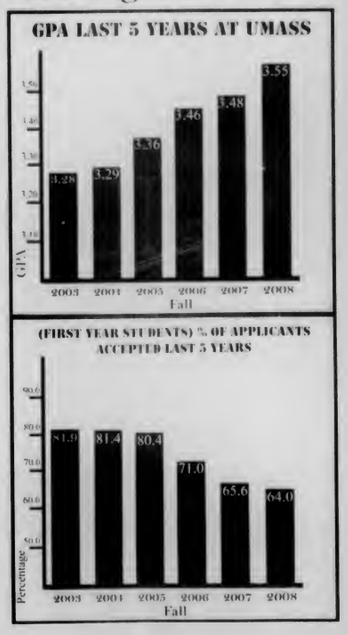
Admissions more selective, freshmen earn higher GPAs

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

This year's freshman class continues a trend of higher GPAs, higher SAT scores and higher standards for incoming students.

According to the University of Massachusetts' office of institutional research and Collegeboard.com, the class of 2012 consists of approximately 4,100 students selected from the highest ever number of applicants to the University, resulting in the lowest percentage of students accepted.

Almost 29,000 students applied to UMass this year, an increase of 7 percent from last year and 80 percent from the 2003 total of 16,500.



Over the past five years, the average GPA of the incoming freshman class has increased .27 points, or about 8 percent. That corresponds with an increase of the average class rank from which students are selected, now at the 21st percentile.

The percentage of first-year students accepted dropped by 1.56 percent from 65.6 percent last year to 64 percent this year. Five years ago, UMass accepted 81.9 percent of its applicants.

Despite the nearly 20 percent drop in acceptance rate, the incoming class size has remained essentially the same in the past five years, hovering around the 4,100 mark because of the huge increase in number of applications.

UMass has similar acceptance and GPA numbers to other state colleges and universities, with 69 percent accepted at Bridgewater

See FRESHMEN on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
BACK TO SCHOOL ISSUE

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COPIES EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Garber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenswaike
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mulholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kozwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Waxman
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greasmes
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cernak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Wilhimus
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SCHEDULE. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGIAN NEWS IN 1903, THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE UMASS COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS RECEIVED NUMEROUS AWARDS FOR EXCELLENCE. FALL SEMESTER RATES AND INFORMATION CALL 545-3500. RATES ARE $350 (SEMI-ANNUAL) AND $700 (FULL).

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kate Olesin

COPY EDITOR
David Humphreys

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michael Sarkes, Michelle Abbasciano

ADVERTISING PRODUCTION
Katherine Shea

Construction resumes

Despite barn delay, headway made on new recreation center

BY LISA DEBENEDICTIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In addition to construction totaling over $40 million dollars this summer, construction and improvements at the University of Massachusetts continue this semester on the new Recreation Center.

The center, which is located between Hick's Way and Commonwealth Avenue, was designed by Sasaki Associates of Boston. The cost of the center will total $50 million, according to Jim Hunt, the communications manager for Facilities and Campus Planning.

"It will have weight and fitness areas in two floors of the building, a three court gym that is dividable, and multi-purpose rooms for classes," said Hunt. "There will even be a juice bar and a lounge area, which will be nice."

The building will also contain associated locker and toilet facilities, as well as house administration offices, and space for other sports and recreational clubs.

Spanning 120,000 square feet and three floors, the Recreation Center not only promises up-to-date technology, but will also be an anesthetically pleasing addition to campus.

"It will integrate a part of campus that was previously occupied primarily by older buildings and we will be doing a lot of landscaping to the area," said Hunt. "Actually, if you go up there, you will notice that there are already improvements on Hicks Way. The pedestrian walkways have been straightened out and they have been doing some work on the area."

Construction began in fall 2007, but was halted due to disputes over a historic barn occupying the land planned for the center. However, construction resumed in spring of 2008 and will continue through the 2008-2009 fiscal year.

According to Hunt, the target date for the completion of the building is by the end of this fall with the facility being ready for use by the spring semester. However, he estimates that completion will probably be around the close of the spring semester with occupancy beginning next fall.

Beyond expanding recreational opportunities for students at UMass, the location of the building was selected purposefully in an effort to unite the library and campus center areas with the opposite side of campus and the Mullins Center.

"This is very good news for the University and the quality of life on campus," he said. "Of course, the primary mission of the University is academic buildings, but a central recreation facility was lacking. It is a facility that will have state-of-the-art equipment and will really be pretty nice."

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebened@student.umass.edu

Tony Holden, right, points to Donald Valentino, left, on the recreation center construction site.

For breaking news
dailycollegian.blogspot.com

Green dorms the new envy

BY LIZA N. BURBY
NEWSDAY

MELVILLE, N.Y. – Though today's college students are more aware of the environment than their parents were at that age, creating an eco-friendly dorm may be a challenge given the space limitations of the average room. That's why shopping for green alternatives to the extensive list of accessories and supplies they will need can be a practical way to protect the Earth and their home away from home at the same time.

Before you shop, check with the school to see if it has recommendations and suggestions for green options, says Amy Provenzano, executive director of environmental stewardship at Stony Brook University. "Then look for items made out of recycled content, like cotton, hemp, bamboo and cork, and try to stay away from plastics. You can get substitutes for all kinds of items, like hangers and rugs," she says. "Go more organic for bedding and towels, like 100 percent cotton. They cost more and don't always come in the extra long twin for dorm rooms, but you can opt for an organic pillow, at least."

Don't assume you can only buy new, says Jessica Jensen, chief executive of Low Impact Living, a green home improvement site.

"Students can decorate their dorms with items purchased from Goodwill, vintage shops and (the online classified site) Craigslist. And many schools have recycling programs whereby items kids didn't take home with them last year are available to students for this school year, like chairs and appliances."

Keep energy saving in mind when you buy products that use electricity. For instance, while most rooms have overhead lighting, if you get a desk lamp, provide your child with compact fluorescent light bulbs. Brian Kenny, resident hall director for Adelphi University in Garden City, N.J., recommends shopping for appliances with the Energy Star label, including the student's computer, monitor, TV and refrigerator.

But students also can opt for communal appliances, says Michael LaFemina, 23, a representative of Students for a Greener Hofstra, an organization at Hofstra University in Hempstead, N.Y.

"You don't have to bring a microwave and refrigerator, as these are usually available in the common area. So are TVs and DVD players," he says. "It's all about using less energy. And if you do have your own appliances, keep them on power save mode."

In fact, in a dorm setting – as well as at home – being green is as much about behavior as it is about purchasing decisions, as Michelle Pizer, 20, a senior at Stony Brook University, learned.

"It's not always easy for a college student to afford eco-friendly items and it's hard to find them even if they are affordable, so I do what I can," says Pizer, president of the university's environmental club. Though she has a nearby apartment, she says she lived green even when she was in a dorm. "It's really a matter of changing habits in ways that don't cost much. For instance, I use as little water as possible when taking a shower or washing dishes. I never buy plastic water bottles and instead have a reusable aluminum bottle and fill it with tap water. I have reusable canvas bags for shopping and I try to rely on my bike for transportation."

Students from across the country moved into their dorm rooms and apartments. Often a habitat of sparce resources, students are turning rooms into more energy efficient spaces.

SAVE $$$ ON YOUR COURSE BOOKS.
BUY THEM HERE.
LOWER PRICES ON THESE BOOKS AND LOTS MORE!!!

| Course | Title | Course | Title | Course | Title |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| AnSci 101 | Intro to An. Science | Engin 110 | Intro To Chem. Engin | MIE 210 | Statics |
| AnSci 360 | Farm Animal Care | Engin 111 | Intro To Civ. & Env. | MGT 260 | Intro To Law |
| Anthro 100 | Human Nature | Engin 112 | Intro to ECE | MGT 301 | Principles of Mgt |
| Anthro 102-A | Arch. & Prehistory | Engin 113 | Intro to Mech. & Indus. | MicBio 160 | Bio Of Cancer & |
| Anthro 103-A | Human Origins | Engl WP 111/112 | | Music 100 | Appreciation Intro |
| Anthro 104-A | Culture,Soc. & People | EnvSci 101 | Intro to Env. Biology | Music 101 | Lit of Music |
| Art Hist 100 | Survey Ancient & Med | EnvSci 112 | Fund. Of the Environ. | Music 103 | History of Jazz |
| Art Hist 115 | Intro. To Visual Arts | EnvSci 213 | Intro. To Environ Policy | Nursing 100 | Pers. Of Nursing |
| Astron 100 1-4 | Intro. To Astronomy | EnvDev 335 | Plants & Design | Nursing 210 | hum Growth & Dev |
| Astron 101 | Exploring the Universe | FinMgt 250 | Quant. Tools Mgt. | Nursing 301 | Pathophysiology |
| BioBioChem 285 | Cell & Molec. Biology | FinMgt 300 | Fund. Of Finance | Nursing 315 | Physical Assessment |
| BioChem 420 | Elem Biochemistry | FinMgt 301 | Corp. Finance | Nursing 327 | Mental Health Nurs |
| BioChem 471 | Elem. Physical Chem | FinMgt 304 | Info. Tech. Finance | Nutr 130 | Under. Nutrition |
| BioChem 523 | General BioChemistry | FinMgt 320 | Investments | Phil 110 | Intro To Philosophy |
| Bio 100 A1-A4 B D | Intro to Biology I | Forest 528 | Forest & Wetlands Hyd | Phil 164 | Medical Ethics |
| Bio 103 | Plant Hardogy | French 110/120 | Elem. French I | Physics 100 | Concept. Physics |
| Bio 105 | Biology of Soc. Issues | GeoSci 100 | Global Environ. Change | Physics 125 | Seeing the Light |
| Bio 106 | Human Biology | GeoSci 101 | Earth | Physics 131 | Intro to Physics I |
| Bio 108 | Biodiversity | GeoSci 102 | Human Landscape | Physics 132 | Intro to Physics II |
| Bio 200 | Evolution | GeoSci 103 | Intro. To Oceanogrp | Physics 139 | Intro to Physics |
| Bio 287 | Intro to Ecology | GeoSci 105 | Dynamic earth | Physics 152 | General Physics II |
| Chem 110 | General Chemistry | Ger 110/120 | Elem. German | Physics 181 | Physics I - Mech. |
| Chem 111/112 | Gen Chem-Acc-Majors | Hist 111 | World Hist. 1500-Pres | Physics 281 | Comput. Physic |
| Chem 261/262 | Organic Chemistry | Hist 101 A | Western Thought | Physics 421 | Mechanics I |
| Chem 269 | Org. Chem Lab | Hist 114 | Hist. of China I | PolSci 101-B | American Politics |
| Chem 471 | Elem. Phys. Chem. | Hist 150 | Dev. Of Amer Civ-1886 | PolSci 121 B | World Politics |
| CmpSci 105 | Intro. To Comp. Sci | Hist 151 A | Dev.of Amer. Civ II | PolSci 162 | Constitutional Law |
| CmpSci 120 | Problem Solving w/Inte | HT Mgt 100 | Intro to Hosp. & Tour | PolSci 255 | Am. Foreign Policy |
| CmpSci 187-A | Programs, & Data Struc | HT Mgt 150 | Food Pres Mgt. | Psych 100 1-9 | Intro. To Psychology |
| CmpSci 287 | Prog. Lang. Paradigms | HT Mgt 250 | Food Service Mgt. | Psych 240 A-C | Stats. For Psych |
| Comm 118 | Intro to Interpers. Comm | HT Mgt 260 | Hosp. Personnel Mgt | Psych 241 | Methods of Inquiry |
| Comm 121 | Intro to Media & Culture | Hum Dev 270 | Child Development | Psych 320 | Learn & Think |
| Comm 240 | Modes of Film Comm. | Kin 100 | Intro to Kinesiology | Psych 330 | Phys. Psychology |
| ComDis 210 | Intro. To Comm. Disor. | Kin 110 | Human Perf. & Nutrit | Psych 335 | Behav. Endocrin. |
| ComDis 211 | Anat & Phys. Speech | Kin 215 | Prevent. & Care of At | Psych 350 | Child Development |
| ComDis 315 | Speech & Lang. Disor. | Kin 297 A, C | Anatomy & Phys. II | Psych 380 | Abnorm. Psychology |
| Econ 103 A-F | Intro. To Microeconomic | Kin 380 | Diets, Supple. & Ath | Soc 106 A, D | Race, Gender Class |
| Econ 104 | Intro. To Macro Econ | Kin 440 | wellness in The Wo | Span 110/126 | Elem. Spanish I |
| Econ 203 A-B | Intro. Microecon Theor | Math 100 | Basic Math Skills | Span 126 | Elem. Spanish II |
| Econ 204-B | Intro. Macroecon. The | Math 101-104 | Pre Calc/ Algebra | Span. 311 | Ad. Grammar |
| Econ 305 | Marxian Economics | Math 113 | Math For Elem Teach | | |
| ECE 572 | Optoelectronics | Math 121 | Linear Meth. & Prob | | |

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St. Amherst
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop) 253-3870, 253-7816
Rush Hours: 8:30-8 M-Sat, 12-5 Sun Sept. 1 - Sept. 15

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Fall Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 168C • Sept. 8 (Mon) • Sept. 9 (Tues) • Sept. 10 (Wed)
• Assignment notification ONLY Thurs Sept. 11 @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
• No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Selectivity increases for '12

FRESHMEN from page 1

State and 61 percent accepted at UMass Boston. The largest percent of the incoming freshman population at both Bridgewater and UMass Boston had a GPA between 2.5 and 2.99 according to the College Board Web site.

Compared to private universities, however, UMass is farther away. Only 39 percent of applicants to Northeastern University are accepted, and 77 percent of them are in the top quarter of their class.

The increase in applications can be attributed to a number of factors, including the current economic situation and the perceived level of education acquired at the University.

"Students and their families clearly understand that UMass Amherst distinguishes itself by offering a high-quality and affordable college education," said Esther Terry, interim vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life.

This was the third year UMass has offered an early action admission program that allows students to apply early for admission and receive notification of their acceptance in December. Early action applications grew by 30 percent to 6,230 applicants.

The number of transfer applications was about the same this year as last year – around 3,000 students.

Ben Williams can be contacted at bwilliams@dailycollegian.com

UMass senior Alex Oldfield, center, and Leo Jean-Louis, right, a member of the "First Week" staff guide Doug Paulishen, left, who recently transferred to UMass.

More eyes on UMass:

Security boosted by cameras

This summer 60 additional security cameras were installed on the University of Massachusetts campus, which brings the total number of the crime-solving and investigative tools placed in residence halls, dining commons and other buildings to over 500.

Overall, the estimated cost of the project for the UMass Amherst Housing Services totals $1.1 million.

Although security is a justifiable concern on campus, the topic of privacy and where the cameras are placed may arouse anxiety that the cameras will be installed in places other than public zones.

"The presence of the cameras on our campus is broadly publicized," said James Meade, manager of residence hall security in an August press release. Often just knowing the camera is there will deter crime.

Meade also outlined that the "eyes in the sky" have already proved useful at UMass in preventing and deterring campus crime.

A security camera in McNamara Hall caught an assailant exiting the dormitory after beating a former roommate with a baseball bat and stabbing another. Images show the alleged attacker carrying stolen electronic equipment from the residence. If an incident were to occur, the UMass Police Department often posts still shots from security cameras to help in cold or slow investigations. Those who visit the Web site can view the image and submit a tip online should they have information.

The security camera installation process began on campus in 2000 and by 2006 there were cameras installed at every residence hall entrance. Safety measures also include student programs that promote campus security.

The footage from the security cameras is monitored at the UMPD dispatch center where three, 24-inch screens provide visual assistance. The cameras can be watched simultaneously and "with a click of a mouse" an image can be enlarged to full screen.

Adam Coulter Collegian Staff

Lectures to feature new picture rosters

PHOTOS from page 1

Some worry that their I Card photo will be the image used on the SPIRE roster. The photo, typically taken during freshman orientation, is not always the most up-to-date photo to pick someone out of a crowd.

"I personally am disturbed because my I.D. photo is not something I like people viewing. I look rather unfortunate in it," said Adrienne D'Agostino, a junior who took her photo on a sweaty summer day.

"No one looks like themselves in their ID picture," said senior Sarah Madden. "I don't see how it will help the professors match a face to a name."

Others have the opinion that class participation and a student's involvement is what leads to learning names and creating a better classroom environment. Participating in classroom discussions, giving input on WebCT and SPARK and seeking out a professor during office hours are, instead, the opportunities for professors to better get to know their students' names.

Madden is about to begin her senior year and took courses on both sides of the class size spectrum.

"Meeting new people in class is the responsibility of the student, and I believe that it should be the responsibility of the professor as well," she said. "If a professor cannot be bothered with trying to know everyone in their classes now, what would make them take the time to do it with SPIRE photo rosters?"

Vincent Capone can be reached at vcapone@student.umass.edu

Bookstores quabble for reading lists

TEXTBOOKS from page 1

end, Daly polls her class asking at which store students prefer to shop. She said Amherst Books and Food for Thought Books are perennial front-runners.

In Amherst, textbooks are big business, and professors take the decision on who carries theirs very seriously.

Comparative Literature professor David Lenson's CompLit 131 class requires 150 students to purchase nine paperback books averaging $15 each. While Amherst Books is sent his list of books exclusively, students still have the opportunity to buy them used, on-line or from other stores.

But Herold said all is not fair in textbook sales – that an ugly version of competition has, over the years, morphed into borderline, industrial espionage.

In an e-mail to the professors who do business with him, Herold said the bookseller Follett has a long history of using devious and unscrupulous means to discover what professors have ordered at the three independent bookstores in town so that they can carry the course list and scoop sales.

Herold estimates that once the University's textbook annex acquires a course reading list, his sales for the books ordered drops around 70 percent.

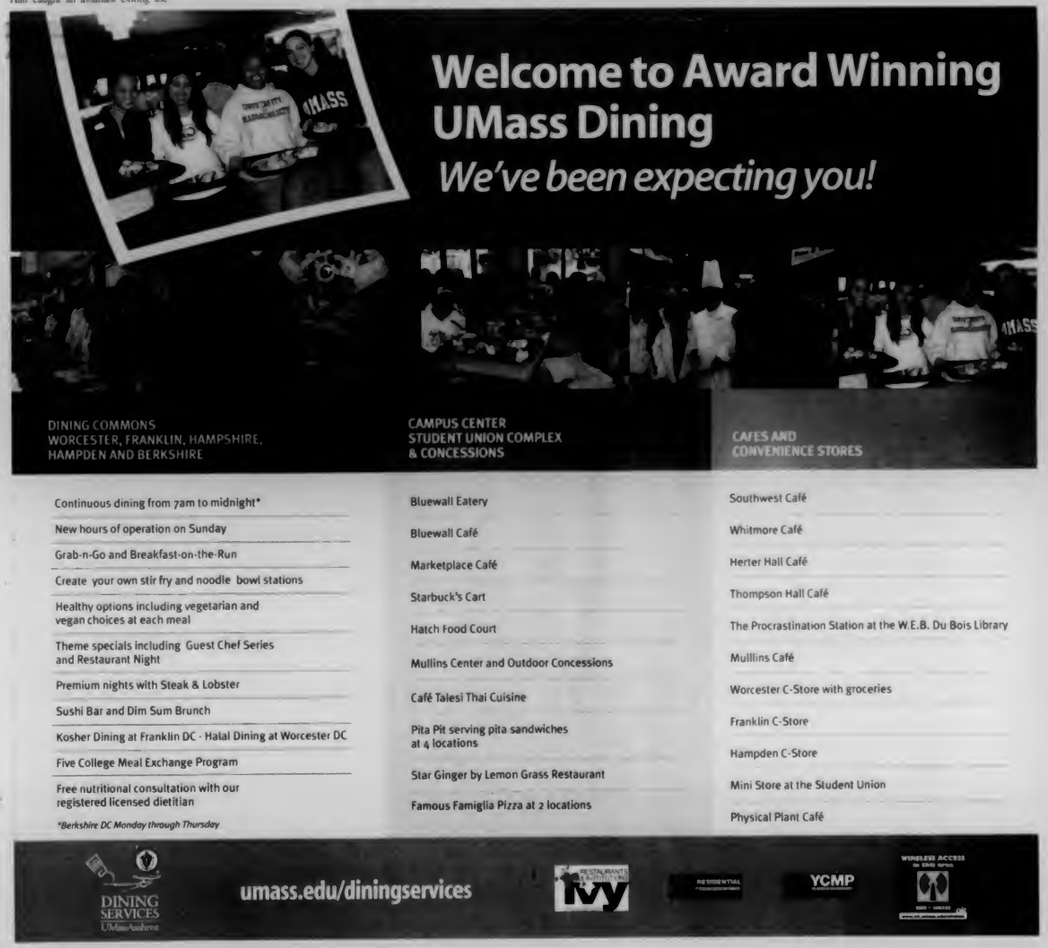
Lenson's class alone generates roughly $20,250, and he was disturbed enough by Kahler's tactics to write to the University's vice chancellor of administration and finance, Joyce Hatch.

In his e-mail, he said the annex had created "mirror shelves" in the past, ones that mimic those at Amherst Books.

"I am asking that this shelf be dismantled, since it carries my name but does not originate with me," Lenson said. "When a contractor acts in a manner contrary to the ethics of the academy, we have a responsibility to put a stop to it."

Mitch Gaslin, who runs Food for Thought Books, a non-profit, workers' collective, cited instances when individuals were paid to come into his store and copy book titles. He could not link these to employees of the University's bookstore but did note a truck driver complained to him that a University bookstore employee climbed into his truck to copy titles on boxes while he was inside.

"Professors make a conscious decision to support local business," Gaslin said. "To have [a representative] from Follet find their way into the middle of it messes it up."



According to University spokesman Patrick Callahan, Kahler was reprimanded by the vice president at Follett, the private firm that has the contract for the bookstore.

In a statement, Callahan said the director of Auxiliary Services at UMass, who oversees the contract with Follett Higher Education Group, has also sent messages of apology to 15 faculty members who were involved in these incidents. Both UMass officials and those from Follett have given assurances this will not happen again.

Follett has a section of its Web site devoted to values and ethics.

"From our policies and procedures to our corporate values and charitable contributions, it is our ethics and our sense of corporate responsibility that define Follett as an organization," the site reads.

William McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com

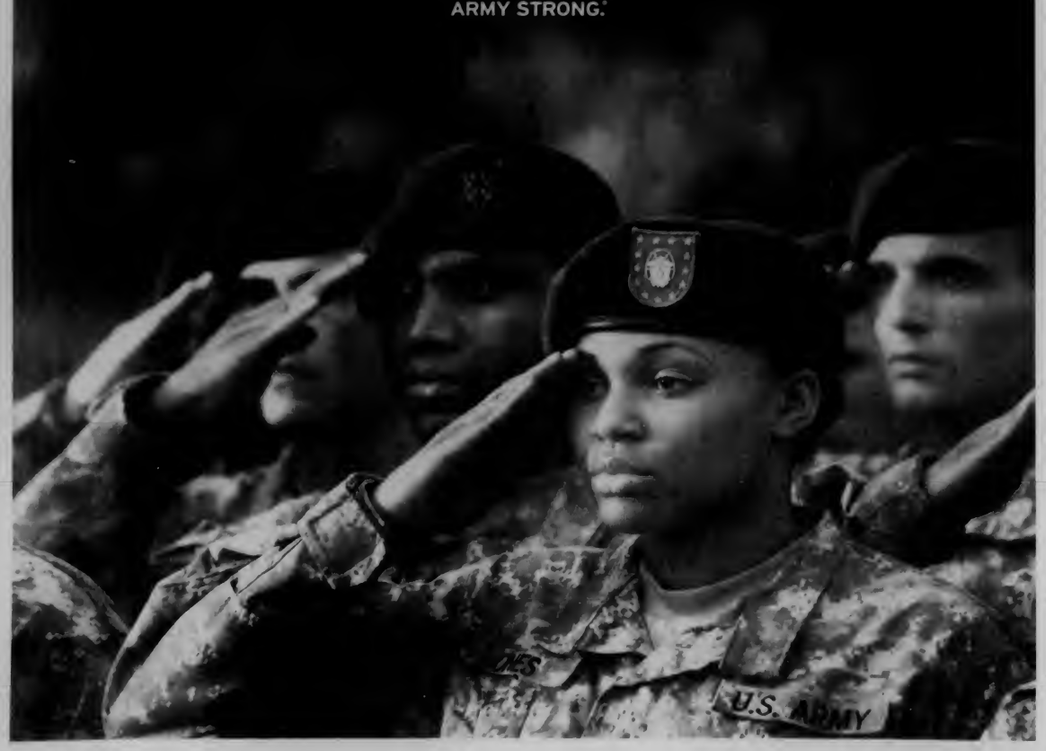
- Continuous dining from 7am to midnight*
- New hours of operation on Sunday
- Grab-n-Go and Breakfast-on-the-Run
- Create your own stir fry and noodle bowl stations
- Healthy options including vegetarian and vegan choices at each meal
- Theme specials including Guest Chef Series and Restaurant Night
- Premium nights with Steak & Lobster
- Sushi Bar and Dim Sum Brunch
- Kosher Dining at Franklin DC · Halal Dining at Worcester DC
- Five College Meal Exchange Program
- Free nutritional consultation with our registered licensed dietitian

*Berkshire DC Monday through Thursday

- Bluewall Eatery
- Bluewall Café
- Marketplace Café
- Starbuck's Cart
- Hatch Food Court
- Mullins Center and Outdoor Concessions
- Café Talesi Thai Cuisine
- Pita Pit serving pita sandwiches at 4 locations
- Star Ginger by Lemon Grass Restaurant
- Famous Famiglia Pizza at 2 locations



- Southwest Café
- Whitmore Café
- Herter Hall Café
- Thompson Hall Café
- The Procrastination Station at the W.E.B. Du Bois Library
- Mullins Café
- Worcester C-Store with groceries
- Franklin C-Store
- Hampden C-Store
- Mini Store at the Student Union
- Physical Plant Café

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
ivy
YCMP

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $40,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted. Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund.

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.

Police log
Summer active for local PD's

Sat Aug. 30

Corey Mui, 18, of Chelmsford, was arrested Saturday at 12:32 a.m. on University Drive on charges of operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol, and a lights violation.

Andrew White, 21, of Townsend, was arrested Saturday at 1:30 p.m. on a charge of disorderly conduct at McGuirk Stadium.

Mon Sept. 1

Nathaniel Lanier, 20, of Newton, was arrested Monday at 1:11 a.m. on East Pleasant Street on charges of operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol and a marked lanes violation.

Joshua Caswell, 20, of Walpole, was arrested Monday at 2:04 a.m. on Lincoln Avenue on charges of operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol, and miscellaneous equipment violation

Mitchell Turner, 20, of Greenfield, was arrested Monday at 1:35 p.m. on Massachusetts Avenue on a charge of operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license

Jonathan Bukolsky, 20, of South Deerfield, was arrested Monday at 1:35, on Massachusetts Avenue on a charge of allowing the improper operation of a motor vehicle .

Michael Li, 17, of Armonk, NY, was arrested Monday at 8:32 p.m. on University Drive on charges of possession of liquor under 21, and use of a false liquor ID card.

Daniel Cassens, 19, of New Canaan, CT, was arrested Monday, at 8:32 p.m. on University Drive on a charge of possession of liquor under 21.

August 2008

Pavel Espinal, 20, of Salem, was arrested last Wednesday at 1:05 a.m. on Eastman Lane on charges of being a minor in possession of alcohol and possession of an open container of alcohol in a motor vehicle, operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol, failure to yield at an intersection, and operating a motor vehicle without a license in possession.

Jennifer Bogoslan, 20, of Sterling was arrested last Wednesday at 1:05 a.m. on charges of disorderly conduct, resisting arrest and being a minor in possession of alcohol.

Lynne Ivers Thompson, 56, of Amherst, was arrested last Thursday at 10:11 p.m. on North East Street on charges of operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol and failure to stay within marked lanes.

A woman walking her dog on Foxglove Lane Aug. 25 at 5:18 p.m. reported that two golden retrievers attacked her, causing lacerations to her right hand and puncture wounds to her forearm.

A car allegedly speeding on Main Street struck the Bank of America building on South Pleasant Street Aug. 23 at 12:11 a.m.

Sergey Panchenko, 25, of West Springfield, was arrested Aug. 22, at 1:26 p.m. on Massachusetts Avenue on charges of failure to stay within marked lanes, operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license, refusing to identify himself as the operator of the motor vehicle and intimidating a witness.

Joseph C. Russell, 19, of Amherst, was arrested Aug. 20 at 11:02 p.m. on West Pomeroy Lane and Farmington Road on charges of operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol, operating a motor vehicle with no license in possession, operating a motor vehicle with a broken headlight, being a minor in possession of alcohol and possession of an open container of alcohol in a motor vehicle.

Dennis Powers, 50, of West Springfield was arrested Aug. 19 at 4:37 p.m. at a campus location on a charge of seeking sexual conduct for a fee.

Write For News

news@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Loan difficulties

Hannah Nelson

All summer there's been a big to-do about the state of the economy and the loan company crisis. As these things tend to go, national turned local and Massachusetts college students received fewer grant and federal loan hand outs as part of financial aid packages for the 2008-2009 academic year.

Some nasty shocks were had in mailboxes everywhere this summer. By default, the state has practically sold our souls to the private loan companies. And even those private companies are in dire trouble themselves.

A year ago, private loan companies offered up their services to college students left and right. The problem is no longer one of having to sell your soul; it's now one of there being no devil to buy it. Stories are surfacing of students and their parents being denied by literally dozens of lenders. Many multi-purpose, private loan companies have let their student loan services be the first to suffer under the pretense of "lack of profitability" within the credit crisis nightmare.

The overused word that comes to mind is "underperforming." It gets thrown around a lot in academic and educational matters. But this time it isn't a school or a student – it's the state that's getting the label.

Massachusetts was already underperforming in comparison to other states before this festering sore of a loan crisis came along. Some officials claim that this has always been the fact of the matter due in part to the self sufficiency of big name private schools.

By default, the state has practically sold our souls to the private loan companies.

Classifying educational aid as a "secondary priority" because of the number of private college with their own funding is disgraceful. It just doesn't make sense in light of the fact that 40 percent of total state aid is allotted directly to students who are in attendance at private universities.

The salt is in the wound is when state leaders and experts are willing to admit that there are just no additional funds in the state's budget.

To talk percentages, Massachusetts covers only 4.8 percent of the costs faced by 40,000 students. That's nearly half the national average of 9.5 percent, and against Georgia's 47.3 percent, simply ridiculous. Of all the spending on higher education in the state, less than 10 percent is accorded specifically to financial aid.

UMass covers $24.6 million in student aid, a number that has been growing every year. The state contributes $7.4 million, a number that has stayed the same for half of a decade. This all adds up to Massachusetts sitting in the bottom five in terms of state rankings on higher education spending.

There are rumblings in Congress of more drastic action to take control of higher education financing, and for good reason. The higher education system can only last so long at this rate without the crisis taking another, darker turn. Say whatever you want about the future of the economy, but regardless of the outlook on that front, college costs are only going to go up.

There's been a lot of change within the loan system that isn't only affecting who can borrow what, but how much. In addition, to flat out denials for loans, the caps on others have changed in light of the crunch. It's been painful but manageable in the past, now it's both painful and unmanageable for more families than ever before.

The problem hasn't gone unnoticed by Governor Deval Patrick either. The last straw was most likely the decision of the Massachusetts Educational Financing Authority (MEFA) in late July to shelve student loan offers this year. This in itself was a low blow for students because of generous conditions of MEFA loans.

The state's pension board has been approached by Patrick's team with the proposition of investing in MEFA bonds to breathe $50 million back into the MEFA student loans through a $425 million bond sale, a petty amount in comparison to the some $50 billion of the pension fund's resources.

While the scramble can be appreciated for the effort, it's questionable. The pension fund is primarily used to create fruitful investments on behalf of current and future state employees for retirement. These investments have included such projects involved with economic boosts in the past.

The old extremes of five-digit, private loans for education at the upper-tier universities has been replaced by that of the students mid-way through college who can't finish degree programs because no loan company will take them.

'Nightmare' just doesn't cut it anymore.

The question comes down to the lesser of two evils: graduating with the overload of loans or not graduating at all. I can't help but be reminded of the "Priceless" MasterCard commercials that have now become iconic catch phrases. Several years ago it would have been commonplace for such a commercial to feature a beaming collegiate on graduation day receiving the "priceless" degree. I doubt that MasterCard would dare put out such an ad this fall.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu

It's time to think green

Katherine Marr

Pick any school – from a big university to a small liberal arts college – and it's like déjà-vu: the universal pickiness of admissions committees and the increasingly sizable tuition checks due every new semester.

Lately though, two other trends have been gaining momentum in select colleges and universities.

Schools are taking the plunge to become either earth-friendly, or – how shall I say it – something more akin to the lifestyles of the rich and famous. To be frank, it's an either/or situation, considering we're talking about the difference between low-flow shower heads and luxury hot tubs.

Here's the logic behind the installation of hot tubs. Kids are growing up with a lot nowadays. Their own (private, sibling-free) bedrooms are a cross between Pottery Barn and Circuit City, and mere steps away from Jacuzzis where they soak while sipping one of the day's several, high-priced lattes.

Why should students choose to settle for any less at school? If colleges don't spruce up their digs, prospective students might glimpse the campus at the Fall Open House and hightail it away with their noses in the air.

What a nightmare for any college. But some schools are losing sleep over fears of a different caliber – global warming, the energy crisis and environmental damage. Won't students, ever-eager to spearhead a cause, jump to get involved in a green college? Hence, some schools are elevating 'low-flow shower heads' to the top of their priority list.

I admit that water conservation escaped my priority list when I chose a college. Instead, I gave bonus points to the schools with stained glass lamps on the library tables, which pretty much ensures that I'd be totally impressed by trendy campus cafés and dorms that resemble a lofty apartment out of "Friends."

But considering the world's dicey state of affairs, my priority list would read a little differently now. The Princeton Review revealed recently that students and their parents are showing a greater interest in green schools, and colleges and universities have responded with an eco-friendly tune of energy conservation and resource preservation.

At UMass, we've all seen "Cool the Earth. Ride the Bus" splashed on sides of the transit vehicles. Catchy, and it makes sense. As does our massive recycling program and the utilization of locally-produced foods and smaller serving portions in the Dining Commons, among many other pro-environment efforts.

Across the state, Clark University built a Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) certified building, Babson College sports a wind turbine, Mount Ida College panels its dorms with bamboo and Simmons College reuses plastic cups to create an environmentally-safe cleaner. All steps in the right direction.

Yet, the head honchos at some universities are still thinking along the lines of "MTV Cribs," and dreaming dollar signs as students fork over money for a standard of living that – for most of them – will plummet immediately upon their graduation and subsequent entrance into the working world. The "normal" college experience has flown out the window, replaced by freshmen who wince at the thought of doubles, communal bathrooms or toting their own televisions to school.

As a result, some schools are on a rampage to furnish every dorm with a new HDTV (as opposed to Wake Forest University's transition to Energy Star appliances). Some are advertising their concierge service for dry-cleaning (which quite effectively cancels out Sarah Lawrence College's clothes lines). But for a really over-the-top example, take High Point University in North Carolina, and its new valet parking service and campus ice cream truck.

Sure, the kid in us may crave an excuse to chase after an ice cream truck, or to admonish "What? There's no valet parking at your college?" to an obviously disadvantaged friend at a clearly backward school. But we're 20-year-olds at college – emphasis on "college" – not kids who need a snow cone from the neighborhood ice cream truck, or executives who expect valet parking outside a pricey restaurant. We can go to the dining hall for a soft serve or take the bus if we don't want to hunt for a parking space.

For a really over-the-top example, take High Point University in North Carolina, and its new valet parking service and campus ice cream truck.

It's easy for students to slip into a less eco-conscious lifestyle in dorms than at our own homes or apartments. At school, I might not give a second thought to a hot, leisurely shower since I'm not paying per gallon of water gushing down the drain, nor do I have a bill-paying parent outside the bathroom door, bellowing about the cost of oil and water once I pass the 15-minute mark.

Likewise, a heaping portion of chicken broccoli supreme is barely a dent out of the dining hall's serving dish, and very easy to toss in the garbage when we spot dessert. With this in mind, some schools have launched a full-fledged campaign to publicize the "go green, back to the basics" philosophy, which is exactly the way to go.

It's time that students worry less about the resolution of having a television in their dorms, and more about the school's recycling program. Think "green" as in the environment, rather than the dollar bills footing our unnecessary, energy-wasting extravagances.

Katherine Marr is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kmarr@student.umass.edu

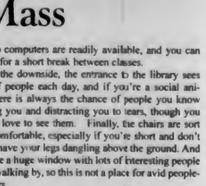
Please write for ED/OP.

Pretty please.

With a cherry on top.



Editorial@dailycollegian.com

"THE YAK" NEEDS A HOST!

The Daily Collegian presents UMass Yak Back! on UVC-TV 19 is looking for a host for its upcoming season. Applicants don't have to be quadripedal, but it's a plus.

UVC TV 19

OPEN AUDITIONS 7-9 P.M.
WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 3
& THURSDAY, SEPT. 4
@ UNION VIDEO CENTER
IN THE STUDENT UNION

Freshman guide to UMass

Lauren Rockoff

Days of waking up to a dark room that feels like a refrigerator, and long nights of studying like mad are approaching. What can you do to make this year different, better?

First: to learn, your basic needs must be met. You can't study without being reasonably comfortable, and most of us need some sort of desk to do it. Also, you've got to eat before you start. You won't be able to study for long if all you can think about is eating a sandwich. Now, where should you go to study?

A common mantra among the real estate crowd, "location, location, location" is not just for homes anymore. When it comes to studying effectively, location plays an enormous role.

Dorms and apartments are distracting. The less stuff you have around to interest you, the better off you'll be. Moreover, studies have shown that working in or on the same bed you sleep in can make it harder to fall asleep later when it's actually time for some shut eye.

Everyone knows that the library is the place to go to study, but a general game plan must be developed too. Stocking your bag with the right writing utensils and snacks to boost waning blood sugar and morale as needed, is a key. A bathroom not too far away is a must, as long trips to find one can ruin your concentration. It is good to bring a friend, to serve as a constant reminder that you are there to study.

My favorite place to really get something done is the second floor of the library. One of the two quiet floors – the other being the third floor – the second floor boasts a fully-functioning women's bathroom and a questionable men's bathroom. Additionally, the desks are nice, the chairs pretty comfortable and the atmosphere decidedly studious. There are no doubt times when people disrespect the quiet rule, but nothing is perfect.

Unfortunately, many share this affinity for the second floor, and during peak study hours and especially during finals, the desks fill up surprisingly quickly. To the rescue comes the third floor. Though not as well-lit and comfortable as the second, and also a more of a trek, the third floor stands a greater chance of vacancy.

What can you do to make this year different, better?

For research papers and for anyone who prefers to study alone, the upper floors of the library reign supreme. There are rows and rows of books around you, and it is very quiet. It's easy to sink into your own little world, and get things done. However, it is important to remember that at a certain height, wireless internet becomes unreliable. Macs can usually capture the signal up into the twentieth floors, but PC's are not usually so lucky. Staying in the teens is probably preferable for this reason, and also, in case of a fire.

If you're in the market for a place to read something semi-interesting or to review your notes quickly, the two, high desks and stools on the sides of the main floor are under-utilized. There's a lot of background noise, but for the right type of student, a little white noise is the perfect way to boost concentration. Plus, the Procrastination Station is steps away, the quick-look-up computers are readily available, and you can stop in for a short break between classes.

On the downside, the entrance to the library sees a lot of people each day, and if you're a social animal, there is always the chance of people you know spotting you and distracting you to tears, though you usually love to see them. Finally, the chairs are sort of uncomfortable, especially if you're short and don't like to have your legs dangling above the ground. And you face a huge window with lots of interesting people to see walking by, so this is not a place for avid people-watchers.

In the most dire of times, there is the seventh floor. The seventh floor of the library has a lot of little rooms that are rather claustrophobic and covered with all kinds of distracting graffiti, and that are just plain creepy to be in. However, they are rarely filled to capacity.

As a freshman especially, you may feel latched to campus, but in reality, this is not the case. In town, Rao's is a great place to drink tea and read a textbook. The Amherst town library and numerous grassy areas beckon you and your studies in nice weather. Studying doesn't have to mean avoiding places that make you happy.

There is one place, outside, that is just so perfect that I cannot begin to describe it with my sophomoric command of the English language. Still I will tell you, to keep your eyes peeled, for buildings with empty classrooms and good AC, trees with trunks that align perfectly with the small of your back, and the secret little nooks and crannies that abound alover campus. These places, if you let them, will make you the 4.0 GPA student you dream of becoming, or at the very least, help to develop in you a lifelong love of learning.

Lauren Rockoff is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lrockoff@student.umass.edu

Send ED/OP your editorial comics.

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Headliners go big at Bonnaroo

Metallica, My Morning Jacket pull out all stops for festival

By Peter Rizzo
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This is part two in a series about the Bonnaroo Music and Arts Festival.)

MANCHESTER, Tenn. — Even the Bonnaroo Arts and Music Festival headliners with their iconic stature felt the need to perform big.

One such band with a chip on its shoulder was Metallica, whose new album "Death Magnetic" is being touted as a return to form from a band that has been inconsistent in recent years. The move to make the heavy metal band a main stage headliner at the traditional hippie friendly festival was one that sparked speculation amongst fans, and even some of the artists.

Glen Hansard, famous for his recent Oscar nomination for the musical "Once" offered up his thoughts on the matter saying that even for his band, a mostly acoustic offering, the Sweet Season, the festival was an attractive idea.

"You have to give the festival credit," he said. "They don't seem to really be pacing themselves as they're not [just] going for the hippie genre. I mean they've got Metallica headlining which isn't a band that comes to mind for a festival like this."

By Saturday evening, the bright skies gave way to the oncoming clouds and rain. This might have dampened spirits had it not come at such a fitting time. The dreary weather coincided nicely with the oncoming of Metallica, who were taking the first-ever headlining slot, introduced by none other than comedian Chris Rock, who had just finished his set on the stage.

The reaction from the crowd was mixed as many were seeing the band for the first time. Even while lead singer James Hetfield implored the festival goers to sing along, many seemed unable to come up with the words. One Metallica fan expressed his anger after the show saying: "I just wanted to go up to people and shake them and say 'do you have any idea what they're playing?'"

If nothing else, the band successfully proved that regardless of its age, it's still a solid live act, even if it had not been creatively on par for years. The group ended the set with ferocity by ejecting red fireworks while blasting the now-Guitar-Hero-certified jam "One." The display proved the rockers place at the festival and seemed to win over some of the original naysayers.

Other major acts, like My Morning Jacket, came out to promote their new albums and prove that they've still got it. The midnight set from the local Louisville band was a must-see as the band has played the festival five out of the seven years.

Debuting a host of new songs from its surprisingly conservative new disc "Evil Urges," it opened up the set with its self-titled track, a five-minute Prince-inspired funk jam. Despite worries about the new material, it was quickly embraced by the glow-stick hurling, massive, red hall-bouncing crowd, whose spirits appeared unhampered by the now steady rain.

Lead singer Jim James and company played a host of tunes from the new disc and refused to leave, playing a five-hour set that would later leave them to be hailed by the festival's daily newspaper "The Bonnaroo Beacon" as Bonnaroo's "Homecoming Kings."

For main stage star Jack White, his task was to up last year's performance on the same stage, though this time with his other band, The Raconteurs. Leading off with "Consoler of the Lonely," the first song on their new album of the same name, Jack and company were quick to grab the audience by the neck and not let up.

Over the course of the set, the band blazed through the majority of its new release which thrived in the live environment. White stood front and center, often dominating the landscape of musicians.

My Morning Jacket energized the crowd during its midnight set at the Bonnaroo Music and Arts festival, despite playing in the rain.

See BONNAROO on page 9

Berman to return to Pioneer Valley

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

It's been 15 years since David Berman enrolled in a graduate-level writing program right here at the University of Massachusetts, but he'll be coming back to the Pioneer Valley this week.

Berman's Silver Jews will play the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton Thursday night for the seventh show of their fall 2008 tour supporting their new record "Lookout Mountain, Lookout Sea." The band has played nearly every night from its kick-off last Thursday in Columbus, Ohio across the U.S. and back, finishing up in Nashville in mid-October.

The Silver Jews, founded by Berman in 1989, bring a lo-fi aesthetic to the concept of country and other rock genres, first playing together and recording songs on friends' answering machines. The other original members were Stephen Malkmus and Bob Nastanovich, both eventual members of indie-deities Pavement.

The Jews' first release came in 1990, a 7 inch titled "Dime Map of the Reef." When the band was still getting its start, after Pavement began its rise to indie-prominence with 1992's "Slanted and Enchanted," rumors were abound that the Jews were merely a Pavement side project, though Berman consistently held the Jews' main songwriting duties. This worked to the band's advantage, however, with Berman meeting the founder of the Drag City label Dan Koretsky at a Pavement show, who agreed to release Berman's tapes.

In 1993, Berman made the trek to the Pioneer Valley to enroll in the aforementioned (and currently hotly debated) graduate program at UMass after the release of the "Arizona Record" LP (recorded on a Walkman, as was the previous 7 inch).

During this stint at UMass, Berman found time to write what eventually became The Silver Jews' first full-length, the 1993 album "Starlite Walker," which found Berman again working with Malkmus and Nastanovich after their break recording Pavement's first LP.

After this debut, Berman worked with some other acts (War Comet, Silver Palace) as well as working on a Silver Jews follow-up, 1996's "Natural Bridge." Demos featuring Malkmus and Nastanovich were scrapped, as Berman opted to record with members of Hampshire College's New Radiant Storm King as well as Drag City's Rian Murphy, shifting his sound from his earlier recordings' DIY grit to a cleaner, to-the-point style with Berman's lyrical and vocal work constantly at the helm.

As well as his role as Silver Jews' singer-songwriter, Berman also poured over poetry on the side, releasing his collection "Actual Air" in 1999 after The Silver Jews' next record "American Water," which saw Stephen Malkmus returning to the band. In 2001 "Tennessee" was released, featuring Berman's wife Cassie's vocals in some tracks.

This set the stage for 2005's recording sessions, which turned The Jews into an indie supergroup of sorts, consisting of Berman and Cassie alongside old pals Malkmus and Nastanovich, as well as Will Oldham (a.k.a. Bonnie "Prince" Billy), and Azita Youseffi. These sessions birthed "Tanglewood Numbers." The Silver Jews' fifth full-length, a return to form after Berman's struggles with depression and substance abuse.

This year saw the release of "Lookout Mountain, Lookout Sea" truly embracing many country norms while expanding upon them endlessly. The Silver Jews have recently toured Israel with homeland heroes Monotonix, who also support them on select dates this fall.

Thursday's show will be supported by Mike Flood (not the Nebraskan state senator) and will begin at 8:30 p.m.

Tickets for The Silver Jews are $20 in advance through iheg.com or the Northampton Box Office and $20 at the door. The Iron Horse is located on 20 Center Street in Northampton.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

Lollapalooza offers diverse performance

Duffy, pictured above, sang in front of the large crowd at Lollapalooza, likening the experience to "kissing someone you don't know."

By Alex Butler
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This is part two in a series about the Lollapalooza festival.)

Amidst an absolute sea of people making their way towards the main stages of the the Lollapalooza festival, an ambient noise rose from the south side of the park. Rogue Wave, a quartet based out of San Francisco, had started the first day at Lollapalooza.

The band recently signed with Jack Johnson to promote its third album, "Asleep at Heaven's Gate." The performance illustrated talent in a low-key atmosphere. With a sound similar to Band of Horses, Rogue Wave put things on the right track and played a solid hour.

The Black Keys, consisting of Dan Auerbach and Patrick Carney, launched its performance with "Girl is on My Mind" on the north end of the park. It took about two seconds for the Akron, Ohio, duo to become completely drenched in sweat. The two delivered a healthy mix of blues and rock with a single drum-kit and guitar. And despite the early afternoon timeslot, the modest pair tore through its songs in front of hundreds of people, what might seem like a daunting task. Auerbach and Carney pulled off the impressive set with a variety of hits from each their five albums.

The Go! Team brought an energetic kick to its audience with its heterogeneous trademark sound. The peppy six-piece brought an almost bright presence, and played a set mostly consisting of songs from their first album, "Thunder, Lightning, Strike." The music features rap from female vocalist, Ninja, and instruments ranging from keyboards to banjos. The crowd got a little dose of everything from The Go! Team and despite a painfully long harmonica solo, it was not disappointed.

Next up was Duffy, and as the crowd shifted backwards to the curiously named Playstation stage, I asked a few people what they expected. I admit, I didn't know much about the female vocalist before the concert, but I was quickly re-assured.

"Think ... Amy Winehouse without the crack addiction," Blair from Loyola explained.

This comment got people talking in the immediate circle around me, but as I tried to write down their comments, a very different Duffy walked on stage. Dressed in what looked like an airline stewardess uniform,

See LOLLAPALOOZA on page 9

Allen branches out, should stay home

Filmmaker better suited for hometown Manhatten flicks

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

John Waters has Baltimore. Godard has Paris, the south of France. And Woody Allen has Manhattan.

For decades, the former stand-up comedian anchored his films on the lives and travails of fellow New Yorkers. During that time, leading ladies came and went. The 1970s were dominated by Diane Keaton, the 1980s by Allen's domestic partner, Mia Farrow. But the real star of Allen's films was – and always remained – Manhattan.

Until now.

With his last three films Allen has tried something a little different. Instead of comedies he has gravitated toward more heavy dramas, not unlike his 1978 Bergman-inspired "Interiors." And instead of New York, Allen has toured England. But in "Vicky Cristina Barcelona," the wandering filmmaker travels to Spain in search of love, art and just maybe the creative spark which seems to have eluded him over the past decade.

"Vicky Cristina Barcelona," stars Allen's latest muse, Scarlett Johansson, as the fickle yet passionate Cristina, an aspiring artist whose 12-minute film about love has zapped her of direction and focus. Cristina accepts an offer to tag along around Barcelona with her uptight friend Vicky (Rebecca Hall).

Vicky is engaged to a yuppie (Chris Messina), and this Barcelona vacation is her last hurrah before matrimony. She hopes to discover more about Catalan life and culture, just as Cristina hopes to discover more about who she really is. Instead, both women discover Juan Antonio (Javier Bardem, looking a lot sexier without the Prince Valiant haircut sported in "No Country for Old Men").

Juan Antonio is a painter of some repute, most of it ill, based on his steamy relationship with ex-wife Maria Elena (Penelope Cruz). She tried to stab him, but he still can't stop talking about her. As an opening line, he propositions the girls with a weekend in Oviedo. Cristina is immediately intrigued while Vicky is more or less appalled. Yet, both girls agree to go with him, and the film takes flight from there.

"Vicky Cristina" doesn't end in Oviedo. A screwy mix-up of sitcom proportions leaves one girl sick, the other in Juan Antonio's embrace. By weekend's end both have love in their eyes, but only Cristina keeps bedding him, until Maria Elena hits the scene. Two feisty Spanish stereotypes trapped in a Woody Allen movie, Juan Antonio and Maria Elena entice Cristina into joining in a full-blown threesome. From afar, Vicky watches hungrily as these events unfold.

Woody Allen's first foray into mature adult content is interesting, but not much to write home about. Javier Aguirresarobe's sun-kissed cinematography helps keep "Vicky Cristina Barcelona" feeling like a summer's idyll, but something isn't quite right. So what seems to be the problem?

Well, dialogue is one big problem. It's neither witty nor insightful, but frustrating. Especially out of Rebecca Hall, it feels clunky and unnatural. Barring some expected flexing of verbal muscle (this is Woody Allen after all), "Vicky Cristina" still manages to go beyond the norm. Do any people, even members of the intelligentsia, really say things like, "I mean no subterfuge"?

Allen's language, when not wordy, is also heavily out of date. When the girls discuss the pleasures of "making love," it's tough not to squirm out of embarrassment for them.

Another problem is that Allen's mastery over matters of the heart seems more cerebral than emotional. Even when "Vicky Cristina" gets sexy, he can't resist putting up a barrier between the characters and the act. Either by way of voice-over, or through some morning after description, we never see the characters fully engaged in their actions.

By far, the biggest problem stuck to "Vicky Cristina" is its narration. Streamlining the story to near nothingness, the narration is used in place of genuine storytelling. The characters aren't allowed to live within the film, their thoughts and many of their

See VICKY on page 9

Cristina (Scarlett Johansson) meets Juan Antonio (Javier Bardem) while on vacation in Barcelona with her best friend. Passion and drama ignite in this most recent Woody Allen story.

Autumn walks in on Parisian runways

Top designers showed fall couture fashions over summer

BY EMMA LIFVERGREN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

While everyone else was busy sunning themselves by their pools or jetting off to some fabulous summer destination, the perpetual wheels of fashion continued to turn as designers showed their couture collections for the autumn and winter 2008 season in Paris this past June.

The ever-exclusive couture arena welcomed two newcomers, Alexis Mabille and Anne Valérie Hash, bringing the list of couture designers from the eight of last fall's couture season to a whopping 10. Anne Valerie Hash's short but sweet 18-piece collection played with shape and volume, consisting of draped, scrolled gowns, bubble dresses and slim tuxedos with voluminous hems.

The collection bounced between billowy silhouettes to more severe, tailored pieces, all in neutral shades of black, white, sand and soft pink. The only downside to the collection was odd, futuristic adornments on the shoulder or neckline that didn't quite fit with the softness of the pieces.

The atmosphere was more sophisticated and thematic at Alexis Mabille, who has stepped into his couture shoes for a second time. The collection consisted of both men's and women's wear in mostly neutrals with shots of pink and yellow. The underlying theme of the entire collection was a kind of deconstructed, amped-up school uniform look.

For the men, double-breasted suit jackets, pinstripes and windowpane checks were in order, and women's wear reflected both a feminine look (body conscious gowns, belted dresses and chiffon) and an androgynous aesthetic due to slouchy pantsuits and ties. Wingtips and Mabille's signature bowtie were reoccurring and charming facets.

Couture veteran and legend Karl Lagerfeld not only presented a beautifully crafted collection for Chanel, but did so while also making a bold artistic statement. Models didn't strut down a linear runway; they wafted in and out of a 50-foot set of vertical tubes designed to represent a mammoth pipe organ, the shapes of which were mirrored in the clothing.

The collection, which consisted of embroidered car coats over short, full skirts, exquisite fluted beading, large pod shapes, fur hems and huge shoulders, was a turn from last fall's couture show, which exuded a more youthful, girlish vibe.

Lagerfeld managed to inject a shot of his renowned eccentricities. Delicate picture frames hung around models' faces, a dress appeared to have been mistakenly sewn upside down. The final look was a strange yet striking version of a wedding gown.

Never one to be upstaged, John Galliano's couture for Christian Dior seemed to be made for the prim and proper good girl who has a bad side. Some of the pieces drew a fine line between scandalous and ladylike with sheer chiffon skirts and leopard print. But most of the collection was modern, updated versions of Dior's New Look, even if with a dash of John Galliano's theatrics and sex appeal. Full, flower-like skirts came with structured peplums, cloche hats were paired with 1950s hourglass silhouettes, and pieces were featured in an array of sumptuous hues, from chartreuse to eggplant.

The Dior collection opened with separates, and then flawlessly transitioned into ethereal, tiered evening dresses with glittering hems and stiff, structural gowns. The lights blacked out at the end of the show, only to fade back in to reveal a deadpan John Galliano silhouetted against the runway's backdrop.

Alessandra Facchinetti faced one of the most intimidating tasks of her career: designing her first couture collection as successor to Valentino Garavani, who retired this past spring.

Facchinetti maintained the Valentino-esque air of womanly sophistication with her modern spin on the skirt suit, which incorporated minimalist lines, drop waists and futuristic pod shapes. Structure was broken up with delicate, fluttering chiffon and beaded gowns, all in soft colors of pale yellow, white, gold, silvery grays, cool blues and of course the signature Valentino red.

Perhaps one of the most opulent collections for the fall couture season was Elie Saab's dazzling array of evening gowns. Taffeta, velvet and chiffon poured onto the runway, embellished with beading, sequins and pearls. Inspired by the Sistine Chapel, Saab employed rich jewel tones of midnight blue, chocolate brown, steel gray, plum, sky blue and pink that enhanced one shouldered, asymmetrical creations.

Saab's collection was all about drama and femininity, shown beautifully with an assortment of wide, crinoline gowns, ruffled mermaid dresses, outsized bows and elegant trains. Saab included a capacious, cloud printed gown that Michelangelo would have been proud of, and ended the collection, like Chanel, with a larger-than-life and conceptual wedding gown.

Giorgio Armani, always one for glamour and sophistication, created a collection that played on masculine shapes with feminine twists for Armani Privé. Tailored, slouchy trousers, high necklines and bowties contrasted with cinched waists, plunging necklines and many signature Armani gowns.

Ankle-grazing pants with high waists in hues of gray, charcoal, cream, black and pink exuded an aura of Katherine Hepburn, and evening gowns in black, white and silver glittered and flowed during the second half of the show.

At Givenchy, Ricardo Tisci drew inspiration from his recent trip to Peru, scattering the runway with brown leaves and bark, swathing his models in rich earth tones and Peruvian stripes that would not have looked out of place on the back of a llama.

Tisci also created an ultra-femme, bombshell collection rampant with fur bomber jackets and a lot of leather. Shots of intense fuchsia in draped mini dresses and pantsuits punched up the earthy vibe, while Chantilly lace gowns were combined with leather coats. The collection was an overall lighthearted statement from a usually dark designer.

Fashion's notorious bad boy Jean Paul Gaultier actually tripped up this couture season by making a huge mistake: reiterating already ubiquitous and passé trends. While his couture collection for this past spring was rife with modern spins on a quirky sailor and mermaid theme, Gaultier now drew from the overplayed equestrian and neon trends.

Models donned electric orange makeup beneath blunt bangs, and the collection itself consisted of leather breeches, conceptual riding hats and jarring Day-Glo combinations. The pieces were interspersed with futuristic, strappy gowns and long black dresses, and overall the collection was disconnected and not as coherent as Gaultier's past couture.

At Christian Lacroix, it was impossible to distinguish exactly what direction he went collection, which made it more interesting. Historical periods merged, patterns and fabrics clashed, all combined a punky air of spiky hair and heavy, kohl-rimmed eyes, but somehow Lacroix made everything fabulous.

A military thread ran through several of the pieces, with heavily embroidered jackets paired with petite gathered skirts, while mod-length jackets and dresses were displayed among long, gothic gowns. Lacroix also experimented with volume and draping, and set again, chose to end the show with a dramatic wedding dress statement.

Whatever the idea Lacroix was trying to convey, he managed to turn fantasy and fusion of history, fabrics and textures into a reality.

Emma Lifvergreen can be reached at elifverg@student.umass.edu

Alessandra Facchinetti did Valentino proud in her debut at the Paris Fall Couture fashion shows this June.

Elie Saab, who designed the dress pictured above, was inspired by the Sistine Chapel and showed a line of evening gowns.

New metaphors on Lollapalooza stages

LOLLAPALOOZA from page 7

she strutted around the stage belting out her songs with a surprising confidence. Her British accent carried a strong vibrato and she seemed right at home. Afterwards, she spoke at the media tent.

Between drags of a cigarette, Duffy explained that this was her first festival performance.

"People are really up for hearing music, having a good time ... the sun is shining. I just feel very lucky," she said.

"What's great about a festival is that it brings people together, regardless of whether they've heard the band before," she continued. "It unites everyone. Having a small concert is like kissing someone you know, whereas a festival it's like you're kissing someone you don't know. It's kind of refreshing ... you never know what you're going to get."

While everyone was musing over that gem, I headed over to the Citi Stage.

Other bands may push boundaries in specific areas, but as Brazilian pop group CSS hit the stage next, it proved it was all about dance. The band's full name, Cansei de ser Sexy, allegedly originated from pop icon Beyonce, who reportedly exclaimed she was "tired of being sexy."

As lead singer, Lovefoxxx, rocketed on stage with a red, Bijork-style jumpsuit, CSS pumped song after song over the crowd. The band's popular single, "Music is My Hot, Hot Sex," fit comfortably among the other songs on the set list. It was a steady hour of Brazilian electro-rock.

Up next, it was time for everyone to chill out with Radiohead.

Alex Butler can be reached at ajbutler@student.umass.edu

Rage Against the Machine was one of many artists to play at the multi-day Lollapalooza festival this summer.

White pleases crowd with second band

BONNAROO from page 7

Halfway through the set, White seemed on a mission to leave the stage in flames as his solos bristled with flair, often flirting with backup guitarist Brendan Benson's grooves before going in for a knockout punch.

Fans had nothing but good things to say about the set which lasted an hour and a half and proved to be one of the fest's highlights. Most of the comments offered overwhelmingly positive feedback before apologetically offering the statement "and don't get me wrong I do love the White Stripes."

M.I.A. gave fans who arrived a treat. During her set, she announced that the Bonnaroo performance was to be her "last ever show" leaving her fans with a special bittersweet memory and one that will mostly likely forever be shrouded in mystery, as rumors began circulating that after she had reportedly canceled the event, she played merely to appease celebrity festival attendees, the Olsen Twins.

The festival was, so far, going off without a hitch.

For more information on the Bonnaroo Music and Arts Festival visit the Collegian Arts Blog at www.dailycollegian.com

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu

Willie Nelson, Robert Plant and Alison Krauss all performed at the Bonnaroo Music and Arts Festival in rural Tennessee this summer. The festival was a huge campsite where attendees could sleep, shop, buy supplies and listen to music.

'Barcelona' sub-par

VICKY from page 7

actions spoken for by Christopher Evan Welch. Only Penelope Cruz is allowed to break free of the voice-over stranglehold, and she's truly a sight to behold.

Cruz sets fire to the screen, much like she did in the 2006 film "Volver." Why couldn't she be Allen's muse instead of the increasingly mediocre Scarlett Johansson? Perhaps because, once unleashed, Allen doesn't seem to know what to do with her. He'd much rather linger over his tepid, American lead than the sensational actress whose fits of rage are like slices from the best telenovellas.

Together, Cruz's passion and Allen's brainy detachment might make for strong, creative timber. In "Vicky Cristina," the union is relegated to the sidelines. Still, Cruz owns the film.

Many critics have been searching for signs of a Woody Allen Silver Age; 2005's "Match Point" – a dark morality tale with a killer ending – is great. The film gave hope to critics who stood by Allen in the wake of missteps like the 2001 film "Anything Else." But Allen's follow-ups to "Match Point" from strictly lackluster "Scoop" to the surprisingly underrated "Cassandra's Dream" – have, for different reasons, failed to generate more hype.

"Vicky Cristina" turns up a silver goose egg.

Does that mean its time for the septuagenarian filmmaker to finally hang his head, bow out of the business while there's still a little dignity attached to his resume? Hell no. If there's any justice in the world, Allen will go out slouched in a director's chair. And even when he's bad, Woody Allen really isn't all that bad.

But is there a grander purpose to "Vicky Cristina Barcelona" besides having Scarlett Johansson make out with another woman on screen?

Not really.

Shavna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu

Our beer dude can't do it all on his own

email arts@dailycollegian.com if you want to help out

UMass 2008 Depth Chart

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Offense | | |
| Quarterback | 12 Liam Coen | 7 Scott Woodward |
| Runningback | 28 Tony Nelson | 40 Brandon White |
| Fullback | 47 Chris Zardas | 24 Emil Igwenagu |
| Wide Reciever | 8 Jeremy Horne | 3 Victor Cruz |
| | 15 Julian Talley | 11 Ka'Mon Bailey |
| Tight End | 83 Ian Jorgensen | 84 Matt Silver |
| Left Tackle | 72 Vladimir Ducasse | 76 Justin Sawicki |
| Left Guard | 77 Ben Coblyn | 75 Chauncey Incarnato |
| Center | 63 Sean Callicho | 61 John Ihne |
| Right Guard | 50 Josh Samuda | 75 Chauncey Incarnato |
| Right Tackle | 71 Rob Getek | 67 Brian Ostaszewski |
| Defense | | |
| Defensive End | 46 Michael Hanson | 49 Anthony Monette |
| Defensive Tackle | 56 Brandon Collier | 93 Bob McLaughlin |
| Nose Tackle | 98 Kyle Harrington | 91 Shaun Allen |
| Weak-side Linebacker | 45 George Byrd | 33 Sam Besong |
| Middle Linebacker | 2 Josh Jennings | 57 Chad Arango |
| Strong-side Linebacker | 55 Andy Resende-Gomes | 52 Anthony Rouzier |
| Cornerback | 16 Sean Smalls | 4 Courtney Robinson |
| | 6 Corey Davis | 26 Keiron Brown |
| Free Safley | 5 Jeromy Miles | 23 Shane Viveiros |
| Strong Safety | 9 Brian Ellis | 21 Eric Dickson |
| Special Teams | | |
| Kicker | 31 Armando Cuko | 37 Zack Johnson |
| Punter | 29 Brett Arnold | 7 Scott Woodward |
| Holder | 7 Scott Woodward | 13 Scott Wallace |
| Long Snapper | 61 John Ihne | 93 Bob McLaughlin |
| Kick Returner | 4 Courtney Robinson | 8 Jeremy Horne |
| Punt Returner | 16 Sean Smalls | 3 Victor Cruz |

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE

Most Images Only $7, $8 and $9

Defense led by Smalls, experienced secondary

ROSTER from page 14

Just as Coen showed improvement as a junior, much of the same is to be expected in his final season.

Backing up Coen, is redshirt junior Scott Woodward. The 2005 Offensive Scout Team Player of the Year for the Minutemen has experience with the system and got into four games at QB last season. Most notably, Woodward relieved an injured Coen against Boston College where he threw for a career-high, 57 yards.

Behind Woodward are redshirt freshmen Octavious Hawkins and Scott Wallace who ran the scout team in 2007. The Minutemen also added Spencer Whipple, son of former UMass head coach Mark Whipple, who transferred from the University of Pittsburgh after his true freshman season.

Running Back

For the second straight year UMass must replace a star at tailback. To begin last season the Minutemen had to replace a near 2,000-yard back in Steve Baylark (1,960 rushing yards in 2006); in 2007 Matt Lawrence filled the role by running for 1,585 yards. A back up to both Baylark and Lawrence, redshirt junior Tony Nelson has earned the right to be the starting tailback according to Brown.

Behind the emergence of Lawrence, Nelson ran for a solid 486 yards and one score last season. With a three-touchdown game in 2006 against William & Mary, a 5.2 career yards-per-carry average, and his first career 100-yard game last year against Maine, Nelson has shown flashes of what to expect from him this season.

With the losses at wide receiver, expect Nelson to carry a heavy load on offense.

Backing up the speedy junior will be the 245-pound, redshirt senior Brandon White. The bruising senior will add a nice alternative to the Minutemen's backfield. White's career at UMass has been hampered with injuries, but he has worked hard to try and be an impact on the team.

True freshman Korrey Davis, redshirt freshman Jonathan Hernandez and redshirt sophomore Alphonsus Aguh also look to be in the mix for experience at tailback.

Starting at fullback this year for UMass will be redshirt junior Chris Zardas who is coming off a knee injury that occurred in the NCAA First Round matchup with Fordham.

Behind Zardas will be redshirt freshman Emil Igwenagu who shared the teams Outstanding Offensive Scout Team Award with Hawkins.

Pass Catchers

The biggest question mark for the Minutemen's offense is at wide receiver. After graduating a pair of 1,000 yard receivers in J.J. Moore and Rasheed Rancher, the wide receiver corps entered this season with 18 career receptions.

Leading that group is redshirt junior Jeremy Horne. With 12 career receptions – three for touchdowns – the Syracuse transfer will be Coen's main target. Horne has great height at 6-foot-3 and weighs in at 190 pounds.

Behind Horne is a quartet of receivers with a total of six career receptions; redshirt junior Victor Cruz, redshirt sophomore Ke'Mon Bailey, redshirt freshman Julian Talley and redshirt junior Joe Sanford.

With Cruz entering his fourth year in the program, he is going to be looked upon to step up and be a factor at wideout. With his experience and knowledge of the offense, Cruz will start opposite Horne at wide receiver.

Another player familiar with the offense who could make an impact is Sanford. Converting from quarterback has given the junior a great understanding of the offense, as it showed last season when he grabbed four balls, two for touchdowns. Sanford is another wideout with great size at 6-foot-3 and 208 pounds.

Tight end Ian Jorgensen will also be a factor in the passing game. Known more for his blocking the redshirt senior has become a threat for the Maroon and White deep in their opponents territory.

With 15 receptions last year, four of which were touchdowns, Jorgensen has improved his hands to be a more all around tight end. In six career NCAA playoff games, the second-year starter has three career postseason touchdown grabs.

Redshirt junior Matt Silver will back up Jorgensen after an injury plagued sophomore season.

Despite the inexperience at wideout, having Coen throwing the ball doesn't hurt. The wide receiver corps should gain plenty of experience in the QB's last season at UMass.

Other names who could catch balls from Coen; Boston College transfer Warren Wilson, Torey Esalomi, Aaron Fears and Julian Colarusso.

Offensive Line

Senior captain Sean Callicho will anchor the new-look offensive line as he will play center and snap the ball to Coen. The preseason All-CAA selection moved to center after playing right tackle last season.

The one member of the offensive line starting at the same position as last year is junior Vladimir Ducasse at left tackle. New to the starting offensive line will be the imposing Ben Coblyn.

Coblyn returned to the game of football in 2007 and was part of the offensive line that gave up 17 sacks. At 6-foot-8 and 296 pounds, the former Boston University basketball player is expected to start at left guard.

The right side of Coen's first line of defense will be manned by redshirt junior Rob Getek at right tackle. The converted tight end will compete with redshirt freshman Brian Ostaszewski for time.

At right guard two players with no collegiate experience will compete for the starting position. Redshirt freshman Josh Samuda looks to be the starter with Chauncey Incarnato backing him and Colbyn up. Incarnato, a redshirt senior, will look to get his first collegiate action after transferring to UMass after being at Notre Dame and Indiana, respectively.

Despite new faces to the starting line, Coen is expected to stay clean this season behind an offensive line that is loaded with talent.

DEFENSE

Defensive Line

The defensive line lost a force in first-team All-CAA defensive end David Burris, but returns with three other starters from last years dominate front-four. The fourth-best team at getting to the QB in the NCAA last year (92 sacks, 3.38 per game in 2007) will be an anchor once again for a strong UMass defense.

Returning at defensive tackle will be All-CAA defensive linemen Brandon Collier. The redshirt junior was named one of the defensive captains for the Minutemen and is the first junior captain since linebacker Serge Tikum in 2004.

Collier started all 13 games last year and racked up 62 tackles, including 6.5 for losses and 4.5 sacks. Standing at 6-foot-1 and 280 pounds, Collier has amazing speed for his size; He ran the 100-meter on his high school track and field team.

To Collier's left defensive end is Michael Hanson. One of two winners for the Most Improved Award on defense, the redshirt junior ranked eighth on the team last season with 61 tackles and seven sacks for 67 yards.

The New Jersey native is a very smart player who has had 27 percent of his career tackles go for losses. Ranked second in the CAA and tied for 40th nationally last season with 16 tackles for losses and ranked seventh in the CAA in sacks.

Opposite Hanson will be two redshirt seniors, Darnel DeLaire and Darrlyn Fenner, who will compete for the starting job. Both players have spent their career at UMass as backups but will look to get more playing time in 2008. DeLaire looks to be the starter to begin the season.

The other winner of the Most Improved Award on defense is this year's starting nosetackle Kyle C. Harrington. The redshirt junior has tremendous strength and had four sacks last season and a career-high 10 tackles at Rhode Island.

Senior Shaun Allen will back up Harrington, while Brandon McLaughlin and Anthony Monette will back up Collier and Hanson, respectively.

Transfers Theluxon Pierre, Raymond Jones and redshirt freshman Courtney Jackson will also be looking for playing time on the defensive line.

Linebackerb

The most experienced linebacker for the Minutemen, George Byrd, will look to fill the void left by All-Americans Jason Hatchell and Charles Walker. Both linebackers had 100 tackles last season; two of five linebackers to reach the mark in the last five years.

Byrd, who has contributed since his freshman season, is heading into his senior year. The weak side linebacker started all but one game last year as he racked up 57 tackles, 3.5 sacks and five pass breakups. The 6-foot-1 230-pound Byrd will look to become the sixth Minuteman in the past three years to reach the 100 tackle plateau.

Despite only starting in five games last season, this year's starting middle linebacker, Josh Jennings, put up impressive numbers in 2007. The redshirt junior is the leading-returning tackler with 69 tackles which was good for third best on the team last year.

Two players who spent last year as back-ups and special teams' players, Andrew Resende-Gomes and Anthony Rouzier, will battle for the strong side linebacker position. Resende-Gomes, the redshirt senior will start at the beginning of the season, but if he cannot stay healthy, redshirt junior Rouzier will takeover. Resende-Gomes has been injury-plagued since transferring to UMass from UConn in 2006.

Two players from last years scout team, Chad Arango and Sam Besong, will back up Jennings and Byrd, respectively.

Defensive Backs

Possibly the biggest strength of the Minutemen's defense is its secondary. With, NFL prospect and All-American cornerback, Sean Smalls anchoring the defensive backs, all aspects of the UMass defense will be improved.

The captain and leader of the defensive backs led the CAA in passes defended (12) and had two interceptions (one he returned 90 yards for a touchdown) in 2008. Not only is Smalls a prolific cornerback, he is also extremely durable, starting every game the past two seasons (28 games in a row) and contributes on special teams with punt returns.

Opposite Smalls is All-CAA cornerback Courtney Robinson who will be entering his second year as a full-time starter. As a true junior in 2007, Robinson led all Minutemen with three interceptions and 48 total tackles including 4.5 sacks.

The combination of Smalls and Robinson is one of the best cornerback duos in the country, according to Brown.

Another decorated member of the secondary is junior free safety Jeromy Miles. A transfer from Navy has been named an All-CAA safety after deflecting 10 passes last season, intercepting two and forcing four fumbles.

Miles started all 13 games in his first season with the Maroon and White and will team up with redshirt senior strong safety Brian Ellis. A converted linebacker, Ellis has made great strides while at UMass and will be in his first year as a full-time starter.

Redshirt Erik Dickson and redshirt sophomore Shane Viveiros will fill in at the safety positions, while redshirt junior Corey Davis will back up Smalls and play as the teams nickel cornerback. Two transfers prior to the 2007 season, senior Keiron Brown (Toledo) and Resaude Goodwin (Boston College) will also back up at cornerback.

Special Teams

Another question mark for the Minutemen is on special teams. The Maroon and White have a strong return game with Robinson returning kickoffs, but there are questions with Smalls returning punts.

Robinson is a skilled return man, who broke a 100-yard return in last season's opener and has averaged 24.5 yards per return in his collegiate career. Wideout Horne will return kicks alongside Robinson.

Backing up Smalls with punt returns will be the speed wideout Cruz. Neither received any punts last year but showed some promise during the spring. They will try to fill the hole left by J.J. Moore.

UMass lost an All-Conference kicker in Chris Koepplin and will leave the kicking duties up to Armando Cuko. The redshirt junior first played as a true freshman in 2005 when he kicked a 41-yard field goal to beat James Madison.

At punter, the Minutemen will look to Brett Arnold. Arnold started off well last year, but as the year went on he became very inconsistent. The former junior college star has worked hard to be more consistent this season.

Backing up Arnold at punter is Woodward, the back-up QB. Woodward will also be the holder on field goals.

Taking care of the long snapping for the Minutemen will be second-string center, Ihne.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

UM splits first two

Sowry starts new year with mixed results

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

After its first two games, the Massachusetts field hockey team has one win and one loss. UMass blanked the Quinnipiac Bobcats, 3-0, and fell short of a victory to the No. 13 Boston College Eagles in both teams' season opener on Aug. 29.

The Minutewomen (1-1) had a 2-1 advantage against BC (1-0) at Chestnut Hill until the final 10 minutes of the game. The two transfer students for the Minutewomen proved to be useful against the Eagles, as junior forward Jill Powers scored UMass' first goal and sophomore back, Jackie Tait, fed the ball to senior midfielder, Erin Parker, for the second score for the Minutewomen.

Powers' goal came off a defensive scrum between sophomore forward Katie Kelly and a BC defender. As both players pushed for the ball, it came loose and found its way to the stick of Powers, who deposited it into the back of the net with 32 seconds left in the first half. BC junior forward Chelsey Feole tied the score at one with a shot past a diving UMass defender and freshman goalie Alesha Widdall.

Parker scored off of a blocked shot by Tait with 13:50 left to play. The assist was Tait's first point for the Minutewomen.

The two teams traded goals, putting the Maroon and White on top until BC forward Bob Dirks scored the final goal of the game on a feed from Feole.

The Minutewomen faired better against Quinnipiac in their first home game of the regular season on Aug. 31. Powers scored her second goal in as many games as UMass struck first late in the first half. The score would stay the same until halftime.

The Bobcats were outshot, 8-4, and were outdone, 5-1, in penalty corners in the first frame.

UMass started the second half strong, with a goal by senior forward Katelyn Orlando. Sophomore back Jaime Bourazeris fed Orlando for the score, her second assist of the game and Orlando's 10th career goal.

Just minutes later, junior forward Cher King scored the game-winning goal for the Minutewomen. Powers had the assist on King's first goal of the season.

By the end of the game, Quinnipiac was outshot, 14-9, and fell behind in penalty corners, 7-6.

Widdall was a driving force in the game as well. She made one save on a diving stop to get the first win and first shutout of her collegiate career.

Minutewoman power

Powers' three-point game gives her the team lead in points, with five. She is on a two-game scoring streak. Her two goals also lead the team. All of her points for the Minutewomen have come off of the bench.

Multi-talented

Bourazeris' two assists against the Bobcats gave her the first multi-assist game of her career.

Getting the job done

Widdall has manned the net for the full 70 minutes in both regular season games for the Minutewomen. She has three saves and three goals against her.

A welcomed return

Redshirt sophomore forward Amy Novak has played in each of UMass' two games this season after sitting out all of last season with an injury.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Field hockey coach Justine Sowry (center) hopes to add to the success the team had last season, which was her first year at the helm in Amherst.

YOU CAN'T MAKE UP YOUR INTERVIEW
After-grad careers, part-time jobs, and internships.
START BUILDING
cbCAMPUS.com

Tough schedule lies ahead for Maroon and White

FOOTBALL from page 14

Expect a close game on this day; three of the last five games involving these two teams have been decided by eight points or less. Last year the running game worked very well against Maine. Graduated running back Matt Lawrence gained 176 yards on 20 carries.

Nov. 15- at New Hampshire

The Minutemen have defeated New Hampshire three years in a row, which included a 27-7 victory last season.

The annual Bill Knight Trophy is awarded to the Most Valuable Player in the UNH-UMass game. Last season UMass running back Matt Lawrence took home the award, gaining 139 yards on the ground and added two touchdowns.

UMass has won five of the last six games.

Nov. 22- Hofstra

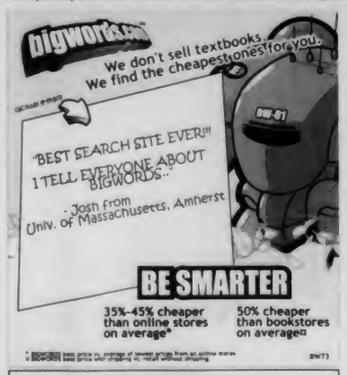
For UMass' final game of the season, it comes back home to play Hofstra in the 12th meeting between the two teams. The Pride hold a 6-5 series advantage over the Minutemen.



Last season the Minutemen defeated Hofstra, 27-5, on ESPN. Coen showed off his arm, throwing for over 300 yards and four touchdowns. The two teams have played the final game of the season against each other five years in a row. The Pride played to a 7-4 record last season, dropping the last two games of the season.

The Minutemen were picked to finish as No. 1 in the CAA, which means another year of high expectations and a long trek to the postseason that continues every Saturday from here to the end of November.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

Senior cornerback Sean Smalls is considered to be one of the elite defensive backs in the Football Championship Subdivision. Smalls led the team last season with 12 passes defended.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR Fall 2008

The Writing Program Placement Test

will be offered on:

Thursday Sep. 4, @ 7:00 pm in Bartlett 61

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing).

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

CHECK OUT THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG AT

http://blog.masslive.com/dailycollegiansports

Ofosu, Arikian lead team to victory

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The Massachusetts men's soccer team was down 2-1 on the road to Boston University with 10 seconds left on the clock. Over 5,000 fans were on their feet screaming as the clock wound down, all but assured of a victory. Suddenly there was a gasp, silence and then the sound of 5,000 people groaning in unison.

UMass sent the game into overtime with three seconds left on the clock, on Prince Ofosu's second goal of the game.

The game-tying goal was scored off a cross from the right flank into the box. There was a large scrum in front of the goal then suddenly the ball caromed off Ofosu and into the net.

"I don't really know what happened, [Mike DeSantis] hit it and I was just running, I felt the ball go off of me, I turned around and it was in the back of the net," Ofosu said.

The Minutemen started celebrating immediately, thrilled that they had been given a chance to win a game that was all but over.

The first overtime was closely fought with both teams, getting chances, but neither team breaking through. The crowd braced for more of the same when the second overtime started, but sophomore midfielder Ben Arikian made sure to put it away quickly, setting the Maroon and White's score at a winning 3-2.

On the drop-off, he took the ball himself, and launched a shot having barely crossed midfield. The ball took an awkward bounce off a defender, past the goalkeeper and into the net, ending the game on a golden goal eight seconds into the second overtime.

"I was looking to take the shot at first and then I went to just kick it into the corner, then [the defenseman] jumped up," said Arikian. "I took him and saw the goalie was a little bit off his line. I took the shot and it deflected off one of the defenders and luckily it went into the side netting."

It was a shockingly abrupt end to a hard-fought game that saw both teams creating numerous scoring chances. BU managed 26 shots, 13 on goal, while UMass had 17 shots with nine on goal.

UMass coach Sam Koch felt this victory was a big win for the team, although he noted that if a few things had gone differently, the game may not have been so exciting.

"I thought that in the first half we created a lot of chances and we should have put some of those away, which would have made it a different game, but we didn't," Koch said. "They came out all over us in the second half and we were just fortunate to tie the game with three seconds left."

Koch admits that the team was somewhat lucky, but stopped short of saying it was unexpected.

"I'm not surprised that we put one in, I'm proud of the fact that we kept battling to make that happen, I wish we weren't in that situation to have to do it, but I'm proud of the guys for fighting to the end," Koch said.

Koch also made sure to point out that redshirt senior goalkeeper Zack Simmons had a great game and without his strong play, UMass would not have been in a position to tie the game.

"I was just trying to keep my team in it, these guys are working hard out there for me, I just wanted to keep my guys in the game," Simmons said.

Terriers' forward Aaron O'Neal scored the first goal of the game off a cross from the right side in the 25th minute.

Ofosu answered back in the 40th minute with a goal very much unlike his second. He took a pass from behind midfield, streaked up the field and outran three defenders before he slipped a shot past BU goalkeeper Hrafn Davidsson.

Sunday was the senior's first multi-goal game of his collegiate career.

Boston University broke the tie in the 80th minute when Terriers' freshman Ben Berube took a pass from O'Neal and knocked the ball past Simmons.

On Friday, the Minutemen lost their opening game on the road against Holy Cross.

The Crusaders took the lead 10 minutes into the game when defender Alejandro Melean scored on a header off a cross following a UMass foul.

That would be the only goal of the game as Holy Cross held off the Minutemen for remainder of the game to secure a 1-0 victory.

"We didn't play well enough to win and Holy Cross did, give them credit they came out in the first half all over us," Koch said. "They won every head ball, they beat us to every 50-50 ball, they came out ready and that's what we are going to face every game this year."

UMass opens up its home slate this Saturday against Siena.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

Ben Arikian dribbles the ball during a game last year against Boston University. Arikian scored the game-winning goal in overtime against the Terriers last Sunday for UMass' first win this season.

Injuries to forwards affecting offensive production for UM

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

It was not quite the start that Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy had in mind when the Minutewomen opened their season against Binghamton, but it's not going to upset them either.

The Bearcats handed the Minutewomen their first loss in a 2-1 game on Aug. 24. UMass struck first in the second half when redshirt senior Tina Rodriguez headed a ball from midfielder Vanessa Lima 48 minutes, 10 seconds into the match.

Rodriguez's goal against Binghamton was the first of her career and the only goal for UMass this season.

UMass took six shots throughout the game compared to Binghamton's nine. The last shot came from freshman Natalie Muka in the 67th minute, but did not convert on the opportunity. The Minutewomen were close to shutting out the Bearcats, but allowed the tying goal 82:46 into the game.

Binghamton forward Emily Dixon took an 18-foot shot that went past UMass goalkeeper Lauren Luckey into the lower left corner of the net.

The Bearcats struck again in overtime when AnnMarie Rizzi kicked the ball into the lower-right corner for the game-winner at 97:48. Kelly Haslinger and Casey Pedersen both earned assists on the play.

UMass took on Maine on Aug. 29. Luckey recorded her first-career shutout, but the offense failed to support the defense, playing to a draw. Maine's Kaitlin MacIsaac took the first shot of the game nine minutes into the affair.

Luckey finished with seven saves, for a total of eight saves on the season, while the Black Bear's goalkeeper Jasmine Phillips recorded four.

UMass junior Katie Ruggles and senior Vanessa Patry took the team's only shots in the first half.

The second half was more of the same for both teams. Laura Martel, the Black Bears leading scorer, challenged Luckey one-on-one, but her shot did not convert into a goal.

At the 66:14 mark, sophomore Kelsey Anderson sent a long ball towards the top of the goal, but Phillips jumped towards the ball and knocked it off the crossbar, keeping the game tied. The Black Bears took eight shots in the contest compared to the Minutewomen's six.

UMass plays its home opener on Thursday when it hosts New Hampshire at Rudd Field. Opponents are outshooting UMass, 17-12, in two games.

Although UMass has not given itself as many scoring opportunities as its opponents and despite losing junior Sydney Stoll to injury and Britt Canfield to graduation, the Minutewomen are already looking much more aggressive than last year's team.

Adam Miller can be reached at amill@astudent.umass.edu

Therese Smith, a versatile midfielder, looks to add to her point total with continuous playing time throughout the year. With the injury problems for the Minutewomen, Smith will be looked upon to provide offense.

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SEE YOURSELF IN COMICS

COMICS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Puzzle trouble.

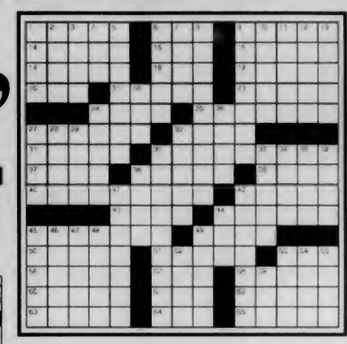
| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | 4 | 8 | | | 6 | 9 | |
| | | | | 2 | | 5 | | |
| 9 | | | | 5 | | | 3 | |
| 5 | 7 | | | | | | 1 | |
| | 3 | | 2 | | 7 | | 5 | |
| | 9 | | | | | | 8 | 2 |
| | 4 | | | 1 | | | | 5 |
| | | 5 | | 8 | | | | |
| 8 | 1 | | | | 6 | 3 | | |

ACROSS
1 Turn inside out
6 Pouchlike structure
9 Sanctify
14 Indian instrument
15 Baseball star
16 Spooky
17 Muddle
18 Big bird Down Under
19 "Divine Comedy" poet
20 Monty
21 Canter
23 City on the Moselle
24 Hot tubs
25 Frigidity
27 ___ down the hatches!
30 Tower (over)
31 Planetary path
32 Gopher State
37 Signify
38 ___ on (mollycoddles)
39 False god
40 Sought a deal
42 Fluttering sound
43 Burn a bit
44 All the rage
45 Meals
49 Narrow inlets
50 Benary compound
51 Cornered in branches
53 Had brunch
56 Edmonton pro
57 Ages and ages
58 Couch potato
60 Took a nap
61 Hwy. addr.
62 Sensory organs
63 Dry runs
64 Word of agreement
65 Folklore creature

DOWN
1 Calm being
2 Clinging flora
3 Last add-on
4 Brit. flyboys
5 Proclaim
6 Plant starters
7 Equips for battle
8 Warned
9 Hour of retiring
10 Acquire knowledge
11 Banks of baseball
12 Locales
13 Tarot users
22 Winter Fahrenheit
24 Scam
26 Inmates
27 Dud
28 Balinese
29 Ski lift
30 Cubic decimeter
32 Secluded religious community
33 Regrets
34 Ruler of the Nile
35 Narrated
36 Ms. Mc Bear
38 Japanese parliament
41 Declares

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



SEND IN YOUR COMICS OR ELSE

COMICS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

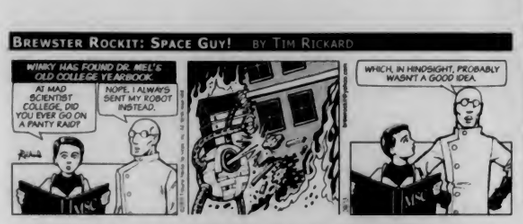
"Is that where you put the quote of the day?"

- Girl standing next to me



Submit your comics!

comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your classifieds!

(413) 545-3500

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK BY JOSH SHALEK

BLISS BY HARRY BLISS

"Oh well. All's well that ends well."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
They called you wise to hide your money away like a squirrel hides its nuts, but it's crazy to keep it in a tree as well.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Pepper spray is a great party gag.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Your air-of-human superiority will come back to bite you, once you realize that the red ant has entered your bathing suit.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You are so screwed.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Boring Straight-edge Poetry Minute: Roses are red, violets are blue; Drugs are bad, and sex is too.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Today President Bush will announce his plan to bring 200,000 badly-needed Slip & Slides to New Orleans.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Your performance in bed will remind her of Michael Phelps; quite possibly the fastest ever, Champ.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You'll never make it out of culinary school if you submit Campbell's Chicken Noodle Soup as your homework.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
When you find out that your secret nickname is "Hothead," it will test your ability to resist your first instincts.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Sadly, you will forget to go to Office Depot again today. Being out of Post-it notes is making the process take longer.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Take a load off today. Consider your clothing an option.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
The faster you eat, the quicker you can run back to your room to study!

comics@dailycollegian.com Where the fun comes home to roost

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

EMPLOYMENT

Drop catalogs for cash! Need responsible person with car to drop catalogs in Pioneer Valley, Springfield, and beyond. 10 hrs per day 2 days. postering@artspromo.org

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required: experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

The Town of Belchertown is accepting applications for the Recreations Department's Stingrays Swim Team Head Coach position. This is a non-

EMPLOYMENT

benefited seasonal position for the months of October through January. Must be experienced in competitive swimming, have a current CPR certification and a current First Aid certificate or be able to obtain above requirements upon being selected for the position. Applicants shoud have knowledge of stroke techniques as well as patience to work with children of various ages and swim levels. Job descriptions and applications are available in the Selectmen's Office at the Finnerty House, One South Main Street, PO box 670, Belchertown, MA 01007. The deadline to apply is 4:00 pm on Thursday, September 11, 2008.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Two Yorkie babies for adoption. AKC, home raised in a good environment. Shots and health guaranteed. If interested, kindly contact me at crserendipity62@gmail.com

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S. Padre, Florida. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.statravel.com.

THE BIGGEST POSTER SALE. Biggest and Best Selection. Choose from over 2000 different images. FINE ART, MUSIC, MOVIES, MODELS, HUMOR, ANIMALS, PERSONALITIES, LANDSCAPES,

ANNOUNCMENT

MOTIVATIONALS, PHOTOGRAPHY. MOST IMAGES ONLY $7, $8, $9. SEE US AT Cape Cod Lounge - Student Union ON Monday September 1st thru Friday September 5th, 2008. THE HOURS ARE 9 AM - 5 PM. THIS SALE IS SPONSORED BY WMUA 91.1 FM.

SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIEDS...

(413) 545 - 3500

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass aims to run away with CAA

Minutemen expecting deep push in playoffs under Coen

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With a 1-0 record and a new-and-improved national ranking, the No. 4 Massachusetts football team started the 2008 season in winning fashion. Under the lights for the first time, the Massachusetts football team defeated Albany, 28-16, in the season opener.

The Minutemen might not have played exactly how they would have liked – committing penalties, dropping passes and missing tackles, but they earned the result they wanted.

Shaking off the nerves that come with the start of a new season, the Minutemen came together as a team after the first quarter, outscoring Albany 28-7.

However, the Minutemen must focus on the other games if they want to get back on the road to the postseason.

Here's a look at the upcoming schedule:

SEPT. 13- AT HOLY CROSS

The Minutemen travel to Worcester to start their three-game road trip. For the first time since 1996, the Minutemen will visit Holy Cross's confines.

Last year the Minutemen came out on top, 40-30, in the first game for both teams.

The season opener for Holy Cross will showcase the top two quarterbacks in the FCS.

SEPT. 13- AT JAMES MADISON

The Minutemen play the second of their three-game road trip against James Madison in Harrisonburg, VA. The two teams last met in 2005 where UMass defeated James Madison, 10-7.

The Dukes sported an 8-4 record last season, making it to the post season, but losing to Appalachian State in the first round.

JMU was routed by Duke last Saturday, 41-7.

SEPT. 20- AT TEXAS TECH

The now No. 12 Texas Tech sports one of the nations top offenses as well as one of the nation's elite quarterbacks in Graham Harrell. This season's BCS opponent will no doubt be UMass' toughest test.

If UMass wants a fighting chance in keeping up with the Raiders, the Maroon and White defense will have to be stellar all game long.

OCT. 4- DELAWARE

Fortunately for the Minutemen, Delaware will be without the likes of first-round draft pick Joe Flacco (Ravens) and Omar Cuff (Browns) running the offensive side of the ball.

The two teams last met in 2005 when Massachusetts ran away with a 35-7 win.

OCT. 11- AT NORTHEASTERN

The Minutemen travel to Brookline to face the Huskies where last year they were successful both on the ground and through the air, beating the Huskies 24-7.

The Maroon and White beat the Huskies 22 out of the 23 games the two teams faced. Last week in their season opener the Huskies lost to Ball State, 48-14. Last season the Huskies finished with a 3-8 record, but upset the No. 8 Wildcats late in the season.

OCT. 18- RICHMOND

The Minutemen stay at home for another week to face Richmond in the annual homecoming game. Fortunately for the Minutemen, former Richmond running back Tim Hightower, who rushed 1991 yards last season, has moved on to the Arizona Cardinals' 53-man roster. The last time the two teams met was a 19-6 victory for the Maroon and White in the 2006 opener.

OCT. 25- BRYANT

UMass and Bryant meet for the first time on a football field. This is Bryant's first year as a Division I football team.

UMass quarterback, Liam Coen, grew up near Bryant.

NOV. 1- RHODE ISLAND

UMass has faced Rhode Island 82 times in the programs history. UMass owns a 45-35-2 record over Rhode Island, which includes nine straight victories (1997-2003).

In pouring rain, the Rams beat the Minutemen in overtime, 12-6, last year.

NOV. 8- MAINE

Last year the Minutemen beat Maine, 38-7, at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. UMass sports a 40-13-1 overall record against the Black Bears.

See FOOTBALL on page 11

UMass Football 2008 Schedule

| Date | Opponent | Location | Time |
|---|---|---|---|
| 08/30/08 | vs. Albany NY | Amherst, Mass. | 6:00PM |
| 09/06/08 | at Holy Cross | Worcester, Mass. | 1:00PM |
| 09/13/08 | at James Madison* | Harrisonburg, Va. | 3:30PM |
| 09/20/08 | at Texas Tech | Lubbock, Texas | 7:00PM |
| 09/27/08 | BYE | | |
| 10/04/08 | vs. Delaware* | Amherst, Mass. | 3:30PM |
| 10/11/08 | at Northeastern* | Brookline, Mass. | 3:30PM |
| 10/18/08 | vs. Richmond* | Amherst, Mass. | 3:30PM |
| 10/25/08 | vs. Bryant | Amherst, Mass. | 1:00PM |
| 11/01/08 | at Rhode Island* | Kingston, R.I. | 12:00PM |
| 11/08/08 | vs. Maine* | Amherst, Mass. | 12:00PM |
| 11/15/08 | at New Hampshire* | Durham, N.H. | 12:00PM |
| 11/22/08 | vs. Hofstra* | Amherst, Mass. | 2:30PM |

Conference game

Liam Coen stands in the pocket looking for someone to get open in a game last season. With the graduation of J.J. Moore and Rasheed Rancher, Coen's throwing attempts could drop with the lack of experience at wide receiver.

New-look firepower

Nelson leads group of first-time starters

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With a similar look to the 2007 Massachusetts football team, coach Don Brown aims to continue his winning ways by taking the 2008 version of the Minutemen to a school record, third straight NCAA postseason.

With eight returning starters, the Minutemen, once again, look to win with a stifling defense. The offensive side of the ball has new faces and some holes left by graduation, but nothing that cannot be masked by senior captain and All-American Liam Coen.

OFFENSE

QUARTERBACK

With question marks on the offensive side of the ball, one exclamation point is Coen. After three years of managing the ball for the Minutemen, the 6-foot-2-inch 220-pound redshirt quarterback has already rewritten the school's record book. With over 30 records to his name and a national title game appearance in 2006, the QB will look to add more to his legacy in his final season at the helm.

Before the 2008 season had begun, Coen already had many accolades to his name for the upcoming season: Walter Payton Award Candidate, CAA Preseason Offensive Player of the Year, Lindy's CAA Preseason Offensive Player of the Year, Lindy's Second-Team All American and USA Today National Player to Watch.

Entering his fourth and final season as the signal caller for the Minutemen, Coen, one of four team captains, will be a leader on and off the field. With the experience of leading his team to a NCAA FCS Championship Game in his sophomore year, the NCAA quarterfinals the following year and two conference titles, Coen has earned the respect of his teammates and other teams across the nation.

As far as leading on the field, Coen lets his performance speak for him. With two consecutive 3,000-yard seasons, a 64.46 career completion percentage and 66 career touchdowns (30 in 2007), he has been called the "best quarterback in UMass history," according to Brown.

Coen did throw more interceptions in 2007 (14 in 13 games), than he did in 2006 (10 in 15 games), but also had 26 more passing attempts in 2007, despite playing two fewer games.

See ROSTER on page 10

INSIDE: MINUTEMEN TRAVEL TO HOLY CROSS | PAGE 14

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 89 LO: 62 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 2008

Bar under new management

Local owner expands business diving into risk, uncertantiy

BY SARAH GIBBONS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Every new semester brings changes to the landscape of downtown Amherst. New shops, restaurants and bars are continuously closing and opening. Many University of Massachusetts upperclassmen arrived on campus this past weekend and were concerned to see longtime hangout Delano's closed. However, plans for a new college bar are already in progress.

Earlier this summer when Delano's closed shop, Brian Stahl, owner and manager of McMurphy's Uptown Tavern, seized the opportunity to expand his business. McMurphy's, which first opened its doors in 1998, celebrates 10 years of operation this week.

While opening any new business in the current economic atmosphere poses several risks, a decade of experience along with a self-assured and amiable personality allow Stahl to enter into this new business pursuit with confidence. Its location in the middle of the Five College area almost certainly guarantees that there will be no lack of college students looking for an escape from the tedium of academic studies.

Frequenting the same bars and restaurants often turns weekends, a time for fresh experiences, into monotony. A new site to gather is always a welcome change.

As the Delano's property was only recently acquired, the new location holds many uncertainties.

Stahl hesitated to put a specific date on the opening of his new bar, citing the age-old superstition of not wanting to jinx himself and the very real possibilities of administrative impediments, such as obtaining a liquor license. Stahl only hopes that his new venue will open before the beginning of Spring Semester 2009.

"You never put a date on an opening," Stahl said.

Since the property changed hands after Delano's was already vacant, there will be no conjoining of the two businesses or their staffs. However, unlike the recent remodel of Judie's, a popular Amherst eatery, it won't merely be an expansion of its original space. Instead, the remodeled bar will be a completely new scene.

The new ownership plans to completely gut and renovate the property and looks forward to

See BAR on page 3

Local bar Delanos closed over the summer, but the space will remain as a bar under the same ownership as McMurphy's, another downtown Amherst Bar.

WILLIAM MCGRATH/COLLEGIAN

Town-houses theft

An Amherst Police detective noted, yesterday, that college students bring nice things to school – personal electronics, entertainment systems, things that can make anyone envious – burglars included.

Amherst Police received a call at roughly 11:30 a.m. from a University of Massachusetts student who said his apartment at 46 Townhouses was burglarized while he was at class between 8:00 and 11:30 a.m.

Luke O'Brian, a victim of the burglary, said two laptops, five video games, a HDTV power cord, several bath towels, a bottle of cologne and a Playstation 3 console were stolen. The estimated value of all the allegedly stolen goods is believed to be over $2,000.

Amherst Police said the investigation is ongoing, but offer little else: no physical evidence was left behind. The department suggests keeping expensive electronics away from windows and doors and said failing to lock doors only allows for potential burglars to perform unwanted window shopping.

WILLIAM MCGRATH/COLLEGIAN

Amherst, UMass Police to negotiate joint dispatch

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Officials representing Amherst, Hadley and the University of Massachusetts are negotiating to create a joint emergency dispatch center in an effort to cut down on redundancy in calls received and units dispatched.

A $10,000 study to determine if such a system is feasible for the three entities will be discussed at a meeting this month.

Though the Amherst and University of Massachusetts police departments do not share jurisdiction, they have cross-jurisdictional authority through a "mutual aid agreement." Amherst also provides ambulance service for Hadley and UMass in addition to fire service at UMass.

"If Amherst makes a call to the University for back-up assistance, the University will respond to Amherst's call for assistance," said Amherst Town Manager Laurence R. Shaffer.

He said the same happens if the University calls the Amherst Police Department for help.

With one joint dispatching service, the police, fire department and medical personnel would be summoned with one phone call.

"It is something that's worth pursuing," said Hadley Town Administrator David G. Nixon. "There's legislation working its way through the Statehouse that could provide substantial financial incentives for communities to regionalize emergency dispatch functions."

He said the incentives to having a joint emergency dispatch center might be reduced costs, better interoperability of communications, more coordinated and integrated responses to emergency situations and better deployment of resources both human and material.

Nixon said Gov. Deval Patrick supports the idea and encourages local officials to explore the possibility. He said in the midst of a sour economy and diminishing resources, it is important for town leaders to examine ways of increasing revenue and cutting costs while providing municipal services with more efficiency.

The UMPD and the two towns are in an exploratory series of conversations over the issue, and Shaffer, Nixon and UMPD Chief Barbara O'Connor were quick to point out that they don't necessarily think it is essential to have a joint emergency dispatch center but worth looking into. They said it is important to stress that officials are exploring whether the plan is even feasible.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli01@gmail.com.

Former Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney waves to the delegates at the Republican Nation Convention after his speech yesterday.

Students get a kick out of clubs

The Tae Kwon Do club on campus was one of the many clubs at yesterday's activites outside of the student union attracting new members.

EVAN CUTMAN

Palin named to ticket

Mixed reaction from students on campus

BY ALISSA CREAMER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Republican presidential candidate Sen. John McCain announced Republican Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin as his vice presidential running mate on Aug. 29 in Dayton, Ohio amidst much controversy and skepticism.

Many University of Massachusetts students expressed bewilderment at Palin's selection, stating that they feel she lacks experience. She has fewer than two years in office as the 11th female governor and the first of Alaska. Palin's political career also includes a two-term service on the Wasilla City Council and two terms as mayor/manager of Wasilla, an Alaskan town with an estimated population of 8,471 according to the U.S. Census Bureau as of 2005.

"John McCain in the past has been such an independent Republican, in the middle politically and not completely right-wing conservative," said Cam Dunbar. "And Sarah Palin is the ultimate Republican – opposes abortion. I think it was a very smart choice to get the evangelical and Christian votes McCain wants, but I don't think it's a smart choice to get the Hillary Clinton votes because Palin and Clinton are completely different women with completely different views."

Dunbar said she has no experience with foreign policy, and if McCain is elected for eight years, it's very possible that Palin could be president with little experience in foreign affairs.

However, some students disagree, sensing that McCain wisely believes that Palin will draw in greater numbers of female votes and strategically take away attention from the Obama campaign.

"It's a brilliant political choice," said senior political science teaching Assistant Reuven Dashevsky. "Because after the whole fight between Obama and Clinton, a lot of Clinton's feminist supporters were upset that she had lost. And even though [Palin] is a conservative woman, [McCain] might be able to draw those votes. Also, the timing of [his announcement] was right around the time of Obama's speech at the Democratic convention and deflected any press from focusing on what should have been 'Democratic time,' which is what politics is all about, I guess."

President of the UMass Republican Club senior Greg Collins agrees that Palin has less experience than McCain's other potential choices might have.

Sarah Palin, governor of Alaska was introduced as McCain's Vice Presidental running mate.

See REACTION page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 3

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasserzug
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olsen
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COPIES EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Garber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenswaike
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mulholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kuczwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Waxman
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaves
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cernak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Russ Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Lamard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ADIEU LEE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1904 AND THE DAILY WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED SEVERAL ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS AND NEWSPAPER FUND AWARDS. THE OFFICES ARE OPEN FROM 8:30 A.M. TO 4:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITORS
Michael King

COPY EDITOR
Adam Miller

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michael Sarkes, Michelle Abbasciano

ADVERTISING PRODUCTION
Katherine Shea

Write For News
news@dailycollegian.com

Convention news on campus

BY ANDY KROLL
UWIRE

SAINT PAUL, Minn. — Hurricane Gustav may have slowed official proceedings here on the first day of the Republican National Convention, but young Republicans aren't about to let that spoil their plans for their week-long championing of young voters.

With the first day of the convention featuring only a handful of official events, the spotlight has shone even brighter on youth-oriented events taking place in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

To kick off the convention, the Young Republican National Federation, the left-leaning Campus Progress Action and several other bipartisan young voter groups on Monday co-sponsored a youth vote luncheon at the Hard Rock Café.

Before a crowd of about 50 people of all ages, Republican politicians and youth leaders spoke about the GOP's growing support among young people and the need to continue that growth in the coming months.

With the gap in youth support between Barack Obama and John McCain significantly smaller than even a month earlier, the mood among the crowd of young Republicans, many of them sporting "Future Leaders for McCain" stickers, was noticeably buoyant.

Jessica Colón, president of the Young Republican National Federation, used several statistics from the primaries and caucuses and also a recent Reuters/Zogby poll to illustrate McCain's increasing youth support on the national stage.

Colón then urged Republicans in the crowd to continue the momentum that McCain has built in the past month among young Americans.

"I want to let you know that we are on a roll," she said. "[Young people] are starting to really decide in Senator McCain's authenticity, his experience, and his policies on energy, health care, fiscal responsibility and national security are resonating with young Republicans."

Making a surprise appearance at the event was popular former presidential candidate Mike Huckabee.

The former Arkansas governor implored those in attendance to get their friends and their friends's friends out to the polls this fall and cast their ballots for McCain.

"[The Young Republicans] is such an important part of the margin in every election, but perhaps more so this time than ever before," Huckabee said. "And I want to encourage you to be not just involved but fanatically involved over the next 60-plus days."

The youth of the GOP should have more invested in the presidential election than anyone else, he added, because "young Republicans are going to be more affected by the outcome of this election than anybody."

While many consider national party conventions more pageantry than politics, a week of back-patting and corporate-funded partying, young Republicans are using the convention as an opportunity to bring together future GOP leaders and offer them organizing training they can use back in their respective states.

One such event is the GOP Youth Convention, which began on Friday and continues for the duration of the RNC which ends on Thursday.

The youth convention includes daily grassroots organizing sessions for young Republicans at nearby Concordia University, and also a forum featuring former House Speaker Newt Gingrich.

(MCT)

Delegates cheer on speakers at the Republican National convention in St. Paul Minnesota.

Although their Grand Ole Party moniker does little to help sell young people on the Republican brand, it's clear that the Republican Party recognizes the need for a strong base of youth support.

Charlie Smith, president of the College Republicans national organization, said his primetime speaking slot on Thursday evening before McCain's acceptance speech is an example of this recognition by the GOP leadership.

"It shows where our party and our candidate is looking — and they're looking towards the future," Smith said. "They want to have representatives of the youth movement speaking to millions of Americans and showing them that this is our candidate — this is candidate of the youth movement."

Youth attend the DNC

BY LIZ COHN AND MALLORY JONES
THE MARQUETTE TRIBUNE

MILWAUKEE — While most students are trudging their way to class for the start of the fall semester, there are some that have opted to pound the pavement in Denver instead.

They are youth delegates, everyday students from all over the nation that made their way to the Democratic National Convention to cast their official vote to nominate Illinois Senator Barack Obama for the presidency.

Marquette's own Jason Rae, a senior in the College of Arts & Sciences and Democratic superdelegate, has been heading the force to bring the college perspective to the national convention.

Wisconsin has 19 youth delegates representing the state, which makes up 20 percent of the overall Wisconsin delegation, Rae said.

Rae said this is the largest showing of youth involvement that the Wisconsin Democrats have seen, and one of the largest percentages of young delegates per state from across the nation.

Rae was a special guest of the Wisconsin delegation at the 2004 Democratic National Convention and now serves as the co-chair of the DNC Youth Council. As a two-time convention participant, Rae has seen the increase in youth involvement first hand.

"In 2004 Wisconsin had so few youth delegates, and now to have such a great number, I absolutely love it," Rae said.

New to the convention scene is Molly Rivera, a sophomore at University of Wisconsin-Madison and Wisconsin delegate.

Over 75,000 people were in attendance at Invesco field in Denver during Barack Obamas speech to end the DNC.

Rivera was chosen by the Obama campaign to appear on stage at the Pepsi Center as a representative of the youth vote.

"It was crazy looking out at the thousands and thousands of people," Rivera said.

But even with all the whirlwind excitement at the convention, a young face still stands out in the crowd as a minority.

Rivera said she felt that having young delegates present would make an impact on the older generation's view on youth voters.

"I think it's really important that people understand that we are here, we're here to represent, and we're not going to go away," Rivera said.

Alec Loftus, communications director of the Democratic Party of Wisconsin, said youth delegates represent a new generation coming into the political process.

"The young delegates are doing exceptionally well," he said. "They are all very sharp, very intelligent and well-informed."

Loftus, who is currently at the convention, said he feels an amazing amount of energy and party unity in an "electrifying atmosphere."

And while college students are tuning in between classes to watch history in the making on television, the youth delegates in Denver want to stress that the people sitting on the floor of the convention center are just like the people sitting on the floor of their dorm rooms.

Kentucky students arrested at RNC

BY ALI CICERCHI AND JILL LASTER
KENTUCKY KERNEL

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Two University of Kentucky students and the photo adviser for the Kentucky Kernel were arrested at the Republican National Convention Monday afternoon in St. Paul, Minn., on charges of felony rioting. They were photographing the protesting of the convention. They were released from custody Wednesday. Charges are pending further investigation, according to jail officials.

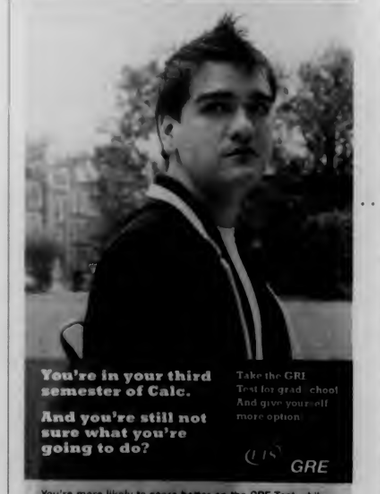
Photographers Ed Matthews and Britney McIntosh and adviser Jim Winn were three of 286 people arrested as convention protests escalated into riots Monday.

All three detained at the Ramsey County Adult Detention Center in St. Paul, jail officials said. If convicted of felony rioting, Winn, Matthews and McIntosh would receive a minimum sentence of one year in jail and have to pay a minimum fine of $3,000.

Matthews and McIntosh were not covering the event for the Kernel, but were there on their own accounts, according to Editor in Chief Brad Luttrell. The Kernel decided not to cover the Republican National Convention to keep coverage neutral since it had not covered the Democratic National Convention.

"They were still clearly marked as media," Luttrell said. "They're two of the most experienced and ethical photographers we have, and I'm certain they were not participating in the protests."

Photographer Carla Winn, who was with her husband Jim Winn at the convention, said the problems at the Republican National Convention started when a group of protestors broke off from the main group. Winn said people started "smarting off to cops," and slipped behind a building while her husband got mixed in with protestors.



The police tried to move the protestors back, Carla Winn said, but when they couldn't, they started spraying people with pepper spray.

Jim Winn and McIntosh obeyed the police order to lie on the ground, Carla Winn said. She didn't see if Matthews laid on the ground or not.

A friend of the Winns, Jonathan Woods, witnessed the riots as well. Woods, also a photographer, said that the police warned the protestors before using chemical deterrent.

Correction:

Tuesday's Back to School issue featured a timeline that incorrectly represented the date of former UMass student Jason Vassell's pre-trial hearing. The graph indicated Sept. 15 while it will take place on Sept. 8.

You're more likely to score better on the GRE Test while you're still in school. And, the bonus — your GRE Score is good for 5 years.
Give it a practice shot.
Text GRE18 to 78473.
getGREready.com
Standard rates apply. Copyright © 2008 by Educational Testing Service. All rights reserved. ETS, the ETS logo, and GRE are registered trademarks of Educational Testing Service (ETS).

EChecking

The ultimate in convenience plus lots of cool stuff, like...
• FREE ATM Transactions, Nationwide*
• FREE Debit Card
• FREE ESB Online Anytime Banking and Bill Pay
• FREE E-Statements
• FREE First Order of 50 Checks
• No Minimum Balance Required
ESBOnline Anytime Banking
bankesb.com
Easthampton Savings Bank • 413-527-4111
Belchertown | Easthampton | Hadley | Northampton | South Hadley | Southampton | Westfield
Member FDIC
*$10 minimum deposit to open Checking Account. No minimum balance required to maintain account. Other bank's ATM surcharge fees that are charged to the account during current statement cycle will be refunded on the last business day of the current statement cycle. Accounts closed or changed to another product during a current statement cycle will not receive a refund of the other bank's ATM surcharge fees.

Many focus on revelation of pregnant 17 year-old unmarried daughter

REACTION from page 1

"Even though she does not have a lot of experience, she is only running for vice president, not president," Collins said.

"Plus, she is a good choice for McCain to mobilize a Republican base, because she has more conservative views than he does."

The Republican club's vice president Brad DeFlumeri believes Palin "is a solid, social conservative, who has done a great job ridding Alaska of political corruption by taking on oil companies," DeFlumeri said. "Palin is not going to play by standard political rules, but instead pave her own way."

Recently, the press has focused its reporting on Palin's unmarried, 17-year-old daughter Bristol's pregnancy. Several students believe that this scandal, along with the fact that Palin is 44 years old and the first female to be chosen as a Republican running mate, makes her a more attractive running mate to some voters. They believe it consequently makes McCain appear to have a "different mindset" from "the same old, white man that enters the White House each year."

"I think it's just strategic for McCain to pick Palin so that he can win over everyone by having something controversial to make him appear different," Sophomore Lizzie Severanize said. "Palin has a son that's going to war, and her daughter is pregnant."

"On punishtilton.com, a celebrity gossip Web site, there are pictures of her daughter drinking," said freshman Kelly Zeoli. "And I know that people shouldn't judge her for that. But people might say, 'oh, if she can't control her own kid, how well will she do as vice president?'"

However, avid pro-life supporters at UMass say they "breathe more easily" knowing Palin's daughter is choosing to keep the child.

"I [een pregnancy] is what happens in real life," DeFlumeri said. "It's wonderful she's having the baby rather than aborting it."

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

Poll numbers jump

Republicans not worried, memo says

BY DANIELLE VICKERY
DAILY COLLEGIAN (PENN STATE)

Though an e-mail sent by the John McCain campaign early this week indicates worry about increases in Barack Obama's polling numbers, local political leaders do not share the same concern.

McCain's campaign believes Obama, the Democratic presidential nominee, will get a large boost in polling numbers — up to 15 points — after the Democratic National Convention ends today.

But Penn State College Republicans Chairman Alex Smith said he doubts Obama's polling numbers will see such an increase.

"I think it's pretty unlikely that he'll get anything even remotely that big," Smith said. "I think McCain can easily recover from whatever bump Obama gets. Hopefully, we'll be able to push a stronger bump next week."

Going into the convention, Obama led McCain 49 to 42 percent in Pennsylvania, according to a Quinnipiac University poll released Tuesday.

The e-mail urges them to increase fundraising and campaign efforts in response to what was anticipated to be a good week for Obama.

"This cycle mirrors Bill Clinton's Democratic convention in 1992: A historic 16-point bump," according to a memo forwarded in the e-mail. "Barack Obama is more similarly situated to Bill Clinton in 1992 than any other candidate in recent history."

Jon Dandrea, president of Penn State Students for John McCain, said even if Obama receives a temporary boost, he is not concerned about what those numbers might mean to McCain in the election overall.

Dandrea added McCain's upcoming announcement of his vice presidential pick will also likely help his polling numbers.

"I don't have a crystal ball, so I can't say," Dandrea said. "I think he'll be able to do more than recover; I think he'll win this election. The only polls that matter are the ones on Election Day."

The memo also reminds supporters that Obama's speech tonight is on the 45th anniversary of Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I Have a Dream" speech.

However, Smith said he is not worried about the speech. He said he plans to watch the speech and said Obama's speech writers have likely spent a great amount of time and effort on it, though he expects it to be full of prose and to lack substance.

"Maybe he'll decide to say something other than 'hope' or 'change,' but I doubt it," Smith said. "The most liberal senator in the Senate probably doesn't have anything revolutionary to say."

Dandrea echoed Smith's sentiments. It does not benefit Obama to be overly critical of McCain, he said, and the comparisons of McCain and Bush are "ridiculous," he added. He said he would also watch the speech tonight to [illegible]

Presidential candidate Barack Obama and his running mate Joe Biden wave to the crowd at the DNC last week.

McMurphy's takes space for new bar

The new ownership will keep the kitchen that was previously at Delanos and offer a new menu.

BAR from page 1

utilizing the new, slightly larger space. In addition to the possibilities that the new space holds, the new bar boasts another significant change. Although McMurphy's partner/hip with neighboring Antonio's Pizza will not be extended to the new space, customers can still look forward to good food, due to a quality kitchen already on site and a new menu.

Stahl plans to keep the menu simple.

"We want to offer you a wing, maybe a mozzarella stick, a french fry," Stahl said.

He explained that in a college town, there is no need to compete on an extravagant menu.

UMass senior Chelsea Howe is interested to see how this new bar will turn out.

"It will be cool to see what they do with all that space," Howe said. "Hopefully they get rid of the pool table that no one uses and add flat screens, like in McMurphy's, or even karaoke. No bars around here have karaoke."

Another UMass senior, Nick Cesidiano, added, "I hope the new bar is up and running before I graduate this spring. I've been to the same bars so many times it'll be nice to finally have somewhere new to go."

Nicole Collmer can be reached at ncollmer@student.umass.edu.

GET A 5% REBATE ON TEXTBOOKS

5% rebate on textbook purchases from the UMASS Textbook Annex

Here's how it works:

Step 1: Purchase your books from the UMass Textbook Annex.

Step 2: Bring your receipt and UMASS I.D. to the UMASS University Store in the Campus Center between the fourth week and last day of classes.

Step 3: Get a 5% rebate credit to use on anything at the UMass University Store.

Rebate offer is good only on textbook purchases. Valid I.D. required. Returned books not eligible for rebate. Textbook receipts must be presented during the semester purchases where made. Store rebate credits expire at the end of the semester they where received. No refer not to exceed $50.00 per semester. See store for details.

UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts University Store and Textbook Annex
follett

LATE NIGHT BRUNCH
Join us before you hit the books!
Thursday, Sept. 4, 2008
9 pm – Midnight
Worcester & Berkshire DCs

Voted as one of the students' favorite specials!
MENU FEATURING:
New England Clam Chowder
Fresh Fruit (local)
Omelet (local)
Scrambled Eggs
Bacon
Hash Browns (reconstituted potato)
Buffalo Wings
Gourmet Pizza (two choices)
Spring Rolls (local)
Chicken Caesar Salad
Tortilla Chips with Salsa & Guacamole
Artisan Breads
Berry Parfaits
Ivy
Be a Local Hero
DINING SERVICES
UMass Amherst
umass.edu/diningservices

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $40,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted.
Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund.

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.

©2008 Army Advertising Program Support Activity. All rights reserved.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A local celebrity

Chris Amorosi

Being a mascot at a baseball game is like being Marc Antony at a Cleopatra convention, with 100 percent less suicide. My brief doubts about whether or not I could write an entire column over my brush with fame were silenced once I recalled a former roommate's habit of watching MTV's "The Hills" incessantly.

An entire entertainment industry is supported by plebs like you, my readers, salivating over the coruscating lifestyles of celebrities, such as myself. Allow me to relate the singular experience of being a bipedal alligator so that you may pine to live a day in my three-toed green boots.

Chomps the Alligator was my name – or Chompy to my most affectionate fans – but I preferred the unofficial sobriquet of Master Gator. Say it aloud and savor the euphony, preferably over the phone to your parents so they can share the fun.

No doubt "Master Gator" was chosen for my mastery of the role rather than a crude allusion to nocturnal habits. My team was a bunch of college students. We were called the Navigators, explaining the bizarre choice of a subtropical mascot for a New England team.

Though the role was nuanced, the costume was rather simple. The suit was green with a yellow stomach and I wore a team t-shirt, well-stretched by my adoring fans. Naturally, I had a tail, which I assiduously kept out of the beer puddles.

For my comfort, the helmet had a 12-volt fan, powered by a nine volt battery, with no more volts left inside. I saw through the great, gaping maw, but most children were fooled when I covered up the fake eyes and played peek-a-boo. Children are dumb like that.

My fans were numbered in upwards of two digits and were aged in half as many.

My day began by entering the ballpark and passing the little people as I strode to my dressing room. I practiced the sullen, beaten down face begging for pity I normally wore inside my mask. Surprisingly, it requires considerable muscular strength to keep the muscles slackened and the expression dull all while keeping an alligator's head erect.

Interestingly enough, my alligator boots had three toes, but my alligator gloves had four fingers. Perhaps owing to my obviously mutated alligator genes, I could not zip up the back of my costume and I required an assistant, who snickered all the while. He could not hear my own snickering, however, for I knew he would have to help me unzip after hours of broiling in my own juices.

Once rendered anonymous to anyone besides park employees, I set forth into the world to touch children. It was only palm-to-palm contact, of course. Their tiny fists beat me for attention. Their tiny hands tore at my tail and gloves. The more clever ones instead aimed their wrath on the eye-hole, desperate to see what fool would stride around in summer wearing a full body suit. Their abuses hardly left me bitter at all.

My fans were numbered in upwards of two digits and were aged in half as many. The smaller ones cried out in fear and buried their tiny, weeping faces in the shoulders of their mothers at the sight of my hungry grin.

Not all were such cowards, though, and well on the way to winning the "War on Terror." Some went so far as to hug me, though none would offer me material comfort, such as cold water, in the sweltering heat. Children can be so inconsiderate.

Among my duties were feats of strength, presumably designed to cow the enemy team into losing. I would lead reluctant children onto the field after the first inning to do the "Chicken Dance," which symbolizes the fears that dwell in the hearts of the guest team and also my appetite for frightened baseball players. And after the third inning I would race a child around the bases and nearly win each time to show how it was nearly impossible to escape my wrath.

My experience with Chomps softened me. Admittedly it is great fun in my columns to blow hot air like Hindenburgs are going out of style or devote a few words or sentences to cheap shots at the Republican Club.

But reminiscing about Chomps puts the myopic lens of small town nostalgia over my eyes and it's harder to see the violence in Ossetia beyond the community theater troop performing The Crucible. It's the sort of memory to be had while reading the local rag and eating a slice of apple pie.

Chris Amorosi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at camorosi@student.umass.edu.

Politicians over students

S.P. Sullivan

People make mistakes.

Yes, yes, even large universities make mistakes. An oversight on your bursar bill, perhaps. A hold on your SPIRE account meant for someone with a similar-sounding last name. Before I arrived at this university freshman year, I got a letter assuring me, Mr. Sean P. Sullivan, that University Health Services' Mental Health Services office was ready and willing to accommodate my illness. I called them, politely, and explained that I – far as I knew – didn't have one.

And sometimes they give honorary degrees to people who ought not have them.

This past June, as reported in The Collegian Tuesday, Sept. 2, The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees unanimously voted to rescind an honorary degree given to Robert Mugabe. Mugabe – the president of Zimbabwe – has fallen under criticism in recent years for his descent from a liberating force in African politics to one of the world's most malicious dictators.

He was, up until June, the world's worst dictator with an honorary law degree from UMass Amherst.

Awarded in 1986, the degree was seen as just rewards for an African politician who had given the former racist white regime the what-for. A year later, Mugabe – then prime minister of the former Rhodesia – was elected president and his executive powers expanded.

Shortly after his ascent to power, there arose claims – many substantiated – of gross abuses of executive power, political favoritism, engaging in the same sort of racism he'd rose to power condemning and committing mass murder and atrocity for political ends.

The University set a precedent this June, though, in revoking the degree. It was the first time the University had ever taken such action. It was the right decision for certain.

Except for that many UMass students, those floppy-haired liberals who are always whining about something, had been demanding the same things for well over a year.

The Collegian reported in 2007 that Mugabe, Honorary Doctorate of Law recipient, drew international ire for his human rights violations and mismanagement of Zimbabwe's economy. In April of that year, the UMass-Boston student senate passed a resolution calling on the Board of Trustees to revoke Mugabe's degree; they said they'd consider it.

It's a fake degree. Hold a fake vote, bang a fake gavel and take the fake degree away.

But it took a congressman to seal the deal.

On May 9, 13 months after the UMass-Boston student senate resolution, State Representative Kevin J. Murphy sent a letter to UMass system President Jack Wilson. Murphy, House chairman of the Joint Committee on Higher Education, urged Wilson to rescind Mugabe's honorary degree, calling him, "an affliction on the people of Zimbabwe."

On May 12, Wilson urged the Board of Trustees to rescind the degree. "I must recommend that we sever the connection that was formed when Robert Mugabe appeared to be a force for positive change in Africa."

Three days.

And you're still waiting on your excess check.

After a year of mulling it over, the decision came just three days after Rep. Murphy's letter. I'm sure Murphy is a capable, respectable congressman. But a student senate full of UMass students – not to mention the thousands they represent – ought to have more pull.

It is not the University's fault that they gave Mugabe the degree in the first place. Indeed, at the time the international community saw Mugabe as a liberating force. Only after he received it did he begin his descent to despotism.

But Mugabe did not become a dictator overnight.

Of course, his actions have gained increased attention over the past eight months. But UMass students – those who were urging the University to rescind Mugabe's degree as early back as 2006 – were not concerned with just saving face. The University was.

It has been known for years now that Mugabe is not the role model he seemed to be in 1986, and certainly nobody the UMass system ought to attach its name too willingly.

But the Board of Trustees and UMass system leadership was bogged down by inertia. And apathy. They said there was no precedent for this sort of thing: that they'd never taken back an honorary degree before.

It's a fake degree. Hold a fake vote, bang a fake gavel and take the fake degree away.

The administration and Board of Trustees just didn't want to do anything. They'd have to dig into their bylaws or something, hold a press conference or write up a statement just because some whiners at UMass-Boston, which isn't even the flagship school, passed some silly resolution.

Oh, what's that, Mr. Congressman. Yes, he is a vicious dictator, Mr. Congressman. Right away, Mr. Congressman.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at spsulliv@daily.collegian.com

A somber birthday

Ted Rogers

My birthday, Sept. 4, has never been a good day to watch the news. My freshman year, I couldn't get a normal birthday greeting without, "Jeez, did you hear about Steve Irwin and the stingray?" The year before that, I remember hearing about hurricane Katrina destroying New Orleans.

And no matter what year it is, every media outlet will begin to ramp up the coverage of the tragedy yearly revisited on us a week later – Sept. 11.

Magazines, television, newspapers – no matter the source, there are images of the burning towers, the wrecked Pentagon, the fiery hole in Pennsylvania where the passengers made a decision to not be victims. All of them, asking us not to forget that horrors of that day.

As if we could.

I can only speak for myself, but as long as my heart beats, I can see the towers collapsing in my mind's eye. As time goes on, however, I'm beginning to think that I see the situation a lot differently than most people.

Most stories about what happened on Sept. 11 have a surprisingly upbeat message to them. The pieces generally are about how brave the passengers on Flight 93 were, or how the firefighters are coping. Some publications like to say nice things about the Bush administration's first responses, which is a rare thing in these days.

As nice as it is to hear about the triumph of the human spirit, I have a hard time connecting these stories with 9/11. As much as I'd like hope and heroism to be my final thoughts on the matter, they aren't. When I think of 9/11, all I can see is an aftermath of failure.

Even the silliest television programs tell us that when a tragedy occurs, the participants will come back bruised, but wiser. If that's the case, well, we've got the bruises. America may have been deeply wounded by the terrorist attacks, but American policies have become no wiser.

American foreign policy in response to the attacks has been nothing short of befuddling.

Any thinking person will tell you that one of the reasons why America was attacked had to do with the US government's interference with the Muslim world's affairs. This is not an opinion of some crazed minister in Chicago – this is a fact repeated by many of the terrorist leaders.

American foreign policy in response to the attacks has been nothing short of befuddling. Under the doctrine of Neo-Conservatism, (Corporate favoritism mixed with schoolyard bullying to you and me,) the Bush administration started wars in Afghanistan and Iraq and threatens Syria and Iran with the same unless vague specifications are met.

While international affairs are tricks to understand, threatening war and destruction upon a country as a bargaining tool seems like a poor way to get a positive response, especially in a political hotspot like the Middle East.

The Muslim world has suffered greatly in 9/11's backlash, especially where the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq are concerned. Not much can be said about Afghanistan other than that it was necessary. After all, the Taliban was a ruthless and dangerous regime which was sheltering criminal fanatics like Osama bin Laden. It stands to reason that this conflict has been all but ignored in favor of a much larger and much murkier war, Iraq.

Even as the levels of violence in Afghanistan rise, Iraq has still suffered the worst from 9/11's fallout. The irony of this is, Iraq had nothing to do with the attacks. Not one of the hijackers claimed Iraqi descent. No ties. There was no exchanged hands from Iraq to Al-Qaeda. All intelligence connecting Al-Qaeda with Iraq turned out to be false, or even worse, forged.

It seems like anywhere from 85,000 to 95,000 Iraqis and nearly 5,000 U.S. citizens are dead for reasons only our president knows. The more cynical amongst us will say it was because the Iraqis are unlucky enough to live on top of an ocean of oil.

Whatever the causes of the second Gulf War really are, the results have been nothing but clear and devastating. Millions of Iraqis have fled the country. Tens of thousands have been killed. Iraqi Christians, a rare breed to begin with, are facing persecution and extermination because the Muslim segment believes they are colluding with Americans. Big oil companies have already set up shop in the fields, essentially becoming war profiteers.

It seems like people are forgetting how bad things are in Iraq because the surge worked and violence is down. It is said that we spend countless hours remembering our side of the tragedy without pausing to consider the victims of 9/11 who live a world away.

It's the sort of thing you should consider when you hear stories about American heroes, about things returning to normal.

Try telling those stories to the Iraqis.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tsrogers@student.umass.edu.

A new chancellor, a new school

Nicholas O'Malley

After over a full year since the departure of former chancellor John V. Lombardi, the recently revolving position of chancellor at the University of Massachusetts seems to be settling with Robert C. Holub beginning his first semester here at UMass.

The opening weeks of Holub's tenure will hopefully bring some peace to an issue that had first arisen when former chancellor Lombardi stepped down after what was deemed "ideological differences" between him and UMass president Jack Wilson.

For those who are new this year or simply weren't paying attention, Lombardi's departure led to the appointment of Thomas Cole, former president of Clark Atlanta University, as interim chancellor. Cole, who was not selected as a candidate for chancellor, did an honorable job of maintaining the campus while the University's search committee looked for their long term candidates. The committee eventually narrowed down the candidates from dozens to the four final candidates: Martin Hall, Harris Pastides, Satish K. Tripathi and – of course – Holub.

Holub, a New Jersey native, is an alumnus of the University of Pennsylvania and University of Wisconsin-Madison, earning his masters in Comparative Literature and German, as well as his doctorate in German at the latter. He then spent his next 27 years at the University of California-Berkley, working his way up from associate professor to Dean of the Undergraduate Division in the College of Letters and Science. In 2006, Holub was appointed Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs at the University of Tennessee at Knoxville.

Holub was eventually chosen as the new chancellor after receiving President Jack Wilson's recommendation. Despite our school's occasionally riotous image, Holub saw the campus as one that "wants to move forward" and sees the potential of one of the nation's top universities in UMass.

The school's ability to improve its reputation, however, may rely on whether it can continue to be exempt from the Princeton Reviews list of top party schools. And if the school wishes to be considered one of the nation's best, it will have to improve its ranking by US News and World Report, which is currently a tie for No. 102.

Due to … a definite void of participation on the part of the students, the position of Chancellor remains somewhat enigmatic.

One issue that arose during the chancellor selection process was not knowing the chancellor's exact role on campus. Due to a potential lack of communication from the University and a definite void of participation on the part of the students, the position of chancellor remains somewhat enigmatic. Holub, however, gave his own definition of the position.

"I am the chief executive officer for the Amherst campus, which means that all aspects of campus life, from academics to student affairs and fund raising and communications, are under my auspices."

The role of chancellor, in addition to numerous responsibilities, comes with lush monetary benefits. After signing a three year contract with UMass, Holub is set to make $375,000 in addition to other benefits. His hefty salary is a $25,000 increase from that of his predecessor.

Probably the most important influence of the chancellor, in the eyes of students is his influence on students' wallets. Holub has invariably expressed his support for undergraduate education and is eager to hear the views of students and their organizations. However, Holub has expressed that he does not intend to lower student fees nor does he have the power to do so. Instead, he is a proponent of financial aid to ease the monetary burden of college.

"I believe that looking at and determining the structure of financial aid is more important than the level of the fees," Holub said. "When fees are raised, we devote a significant amount of the increased revenues to financial aid for the neediest students. We hope that only those who can truly afford the increase in fees will have to pay them."

The discussion of the level of fees and financial aid (another lively debate itself) is based on one basic question: should there be an overall fractional relief, or a more concentrated form of aid that benefits the most qualified and needy students?

Like it or not, it is the latter that presents the best image and attracts better qualified students to the University. Such a goal is certainly within Holub's interests.

Unfortunately, a good deal of what Holub specifically plans to bring to the University remains to be seen. Throughout the selection process, Holub responded to many issues with a "we'll look at it when we get there" approach.

At first glance, this trait may seem to be a weakness as Holub begins his tenure. But perhaps this uncertainty could be looked at as a display of passion and eagerness to become involved at the university. The fact that Holub wants to wait and see, to explore his role on campus shows that he did not have an agenda set in stone before the most important influence on his position arrived: the students.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lollapalooza headliners prove their worth

Radiohead steals the show, Kanye West shows up on time

BY ALEX BUTLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This is the last of a three-part series about the Lollapalooza Festival.)

As some lunatic was ranting about Branson, Mo. and its heavy significance in global politics, I realized I was far from home. The crowd was immensely diverse. But people were, as Duffy said, "unifying around the music."

The mass was pouring into the south side of Grant Park. It was the end of the first day, and everyone was turning their attention to the main stage.

Radiohead brings a very bizarre reaction from most people. Despite its quiet introduction in 1993, when it was hard to even give away concert tickets, the band has risen to an unprecedented caliber. People flock from all over to hear what David Fricke of Rolling Stone magazine has deemed the "the best live band in rock."

As the music started, everyone seemed to drop what they were doing and listen as "National Anthem" pumped through the speakers. The Radiohead state of mind is practically a natural sedative. People become almost hypnotized amidst their music.

It is astonishing. But once you have experienced it live, you know what it is all about.

Lead singer Thom Yorke keeps his voice and guitar perfectly in-synch with the rest of the band, so close you swear you are listening to the album.

The two-hour performance included a wide variety of the band's songs, set to an impressive light show with hundreds of steel pipes hanging over the band. When fireworks shot skyward during "Everything in its Right Place," the picture was virtually perfect. The first day of Lollapalooza was over.

MGMT, one of the most talked about bands of the year, had a high bar to reach. It was set to play in the middle of day two and despite its best efforts, their performance at the MySpace stage just did not live up to expectations.

The incredibly young band from Wesleyan University agreed to perform the festival with only one album under its belt. It was painfully obvious that the crowd was waiting for the three main singles "Electric Feel," "Time to Pretend" and "Kids."

The nerve-wracked frontman, Andrew VanWyngarden, often closed his eyes and turned from the crowd during songs. The hour-long set seemed to drag on and on. The music was too slow, too quiet and too often drowned out by DJ group, Booka Shade, pumping bass on the very next stage.

You wanted MGMT to do well, mainly because they have unquestionable talent. But a festival is just not the right spot for some bands, especially early on in their careers.

Spank Rock, a combination of lead singer Naeem Juwan and DJs Chris Rockswell and Ronnie Darko, drowned its audience with bass-heavy beats for the entire performance. For many, the act was simply too much.

"I'm going to head back to Explosions in the Sky," I heard someone say. "This guy is crazy."

But those who expected the constant barrage of bass and spit-verse no doubt loved every second of it. Anyone who stuck it out with the Philly-based rap group was not disappointed. Amanda Blank joined Juwan on stage for one of the most stylish and under-appreciated acts of the festival.

Rage Against the Machine took the main stage at the end of day two. If what Radiohead brings out in people acts like a sedative, then what Rage brings out in audiences is like a dose of speed.

When thousands of people migrated toward the stage, it was easy to forget that the crowd was cut in half. While Zach de la Rocha and Rage Against the Machine were set to rock the south side, Jeff Tweedy and Wilco were strumming away on the north side. Unlike Radiohead, these bands had to fight for their audience.

Still, the sea of people pushed its way to the front and what happened next was no real surprise.

When a band like Rage splits up and re-unites for a couple of tours, you can expect some really strange people—very passionate people—to come out of the woodwork. And when you add a song like "Bulls on Parade" to the equation, violence is the result. The thrusts and pushing were so rough that singer Zach de la Rocha threatened to cut the performance completely.

"Save it for the streets!" he yelled, "We've got to take care of each other in here."

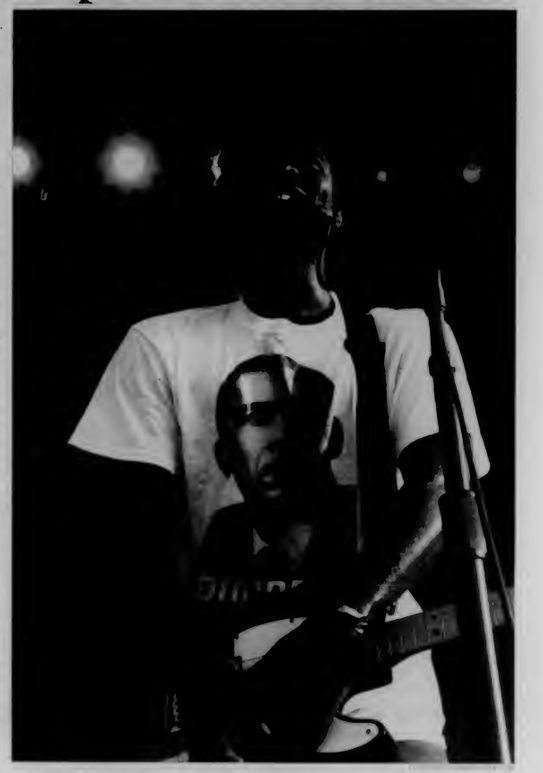
It had been 16 years since Rage's initial release, and you could easily tell from the performance. Anyone who was expecting to hear "Know Your Enemy" or "Year of Tha Boomerang," as it is on the album was sorely disappointed. The songs may have had intensity, but they were slower than ever. However, the concert did not disappoint.

It was a historic moment for many people. Despite the onslaught of fans, Rage finished its full set without any setback.

Early next morning, Kid Sister pulled out all the stops. It was the last day of Lollapalooza, and people could tell that Melissa Young, aka Kid Sister, had high expectations. Playing to a very modest crowd, Young ran through material with her head held high.

Solid gold dancers and performers peppered the stage, creating an eerie, energetic vibe during the wee hours of the morning. The highlight was her most notable single, "Pro Nails," which emphasizes the importance of matching nail polish.

It is important to learn early in life that you should not let appearances fool you. But I admit, as Patrick Gemayel and David Macklovitch of Chromeo walked on stage, I did a double take.



While they might look like any other pair of guys on a city street, Chromeo is anything but ordinary. The Canadian duo set right to it, blasting electrofunk through their guitars and vocoder (talk-box).

The two childhood friends self-proclaim themselves as "the only successful Arab/Jew collaboration [...] ever." Their convivient set was a charming combination of Michael Jackson and Daft Punk, complete with catchy vocals and quick beats.

Next to take the stage was Girl Talk, a one-man act that is a bit tricky to explain if you have never heard of music mashing. The idea is to borrow music and beats which already exist, then mix them up to create something new.

What Greg Gillis does in Girl Talk is exactly that.

The samples are immensely diverse - you can expect to hear mash-ups of M.I.A. with The Cranberries, Justin Timberlake with David Bowie, and Busta Rhymes with Sting.

Bloc Party frontman Kele Okereke enjoys a moment on stage at this summer's Lollapalooza Music Festival in Chicago.

So one might not expect Girl Talk to be a big hit in an outdoor music festival like Lollapalooza, but Gillis received just the opposite response. Two sisters from New Jersey had come all the way just to see him play this one set. As did two couples from Nova Scotia. Still, the collaged sound is hit or miss.

"This is too insane for me," I heard one sweaty girl announce on her way out. Gillis insisted whoever wanted to come up on stage during his set. A great idea in theory, but once the platform started to bend 40 minutes into the set, it started to be a problem. The dance party lasted for a full hour and, while it was mostly a rehash of his older material, the beat did not stop.

Then the fateful division once more. In retrospect, the question is hardly life-changing. Kanye West or Nine Inch Nails? Nevertheless, if you consider all the pros and cons, it can be a tough decision to make.

Throughout the day, small

See LOLLAPALOOZA on page 7

Bonnaroo wraps it up

West makes fans wait hours for performance

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This is the last of a three-part series on the Bonnaroo Music and Arts Festival.)

After all of these great performances, there were bound to be missteps along the way. Unfortunately for the throngs of people that reached the main stage at the ungodly hour of 2:45 a.m. central time. On Saturday, it came in the form of Kanye West.

By 3:30 a.m., the rap star had yet to make his onstage appearance, which had not even been set up, as a number of workers busily put together a massive spaceship. By 4:00, still no West had arrived, prompting a number of obscene chants to be shouted by the crowd, many of whom were half asleep on the ground.

Finally, at around 4:30, West arrived, launching headfirst into his set without a word to the crowd. He cut off songs midway and drew the ire of many fans who had been eagerly awaiting his set.

This debacle would spark a he said/she said feud between the rapper and Bonnaroo officials who alleged that Kanye simply refused to play. Talking to one stage manager who would only allow himself to be indentified as Paul, he claimed that he "had been [setting up stages] for over 21 years" and didn't buy West's excuses.

He offered insights such as how each event is "planned out ahead of time, often six months in advance, with everything from the number of hotel rooms to the number of microphones" already in place. But he mostly echoed the festival's claims that West was backstage and ready, despite obvious set problems.

See BONAROO on page 8

Pearl Jam frontman Eddie Vedder and Jack Johnson formed an unlikely on-stage duo during one of the more memorable moments at the Bonnaroo Music and Arts Festival.

The remarkable Howard Ziff

BY S.P. SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

An old hand at news writing, Howard M. Ziff, professor emeritus of the journalism department at the University of Massachusetts, could probably write a better lead paragraph than this one.

"I can't pick up a newspaper without rewriting what I see," he said.

Ziff, 78, looks more like a philosopher than journalist. Never without his cornceb pipe, he strokes his beard as he talks, raising bushy, white eyebrows out from behind large glasses when speaking of something he's passionate about. He's a robust man, gruff-voiced, and walks with a cane due, he says, to a climbing accident in Hungary in the late 1980's.

He's seen combat, worked as an editor over esteemed Chicago columnist Mike Royko and started the journalism department at UMass. He loves poetry and the history of the English language, classic movies and chamber music.

And he'll speak with authority on all of it.

Born in Holyoke, Mass., the son of a Jewish curtain maker, Ziff got his bachelor's degree in philosophy from Amherst College in 1952. He enrolled in Columbia University's masters program with plans to become a professor of philosophy, but eventually decided he wanted more for himself.

Knowing full well that dropping out would annul his draft deferment, Ziff left anyway. This was in the thick of the Korean War, and although he didn't enlist, he was "delighted to be drafted."

"It was the two most important years of my life," he said.

Ziff cut his journalism teeth at Pacific Stars and Stripes, the daily military newspaper.

"I got to Stars and Stripes in a very lucky way," he recalls. "I got there and there was a guy, an information officer, and he saw there was this guy from Amherst College and he said 'this guy can write,' so I got to work for them."

Ziff worked for Stars and Stripes as a writer and reporter, but also got to try his hand at humor writing, working closely with the staff cartoonist, a young poet and artist named Sheldon "Shel" Silverstein. Ziff said the two became a "good pair."

And although he saw some combat, Ziff left the military relatively unscathed.

"I like to say I was shot at three times in Chicago but only twice in Korea," he said.

Ziff landed in the Windy City in 1958, during what he describes as "a crime heyday" - it was great fun." He started at the City News Bureau of Chicago, a cooperative news agency that served many of the cities newspapers, radio and television broadcasters.

He got to walk the streets, dig up stories and, occasionally, get shot at.

Once, Ziff and one of his fellow City News reporters got wind of a burglary at a department store on the South Side. The suspects were taking fur coats from the ladies' wear section on the sixth floor, and Ziff and his colleague wanted a better look.

So they climbed the fire escape.

Halfway up, they caught the attention of one of the police officers on the ground. Perhaps mistaking them for perpetrators, the cop started shooting.

"I don't know if he was shooting to kill, but he was shooting," Ziff said.

It's that very same sense of adventure, which Ziff recalls with affection, that he says is missing from today's journalists.

"I don't want to be an old fart, but these days, people want to be journalists, but they don't want to walk the streets," he said.

Ziff was an able reporter, but seemed more adept as editor. Fortunately, some talented reporters aided him.

Ziff recalls sending out a rookie reporter to cover a five or six-car pile-up. The reporter couldn't get anywhere near the wreckage, so he climbed the L, the Chicago Transit Authority's railway, to get a better look.

"That was Royko," Ziff said. He would go on to be a Pulitzer Prize winning columnist, and would call Ziff "a great journalist" in a preface he wrote for a book about City News. Ziff found this out only recently.

"I don't read prefaces," he said.

After giving a speech at University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign about his organization's coverage of the contentious 1968 Democratic Convention, the head of the journalism department approached Ziff.

See ZIFF on page 8

'Sorority' takes T.V. to the Web

BY THOMAS FLOYD
THE DIAMONDBACK (MARYLAND)

When Annemarie Pazmino wakes up in the morning, she has script changes ready to go. She talks with her director and castmates, shoots her scenes for the day and heads back to the hotel, getting some sleep before doing it all over again.

It's a typical day in the life of a television actress. Yet Pazmino's show, "Sorority Forever," will never hit the network airwaves – her audience is in the ever-emerging world of webisodes.

"I don't think there is much difference between making a webisode series versus making a TV series," Pazmino said. "The production value is still up there, and the amount of effort and the amount of time and the research – it's all still there. It's a different kind of story, and webisodes seem to be the way the industry is moving toward."

After the network disbanded in 2006, The WB returned Aug. 27, pegged as an exclusively online entity. Featuring access to classic series, such as "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" and "Gilmore Girls," in addition to new scripted material, like "Sorority Forever," theWB.com launched with the tagline, "The next great network won't be televised."

Warner Bros., however, is far from the only business caught in television's transition to online. EQAL, the innovative company behind the video blog drama lonelygirl15, is still discovering ways to converge media outlets and become a more interactive, multi-layered entertainment source.

"As lonelygirl15 got really popular, we had the chance to take a traditional TV deal," EQAL CEO and lonelygirl15 co-creator Miles Beckett said. "But we had this unique opportunity on the Internet where, with online interactivity, you could go anywhere. We see it as a playground for new types of storytelling because we tell the linear story through video, but we also tell the story through the profile pages and blogs and live chats with characters."

EQAL recently closed a deal with CBS to supplement its existing network shows with online features, similar to those ABC and NBC use with "Lost" and "Heroes." And it was that aspect of EQAL's vision for viral marketing that attracted Pazmino to "Sorority Girls" in the first place. In her film, "On Bloody Sunday," the up-and-coming actress' co-star was Yousef Abu-Taleb, a veteran of the lonelygirl15 series.

"I knew webisodes were out there, but I hadn't really gotten involved in watching any of them," Pazmino said. "[Abu-Taleb] was talking to me about lonleygirl15 and all the things they were doing for the fans – how they were setting up treasure hunts for them to find clues and that they could pick stuff up out of the episodes – and I was like, 'Wow, this is so awesome.'"

As the line between Internet and television continues to blur, so does the more touchy issue of distribution rights. And while a show like "Sorority Forever" is designed as an online product, Warner Bros. always has the option of bringing it to television.

"The studios are very aware of losing profits on straight television," arts and humanities professor Greg Metcalf wrote in an e-mail. "I would look for them to continue re-airing their network shows, expand the webisode stuff, and then start putting online shows that don't get picked up - sort of like a farm team in baseball – so they could bring it onto the network if it takes off."

All of this fuss over online content's significance is also the primary culprit for last winter's writers' strike. But even after the dust settled, Hollywood is still unsure where the platform fits into the entertainment industry's future.

"If the Internet wipes out DVD and syndication, the writers thought they should have a share of that pie, which is perfectly reasonable," said EQAL President Greg Goodfried, who co-created lonelygirl15 along with Beckett. "The problem is that people have no clue what the Internet distribution market is. Internet video is a strange beast right now."

And it is one nearly every network is trying to harness. Though making episodes available for free online viewing has become the norm, organizations are also exploring other ways of embracing the YouTube Generation tendencies.

NBC's "The Office" is making a particularly conscious effort, producing original webisodes (for which the comedy won an Emmy), in addition to posting blogs and deleted scenes on NBC.com. Later this month, Fox is simulcasting the season premieres of two programs – "Terminator: The Sarah Connor Chronicles" and "Fringe" - online, exclusively to college students.

"The Internet has changed the way you can distribute content," Beckett said. "Eventually, TV will plug into the Internet and everything will be IT traffic. You have to adapt your model to these new sort of things, because it's hard to fight."

Although most original webisodes feature fairly unknown casts, the participation of stars Will Ferrell and Michael Cera on websites funnyordie.com and clarkandmichael.com show big names are capitalizing on changing viewer practices too.

With the ever-expanding reach of the Internet, the instant accessibility and interactive experience online programming provides is not only where the future of television lies but the present as well.

"All the different avenues that are being explored are so much fun," Pazmino said. "I think in regards to spreading to people, the Internet is the way to do it. With TV changing now, the Internet is there for more and more people every day."

Actress Annemarie Pazmino stars in "Sorority Forever," a web-only series on theWB.com.

'Batman' producer no 'Joker'

BY KEVIN BARBER
THE IOWA (CITY) PRESS-CITIZEN

Around eight o'clock Wednesday evening, the anticipation of the crowd gathered in Gaston Hall was palpable — it seemed that many of the assembled students half-expected Heath Ledger's iconic Joker to vault onto the stage, that impish smile on his face and a freshly-sharpened pencil in his hand. But when Michael Uslan, the originator of the "Batman" film franchise and executive producer of this summer's blockbuster "The Dark Knight" appeared, he presented an entirely different image: a kind-faced, silver-haired 57-year-old, with ostensibly nothing in common with the Joker — except for a rather garish necktie.

When the University Lecture Fund hosted its Fall-Kickoff Event, hundreds of Georgetown students, faculty and alumni gathered to hear Uslan share his reflections on life and show business.

Before taking questions from the audience, Uslan gave a brief sketch of his childhood love affair with comic books, his early days in the entertainment industry, and finally the fulfillment of his childhood dream. "I wanted to produce the definitive dark, serious film version of Batman."

Uslan stressed that comic books were a major part of his life from the very beginning, for instance, he related his mother's claim that, as a young boy, he taught himself to read with comics. By the time he went off to college, Uslan said, he owned around 35,000 comic books (dating all the way back to 1939).

One of Uslan's most emphatic lessons of the evening was to "take what you love and make it your work." He learned this lesson from his time at Indiana University in the early '70s, where he seized an opportunity (in his words, "stuck a foot in the door") to design his own experimental curriculum. Uslan became the country's first instructor in the study of comic books, finding himself at the center of the news media's attention.

Within weeks, Uslan had comic-book giants Stan Lee (of New York's Marvel Comics) and Sid Harrison (of DC Comics) on the phone. An internship led to a crucial screenwriting gig – an early draft of the film adaptation "The Shadow." After creative opportunities dried up, Uslan retreated, selling 20,000 comic books to pay for law school.

His return to the entertainment business wasn't quite what he expected, however. Uslan spent three, and a half years as a lawyer for United Artists, working behind the scenes on such classic films as "Rocky," "Apocalypse Now," and "Raging Bull."

"It's so much better to take a calculated risk than to tell your children and grandchildren what 'I could've been,'" Uslan said, referring to his departure from UA in order to buy the film rights to "Batman."

Ignoring Harrison's discouragement – "it's dead as a dodo" Uslan formed Batfilm Productions in October of 1979, but unfortunately Harrison's warning gained credibility when every Hollywood studio consequently rejected Uslan's proposals.

Ten years later, the success of Tim Burton's "Batman" vindicated all of Uslan's tireless efforts and fulfilled his childhood ambitions. The film, which starred Michael Keaton as the Caped Crusader and Jack Nicholson as the maniacal Joker, was the top grosser of 1989. It virtually defined the superhero movie as it exists today; the original's moody art direction and music became trademarks of the genre.

Today, Uslan portrays himself as someone whose dreams came true with a lot of hard work, some luck and a sound outlook on life and its vicissitudes. Uslan urged the fresh faces in Gaston Hall to work at what one loves, to always have a "plan B," to be persistent and to take the right risks. In other words, Uslan offered a good deal of hackneyed advice that somehow seemed more valuable in light of his enormous success.

Still, the ever-humble Uslan was enthusiastic in giving credit for "The Dark Knight's" phenomenal popularity to writer/director Christopher Nolan, whom he called "a master," star Christian Bale and the late Heath Ledger, "a consummate actor" in Uslan's words. Uslan expressed his supreme confidence from the very beginning in Nolan and everyone else involved in the creative direction of the film, thanks to his experience in making 2005's reboot "Batman Begins" and the crew's "respect for the integrity of [the] property."

"'The Dark Knight' really elevates the bar for comic-book films," Uslan said. He echoed film critics in lauding Nolan's iteration as "not only a great comic-book film, but a great film."

More than anything, though, Uslan demonstrated that his love and appreciation for Batman as a character is as alive as it was in his youth. He speaks of Batman's essential humanity, his mythological origins and the personal meaning and hope he brings to readers (and viewers) with a passion that some might call nerdy – or invigorating. It's a welcome change to meet a film executive who cares so intensely for his product.

As for the one possible loose end to "The Dark Knight" – is Two-Face alive or dead? – Uslan is noncommittal. But with at least one more Nolan-Bale "Batman" film on the horizon, fans can dare to dream that the best is yet to come.

"The Dark Knight" executive producer Michael Uslan aimed to create "the definitive dark serious film version of Batman."

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
Show your College I.D. for a discount | Doors open at 9 pm
THE ULTIMATE HOT BOODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
NIGHTCLUB NOW HIRING:
HOW TO APPLY
WHEN: MONDAY SEPT 8TH & TUESDAY SEPT 9TH
TIME: 5:00 PM - 7:00 PM
WHERE: SKYPLEX
STEARNS SQUARE SPRINGFIELD MA
WWW.SKYPLEX.US
Roof Top Deck Open
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 – and STILL making a difference
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT ... AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Fall Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before.
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!)
Campus Center Room 168C • Sept. 8 (Mon) • Sept. 9 (Tues) • Sept. 10 (Wed)
• Assignment notification: FRIDAY, Sept. 12 at Boltwood table in CC
You will participate in ONE activity most Sunday this month, at an hour
Volunteer, while earning credit!

MA State Lottery NOW AVAILABLE
FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
WINE SALE 10% OFF 6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY!! MIX & MATCH (REGULAR PRICED 750 ML BOTTLES OF VARIETAL WINES)
LIQUOR
HENNESSY COGNAC X.O. 750 ml $129.99
GRAND MARNIER 100YR CENTENAIRE 750 ml $120.99
CROWN ROYAL CASK 16 WHISKEY 750 ml $99.99
GLENMORANGIE BURGUNDY WOOD FINISH 750 ml $49.99
JOSE CUERVO PLATINO TEQUILA 750 ml $49.99
GLENMORANGIE MADIERA WOOD FINISH 750 ml $49.99
ARDBEG 10YR ISLAY SINGLE MALT SCOTCH 750 ml $47.99
BAILEY'S ORIGINAL IRISH CREAM 50 ml $1.00
TANQUERAY GIN 1.75 liter $34.99
HENNESSY COGNAC VS.O.P 750 ml $48.99
GRAND MARNIER CORDON ROUGE 750 ml $33.99
HENNESSY COGNAC VS. 750 ml $29.99
BELVEDERE PURE VODKA 750 ml $28.99
10 CANE RUM 750 ml $26.99
CHOPPIN POLISH VODKA 750 ml $28.99
BAILEY'S FLAVORED IRISH CREAM* 50 ml *Mint Chocolate and Caramel $1.00
JOSE CUERVO FLAVORED TEQUILA* 1.0 liter *Citrico Tropical Orange $20.99
JOSE CUERVO GOLD 750 ml $18.99
MYER'S PLATINUM RUM 1.75 liter $18.99
KAHLUA MOCHA 750 ml $17.99
CAPTAIN MORGAN PARROT BAY KEY LIME RUM 1.0 liter $17.99
CAPTAIN MORGAN PARROT BAY RUM* 1.0 liter $17.99
*Including Coconut, Mango, Pineapple, Passion Fruit
CAPTAIN MORGAN SPICED RUM 1.0 liter $17.99
SMIRNOFF VODKA 80* 1.0 liter $15.99
SMIRNOFF TWIST FLAVORED VODKA* 1.0 liter $15.99
*Including Strawberry, Watermelon, Raspberry, Black Cherry
Sale 9/2-9/10 333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

PHILADELPHIA 76ERS
BOSTON CELTICS
WED, OCT 8 • 7PM
76ers vs Celtics
SIXERS BOSTON
UMASS STUDENTS & STAFF SAVE $5 ON SELECT SEATS AT MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE WITH ID.
Tickets at the Mullins Center Box Office, Ticketmaster.com and 413.731.5000. MULLINSCENTER.COM SIXERS.COM & CELTICS.COM

UMass offense looks to find stride in '08

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Just as Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy predicted, the injuries to forward Sydney Stoll and midfielder Meghan Gould – along with losing Britt Canfield to graduation – would limit the offense's effectiveness compared to last year.

He adjusted by stressing defense this year, which has kept UMass (0-1-1) in both of its games against Binghamton and Maine. However, the missing offense that the Minutewomen had last season has caused two potential wins to escape the Maroon and White.

They had a 1-0 lead against Binghamton until the final minutes of the game when Bearcat forward Emily Dixon scored a goal in the 83rd minute, forcing extra time. UMass lost that game, 2-1.

In the following game against Maine, goalkeeper Lauren Luckey recorded seven saves. Though she earned her first career shutout, the Minutewomen could not capitalize on six shots.

It doesn't look any better as freshman Amanda Carvalho is out with a knee injury. But the offense's biggest problem is showing more aggressiveness on the end-line.

"We're pulling back out, and that is bringing out our players onto the weaker foot," Rudy said. "Then when they try to cross the ball in, there are four defenders. If you go, you almost always get something positive. When we do, then we get corners and that puts the other team under pressure so they have to defend with 10 players."

Some of the offensive problems for the Minutewomen have to do with a completely revamped lineup. Midfielders Amy Ballew and Therese Smith are both showing a glimpse of what they can do in the center, but are still adjusting to the increased playing time.

Ballew played a full game for the first time against Maine, when in previous seasons – she hadn't played over 45 minutes. Smith was previously a playmaker exclusively on offense, but is now being asked to play both sides.

"Smith is a terrifically skilled and talented player," Rudy said. "Wherever she's played she's been a playmaker, which means attack and don't worry about defense. But we don't have that luxury so we're trying to make her into a complete player and she's done a good job at that."

This week during practice, UMass has worked on improving throw-ins. In the previous two games, no player has been established for out-of-bounds plays, and that has caused some unforced turnovers. Rudy plans on bringing more organization to the throw-ins by having a forward throw the ball to an open forward.

He believes that the offense will come eventually, even if the Minutewomen aren't scoring three or four goals like they did in 2007.

"I have to remind myself and be realistic about it," Rudy said. "If we give up two or three goals, I'm not sure if we can get that back."

While he expects the offense to pick up, it's going to be the defense that keeps the Minutewomen in games, but not without some problems along the way.

Junior Katie Ruggles recently suffered a head injury, although the severity of the injury has yet to be determined. That means freshman Meghan Collins will get the start today against New Hampshire until Ruggles is healthy again.

"She can play almost anywhere on the field and has already," Rudy said of Collins.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@student.umass.edu

Forward captain Vannessa Parry needs to spark the Minutewomen's offense that has only managed one goal in its first two games this season. UMass has been playing excellent on defense, but the lack of offense has led to a 0-1-1 record heading into today's game with New Hampshire.

GET YOUR NEWS ON THE GO!!
CHECK OUT THE COLLEGIAN WEB SITE
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

TAKE A STAND!
TAKE CONTROL!

RUN FOR SGA
SENATE!

Nominations Open Sept. 4th
(nominations are due by 9/18)

SENATE ELECTIONS: 9/24 & 9/25
ALL DC's and the Campus Center!

Come to 420 Student Union for more info and to sign out nomination forms!

e-mail: sga.speaker@stuaf.umass.edu
call. 413.545.0342

Pressure key to UM's defensive gameplan

FOOTBALL from page 14

mer kicker Chris Koepplin. Randolph set a Holy Cross record with 62 passing attempts. The all-time series between the two teams stands at 21-21-5. UMass has won the last six games of the series.

In a way to contain Randolph, the Minutemen will have to get pressure from the UMass front seven. The UMass defense was a bit sluggish at times, but stopped Albany when it needed to. Missed tackles will happen, but it will need to limit them against Holy Cross.

"There are so many things you can do after game one," Brown continued. "There's nothing like it; it's what you need to do. You have to play a game to find out where you're at."

The Minutemen expect Randolph to throw a lot again this year. Facing this scenario, the defensive backs are looking forward to the challenge.

"It's going to be a lot of fun; we're going to see a lot more routes run our way," Robinson said. "We're going to try to make plays."

Fortunately for the Minutemen, they have a game of valuable experience over the Crusaders. UMass knows where it stands and what it needs to improve on to be ready for Saturday's game.

Coach Brown has spent the week going over certain miscues in last week's game in hopes that his team can come into the game more composed.

"We've just focused on clean-ups and special teams," said Brown. "Not that we had a lot of break downs, but cleaning up the breakdowns that we've had."

Brown stressed that the Minutemen will need to get pressure on Randolph, forcing him into throwing errant passes and mistakes.

"We're just going to try to make his day as complicated as possible," Brown said.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com

NFL prospect and All-American cornerback, Sean Smalls must play at his best when the Minutemen travel to Holy Cross on Saturday. The Crusaders were No. 5 in the nation last year in total and passing offense.

Battle of the Dukes

James Madison falls 31-7; drop to No. 8 in FCS poll

BY STEPHAN ATLAN
THE CHRONICLE (DUKE UNIVERSITY)

DURHAM, N.C. – Clifford Harris played his best game as a Blue Devil this past Saturday with two rushing touchdowns in Duke's 31-7 win over James Madison – and he owes some of the credit to a player who didn't even put on pads.

Before Saturday's contest, Harris and his teammates saw senior captain Re'quan Boyette in tears, upset over missing the opportunity to play as starting running back in his last opener due to a knee injury.

Harris used that incident to boost his production. In just four quarters, the senior had 25 more yards rushing than he did all of last year. His two touchdowns were also more than last year, when he had none.

The chip on his shoulder was most obvious on his two touchdown scores. On the first drive, Harris was stopped for no gain at the 1-yard line on first down. Duke coach David Cutcliffe, however, kept faith in him and ran nearly the exact same play on second down. Harris pounded it in, and the Blue Devils led 7-0.

Later in the game, with the ball on James Madison's 4-yard line, Harris carried the ball straight up the middle three straight plays, scoring on the last one from one yard out.

"You'll see us make a commitment to running the ball," Cutcliffe said. "It was encouraging to see a decent start."

But that commitment was in doubt late in the preseason after Boyette went down with the injury. Even Cutcliffe said he wasn't sure if his team would have the ability to run the ball well. But Harris, who has been Boyette's roommate all four years at Duke, would have none of it.

"I was emotional [when Boyette was injured] because he was my best friend and I felt for him as a senior," Harris said. "But I had a role to fill in his shoes. After the game he told me how proud he was [...] I dedicated that game to him because I became a better back by watching him."

Harris was far from the only back to produce. Converted cornerback Jonny Lockhart only had nine carries, but he made the most of them, using his blazing speed for 36 yards and picking up four first downs on a third or fourth-down play. Freshman Jay Hollingsworth showed he could produce as well, racking up 49 yards on 15 carries, most of which came in the fourth quarter.

Many colleges affected by incoming Hurricane Gustav

BY JASON GALLOWAY
THE CRIMSON WHITE (UNIVERSITY OF ALABAMA)

TUSCALOOSA, AL – With Hurricane Gustav rapidly approaching the U.S. coast over the weekend, many residents of southern Louisiana evacuated their houses and many college football teams in the area had to change pregame plans.

One of the schools that relocated its athletic teams is Tulane, located in New Orleans, who is scheduled to play Alabama in Tuscaloosa on Saturday.

The Green Wave was scheduled to fly into Birmingham on Friday and take on the Crimson Tide the next day, but the inconvenience of the hurricane forced Tulane to fly in last Saturday.

"I feel for these young men out here; they've got families back home," Tulane head coach Bob Toledo said earlier this week. "They're trying to call them and talk to them and see where they are at. It's hard to focus because there's a huge distraction."

Tulane is using Samford University's facilities in preparation for the Tide this week, sharing the Birmingham-based University's football stadium, weight-training facilities, film rooms and locker rooms.

"It's hard to remain normal because of what's happening," Toledo said. "It's obviously a distraction and it's hard to maintain focus, but the players are doing a super job."

Along with the camaraderie of Samford coach Pat Sullivan, a good friend of Toledo, head coach Neal Callaway of UAB also called Toledo and offered his services.

"That's when you find out who your friends are," Toledo said. "It is a game and here is a head coach we're going to play against down the road. And yet he's a humane guy. And that's what makes this thing all kind of special."

The lack of continuity during this week's preparation has the Green Wave (0-0) treating the coaching staff as if it is unscheduled only in Birmingham differently than a contest at home.

Aside from preparation for its first game of the 2008 season, Toledo said the Tulane coaching staff has been keeping a watchful eye and responsive to the needs of the players and the Green Wave football family.

"We're continuing to work like a bowl game. We're treating it as a game where we can come tomorrow, [from the course of] every meal to our [practice] to [Saturday]," he said.

This isn't the first time a program has been impacted by hurricane evacuation. Toledo was the head coach of the time, 24 Green Wave players experienced Hurricane Katrina while at Tulane.

CHECK OUT THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG AT
http://blog.masslive.com/dailycollegiansports

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR Fall 2008
The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:
Thursday Sep. 4, @ 7:00 pm in Bartlett 61
You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing).
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

AmherstBrewingCompany
Featuring delicious food and award-winning beer served by friendly staff since1997
Head upstairs for pool tables, darts foosball and new function room reservable for small parties
NOW SERVING BRUNCH! SUNDAYS FROM 11-2
We're adding a 40-seat lounge area with booths and flat screen HDTVs in our latest downstairs expansion - coming this Fall!

All-CAA Cornerback Courtnee Robinson and the UMass secondary will have their hands full on Saturday with Holy Cross' explosive offense led by quarterback Dominic Randolph.

UMass rises to No. 4

Former Minuteman London picked up by Miami after cuts

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts football team won its season-opener, 28-16, over Albany on Saturday. But that didn't mean the coaching staff and players were satisfied with the performance.

"The guys were a little down with the way we won," UMass coach Don Brown said. "Albany certainly has a solid football team. I thought coach [Bob] Ford's team was very game, extremely physical, made us hustle and gave us everything we wanted in an opener.

"But I told the guys, it's all about winning the game. I think we'll grow a lot from this."

The coaches in the Football Championship Subdivision must have been satisfied with how UMass played, though, moving up the Minutemen one spot in the rankings to No. 4.

The CAA is well-represented in the Top 10, with Richmond (No. 3), Delaware (No. 6) and James Madison (No. 8) among the elite teams in the country. New Hampshire (15) and Villanova (23) are also in the Top 25 in the Sports Network's Top 25 Poll.

UMass Football

London in Miami?

Former UMass star wide receiver Brandon London didn't have to wait long to land with a new team after his release from the New York Giants last week. The Miami Dolphins signed the 6-foot-4 wideout and he will be on the 53-man active roster on opening day.

London, who played for UMass from 2003-06, was on the Giants' practice squad all last season after going undrafted in 2007. In his four years as a Minutemen, he put up numbers that rank in the top five in UMass history in virtually every receiving statistic. London mimicked Randy Moss in practices leading up to the Super Bowl, and earned a Super Bowl ring for his efforts.

The Dolphins have six other wide receivers on the roster, but other than Ernest Wilford, none of them are veterans or have seen much time on the field in their careers. London could get a shot to see the field.

No luck for others

Other recent UMass players that were on teams during the preseason didn't fair as well.

Running backs Steve Baylark (Cardinals) and Matt Lawrence (Bears), safety James Ihedigbo (Jets), linebacker Jeremy Cain (Rams) were all released. Veteran NFL running back Marcel Shipp was cut by two teams (Cardinals and Texans). Ihedigbo was signed back by the Jets to the practice squad.

Award central

It didn't take long for Tony Nelson to collect accolades as the starting running back. The senior rushed for 171 yards and scored two touchdowns (one receiving, one rushing) in his first career start for the Minutemen – earning him a share (with men's soccer Prince Ofosu) as the UMass' Dinn Bros. Co-Athletes of the Week.

Linebacker Josh Jennings also shared an award, splitting the Colonial Athletic Association Co-Defensive Player of the Week honors with Delaware cornerback Anthony Walters. Strangely, both players recorded 13 tackles and an interception.

For Jennings, it was his first career start at the middle linebacker position.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Minutewomen must contain Wildcats' offensive threats

W SOCCER from page 14

UMass lost a close game in overtime five days before to Binghamton, 2-1.

The first half saw no goals, but both teams took four shots on net. The Minutewomen struck first against the Bearcats (2-0-1) with a goal from redshirt senior captain Tina Rodriguez.

Fellow redshirt senior Vanessa Lima took a corner kick in the 48th minute and Rodriguez got a head on the ball to give UMass a 1-0 lead.

However, Binghamton went on to score two unanswered goals with one coming in overtime to give the Minutewomen their first loss of the 2008 season.

The Wildcats (1-2-0) won their season opener against Holy Cross before dropping back-to-back games against Villanova and Central Connecticut State University. UNH has two potent offensive players in Michelle Sheehan and Caitlin Whelan.

Both won America East Player of the Year accolades for their respective positions last year, and hope to build on a 2007 campaign in which they advanced to the America East title game. Sheehan and Whelan have each netted a goal this season.

This will be the second time the Wildcats will travel to Amherst for a Minutewomen home opener.

Back in 2006, UNH beat UMass 2-0, as UNH scored both goals in the first half of the win.

Despite being 17-2-1 all-time against the Wildcats, the last victory for UMass against UNH came in 2001.

"Like most UNH match-ups, I think it's going to be a hard fought tight game," Rudy said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Interested in writing for Sports?

Contact Jeff Larnard at

sports@dailycollegian.com

Seven O's
Every Wednesday
Karaoke
Thursday, 9/4/08
Country Singer
Saturday, 9/6/08
Lost in the Grove
Looking for exposure?
Student Bands welcome to play at Seven O's
Looking for a place to have a private event/party?
Call 413-530-6996
Route 116 330 Amherst Rd Sunderland, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Saturday
Next to Clustace Arts

Floppy Fink Diggler.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | | 7 | 5 | | | 4 | 2 | 9 |
| | 2 | | | | | | | |
| | 9 | | | 7 | 8 | | | |
| | | 6 | | 2 | 1 | | | |
| 8 | | | | | | | | 2 |
| | | | 9 | 3 | | 7 | | |
| | | | 7 | 8 | | | 6 | |
| | | | | | | | 9 | |
| 2 | 4 | 8 | | | 9 | 5 | | 7 |

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Period in a process
6 Actor Guinness
10 Lingerie pieces
14 Central parts
15 Collide gently
16 Word of honor
17 Chips in chips
18 Whisker
19 Clarinet relative
20 Called off by a cloudburst
22 River of Rouen
23 Parker and Powell
24 Break one's heart
25 TV network
26 "A Nightmare on Street"
27 Relative intensity
31 Dividers into three
36 Toward the center of 37 Cook in an oven
39 Tex-Mex order
40 Glasswegian, e.g.
42 Break in the action
44 Swallow
45 London bell
46 Assign to a foodlist
50 1983 Matthew Broderick film
55 Enticements
56 Baking dish
57 Garfield's pal
58 Lads
59 "Blow Blues" playwright
60 Thailand, once
61 Rational
62 Pace
63 Lays a lawn
64 Chops down
65 More cunning

DOWN
1 Frighten
2 Of sound
3 Clarinetist Shaw
4 Actress Davis
5 Central theme
6 Desserts
7 Hawaiian feasts
8 Send forth
9 EMT specialty
10 Voiced disapproval
11 Fanatical
12 Make amends
13 "Platoon" co-star Charlie
21 German watchdog
22 Houston and Hull
24 Slides like a snake
26 Hoop sections
27 Opposite of pref.
28 SASE, e.g.
29 Classic Pontiac
30 Decay
31 Earth tone
32 LAX info
33 Hip dude
34 Fort Worth sch.
35 Distress signal
38 Mare's fiddle
41 Gets the point
43 Eats
45 Deep voices
46 Dental-care product
47 Sound element
48 Harmonic chord
49 Abounds (with)
50 Singer Newton
51 Sprite in "The Tempest"
52 Daddy's mate
53 Flee to wed
54 Madrid mister
56 Sweet-talk
58 Youth org.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

amherst cinema
Fri Sep 5 - Thu Sep 11
TELL NO ONE 2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30
Elegy 2:15 4:45 7:15 9:45
Vicky Cristina Barcelona
2:45 5:00 7:30 10:00 + 12:30pm Sat & Sun
28 Amity St. (413) 253-2547
Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Sep 5 - Thu Sep 11
American Teen 2:30 4:45 + 12pm Sat & Sun & 10am Wed
MAN ON WIRE 7:15 9:30
Vicky Cristina Barcelona
3:00 5:15 7:45 9:45 + 12:30pm Sat & Sun & 10:15am Wed
27 Pleasant St. www.pleasantstthestater.org
Downtown Northampton (413) 584-5848

Quote of the Day

"A man on a date wonders if he'll get lucky. The woman knows."

–Monica Piper

Retro Geek By Steven Dickinson and Todd Clark

Adam and Tim By T. Reddmann

Labrat By Richard Martelly

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Have your plumber's license ready at all times as proof that you are qualified to walk around with your crack out like that.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Excluding airline passengers and pilots, we are all under the weather.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You eat like a ferret and it is very upsetting for the other diners at your table. Acknowledge this behavior and correct it.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Explore your inner maternity by writing poetry about breast feeding.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Teach your roommate to use a litterbox located outside your apartment and you'll have a bathroom all to yourself.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Purchase a hanging plant to increase the aesthetic appeal of your room as well as the flow of fresh oxygen.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your hair looks great today but no one will notice because they're too busy checking out your pelvic region.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Seek out the original Creedence Clearwater from the days prior to the infamous revival.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
"MMM bop tick a ta ba do ba dubi da bai do ba tick a ta ba doo yeah eh yeah" Yup, now "MMM Bop" is stuck in your head.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Cut three individual hairs in the front of your head to a length of 2 inches. Bang, bang, bang.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Have you ever tried macaroni and cheese with pieces of hot dog in it?

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Listening to Phil Collins will help you gain that inner coolness that you've been so desperately seeking.

YO YO YO,
CHECK OUT THE CAPTION CONTEST AT:

www.dailycollegian.com/caption

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Drop catalogs for cash! Need responsible person with car to drop catalogs in Pioneer Valley, Springfield, and beyond. 10 hrs per day 2 days. postering@artspromo.org

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required: experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

The Town of Belchertown is accepting applications for the Recreations Department's Stingrays Swim Team Head Coach position. This is a non-

EMPLOYMENT

benefited seasonal position for the months of October through January. Must be experienced in competitive swimming, have a current CPR certification and a current First Aid certificate or be able to obtain above requirements upon being selected for the position. Applicants shoud have knowledge of stroke techniques as well as patience to work with children of various ages and swim levels. Job descriptions and applications are available in the Selectmen's Office at the Finnerty House, One South Main Street, PO box 670, Belchertown, MA 01007. The deadline to apply is 4:00 pm on Thursday, September 11, 2008.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Two Yorkie babies for adoption. AKC, home raised in a good environment. Shots and health guaranteed. If interested, kindly contact me at crserendipity62@gmail.com

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S. Padre, Florida. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.statravel.com.

THE BIGGEST POSTER SALE. Biggest and Best Selection. Choose from over 2000 different images. FINE ART, MUSIC, MOVIES, MODELS, HUMOR, ANIMALS, PERSONALITIES, LANDSCAPES,

ANNOUNCMENT

MOTIVATIONALS, PHOTOGRAPHY. MOST IMAGES ONLY $7, $8, $9. SEE US AT Cape Cod Lounge - Student Union ON Monday September 1st thru Friday September 5th, 2008. THE HOURS ARE 9 AM - 5 PM. THIS SALE IS SPONSORED BY WMUA 91.1 FM.

SERVICES

AFFORDABLE, CONFIDENTIAL, SAFE. Get the care you need at Tapestry Health Providing birth control, EC, Pregnancy testing, GYN and Breast Exams, HIV counseling and testing, STD Screening and treatment. 27 Pray Street, Amherst MA 413-548-9992 Walk ins welcome Tapestryhealth.org

SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIEDS...

(413) 545 - 3500

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Seeking Momentum

Redshirt senior Liam Coen, statistacally one of the best quarterbacks in FCS, and a candidate for the Walter Payton Award, will face another candidate for the award in Holy Cross' Dominic Randolph. Coen threw 10 completions last weekend for 92 yards against Albany.

Rematch of two Walter Payton candidates

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With a win under its belt and a better sense of where it needs to improve, the No. 4 Massachusetts football team looks to play spoiler on Saturday for the second season in a row against Holy Cross.

The Crusaders, who haven't played yet this year, hope to avoid losing to UMass (1-0) in their second-straight season opener. The Minutemen took the 2007 contest in Amherst, 40-30. This time, Holy Cross will defend their home turf.

The Crusaders are led by senior quarterback Dominic Randolph. The Walter Payton Award candidate put up impressive numbers in his third season as a starter. Randolph threw for over 3,600 yards, 30 touchdowns and averaged almost 330 passing yards per game.

"He's a good player," UMass coach Don Brown said. "The numbers are there; he can throw it."

Last season Randolph handed off to multiple running backs. Holy Cross called on Terrence Gass the most last season (101 times), rushing for 591 yards – good for 5.6 yards per carry. Mike Kielt and Nick Cole may also rush the ball against the Minutemen.

Much like UMass, Holy Cross lacks experience at wide receiver. Both teams graduated their top-two wide outs, leaving their quarterbacks with unfamiliar targets.

Though Randolph is throwing at a new corps of receivers, defensive back Sean Smalls and Co. should be on their game. The Crusaders lean heavily to throwing the ball, spreading their receivers and gunning the ball down field.

"I expect the defense to come out and have a good game," said UMass defensive cornerback Courtney Robinson.

Last year the Minutemen held off a late surge by the Crusaders, prevailing, 40-30. The Minutemen jumped out to a 37-9 lead, then late in the second half the Crusaders stormed back to pull within seven. The Maroon and White defense stood strong when it needed to, forcing a punt and sealing the game with a 37-yard field goal by for-

See FOOTBALL on page 11

Smalls and Co. prepared for Crusaders' offensive attack

Minutemen look to spoil Holy Cross' season opener

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When the Massachusetts football team travels to Holy Cross for a rematch of last season's opener, the Minutemen cannot repeat the slow start they had this past week against Albany.

UMass (1-0) knows what the Crusaders offense is capable of. Just ask them what happened to their 30-9 halftime lead when the two teams met last year.

After the Minutemen came out of halftime and extended their lead to 37 – just two minutes into the half – Holy Cross scored 21 unanswered points to bring the score to within a touchdown.

The Minutemen ultimately outlasted the Crusaders, 40-30, but it took a 100-yard kickoff return touchdown by Courtney Robinson and career-high games in rushing and receiving from Matt Lawrence (153 yards rushing, two touchdowns) and J.J. Moore (163 yards receiving, one touchdown).

UMass struggled to contain Holy Cross' resilient quarterback Dominic Randolph the entire second half. Despite being sacked five times in the game, the then-junior signal caller aired the ball out 62 times – a UMass single-game record for an opponent – for 296 yards and two touchdowns.

With Randolph and seven other starters returning in 2008, the Crusaders look to still be a force on offense.

Defense will be the key for the Minutemen this weekend. UMass missed several opportunities to get to the quarterback last weekend, and also missed many tackles, including a few on the Great Danes opening drive when running back David McCarty took a short pass 52 yards down the field for a touchdown.

"Defensively we have to do a better job," UMass coach Don Brown said. "I think we grew from the first quarter [of last week's game]."

The Minutemen did make strides last weekend after the sloppy start, and cannot go back to the way they played in the first quarter against Albany.

One advantage for UMass is Saturday's game will be its second of the season, whereas it will be the season opener for Holy Cross. With one game under the belt to the Crusaders none, the Minutemen feel they have a better idea of where they are as a team according to Brown.

Just as UMass fans have seen with Liam Coen, when you have one of the best quarterbacks in FCS, it makes everyone around them better; that is what Randolph does for Holy Cross.

The Crusaders may have eight returning starters on offense, but the UMass defense is experienced, productive, well-coached and talented. The secondary will be busy against Randolph, but standouts Jeromy Miles (free safety) and All-American cornerback Sean Smalls have seen him before and know what to expect.

"The thing I learned from last year is that he's a tough guy," Brown said. "We went after him, he kept doing his deal and he never flinched."

In terms of pressuring the quarterback, UMass was successful against Randolph in 2007. In fact, it was effective against almost all of its opponents. With the fourth best sacks per game (3.38) in the NCAA, and three returning starters on the line, UMass will once again be a force in the trenches.

But this year the Minutemen will be without defensive end David Burris, who put Randolph on the ground three times last year.

The front four must get pressure on Randolph to force him to make errors. That may be tough because the Holy Cross leader on offense does not make many mistakes; he threw eight interceptions in 2007, none of which came when he threw 62 passes against the Minutemen.

If the front four and back four on defense are doing their jobs, it will allow the linebackers to play more freely and give middle linebacker Josh Jennings an opportunity for another huge game.

Despite leaving the game on different occasions due to the weather and his first career start at middle line-backer, Jennings still grabbed the Co-CAA Defensive Player of the Week Award. His career-high 13 tackles and first-career interception helped him achieve the award.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com

UMass coach Don Brown was satisfied with his team's 28-16 victory over Albany in Week 1, but knows his team must improve.

Junior Cristina Adams and the Minutewomen open their home schedule against New Hampshire today as they look to better their stellar 22-8 career record in home openers.

UM seeks first win

Minutewomen host UNH in 2008 season home opener

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's soccer team has a knack for starting off its season the right way at home.

The Minutewomen (0-1-1) are 22-8 in home openers and last season defeated Iona, 2-1, giving UMass coach Jim Rudy his 300th career win.

UMass also had eleven consecutive home-opening wins before its first defeat in 1989, dominating teams that traveled to Amherst for the start of the season.

But with top offensive threats Sydney Stoll and Meghan Gould sidelined with injuries, the Minutewomen will look to create more offense with a starting lineup that features just one returning starter from a year ago.

"That's a lot of firepower that's gone now, so we are trying to figure out how that works," Rudy said.

The Maroon and White will open its home 2008 season when it hosts New Hampshire today at 4:30 p.m. The Wildcats are coming off a stellar 2007 campaign where they finished with an 11-7-2 overall record and 6-1-1 in the America East Conference.

"I hope we can score some goals," Rudy said. "I took a look at last years starting line-up. This year we have one person who is in their position from last year. Everyone else has been shifted, or some one new has come in."

Rudy also has a very young team; 12 of the 22 players are underclassman including eight new freshmen. These players will look to have some sort of impact during the season. He has used the same starting line-up in both games, with five seniors, two juniors and four sophomores securing starting positions.

On Aug. 29th, the Minutewomen could not come up with any goals against Maine, but were able to stabilize the defense, playing to a 0-0 tie. Maine (1-2-0) outshot UMass, 8-6, with four of the Black Bears shots coming in the first half. The Minutewomen held advantages in corners as well as fouls, and Rudy feels that the team is playing good fundamental soccer.

"We are doing pretty well with the ball," Rudy said. "There's some skill out there, some deception and combination play, but it's our final ball, and that's typical for a team that's played in, it's harder to create scoring."

See W. SOCCER on page 12

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI ○ H: 89 | SAT H: 76 | SUN H: 79 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2008

The Great Drinking Debate

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 4

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Waszczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COMICS EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Garber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenswaike
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mulholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kuczwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Waxman
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cernak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FALL AND SPRING SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS OPEN SEVEN BUSINESS DAYS A WEEK. OFFICES OPERATING IN ADVERTISING, BUSINESS, EDITORIAL IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ADELPHIAN LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIDING IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1996. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson
COPY EDITOR
Lucas Correia
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes, Brandon Sylvia
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION
Kathy Shea

Sports drinks deemed harmful

BY SARA CODY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

A scientific study conducted at the University of Massachusetts is aiming to prove that designer energy drinks and sports bars may do more harm then good.

"I'm not trying to say all sports drinks are evil," laughs Barry S. Braun, an associate professor of kinesiology and the director of the energy metabolism laboratory at the University of Massachusetts.

The positive effects that exercise has on the human body are irrefutable. They have repeatedly been scientifically proven. However, there are some preconceived notions that dominate the fitness world, such as the idea of "carbing up," or eating a high-carb diet either before or after a workout.

The whole world watched Olympic swimming phenomenon Michael Phelps shatter the previous records set by past Olympians at the 2008 summer games. Perhaps one aspect of this swimming machine that is equally as impressive as his lightning-fast speed in the water or his washboard abs was his unbelievable 12,000 calorie-a-day diet during Olympic training.

"The big thing is to distinguish between athletes who are trying to increase their performance and maintain this performance for their next workout. For the average person trying to keep from gaining weight or trying to maintain their physique, the helpful effects of this tend to be less," says Braun.

Braun encourages students to really think about the reasons why they're embarking upon exercise regimens. Phelps needed to ingest 12,000 calories a day in order to keep up with his rigorous five-hours-per-day, six-days-per-week training schedule to prepare himself for the Olympics. If the average college student were to indulge himself on a 12,000 calorie-a-day diet, they would have to enlist the help of their roommates to roll him around campus to make it to class on time.

Braun was interested in looking at a diet that was high in carbohydrates and its effects on the human body, and conducted a study with the help of three of his graduate students. Steve Black, Karla Holz and Brooke Stephens-Hasson.

The results of their research were strikingly similar. One of the positive effects they discovered exercise to have on the human body was the increase in effectiveness insulin has on blood sugar after working out.

Insulin is a very important hormone in blood that converts sugar into an energy source that is used immediately for energy to protect the body from tapping into its auxiliary energy reserves. If insulin fails to function properly, diseases such as diabetes can result.

The results of this research supported the hypothesis that ingesting food or beverages high in carbohydrates completely cancels out the positive metabolic effects of exercise, such as the increased effectiveness of insulin. Their studies showed that it is strictly the amount of carbohydrates, and no the amount of calories, that produces this negative effect. The timing of the meal, whether before or after the workout, is not a factor. However, all three studies concluded that exercising was more beneficial than not exercising at all.

Braun's advice is that if you intend on getting in shape, exercise and try to avoid overloading on carbs, and beware of carbs in energy drinks. Energy drinks often boast to having essential vitamins and minerals within their pretty packaging, but in reality are sneaking unnecessary carbohydrates into your system.

"I hope [the results of this study help] people resist the urge to reach for something they saw on TV or in a glossy magazine, and think about why they are exercising in the first place. [Designer energy drinks have] gotten a ton of airplay and have become more mainstream," says Braun.

However, it would also be detrimental to your health to cut carbs out of your diet completely.

Kim Conran, a senior nutrition and psychology double major, recommends, "After a workout, you should eat a balance of carbs and protein."

Protein is necessary to build muscle, so for instance an apple with one or two tablespoons of natural peanut butter is a healthy choice. In order to build muscle, concentrate on strength training and getting an adequate balance of carbs, proteins and fats, unless you do happen to be training for the Olympics.

Sara Cody can be reached at scody@student.umass.edu

UMass signs petition to lower national drinking age to 18

DRINKING from page 1

a bad idea," said UMass senior Sean Daly. "They tried lowering it once and it didn't work out." He worries about the drinking problems just starting earlier, in high school.

"You get inexperienced drivers, they start drinking and driving and end up killing themselves and other people," said Daly.

UMass sophomore Joy Greenberg thinks it makes more sense to lower the drinking age. "People who are 18 are allowed to vote, they should be allowed to drink...[the 21-year-old drinking age] does more harm than good, they have no drinking age in Europe and they don't go crazy over there."

Regardless of the outcome, Amethyst has gotten the public debate they were looking for.

"No matter where you stand on this issue, it's impossible to look at what has happened over the last three or four days and say this is a settled question," said Middlebury President John McCardell in interviews last Friday.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@dailycollegian.com

Hampshire given grant

BY DANIEL SCHEER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Last summer, the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, a non-profit organization, awarded Hampshire College $730,000 for the creation of a multidisciplinary language program.

Hampshire College President Ralph Hexter hopes the grant will provide an opportunity for students to be better prepared for real world challenges that await them.

"The support of the Mellon Foundation accelerates our making Hampshire College into a community more reflective of the world in which we live," said President Ralph Hexter in a press release.

The grant will further the President's mission to enhance students' responsibility and cultural understanding of the world. Dean of Faculty Aaron Herman described the grant as a "pool of money for faculty development and to support faculty initiatives to integrate languages into courses." Herman hopes that the grant will "develop Hampshire College into a language-learning community."

The Language Learning Community grant gives Hampshire students the opportunity to learn any language.

Hampshire is often known as an alternative college that engages experimental projects.

"We feel that we have certain characteristics that other schools don't," Herman commented. Indeed, Hampshire lacks traditional, academic departments and uses a portfolio-based grading system.

"We do not fit easily in a traditionally-based system," he said.

The grant finances a new program coordinator and post-doctorate graduate students. Herman insisted that the grant money will not add to administrative bureaucracy.

"We are currently hiring a language coordinator who will be a resource person for faculty and students more than an administrator."

The language program will accommodate the individually-focused studies of each Hampshire student. "It's relatively easy to do an independent study here," Herman noticed. Hampshire students often pursue individualized studies abroad in field studies or direct enrollment in universities. Approximately 35 percent of Hampshire students study abroad.

According to Herman, students and faculty traditionally learn a language as a means to eventually read and interpret classic texts.

"Lots of people approach learning a language as a tool to do something," he said. "We want to provide students a tool for their work."

Five College students also have the option to benefit from the program.

"With the support of their home institutions, sure, we hope so," Herman said. "We are enthusiastic supporters of the Five Colleges."

The Mellon Foundation has several programs in addition to higher education that receive funding, including museums, the performing arts and the environment. Focusing on long-term investments, the foundation's online mission statement says its focus is to develop "thoughtful, long-term collaborations with grant recipients and invests sufficient funds for an extended period to accomplish the purpose at hand and achieve meaningful results."

Daniel Sheer can be reached at dj50@hampshire.edu

West Nile found in local mosquito

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The West Nile virus has been detected in the Pioneer Valley, according to a news release. A sampling of mosquitoes tested positive for the disease in the Amherst area.

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health states on their Web site that starting this past June, mosquitoes have been routinely collected and tested for the potentially deadly virus.

The West Nile virus was commonly found in Africa, West Asia and the Middle East before it became prevalent in the western hemisphere as well, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Web site.

MDPH fact sheet states that while many who are infected may not show any outward symptoms, about 20 percent will experience flu-like symptoms, including a rash, fever, nausea and body aches.

The danger of the West Nile virus occurs in a mere one percent of cases. The virus can cause encephalitis (an inflammation of the brain), meningitis (an inflammation of the brain casing) or meningoencephalitis (a combination of the two). These diseases can cause coma, muscle weakness, paralysis or even death.

Anyone with a history of a weak immune system or those over 50 years old are most susceptible to the dangerous effects of the West Nile virus.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@dailycollegian.com

E-coli detected in Amherst, false alarm

First water test shows up positive, second declares town free of bacterium

BY IAN EDWARD DETTELFSEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Over Labor Day weekend, coliform and E.coli were detected at Village Park Apartments on East Pleasant Street in North Amherst.

E.coli is a water-born bacterium which collects around stagnant pools, carcasses of the recently deceased, feces, and areas of general decay.

Robert E. Parriseau, a local water resource director, was surprised. For the first time in his 20 years on the job, a potentially harmful pathogen had been detected. He readied a boil water policy and waited.

A second test came back negative. Officials everywhere breathed easier. Stocking extra water bottles was called off. After many automated phone calls and e-mails from Town Manager Larry Shaffer, and lots of staff hours later, everyone went back to their lives free of tainted water.

Parriseau said that it may have been a flawed sample. It was mainly the coliform, an indicator of a deadly agent, that caused the commotion. As a precaution, more sterilizing chlorine was put in the pipes.

E.coli is a well-known bacterium in laboratories. Its length of study spans decades. If the strain found in North Amherst had been a pathogen, it would have been readily identified as such after its 24-hour culture had been collected and examined.

E.coli is a fixture in the lower intestinal tract for most humans. It's a bacterium that grows quickly because it has one chromosome. Among laboratory based microorganisms, E.coli is "kind of like the white rat," says Elizabeth S. Stuart, associate professor of microbiology at the University of Massachusetts. "It's cheap to grow, cheap to maintain, and we have a lot of information on it."

Lots of research scientists can do a test using a specific strain of E.coli to compare with and add to other strains in a wide body of knowledge concerning this bacterium. It has a basic modeling system with mechanisms that can be used to explore gene expression (how genes reveal in the body), gene regulation (what controls them), DNA replication (forming new cells) and DNA repair (which looks at systems of DNA recovery, which sometimes lead to mutations such as tumors, etc. and more).

However, there are dangerous types of E.coli. Strains such as 0.157:H7, which target the young, old and weak, are tested for in many hospitals. Whether it could merely weaken the body or pose life-threatening conditions depends on the particular qualities of the bacterium and how much of it is present.

Ian Edward Dettelfsen can be reached at iandettelfsen@hotmail.com

WRITE FOR NEWS!

news@dailycollegian.com

MEFA cutbacks concern UM students

UMass students feel effects of U.S. credit crisis

By Andrea Murray
Collegian Staff

Every year, students across the nation, including those at the University of Massachusetts, attempt to figure out how they will pay for college.

There are a multitude of options, their own personal savings, their parent or guardian's savings income, scholarships, grants, financial aid and monetary gifts from family. But for many, if not most students, that is still not enough. Student loans typically bridge this gap for many costly school expenses. Of course, with these loans come interest rates, and the lower the better. In Massachusetts, the lowest student loan rates are available through the Massachusetts Educational Financing Authority (MEFA). This year, MEFA is not an option.

MEFA announced on July 28, 2008 that they couldn't secure the funds for the loans that they have offered for over 26 years. This abrupt news sent over 40,000 Massachusetts students and their families scrambling to find other options.

MEFA's student loan program has offered over $2.3 billion in education loan bonds since its inception in 1982. The Massachusetts State Legislature founded the program in response to concerns about the growing cost of higher education.

MEFA offers loans, college savings programs and a Prepaid Tuition Program. They have assisted over 200,000 families in paying for college.

Here at UMass, about 10 percent of students depend on MEFA every year to pay their tuition and board bills.

"I may have to take this semester off if I can't get approved for a loan," said Shayna Murphy, days before the semester began. "I'll think of something. I may end up having to work two jobs."

Murphy, a UMass Junior, was counting on using a MEFA student loan for the 2008-2009 school year.

"This summer, I went to England, and I paid for that myself. I thought that MEFA would be around this fall to help out, but it's not," Murphy said.

> "I may have to take this semester off if I can't get approved for a loan. I'll think of something. I may end up having to work two jobs." – UMass Jr. Shayna Murphy

MEFA's loans are private family loans that are available on a non-need basis. They are among the nation's lowest cost education loans. They allow students and families to borrow anywhere from $2,000 up to the full cost of education. MEFA accepts students from any state, as long as they attend one of over 70 participating Massachusetts colleges.

Some lenders only give the lowest rates to the most qualified, but MEFA provides the same low interest rate to all. Other lenders like Astrive and Wells Fargo offer private loan rates based directly on the individual's credit history, and other varying rates.

Last year, MEFA offered undergraduate student loans with a 6.39 percent fixed interest rate or a 7.55 percent variable interest rate. Origination fees were only 2.55 percent for both loans. On a Federal Parent PLUS loan, the origination fee is 4 percent. MEFA's student loans offer the lowest in all rates for student loans in the state.

According to the 2008 Sallie Mae study, "How America Pays For College," the most often used source by families paying for college is parents' current income. But the second most frequently used source of paying for college is student loan programs like MEFA.

Once the news of MEFA's unavailability hit campus, the UMass Financial Aid Office offered help via the UMass Helpline to parents and students with questions about further financing options.

"We are guiding families to first exhaust grant aid, then federally backed student loans and then move onto the PLUS loan," said Ed Blaguszewski, Director of News and Information at UMass.

Federal Parent PLUS loans offer a fixed interest rate and the ability to defer payments while in school. Only graduate students, people pursuing professional degrees and parents with a dependent student can apply for PLUS loans. The interest rate is 8.5 percent, making them the best choice for students after MEFA loans.

Federal Parent PLUS Loans are offered to parents with dependent students. They are available through Federal Family Education Loan (FFEL) and the William D. Ford Direct Loan Program. FFEL loans carry a fixed interest rate of 8.5 percent regardless of a customer's credit history, income, assets or

See MEFA on page 5

Student Loan Interest Variations

MEFA
6.39% fixed interest student loan

Federal Parent PLUS loan
8.5% fixed

Parent PLUS direct loan
7.9%

Private Loans
higher than PLUS loans, depending on credit

Gabrielle Ruddock-Fisk picks up her excess check from the Bursar's Office in Whitmore on Wednesday. The Bursar's Office has been very busy during the first week of the semester due to the high volume of calls regarding the financial situations of students.

Students turn to private loan orgs. in wake of MEFA's loan cutbacks

MEFA from page 4

collateral. A Direct Loan carries an interest rate of 7.9 percent.

To obtain one of these loans, the parent must have an acceptable credit history, which isn't always the case. This weakens the student's chance of getting the loan. However, these loans can also cover books, supplies and travel in addition to tuition and room and board. Sallie Mae reported that new federal legislation made qualifying for PLUS loans easier this year.

Amy Riordan, a UMass senior, had a similar experience to Murphy. She began her career at UMass relying on MEFA's program each year. A surprise came this summer when she received a letter in late July informing her that MEFA could not get enough funding for its loans this year. MEFA cited the economy as the reason that it could not secure its usual funds to offer low interest rate loans.

"I didn't know until about two weeks ago whether I would be at UMass, or anywhere, to finish my bachelor's [degree]," said Riordan.

Riordan turned to Sallie Mae to finance her senior year at UMass. Luckily, she got a fixed interest loan, but it is still 1.5% higher than her MEFA loans – even with a parent cosigner.

> "I made the mistake of thinking 'I'm just a student, this economy situation is really only going to affect how much gas I buy for my car. It was a huge shock to think I might not be able to finish school." – UMass Sr. Amy Riordan

For Riordan, a student who receives no financial aid, her loans pay for everything. It wasn't just her tuition, it was her apartment, books and other living expenses.

"I made the mistake of thinking 'I'm just a student, this economy situation is really only going to affect how much gas I buy for my car,'" said Riordan. "It was a huge shock to think I might not be able to finish school."

Sallie Mae, the leading student loan lender in the nation, is a private and federal loan lending company that has been around for 35 years. When MEFA announced that they couldn't secure funds, Sallie Mae quickly became a source for students. They also offer Tuition Pay that allows students to pay for their college on a monthly payment plan with no interest incurred.

Sallie Mae offers Stafford loans. The interest rate on Subsidized Stafford loans went down to 6 percent fixed in 2008 from 6.8 percent in 2007. No interest is charged while students are in school, but subsidized loans are only given to students with a financial need. Unsubsidized Stafford loans, on the other hand, carry a fixed interest rate of 6.8 percent and are offered regardless of financial need.

Sallie Mae offered undergraduates the option to borrow an additional $2,000 more this year than was previously allowed through the Stafford loan program.

Sallie Mae and other companies offer private student loans as a final solution for those who still have financial need. Interest rates are based upon on how creditworthy the student is. There are no guarantees for interests to be fixed and these loans do not have a deferment option. Cosigners can give students without a credit history an advantage on getting one of these loans.

"It is too early to tell [whether private loan volume has gone up or not] since the school year is just beginning," said Patricia Christel of Sallie Mae.

With the crisis passing us, one can assume that the number of students turning to private loans must have increased.

The speculated economic crash across the nation has finally trickled down to affect student loans.

Kentucky students went through a similar crisis this summer. However, their ending was a little bit sweeter. The non-profit Kentucky Higher Education Student Loan Corporation stalled as well, due to a lack of funding. They offer 6 percent interest rate federal subsidized loans and 6.8 percent unsubsidized loans much like MEFA. But Governor Steve Beshear purchased a $50 million bond from The Student Loan People, allowing the non-profit to "go about its business ... without interruption."

Despite the loss of MEFA as an option, UMass did report that no students had to drop out of school this year as a result of losing their MEFA loans. There is even hope that MEFA can offer loans as early as spring of 2009, but it is still unclear if this will be possible.

Andrea Murray can be reached at amurray@dailycollegian.com.

How The Average American Family Pays for College

Information courtesy of the Sallie Mae "How America Pays For College" 2008 Study.

32% Parent Income/Savings
23% Student Borrowing
16% Parent Borrowing
15% Grants/Scholarships
10% Student Income/Savings
3% Friends/Relatives Support

Students wait in line to pick up their excess checks at the Bursar's Office in Whitmore on Wednesday. Many students experienced long waits after students flooded the office with questions.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Gustav: a disaster in disguise

Nicholas O'Malley

The levees did not fail, and the city was not flooded. Such words were encouraging after the Hurricane Katrina catastrophe that swept over New Orleans a few years ago.

Now, three years later, New Orleans has undergone miraculous efforts in order to prepare the city for the next major storm to hit the gulf. Many "I-frame" levees that failed during Katrina have since been replaced with the stronger, better designed "T-frame" levees. The heights of the walls have been raised, many to the optimal height of 15 feet.

Regardless of their expectations and planning, the improvements on the city's protection from flooding were truly tested during Gustav's landfall. Thankfully, the city was not directly hit by the Category 2 storm, and did not sustain major damage or casualties.

Therein lies the problem.

The city of New Orleans was the focal point of the destruction left in the wake of Katrina. The despicable reaction of government aid coupled with inept preparation by residents led to one of the worst natural disasters in recent history.

The city was not the only victim. Countless other smaller communities were rocked by Katrina three years ago, and now by Gustav. The storm's estimated damage is between 2 and 10 billion dollars and could cause extended power outages in some parts of Louisiana.

With the popular belief that the levees are sufficient, will enough be done to prevent another disaster for New Orleans?

Unfortunately, they may not receive enough relief since the disaster received nowhere near the attention that Katrina received. Efforts to rebuild communities after Katrina stretched far beyond the city limits, and it was the attention it received through media and charitable foundations that led to major recovery efforts.

With New Orleans escaping the full force of the storm, the outcry for relief that was present three years ago will almost be silent. Contributions toward post-Katrina rebuilding will most likely continue and increase. But these will only come from individual groups. Our government claimed that it was not aware of the disaster caused by Katrina until hours after it was reported on TV, leading to a debacle of an effort by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and other relief organizations. Of course, this all occurred while the entire nation was in an uproar.

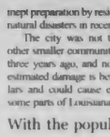
Now, the same government is in a similar position with a lower-profile disaster that has raised little controversy. Why would a government that delayed relief during Katrina rush to help this time around?

As if that weren't enough, there is the issue that the city's levees barely held. According to some officials, if Gustav had been a direct hit, the results may have differed.

With the levees even in question after a Category 2 storm not directly hitting the city, how could the city's safety be assured in another Katrina?

But with the popular belief that the levees are sufficient, will enough be done to prevent another disaster for New Orleans? Many headlines are portraying the city's preparation as a complete success. The number of evacuees during Gustav dwarfed the Katrina numbers. Many residents are attempting to return already with businesses eagerly waiting.

New Orleans believes that it is ready to return to normal. Its walls passed the test of Gustav. Will the city and its residents start to believe that the changes made after Katrina have safeguarded the city and put a stop on the efforts that have brought them so far?



Whether or not you believe in global warming or how much impact it may have, hurricanes are becoming stronger and more frequent. The events of three years ago should serve as a reminder of that. A sense of complacency towards the city's protection will only lead the city to repeat the mistakes of Katrina.

The levees of New Orleans, the organization of evacuations, and relief efforts have sufficed so far this year. However, Gustav was not New Orleans' true test. It may take months, or even years, but the chances of a storm of Katrina's caliber hitting New Orleans is far too great to remove the city's protection as one of the government's major concerns.

So while the city may have held strong against Gustav, the efforts to safeguard the city after Katrina are not yet where they need to be.

Nicholas O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Miley Cryrus and more than 7 things to hate

Tina Ortitz

Miley Cyrus is America's favorite little jailbait and the music industry's rising Lolita. Her tweendom knows no boundaries. She's on TV, the radio and at the budding age of 15, been immortalized as a Barbie doll.

Needless to say, I'm not impressed. In fact, I've got a freshly-sharpened Ticonderoga on hand at all times, so when I hear her songs, I see how close I can get to my brain through my ear.

Traditionally, I pardon talentless pop stars, as their recording of horrible music is usually a victimless crime. However, I fear the celebrity she gained may lead her on a similar path traveled by her pop star predecessors, one spiked with syringes and sex scandals.

With her first round of scandalous photos already leaked on the Internet, I worry that young girls, my 13-year-old sister included, are scrupulously taking notes on this trainwreck-in-training.

I can accept that Miley Cyrus herself is a casualty of the competitive world of show business and that the public carries responsibilities as consumers, yet there is still a question that remains: why is being sexually explicit becoming the most lucrative means of gaining celebrity for young starlets?

Forget acting lessons, a sex tape is today's best resume polisher. It has become a frightening trend over the past few years and seems to be a right of passage for young girls in Hollywood.

However disturbing you may find that to be, I think it's overshadowed by a more depressing question — why as a society do we enjoy watching the demise of other human beings?

It's like some twisted game of celebrity Jenga. The media takes turns destroying someone's stability in hopes that they aren't the ones responsible for their downfall.

Undeniably, the part we all anxiously anticipate, is watching the tower fall. The writers of "South Park" brilliantly prophesied the future of Miley Cyrus in a scathing episode where the citizens of South Park kill Britney Spears and use her rotting corpse as fertilizer for a corn harvest.

Afterwards, as they watch the tabloids report on Miley Cyrus, they all rest assured the next year's harvest will be plentiful. Although wildly sarcastic, the message was in the traditional "South Park" fashion, caustic and distressingly honest.

Miley Cyrus has yet to become a member of the commando clan, and thus far seems to be keeping her privates...well, private.

We thrive on watching the rich and famous wither. It's an embarrassing reality most are guilty of. But before we all come down too hard on ourselves, I can't help but think there is still room for the argument that Britney, Lindsay and Paris weren't aware of the price of fame, before they forgot or decided not to put on underwear.

Miley has yet to become a member of the commando clan, and thus far seems to be keeping her privates...well, private. But between the debatably nude Vanity Fair cover and the MySpace.com photos leaked, prospects seem dim.

I guess hate is too strong of a word and pity might be more appropriate. Miley's work isn't really marketed to me, seeing as I'm neither a 12-year-old girl nor a 35-year-old man.

It became shockingly clear I'd outgrown the targeted demographic for pop music when I needed to reference Urbandictionary.com to define the phrase "superman that ho," coined by pop-hop halfwit, SouljaBoy. (If you don't know what it means, believe me — you are better off that way.)

I'm not a Barbie doll, but at least I can say I haven't put a price on the sanity that comes with having a personal life. I can't imagine ever wanting every single aspect of my life put on display for the world to see. Or set a dollar amount I would accept in exchange for the human right to personal privacy.

So let's say Miley Cyrus breaks the mold and ends up living a sober life, planting trees, donating money and adopting children from all over the world. Would she pioneer a new, more respectable breed of celebrity?

I'm afraid not. There are just entirely too many talent agencies teeming with wide-eyed preteens who would do anything for a glimpse of the spotlight.

There is nothing that can be done about the squadrons of Jean Benet Ramseys already eager to fill the plastic pumps once worn by Britney Spears and Tara Reid. So I'm thinking I won't buy the next celebrity news magazine, and I hope more choose to do the same. Maybe somehow it will translate into a "pass" on my turn in celebrity Jenga.

Tina Ortiz is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kortiz@student.umass.edu

China's less than gold-worthy actions

Brad DeFlumeri

China's Olympic showcase has ended. By all accounts, it was a resounding success: the games showed Beijing to be capable of producing spellbinding athletic excellence, photogenic television spectacles, and ruthless, logistic efficiency.

The communist regime went to great lengths to demonstrate that its technological acumen and athletic excellence succeeded where other nations have failed. England, as host of the 2012 Summer Games, will be hard-pressed to follow suit.

After securing an impressive 51 gold medals, state-generated clear skies, and the respect of an enthralled Western television audience and media, it can be argued that China could not have hoped for a better overall Olympic outcome. But at what cost did all of this international acclaim come?

Before the games, many warned about China's repeated violations affecting citizens' humans rights, economic complicity in the ongoing genocide in Sudan's Darfur region, ruthless aggression in censoring Internet sites critical of Beijing's historic brutality, and willingness to forcibly evict its own citizens from their property in order to make room for China's Olympic architecture.

No one denounced China's right to host these games more vociferously or eloquently than Smith College professor Eric Reeves. For years before the games, he warned of the dangerous precedent inherent in allowing a police state like China to host the Olympics. For even longer than that, he served as a prominent researcher on the ongoing wars in Sudan.

He meticulously documented China's support to Sudan's murderous regime that cleared land — and the people inhabiting it — for further oil exploration in resource-rich southern Sudan. In the Boston Globe, he announced, "If China is to be a legitimate host of the 2008 Olympics, the preeminent event in international sports, it cannot be complicit in the ultimate international crime: genocide. The world community must respond more forcefully to this intolerable contradiction."

Foreign leaders also talked tough about using this global stage to politically challenge Beijing to make humanitarian concessions. But neither President Bush nor President Nicholas Sarkozy of France followed through with action on the promise of their rhetoric. So we were left with China, already cheating in global trade by overprotecting its domestic industries. Not only is the country cheating its way through age forgery on the way to Olympic gold medals in gymnastics, but also callously making a mockery of Western freedoms and human dignity throughout the games.

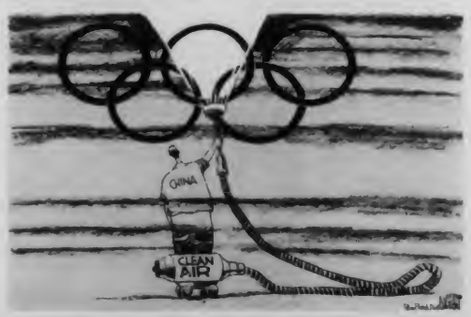
Take for example, China's treatment of Wu Dianyuan and Wang Xiuying. These women were unhappy with the minimal compensation they received from their government after their property had been forcibly confiscated to make room for the Olympic complex. In response, they filed an application to protest during the games in one of Beijing's three "official protest zones."

Not only were their applications for protest — along with everyone else's — denied, but they are also facing a year in a hard labor camp, having been charged with disturbing the public order. The ages of these apparent threats to public safety: 77 and 79. The younger of the two is nearly blind and walks with a cane.

In a recent Boston Globe column, columnist Jeff Jacoby observed, "When thugs host the Olympics, thuggish behavior can be expected: as in 1936 and 1980 (in Germany and the U.S.S.R.), the 2008 Games were a showcase for a dictatorship. In such a travesty, Americans should have played no part."

Given our deep economic ties and indebtedness to an increasingly powerful and confident China, it is no wonder why we didn't boycott these games as we did in 1980. It would have taken a great deal of moral strength and refreshingly rare political leadership for any Western leader to denounce China's atheistic, murderous and oppressive regime. The fact that this didn't occur, while disheartening, was not surprising.

Various estimates indicate that around 80 percent of the Chinese are satisfied with their lives and optimistic about the future of their country. The Chinese people, many commentators argue, are content sacrificing the same political freedoms that so many people in America take for granted. They tolerate an authoritarian ruling Chinese Communist Party in exchange for the profuse economic opportunities found in this capitalist country calling itself communist.



What is more ominous is that China, a nation seemingly so proud of its ancient civilization and its profound contributions to human culture, goes to painstaking lengths to hide from its citizens. Any mention of the Tiananmen Square student massacre in 1986 and virtually any anti-Beijing political ideology is kept from its citizens.

A regime that cannot openly and honestly accept the misdeeds of its past or respond in kind to legitimate criticism is not only unlikely to change for the better, but also compelling its citizens to live in an intellectually-stifled unreality. One wonders when China's resilient citizens will grow unhappy with its lack of freedoms. Surely, the nation's potent economic growth will not continue forever.

Until then, we ought to learn from what was made obvious to us during Beijing's two-week Olympic fiasco: endorsing this government's oppressive behavior through our interactions only makes it more confident and emboldens it to further lash out against human dignity. The 2008 Beijing Summer Olympics revealed everything that is wrong about a godless communist regime which hides its own shameful history from its people while continuing to engage in brutal state-organized political oppression.

China made clear that it rejects the very Western standards of progress and freedom that have allowed so many countries in Eastern Europe and Asia to flourish after shaking free from communist and authoritarian rule. American participation in these games gave China's ruling party every bit of legitimacy that it doesn't deserve.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflumeri@student.umass.edu

Riled up?
Write it down.

Cool off with Ed/Op.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

ARTS & LIVING

Savana Mazumder (right) purchases a poster from Chris Alexander (left) while other students browse through the posters on display in the Student Union Cape Cod Lounge.

Annual WMUA poster sale to wrap

Students personlaize dorms

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

Freshmen, take notice.

By now you know how cramped, bleak and clinical-looking the dorms really are. If you are lucky, this will be the ugliest space you might ever have to inhabit. As cells go, you could do worse. You could also do a whole lot better.

It does not fade easily, the institutional vibe which clings to the dorms. It's not just the cinderblock walls or the rock hard, extra-long twin beds which do the dorms a disservice, it's the feeling of being stuck in someone else's room. That someone else is a hot-blooded university which does not want you messing up any of its stuff. To guard against it they have given you tiled floors and clunky furniture strong enough to withstand your kicks, spills and general fiddles.

There is not much you can do to really change the place. Buy an iron cage marble set up a fish tank or pick up a few Christmas lights. The place is never homes, but with the right accoutrements, it can be functional.

Best of all, you can hang posters.

Since Monday, the WMUA 91.1 FM poster sale has been offering students a selection of posters to purchase. Of the myriad of First Week activities staged, the poster sale seems to have the largest draw. With choices ranking in the hundreds and style running from jumbo large to nice and average, from 3D to 2D and beyond, the sale appears to have a sprinkling of just about everything.

Sadly, after 5 p.m., it will be no more.

The WMUA Poster Sale closes its doors this afternoon, after a long and lucrative week on UMass grounds. The sale is administered by the Pyramid Company. At the beginning of the fall and spring semesters, the Pyramid Company sponsors week-long visits to various campuses across the country.

For those who have been on the fence about purchasing posters, the time to act is now. Establishing good poster feng shui can be a vital move during the semester, equivalent to the purchase of a phone card or an egg crate mattress pad. Posters can be pricey, but the cost is greater still once the poster sale has passed.

Online prices for posters include shipping, which equals more money spent for a student lacking generous parents. Allposters.com is the company's online source, offering uniqueness and variety, but at a steeper cost. The average poster price online ranges from $14 to $20.

The WMUA poster sale offers many of the same popular titles featured online. Best of all, at an average of $7 to $14, they are still cheap. Not dirt cheap. Dirt cheap would be what they are charging for movie stills (which oddly, at $6, seems a bit expensive), but cheap enough not to worry about going over budget.

Or you can throw caution to the wind and charge your purchase to your UCard. You will remember it several weeks from now, when your late-night effort to raid the vending machine turns up empty-handed, but for now, you are free to relax and enjoy your poster.

For upperclassmen whose posters have been crumpled and stuffed into the backseats of cars many times over, the poster sale offers the chance to replenish a collection or to search for something new.

The categories continue to be many and varied. Music posters are divided into contemporary rock, pop, alternative, folk, blues, jazz and hip hop. Film choices ranges from the hip ("Fight Club"), to the classic ("Casablanca"), to the spectacularly cheesy ("The Breakfast Club").

Each section of the Poster Sale speaks to our expected interests, like posters of Guinness next to posters of girls making out. Tailor made for the average women's studies major, or for the average college guy?

You be the judge.

The poster sale also makes for strange bedfellows. For instance, what is Johnny Depp doing next to that inspirational poster of Nelson Mandela, or that poster of Tiananmen Square? Is there really a demand for posters of Tiananmen Square? And what is this – Billie Holiday with Biggie Smalls?

Strange bedfellows indeed.

For your own room, it helps to have a theme. If you are of the Ugg-wearing, Southwest variety, "The Notebook" may work its way into your constellation of posters somewhere, which you can follow up with Gustas Klimt's "The Kiss" and perhaps Andy Warhol's infamous multi-colored portrait of Marilyn Monroe.

Or you can go the unexpected route. Instead of Tony Montana, why not switch it up with "Goldfinger," "First Blood" or even "Dirty Harry?" If you are in the mood for something psychedelic, Hendrix and Morrison may be your first desire, but look around. If you are standing in line beside another Hendrix, Morrison or Marley poster holder (and chances are you will be), why not look around for something more?

Posters fill space, but they are also a great way to publicly wear your interests. In this case, however, they are mounted to your wall instead of hanging from the hem of your sleeve.

Regardless, it is better to ditch the status quo and put your best style forward. After all, the dorms may belong to an institution, but you are the one stuck living in them for the next two semesters.

Why not make them your own?

Shayna Murphy can be reached at arts@dailycollegian.com

A student looks into one of the many binders of posters in the Cape Cod Lounge.

Out of the ordinary beer

Try something new

By Tim McCall
Collegian Staff

Ah, the first big weekend of the semester. Are you ready? Like clockwork, every fall, the first weekend has some of the biggest parties, from the Townhouses to every section of campus to the Boulders. As an elder statesman, I thought I would offer some advice to everyone.

Friends don't let friends buy 30 racks of beer. Face it, no good-tasting beer comes in a 30. Plus, there is nothing more obvious than a huge box shape taking up your backpack as you walk from house party to house party.

For this weekend, skip bottles too. Instead, take a closer look around your favorite liquor store and you will find some good sample beers in cans.

Here are my top five canned beers of all time.

Newcastle Brown Ale

Newcastle Brown Ale is one of the best beers available in a can. This imported beer will cost a little more, but it is worth it. The combination of malts, caramel and brown sugar goes down pretty easy. This beer has very little aftertaste, which is an added bonus. Other brown ales are a lot tougher on the taste buds, and will leave you in the dust.

Boddington Pub Ale

Another import canned beer good for going out is Boddington Pub Ale. Boddington will actually taste better the longer it stays out. Traditional pub should not be drank ice cold and never in a frosty mug (actually, never drink any beer in a frosty mug). If you do choose this for your party beer, let me warn you this beer explodes very easily because it is in a nitro-can. Tap it a couple times and cross your fingers. If it does explode, just toss it to your buddy who is drinking a Keystone Light. He will be surprised to find that Boddington is a creamy, smooth ale with very little hops.

Old Speckled Hen

If Boddington didn't tickle your fancy, try Old Speckled Hen. Old Speckled Hen is supposed to be served colder than Boddington, it also pours through nitro-system. But where Boddington is simple and smooth, the Hen has malty, caramel, toffee and even a little lemon. This orgy of flavor is perfect for playing card games or even flip cup.

Narragansett Lager

Are you sick of imports? Try a New England staple. Narragansett. This beer is the cheapest you are going to get out of this column: six packs cost as little as five bucks. The Spoke uptown has cans for $2. Crisp and clean tasting, this beer is filtered with very little malt, hops and water from Rhode Island (delicious). It's great for beer pong.

Sapporo

Another beer, another import. I'm sorry I didn't do this on purpose. But instead of another English beer, this time I'm going east with Sapporo. Sapporo is a Japanese beer comparable itself for Sake benefits. This beer is the most sample on the list, perfect for almost any game and affordable.

Fun fact of the day

The first beer can was invented in 1935 and was similar to modern soup cans: consumers had to either poke their own holes or remove the lids entirely. It was not until 1963 that the Pittsburgh Brewing Company invented the pull tab.

Tim McCall can be reached at tmccall@student.umass.edu

Hike the Valley

Club's first venture

By Shelby Landeck
Collegian Correspondent

The first week at the University of Massachusetts has reached its end. If reading that sentence evokes feelings of sadness and a lack of fulfillment, the UMass Outing Club has the solution. This Saturday, as part of "First Week," the popular Registered Student Organization (RSO) is leading a set of hikes in the picturesque Connecticut River Valley.

A beginner's two-mile hike to Goat's Peak on Mount Toby will be lead by Elliott Hirshler, a UMass senior, and will allow those wary of their endurance level to join in on the fun. A simple pair of sturdy sneakers and a water bottle is all you'll need to make your way to an amazing 360-degree view of the valley.

Students feeling a bit more adventurous can partake in the six-mile hike covering the Seven Sisters. The Seven Sisters comprise a ridge line in the Holyoke Mountain range, where charming views of the Connecticut River Valley can be seen throughout the hike.

That trip will be lead by James Cutler, a UMass senior and natural resources major, who has been with the Outing Club for the past three years. Cutler expects the six-mile trek to take anywhere from three to four hours, depending on the group, but encourages everyone to come out and enjoy the day.

"For the Seven Sister's hike, I would suggest a pair of shoes with good ankle support and enough water to keep you hydrated throughout the hike," said Cutler.

Due to the looks of Saturday's weather forecast, a sturdy rain coat would be good item to bring along.

To attend the hike, meet up with the group at the Student Union on Saturday afternoon at 1 p.m., where a bus will transport you and your fellow hikers to the River Valley. The event is free of charge and welcomes everyone aboard.

The UMass Outing Club, claiming as their slogan to "take people in the woods and the things with them" has been doing so since 1922, and is one of the campus' oldest and most respected RSO's.

Rise early, be considerate and consume [illegible]. Outing Club activity members are advised to eat plenty of calories from every [illegible] offered on Saturday alone.

"I love meeting people and [illegible] on-campus group but don't want to make a huge time commitment, the Club is for you. There is no number of meetings you need to attend. All you have to do is show up and enjoy," said Cutler.

If you can't be home for the hike, but are interested in seeing what the Outing Club has to offer, the first meeting of the year is being held on September 17 at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. An active forum discussing the club's future plans can be found on their Web site: www.umass.edu/outingclub. Weekly meetings held Wednesday evenings at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center.

Shelby Landeck can be reached at slandeck@student.umass.edu

SAVE $$$ ON YOUR COURSE BOOKS.
BUY THEM HERE.
LOWER PRICES ON THESE BOOKS AND LOTS MORE!!!

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St. Amherst
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop) 253-3870, 253-7816
Rush Hours 8:30-9 M-Sat, 12-5 Sun Sept 1 - Sept 15

FROM MELT-IN-THE-OVEN TO MELT-IN-YOUR-MOUTH
DOMINO'S INTRODUCES OVEN BAKED SANDWICHES

YOU GOT 30 MINUTES

3 medium one-topping pizzas
$5.55 each
413-256-8911

Better It's what we do...

Helping you feel better...

- routine, same-day and urgent medical care
- mental health care
- eye care and optical services
- physical therapy
- acupuncture
- mind/body medicine
- specialty care
- allergy clinic
- full-service pharmacy
- faculty/staff assistance program
- onsite laboratory and radiology services
- and more

Helping you live better...

- health education
- substance abuse prevention programs
- tobacco cessation
- nutrition and eating disorders services
- athletic health services
- travel medicine clinic
- support and therapy groups
- volunteer, outreach and academic opportunities
- online health information, resources
- big discounts on eyewear, pharmacy products and more

Taking better care of you...

- college health specialists
- convenient campus location
- open 24/7 during the semester

University Health Services
577-5000 • www.umass.edu/uhs
UMASS AMHERST

Lo-fi band performs

Brothers bring talent to IHEG

Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

In a Guardian interview, the fraternal Felice Brothers' drummer Simone Felice said "we like to suck a little bit." He adds, "we're like a disgusting jazz band."

While The Felice Brothers neither suck nor are a jazz band, Simone seems to have summed up the band's philosophy rather tightly. The brothers Felice (plus two unrelated friends) have entered into a brand of dirty, shambling folk, bringing their act from front porches of their small upstate New York hometown, to New York City subways, and now to the rest of the country on their U.S. fall tour.

Their tour will bring them to the Iron Horse Music Hall on Friday, Club Passim in Cambridge on Saturday, and Club Helsinki in Great Barrington on Sunday.

The Brothers hail from the town of Palenville, NY 20 minutes outside Woodstock. The fraternal three, Ian (guitar, piano, vocals), James (accordion, Hammond organ, piano, vocals), and the aforementioned Simone (drums, vocals), are joined by their friends Christmas (bass) and Farley (fiddle, washboard).

The Brothers' sound, which takes cues from fairly obvious heroes Dylan and The Band (they are rabid Levon Helm fans), makes for their largely "outlaw" appeal. Their songs tell somber tales of murder ("Frankie's Gun," "Hey Hey Revolver"), women ("Ballad of Lou the Welterweight," "Ruby Mae"), and, most importantly, drinking ("Whiskey in My Whiskey," "Where'd You Get the Liquor").

While some may fetign hard childhood times, The Felice Brothers' rise to relevance has persevered through the lowest of low incomes. After singing on their father's front porch during family barbeques, the band migrated 100 miles south to rent out a flat in Brooklyn, seemingly for the sole purpose of waking up early to play in the subway. On good days, they would apparently make $200, which went immediately back into playing music.

Their first record, 2006's "Through These Reigns and Gone," brought the Brothers their first glimpse of achievement beyond whatever busking got them. The album was selected by a Woodstock radio station, WDST, as one of their top 25 albums of 2006. This self-recorded album got enough praise to warrant British label Loose Music to release their 2007 album, "Tonight at the Arizona." The album features healthy doses of country twang, sorrowful accordion, and Ian Felice's weathered vocal, which The Guardian's Amy Fleming describes as "hoarse to the point of death."

Another ode to their gritty sound is their recording imperfections. During "Hey Hey Revolver" from "Tonight at the Arizona," a listener can actually hear the surge when lightning struck the studio and thunder rumbling as Ian Felice begins singing the first verse.

It is in this rattle that the Bob Dylan comparisons come in, and this rattle carries over to their next set of recordings, "Adventures of The Felice Brothers Vol. 1." While this record is only available at their shows, selections from it appear on this year's self-titled outing (Team Love Records), including the single "Frankie's Gun."

After touring last year with Bright Eyes, including a fairly local (and successful) show at Worcester's Palladium, the band toured in support of the new album this past spring. The summer saw them making many festival appearances, including the Bonnaroo Music and Arts Festival, All Points West, and the Newport Folk Festival in Rhode Island, where they played an hour-long acoustic set after the power went out due to storms.

They are out now on another headlining tour, stretching from early September through the beginning of November.

The Iron Horse Music Hall is located on 20 Center Street in Northampton. Tickets are $12.50 in advance, available from iheg.com or the Northampton Box Office, and $15 at the door. The show is scheduled to start at 10 p.m. Club Helsinki is located at 284 Main Street in Great Barrington. Tickets are $20, available at Clubhelsinkiweb.com and will start at 8 p.m. This show is 21+.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION

Paid Officials Needed for Flag Football, Soccer
Field Hockey, Softball, Ice Hockey & Volleyball
Clinics: Football-Sept. 9, 10, 11 Soccer-Sept. 9, 10, 11
Co-ed Softball-Sept. 15, 16 Field Hockey - Sept. 15
Ice Hockey-Sept. 16, 17, 18 Volleyball – Sept. 30, Oct. 1, 2
Call for requirements, times and locations
Still Time To Enter Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, & Softball
More Info: 215 Boyden, 545-2693
www.umass.edu/campusrec

Offense, physicality a plus for Minutemen this season

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team's hard work paid off last weekend against Boston University and it can only hope for the same offensive success taking on Siena Saturday afternoon.

The Minutemen (1-1) have three goals this season, all of which came in the double-overtime win against BU on Aug. 31. The offense isn't much of a concern for UMass coach Sam Koch; recently in practice the Minutemen have been working on defense due to the graduation of two star defenders, Kenny Cook and Doug Rappaport. The scoring seems to come more naturally for the Minutemen.

"[We've] got four really good front runners," Koch said. "Everybody has a different personality and a different way of playing."

The starting forwards, juniors Bryan Hogan and Mark DeSantis, are known for their scoring ability and strong physical play. Hogan, the leading returning goal scorer from 2007, is a good target on the attack and is skilled in ball control.

"[Hogan] is a clinical finisher when he is playing well," Koch said.

DeSantis has a strong left-footed shot and is very hard to stop when he gets open. Both DeSantis and Hogan have had a scoreless season so far, but are expected to tally up points in the upcoming games.

On the other hand, senior reserve Prince Ofosu had two goals against the Terriers, his first multi-goal game of his career. Having him able to put a few more balls in the back of the net is key for the Minutemen. Ofosu is known for his speed and ability to hold on to the ball, and being paired with freshman Chris Rouwess has brought more speed to the team's offense. Ofosu has improved his passing game and ability to move around defenders.

"[Ofosu has] certainly been a nice burst of energy for us when he goes into the game," Koch said.

Christopher Rouwess, besides his speed, is good with the ball and seeing the field. He is able to find people who are open and get in a good position to take shots.

"All four of them have a little different mix to them," Koch said.

Another strong attacker that UMass can turn to is Michael Jenga. The junior hasn't seen much time on the field yet this season, but is a good target when he gets into the game. He positions himself on the back post or inside the 18-yard box, which allows him to finish chances that other people wouldn't get to.

Koch later added that with so many options at forward he just doesn't have the ability to give them all the playing time they deserve.

The diversity between the attackers will contribute to the success of the Minutemen this weekend. The difference between the starting forwards, with their power, and the reserves, with their speed, allows the dynamic of the attack to change and the offense to be controlled by the Minutemen, another advantage the Minutemen will have over Siena.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com

UMass hopes home success continues

M. SOCCER from page 16

when we're under pressure, making sure we're making better decisions with the ball when we are in those kind of situations," Koch said. "That's one thing we've talked about. It's important to stick to our game plan and do what we do well and make sure we don't go away from that."

At Rudd Field last season, UMass finished with a 9-1 home record, including wins over BU, University of Illinois at Chicago and Central Connecticut in the NCAA tournament.

With all the practice put in, UMass is looking to bring out a better defensive effort than they had against BU. The Terriers managed 26 shots including 13 shots on goal, many of which were taken in the box.

Siena comes into the game as an underdog against UMass, having been picked to finish eighth out of 10 in their conference. The Saints are coming off a 2-0 shutout loss to Buffalo in a game they were outshot 22-9. They were also outshot 21-12 in their opening game against the New Jersey Institute of Technology, but managed to earn a 1-0 victory off a header 10 minutes left in the game.

However, just because their statistics are less than impressive does not mean that UMass can look past the Saints. Last year, Siena defeated the Minutemen 1-0 despite taking only eight shots compared to the Minutemen's 16. That game took place in Loudonville, N.Y. This time, the Saints are on the road, so it will be much tougher for them to beat the Minutemen this year. Still, Koch will not allow his team to overlook Siena.

"This is a tough game. They always battle us. It's always a game on the schedule that as coaching staff you are concerned about. You know how big a game it is for Siena," Koch said. "I think our guys understand it better now, especially after the Holy Cross game."

Saturday's game will help the Minutemen gauge how good they are compared to last year. Although a slow start does not indicate the team will have a bad season, Koch wants the Minutemen to improve on each game's mistakes as the season rolls on.

"We're looking at our own performance and we are improving. That's what we want to make sure we accomplish the week that we play."

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

THE BOLTWOOD
PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 – and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Fall Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 168C • Sept. 8 (Mon) • Sept. 9 (Tues) • Sept. 10 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Sept. 11 @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, *while earning credit!

YOU CAN'T MAKE UP YOUR INTERVIEW

After-grad careers, part-time jobs, and internships.

START BUILDING

☆ cbcAmpus.com ☆

Patry takes it upon herself to lift offense in tie vs. UNH

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

For the last two games, the Massachusetts women's soccer team wondered how it would replace the offensive firepower of forwards Britt Canfield and Sydney Stoll.

If the first half is any indication for how the Minutewomen (0-1-2) will answer that question, they may have just found that answer in Vanessa Patry. The senior forward scored both goals in Thursday's 2-2 tie against New Hampshire.

"We had great balls through from the midfield so I just did what I have to do," Patry said after the game.

Patry wasted no time putting UMass on the board, 1-0, after converting on a first career assist from defender Katie Ruggles. Patry received the deep pass before shooting the ball in the upper right-hand corner 6 minutes, 51 seconds into the game.

Patry scored her second goal 31:17 into the first half on a pass from freshman Meghan Collins inside the left post. The last time Patry scored two goals was almost two years to the day on September 3, 2006 when she scored two goals in UMass' win against Iona.

"I was just so happy that we were getting chances at goals," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "I didn't really realize it until later, and she got two nice goals in there."

Patry is currently three goals away from reaching her career high for single-season goals. She scored four goals in each of the last two seasons.

But even when Patry wasn't scoring, she seemed to have her hand in almost every play, allowing the Minutewomen to stay aggressive. UMass took more shots (24) in the game than its first two games combined (12).

Seventeen of the shots came in the first half.

"I think it's time," Rudy said, referring to the scoring chances. "We're maturing and I think we are going to be pretty good, but these things take time."

UMass has worked on implementing a more aggressive strategy this week and put what it worked on in practice during the game.

"We've really been concentrating on finding the through ball in practice so I really think we're bringing what we do in practice to the games," Patry said.

The Minutewomen put plenty of pressure on the Wildcats, bringing the entire team up to make the game go faster. The strategy did not go without some consequence, allowing New Hampshire forward Julie O'Shaughnessy to take a break-away towards the net and score in the lower part of the goal.

It did, however, keep UNH on its toes the entire game as it spent most of the first half trying to bring the ball past midfield.

"We got a lot of people forward, but that's a double-edged sword," Rudy said. "You go forward so far as often as we do, you can fatigue yourself out and we didn't get the result we were looking for."

Rudy would like to see Patry's senior year go out on a career year, but is hoping she doesn't become the go-to player that Canfield and Stoll became.

"I'm hoping we're going to get a whole bunch of [scorers on offense]," Rudy said.

Game notes

The last time a UMass player scored two goals in a game was Stoll, who tallied two against Hartford on Sept. 16, 2007. Canfield also scored twice in the second half against Xavier on Oct. 7 last year. ... Goalkeeper Lauren Luckey suffered an ankle injury with 1:25 left in the second overtime, but stayed in the game. ... The junior had a controversial save late in the game that could have otherwise dealt UMass its second loss of the season. Luckey dove for a loose ball as a UNH player went towards the ball for a shot-on-goal, however, the goalkeeper got her hands on it and was ruled a clean save.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu

UMass draws even

W. SOCCER from page 16

In the second half, both UMass and UNH traded offensive positions, with Patry, Lima and Anderson constantly bringing the ball into the UNH zone.

Patry got a feed from freshman midfielder Meghan Collins on the right side of the field and beat Golding on the inside post to put the Minutewomen in the lead at 2-1.

With a number of stops by the UMass defense and missed opportunities from the UNH offense, it looked like the Minutewomen would get their first victory of the season.

But with about seven minutes remaining in the match, forward Shaunna Kaplan recorded her second assist of the game, feeding Hourihan on the right side of the field. Hourihan blasted a shot into the lower left-hand corner of the net, tying the game at two goals apiece.

In the first overtime period, UMass had a number of chances, but again couldn't connect. In the second overtime period, fatigue set in for both teams, as the Wildcats and Minutewomen had some turnovers.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

FOR COVERAGE OF THIS WEEKEND'S FIELD HOCKEY GAME

GO TO DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Delta Chi
Fraternity Since 1890
Friendship • Character • Justice • Education

Some hear an inner voice that calls for something more out of their college experience. Something that you can start from the beginning taking your personal experiences and creating a new organization with clear values, goals, and a fresh new image. Discover what can be accomplished when strong and capable men bond together for a common purpose.

Beginning September 2008, the opportunity to become a Founding Father at UMASS will call.

Will you answer?

New to Fall 2008

www.DeltaChi.org
AdamJ@deltachi.org

Comixxx

JOURNALISM AT ITS FINEST

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Drop catalogs for cash! Need responsible person with car to drop catalogs in Pioneer Valley, Springfield, and beyond. 10 hrs per day 2 days. postering@art-spromo.org

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

The Town of Belchertown is accepting applications for the Recreations Department's Stingrays Swim Team Head Coach position. This is a non-benefited seasonal position for the months of October through January. Must be experienced in competitive swimming, have a current CPR certification and a current First Aid certificate or be able to obtain above requirements upon being selected for the position. Applicants should have knowledge of stroke techniques as well as patience to work with children of various ages and swim levels. Job descriptions and applications are available in the Selectmen's Office at the Finnerty House, One South Main Street, PO box 670, Belchertown, MA 01007. The deadline to apply is 4:00 pm on Thursday, September 11, 2008

ANNOUNCEMENT

Two Yorkie babies for adoption. AKC, home raised in a good environment. Shots and health guaranteed. If interested, kindly contact me at crserendipity62@gmail.com

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S. Padre, Florida. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

THE BIGGEST POSTER SALE. Biggest and Best Selection. Choose from over 2000 different images. FINE ART. MUSIC. MOVIES. MODELS. HUMOR. ANIMALS. PERSONALITIES. LANDSCAPES. MOTIVATIONALS. PHOTOGRAPHY. MOST IMAGES ONLY $7, $8, $9. SEE US AT Cape Cod Lounge - Student Union ON Monday September 1st thru Friday September 5th, 2008. THE HOURS ARE 9 AM - 5 PM. THIS SALE IS SPONSORED BY WMUA 91.1 FM

SERVICES

AFFORDABLE, CONFIDENTIAL, SAFE. Get the care you need at Tapestry Health. Providing birth control, EC, Pregnancy testing, GYN and Breast Exams, HIV counseling and testing, STD Screening and treatment. 27 Pray Street, Amherst MA 413-548-9992 Walk ins welcome. Tapestryhealth.org

FOR RENT

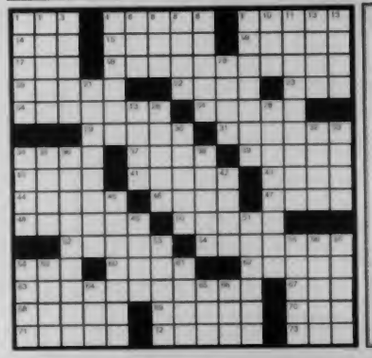
Three large bedroom Apt. for rent located on Bay Road, Belchertown. 6 miles from Umass. $1000 per month/negotiable. Call Agnes (413)-530-6996



ACROSS
1 Long, feathery scarf
4 All thumbs
9 Fancy tie
14 Inclined
15 Small ravine
16 Back tooth
17 Crude
18 Not lucky
20 Theater offering
22 Playthings
23 Thar ___ blows!
24 Orchestra section
27 Hippety-hops
29 New Orleans player
31 Set up
34 Weaponry
37 Rave about
39 Gander's mate
40 Bound
41 Leg bone
43 Castle defense
44 Flowing tresses
46 Permits to
47 Elec. units
48 Grins
50 Imaginative literary genre
52 Wing movements
54 Like spooky houses
58 Burrows or Fortas
60 Exercise rugs
62 Chutzpah
63 End of the road
67 Feedbag morsel
68 Palm fruits
69 Ill-gotten gains
70 Lyric poem
71 Brown ermine
72 Prepare to propose
73 For each

DOWN
1 Honored poets
2 Geometric paintings genre
3 Doing battle
4 Large tropical lizard
5 Holy woman
6 Little helper
7 Secret plan
8 Apprentices
9 Funny
10 Male offspring
11 Teacher's purview
12 Pledge of Allegiance
13 Family chart
19 Little nipper
21 Be eliminated from the bee?
25 Coated with glue
26 Escargot
28 Food poisoning
30 Hollow cylinders
32 Now!
33 Cats and dogs
35 500 sheets
36 Declaration of intentions
38 Leave in the lurch
42 Far East
45 Ocean fog
49 Breadth
51 Pouring aid
53 Pursue stealthily
55 Scouting group
56 Steer clear of 57 Impede
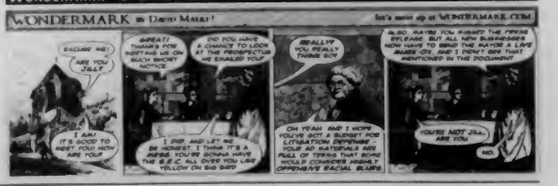
58 Tacks on
59 Like some '80s poets
61 Knock for a loop
64 Green drink
65 Rink flooring
66 Mineral in the raw

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



Submit Your Comics Now

comics@dailycollegian.com

WONDERMARK By David Malki

This is the doodle box.

No you idiot, it's for drawing pictures not...well it's not for what you tried to put in here. Sicko.

Try something new!

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 3 | 9 | | | | 8 | 5 | |
| | | 8 | 3 | | 4 | 6 | | |
| 6 | 4 | | | | | | 3 | 1 |
| | | | 4 | 2 | 3 | | | |
| | | | | 8 | | | | |
| | | | 1 | 5 | 6 | | | |
| 8 | 6 | | | | | | 9 | 3 |
| | | 7 | 9 | | 8 | 4 | | |
| | 9 | 4 | | | | 1 | 7 | |

QUOTE OF THE WEEKEND

"The sea was angry that day my friends, like an old man trying to return soup in a deli."

— Jason Alexander as "George Costanza"

CAPTION CONTEST

Winning Caption Submitted by: William Korniotes

Next week's contest will start on Monday
See the picture and submit captions at www.dailycollegian.com/caption

Fred has discovered that coating honey on the inside of his helmet is a great snacking alternative; however, it may impair his vision.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
This weekend is your chance to show off your sloppy monkfish. Take that as you will.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
There is a large deposit of crude oil underneath the chancellor's flower garden. Get a shovel and start digging.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
It's not too late to drop all your classes and sign up for scuba diving and equine studies.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You will not impress your date by tipping the waitress in coins no matter how shiny they may appear.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Hire a private investigator to analyze the inner workings of the tortellini found in Franklin DC.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your spikey tarantula legs will undoubtedly cause injury to any mates you may acquire. Shave for safety's sake.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Go to the Collegian graphics department in the Campus Center basement and serenade that saucy, saucy comics guy.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Host a Magic the Gathering tournament over the weekend. Tap the mana and start the party. BLACK LOTUS 4 Lyfe.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Anytime your actions (or odors) are best explained by citing your recent ingestion of a taco salad, you are in trouble.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
The only reason your friends hang out with you is because they think your madre is muy caliente!

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Apparently Craig's list now peddles flesh. Look in to that.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You will find a small collection of precious stones in your roommate's jewelry box.

WHAT A LADY WANTS By Dan Lucey

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2008 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Offense there, victory not

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team got the offensive production it was looking for, but did not get the wanted result, tying New Hampshire, 2-2, in double overtime yesterday at Rudd Field.

"I'm happy that we made progress and sad that we had a chance to win this one [and didn't]," UMass coach Jim Rudy said.

Playing with a depleted starting lineup due to injuries to junior forward Sydney Stoll and junior midfielder Meghan Gould, senior forward Vanessa Patry stepped up and scored two goals, both in the first half, for the Minutewomen (0-1-2).

"That's who Patry is," Rudy said. "We're going to expect a lot more like that, a few more two-goal games. She's a good player and you can see it in there. She's smart, she's technical and she works hard."

Along with Patry, sophomore midfielder Kelsey Anderson and redshirt senior midfielder Vanessa Lima were aggressive on the offensive front and helped UMass record 17 first-half shots against the visiting Wildcats (1-2-1).

The Minutewomen got their offense going early with through balls and crisp passing, putting pressure on the UNH defense right off the opening kickoff. In the 39th minute, Patry put a left-footed shot in the upper right hand corner off a pass from defender Katie Ruggles. The pass was Ruggles' first career assist, and gave the Minutewomen a 1-0 lead.

UMass' defensive unit was pushing up, trying to get another opportunity when the Wildcats caught a break.

Senior forward Vanessa Patry (right), notched both goals yesterday in UMass' 2-2 draw against New Hampshire at Rudd Field. The Minutewomen found the offense they were looking for early this season, but came out without a win.

Forward Julie O'Shaughnessy secured a left-footed pass from fellow forward Sara Hourihan and put a low shot past junior goalkeeper Lauren Luckey.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 2 |
| UNH | 2 |

With the game tied at one, UMass continued to push its offense up, getting positive shots on goal. UNH goalkeeper Nikki Golding made back-to-back-to-back saves as the Minutewomen midfielders and forwards had great opportunities, but they either kicked the ball right to Golding, over the net or bounced off the post.

"We got to the net and did all the stuff we were talking about, but a combination of some misses and some great goalkeeping ... and a post [hurt us]," Rudy said.

Along with the solid goalkeeping, the Wildcats made seven substitutions throughout the game, allowing fresh players to come in and to set up new alignments.

"They kept shifting so many people in there, Rudy said. "We sort of lost our control in being able to step up and intercept and we also lost a little bit of quickness in there."

See W. SOCCER on page 12

Reserve goalkeeper Chris Pickos and the No. 13 Minutemen host Siena on Saturday in the 2008 home opener. UMass is 1-1 so far this season after last year's run to the College Cup.

Koch and Co. host Siena in 2008 home opener

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

With two games under its belt, the Massachusetts men's soccer team will look to add another 'W' in the win column this Saturday when it faces Siena at Rudd Field.

In UMass' opener against Holy Cross last Friday, the No. 13 Minutemen were upset 1-0 in a game with several chances to tie, but couldn't convert their opportunities into goals. Two days later against Boston University, the Minutemen (1-1) earned a 3-2 double overtime victory after tying the game with three seconds left.

The Maroon and White hope it will be able to play with more consistency at home against the Saints (1-1). UMass coach Sam Koch has been preparing all week to make sure they will correct some of the errors made in the team's road games.

"We still have things that we need to work on to make sure we aren't giving the ball away

See M. SOCCER on page 11

INSIDE: BROWN, CUKO HIT LATE WINNERS FOR UMASS | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 80 LO: 57 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 2008

UMPD mislead

False report prompts e-mail alert, confusion

By Adam P. Coulter
Collegian Staff

On Sept. 4 the University of Massachusetts Police Department initially issued a crime alert regarding a reported unarmed robbery on campus, but through further investigation, the alleged victim's claim was revealed to be false. However, the possibility of charges being filed for a false report are strong, according to the UMPD.

The report was made early Thursday morning by a 22-year-old female UMass student who resides in the North Residential Area. The woman reported being accosted from behind by a white male, approximately 6-feet tall, with a dark blue sweatshirt and possibly wearing flip-flops. The young woman claimed that the man grabbed her purse and ran off, while she ran in the opposite direction. But after two initial interviews with the UMPD, problems with the women's story became evident.

"We started to see inconsistancies in her reporting during the investigation into the event last night," said UMPD Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald on Sept. 5.

The women didn't make the call until 4:30 a.m., although she had said the robbery had occurred at 1:30 a.m. that morning.

Another significant discrepancy was exposed by the campus security cameras and from police speaking with witnesses that night.

"One of many inconsistencies was that she said she was alone, but she was seen to be with someone when she arrived at her dorm. We used other people who were with her at the time and looked at the campus security cameras," said Archbald.

"We then re-interviewed her and the inconsistencies were confirmed, she admitted that she did make it up," said Archbald.

At this time the reasoning behind the phony report is unknown, but filing a false report is a misdemeanor in Massachusetts and one taken seriously by the police.

When asked about the possibility of charges being filed in this case against the female student, Archbald said, "We've spoken with the District Attorney's office and yes, it points in that direction."

He added, "All the elements concerning what needs to be there to charge someone with a false report have lined up."

The UMPD will not currently identify the women in question, but the information may be forthcoming sometime this week.

"We're looking at next week charging her and then we will release her name," Archbald said on Friday.

Adam P. Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu

'Soleil' shines at the Mullins

This weekend's Cirque du Soleil played with the breath of its audience, alternately taking it away and inspiring cheers that filled the Mullins Center. See story on page 8.

Ready, set, go for the SGA

By Michael Fox
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association is kicking off the new semester in a way which is strikingly similar to its focus last spring, with a mission to emphasize student activism on campus and make sure students' voices are heard.

One of the ways that the SGA plans on accomplishing these goals is by continuing to make sure negotiations made with the University's administration are met, and that new negotiations are discussed. These initial negotiations were made after last year's student strike, which the SGA organized to address financial aid, diversity, police presence and student space issues.

The SGA said that it had made progress in the negotiations, claiming it had opened up communication with the University's administration. Negotiations that the SGA made with last year's Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole included an increase of $600,000 for student financial aid, a student "lobby day," a commercial police advisory board where students can address issues such as undercover police presence in residence halls, and a diversity advisory council where students can advise the chancellor on diversity issues.

"Regardless of the current administration's willingness to meet with students, negotiations that came out of the strike will continue because we as a student body will not allow our efforts to be wasted," said Shaun Robinson, speaker for

See SGA on page 5

Budget increase reined in for FY08

By Emily Reynolds
Collegian Correspondent

Normally, a budget increase for higher education is seen by most who work in the field as something that is entirely positive. This year, however, the budget increase for Massachusetts higher education is met with objection from some, as it is less of an increase in funds than anticipated.

The University of Massachusetts five-campus system is faced with a 4.9 percent increase in the budget for this fiscal year, bringing it up to $492.2 million. The increase however, is $4.1 million less than legislators had proposed, due to Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick's veto of additional funds made to state-funded schools at the end of July.

Patrick's veto was met with question by some, since the governor has publicly proposed making community colleges free to students in the future.

"The governor proposed a small increase and the legislature put in more money, but then Patrick vetoed the increase," explained Max Page, an associate professor and president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

Other local colleges also received funding increases. Holyoke Community College saw an increase of 2.4 percent in its budget, while Greenfield Community College received a 1.2 percent increase. Westfield State College had a budget increase of 2.2 percent.

Although the UMass system received less money than hoped for, many were grateful for the increase that has been given.

See CUTS on page 5

On June 23, 2008, Governor Deval Patrick visited the Boys and Girls Club in Dorchester to unveil parts of a long-term plan for education reform.

A reservation for renovation

By Stella Cernak
Collegian Staff

This year, the Campus Center Hotel is undergoing a long-anticipated facelift as extensive renovations to the electrical wiring, furniture and electronics for each of the hotel's 116 guest rooms began this month.

The renovations, which are expected to cost around $9.2 million, include an upgrade to the heating and air conditioning units for each of the guest rooms, a complete revamp of the bathrooms, queen-sized beds, all new ergonomic furniture and wall-mounted flat screen high-definition television screens. These are the first extensive changes that the facility has undergone since it opened in 1970.

The majority of the funding, $7.2 million, for the project is being financed through the University of Massachusetts building authority, while UMass Auxiliary Services are providing the remaining $2 million.

"My feeling is that once it is completed, the facility will be well-positioned in the local hospitality market. What we're trying to create is a 3-star facility," Campus Center Hotel Manager David O'Connor said.

According to O'Connor, the decision to renovate the hotel was made because of the increase in the number of hotel rooms that the Amherst-Hadley area has seen in the past 5-to-10 years. Hotels such as the Courtyard by Marriot, the Holiday Inn, the Econolodge and the Hampton Inn, sit along Route 9 and cater to many UMass students and their families throughout the school year.

It is these hotels that have pushed the Campus Center Hotel to undergo renovations as a means to remain a competitive business, attractive to students and their families.

However, the newly improved hotel rooms will come at a higher price for guests. Weekday rates, which currently run at $92 per room, will rise by around $15, while the rate to rent a room on a busy weekend, now $130, could climb to $185.

Renovations are expected to continue until April and will be conducted on one floor at a time, leaving three floors available for guests. Right now however, two floors are being renovated, leaving only floors six and seven available.

Renovations will not affect the Campus Center or students living in temporary hotel housing, who were scheduled to leave the hotel for permanent room assignments in residence halls last Friday.

Stella Cernak can be reached at ccernak@student.umass.edu

Some parts of the Campus Center are a jumble of wires and plaster as it undergoes a major renovation. The construction will revamp guest rooms, giving the hotel a much-needed facelift.

Feed your future

See how many ways there are to create your own path at PwC.

Begin at www.pwc.tv

PricewaterhouseCoopers

Community Clips

Best Buddies Recruiting
Monday, September 8, 2008 • 7:00 pm – 8:00 pm
Hasbrouck
UMass Amherst Campus
Handicap access available
Free Admission
Contact: bestbudd@stuaf.umass.edu.

UMass Sports Luncheon
Wednesdays, 12–1 p.m., UMass Campus Center room 1009 (Amherst Room), Amherst. Sept. 3: Football coach Don Brown and women's soccer coach Jim Rudy. $10. 545-4290 for reservations.

Bab'Aziz, The Prince Who Contemplated His Soul
Sept. 10, 7 p.m., UMass School of Management, Room 137. English subtitles. Part of the series New Asia Cinema: Arab Cinema Panorama. Free. (413) 863-2866.

Amherst Used Furniture Sale
Sale to benefit Amherst Survival Center Sept. 12, 1-5 p.m., Sept. 13, 9 a.m.-1 p.m., Amherst Town Common, downtown, Amherst

Donations welcome. 549-3968 or email survivalcenter@verison.net.

University Without Walls Info Sessions
Small-group information session Sept. 13, 10-11:30 a.m., University Without Walls, 100 Venture Way, Suite 200, Hadley. 545-1378.

A Mind of Her Own: Fathers and Daughters in Jewish Literature
Book discussion series Sept. 9, 7 p.m., Jones Library, 43 Amity Street, Amherst. Sept. 9: Tevye the Dairyman by Sholem Aleichem. Free; preregistration required. Beth Girshman, 259-3168 or girshman@joesnlibrary.org.

Folk Dancing
Amherst International Folkdancing holds a dance every Friday, 7:30 p.m. to 10 p.m., Bangs Community Center, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst. Singles and beginners welcome. Donation. 549-6748.

Jewish Community of Amherst Meet & Greet – Get-together
Sept. 13, 7-9:30 p.m., Jewish Community of Amherst, 742 Main Street, Amherst. Havdalah, beer, wine. All welcome. Amy Mittelman, 256-0883.

Equestrian Training at the Hadley Farm
The Equine Studies program at the University of Massachusetts Amherst is holding workshops and instruction for trainers of students for national and international horse riding competitions on Saturday, Sept. 6 and Sunday Sept. 7 at the Hadley Farm at 111 N. Maple St. in Hadley.
9:45 a.m. – 4 p.m.
On Saturday, the featured event is Stadium jumping training; Sunday is Cross Country jumping.
Contact: Jerry Schurink, hgs@vasci.umass.edu, 549-3252

The MassPIRG Save Darfur Campaign
will be holding an educational event on Tuesday, September 9, 2008 at 6:30 pm in room 803 of the Campus Center. Students will be presenting information about the ongoing conflict in the Darfur region of the Sudan, which has been labeled a genocide by the United States government.

Campout for a Cure
Monday, September 8, 2008 – Friday, September 12, 2008
Student Union Steps • (across, on the Student Union Lawn)
UMass Amherst Campus
Handicap access available
Free Admission
Contact: Steven Ward, swward@student.umass.edu, (732)-616-5913

Australia Study Abroad Information Session
Tuesday, September 9, 2008 • 4:00 pm – 5:00 pm
Hills (South) • 455
UMass Amherst Campus
Contact: Rebecca Paulson, rpaulson@educ.umass.edu, 577-3073

First Sheep Group Meeting
The Sheep Group will meet to discuss the running of the UMass dorset sheep herd, as well as management practices such as hoof trimming, vaccinations, and pre- and post- lambing practices.
Tue Sep 9, 2008, 6:00 pm
Hadley Farm

Vocal Suspects a capella auditions
UMass' oldest co-ed a cappella group is holding auditions this semester! We are looking for men and women who love to sing. Auditions are open call September 9th and 10th and you can show up anytime between 7:30 and 10:30 for a brief audition.
Tue Sep 9 to Wed Sep 10, 2008
Student Union Commonwealth Room (Earthfood) Cafe

Comedian Steve Hofstetter
Sigma Phi Epsilon will be bringing in hit comedian Steve Hofstetter to as part of his fall tour.
Tue Sep 9, 2008, 8:00 pm
Bowker Auditorium

Faculty Convocation 2008
Chancellor Robert C. Holub will make his first formal address to the faculty at the university's fourth annual Faculty Convocation.
Fri Sep 12, 2008, 11:00 am
Bowker Auditorium

Diversity wins in battle of the DJs

By Jazmine Pendleton
Collegian Correspondent

This Thursday, a number of University of Massachusetts students came together to watch five DJs face off on the W.E.B DuBois Library lawn at Cultural Connections and the Black Student Union's "A Move the Crowd Battle of the DJs."

The DJs varied in experience, as some were just beginning their DJ careers while others have been turning tables for over a decade. Although their experience was varied, the DJs competed for the same prize: the "DJ Clash" championship trophy.

The DJs who faced off were UMass alumnus DJ "Big Phyll" of Worcester who has been DJing for 20 years, DJ "Juice" of Boston, who has blended mostly reggae and hip hop genres in his four years DJing, and DJ Kid Afrik of Newton who has just a year of DJing under his belt and enjoys mixing hip hop with a touch of traditional African music.

DJ "J.I.S.," an Amherst local who has been DJing for eight years and is a mix tape DJ for 91.1 also competed, as well as DJ "Nexus" of Cambridge who has been DJing with a Caribbean sound for two and half years.

After given 10 minutes each to express their DJing skills, DJ Nexus was named winner of the battle for having the greatest reaction from the crowd.

President of the Black Student Union Mohamed Vandi suggested that Thursday's event was more than just a DJ battle.

"It's a great event that promotes diversity within our campus, allowing different RSOs to attract new people, while everyone is able to have a good time," he said. The event also featured information tables for Student Bridges and the Black Mass Communication Project.

Jazmine Pendleton can be reached at jpendlet@student.umass.edu

DJs from across the state showed up to spin for UMass students in an event put on by cultural connections and the Black Student Union.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Inside This

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael Katz
Managing Editor Joe Mellone
Business Manager Alex Wasacz
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olsen
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Stephanie McPherson
Copy Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Melissa Connor
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Ed Rosenwasser
Features Editor Audrey Marrits
Photo Editor Brian Tedder
Web Editor Vinnie Isack
Asst Business Manager William Mulholland
Assistant Advertising Jaroslaw Jacyn
Assistant Operations Emily Wallack
Asst Arts & Living Katie Kosmara
Asst Arts & Living Heather Waxman
Asst Arts & Living Brian Wood
Art Editorial Diego Cervantes
Asst Editorial Jamie Markert
Assistant News Stella Kyriak
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedetto
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Ryan Jennings
Assistant Sports Jeremy St. Germain
Assistant Sports Mallory Carriveau
Assistant Photo Will Sanders

Production Crew
On staff today
Night Editor
Joe Mellone
Copy Editor
Caitlin Quinn
Production Team
Michael Sarkes, Paula Lavalle

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $40,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted. Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund.

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.

© 2008 U.S. Army. All rights reserved.

Patrick vetos hike

CUTS from page 1

"We will be able to make progress in major areas because of the increase in the budget," said Robert Connolly, a spokesman for the UMass president's office.

Those areas include campus construction and renovation, funding for research and an increase in faculty.

According to some students, such as UMass senior and finance and operations management and mathematics double major Camilla Nurkhanov, who had friends who left the University due to rising costs, allocating funds toward these areas may not be the best use of the state's money.

"They could put the money into tuition, which they raised," she said.

Yet, Nurkhanov and Connolly agreed on one thing: the focus of the increased funding should be directed toward attracting and retaining faculty members.

"We don't need new buildings, we need more professors," Nurkhanov said.

The increase in funding for faculty goes hand in hand with the University's "250 plan," a plan instituted in hopes of adding 250 faculty members in the next few years. While it is not in any contract, the University has been trying to adhere to the plan as much as possible.

"They have been trying to add as many a year as possible, but there just isn't enough money. It was supposed to be 50 [faculty members hired] a year, but now it's only going to be about 25," Page said.

According to Page, the 250 plan was encouraged by student complaints about class size and a lack of connection with professors. Nurkhanov's own experience at the University supported this complaint.

"We have so many classes with 300 students. It would be great to have smaller classes so that students could learn better and really get to know the professor," she said.

Emily Reynolds can be reached at ereynold@student.umass.edu

Condoms a safe choice at BU vending machines

By Vivian Ho
The Daily Free Press (U. Boston)

Boston University students now have the choice between sweet, salty and lubricated when they hit the vending machines for a late night fix.

Students can purchase Trojan Hexa condoms alongside Skittles and Sun Chips in the 11 large dormitories and one in South Campus, Director of Residence Life and Assistant Dean of Students David Zamojski said.

"It's kind of a vending transaction like any of the other vending transaction," he said. "The vending areas are in a sense traffic areas, but the transaction has a degree of privacy."

For $2.50 in cash or convenience points a student will receive two condoms, packaged in a small white box, Zamojski said.

Students will be able to access condoms throughout the academic year, but not during the summer, when BU hosts conferences for younger students, Zamojski said.

The condom initiative came after a year of discussion between the Office of Residence Life, Student Union and Residence Hall Associations, Zamojski said. ORL began stocking the condoms during the last week of August.

Harvard University, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Tufts University had programs to distribute free condoms before BU, according to the proposal submitted by the Union in the spring.

Union Vice President Paula Griffin said the Union Residence Life Committee discussed their concern for student health and programs at other colleges and universities.

"The overall statistics for STDs is mind-blowing," Griffin said. "I think the statistic is one half of women in their 20s contract [human papilloma virus], which is kind of crazy seeing how preventable it is."

The sensitivity surrounding the issue prevented the university from advertising the condoms, Griffin said.

"It's something I think BU didn't want to have a lot of fanfare about, because there might be some students who don't like that stance, or parents who don't want to be hearing about it," she said. "But Student Union definitely isn't done with the project. We're working towards providing free condoms for students, too."

Student Health Services provides free condoms in its waiting room at 881 Commonwealth Avenue. The department also offers "condom coupons," which allow students to buy 20 condoms for $5.

"I personally don't agree that students should be asked to be abstinent," Health Services Director David McBride said in an e-mail. "Sexual expression is an individual decision. I hope that students choose to do so in a responsible way."

College of Arts and Sciences freshman Sarah Armenia said she will not buy the condoms from the vending machines.

"It's a little abrupt," she said. "There are a lot of students who aren't having sex, and they may not want to see that."

Other students said they think safe sex is too important for condom availability to be scarce.

"We're not a super religiously fanatic school. It shouldn't be a problem," College of Arts and Sciences senior Becca Boxhorn said. "A condom is a condom. You need to keep it available."

Some students questioned whether $2.50 is too steep a price for two condoms, considering a pack of three condoms costs $1.76 at a local 7-Eleven.

"When you're in the mood, it totally kills it when you have to walk to 7-Eleven," College of Communication sophomore Patrick Wemmer said. "But at those prices, I'll go to 7-Eleven."

SGA primed for new year, programing

SGA from page 1

the SGA senate.

SGA leaders agreed however, that it is too soon to tell if the University's new chancellor, Robert Holub, will follow up fully with last year's negotiations.

"While Chancellor Holub has agreed to meet monthly with us, he has not made any statements which point to him recognizing fully the strike agreements or the last part of the 'Student Administrative Agreement' which calls for continued negotiations," said SGA President Malcolm Chu.

In addition to continued negotiations with the administration, the SGA is expanding its efforts to strengthen student participation by making the SGA senate more accessible to students.

We hope to have the senate utilize its full potential as a governing body in the campus population," Robinson said. "Years prior have fallen short of representing the entire student body but we hope to take all concerns and issues to the forefront of relevance."

I think that these are good goals, good not just because they plan to fix UMass but also to get students out there and further involved with their campus community," UMass sophomore Sean Fagan said. "Student government is something that should train students to be leaders and care about vital issues and it sounds like SGA is going further in that direction."

Yet, all three SGA leaders agreed that while they will make an effort to reach out to interested students, it is up to the students themselves to show interest in helping influence what the SGA does.

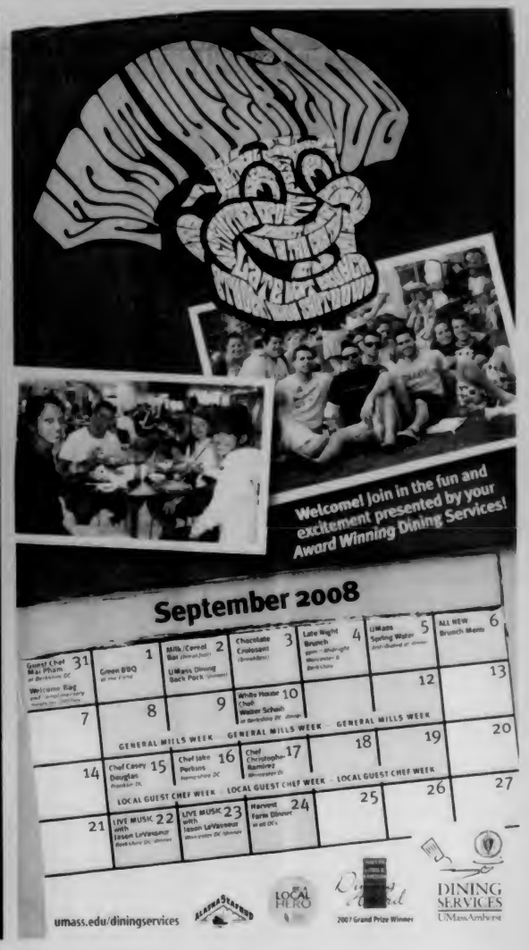
SGA critic and former candidate for SGA president Derek Khanna approved of SGA efforts to increase more student participation in the senate, yet held on to critiques of the University's ALANA caucus, which he vocalized last year.

"In its stated goal, the ALANA caucus does not represent all students on this campus, this needs to change," he said.

The caucus, which participates in the SGA senate, is funded by the University to address the needs of African, Latin American, Asian Pacific Islander and Native American students.

The SGA also plans to involve itself in voter registration and education, intending to get involved with legislation that impacts higher education, in particular the 'Vote No on Number One' campaign. The campaign addresses state referendum No. 1, which will be on Massachusetts' voting ballots this fall. Referendum No. 1 will dramatically cut income taxes, which in turn would lead to a 40 percent budget cut in state finances, directly impacting funding for the state's schools.

The SGA was also involved in statewide student organizing last year, lending support to organizations such as the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts and Mass Students Uniting. Student Trustee Lindsay McCluskey, who serves on the board of directors of PHENOM, praised the two groups' goals.



"We believe that working on college affordability and access in coalition with other students, faculty and staff from across Massachusetts is a responsibility of the SGA and we plan to fulfill it," she said.

Michael Fox can be reached at mjfox@student.umass.edu

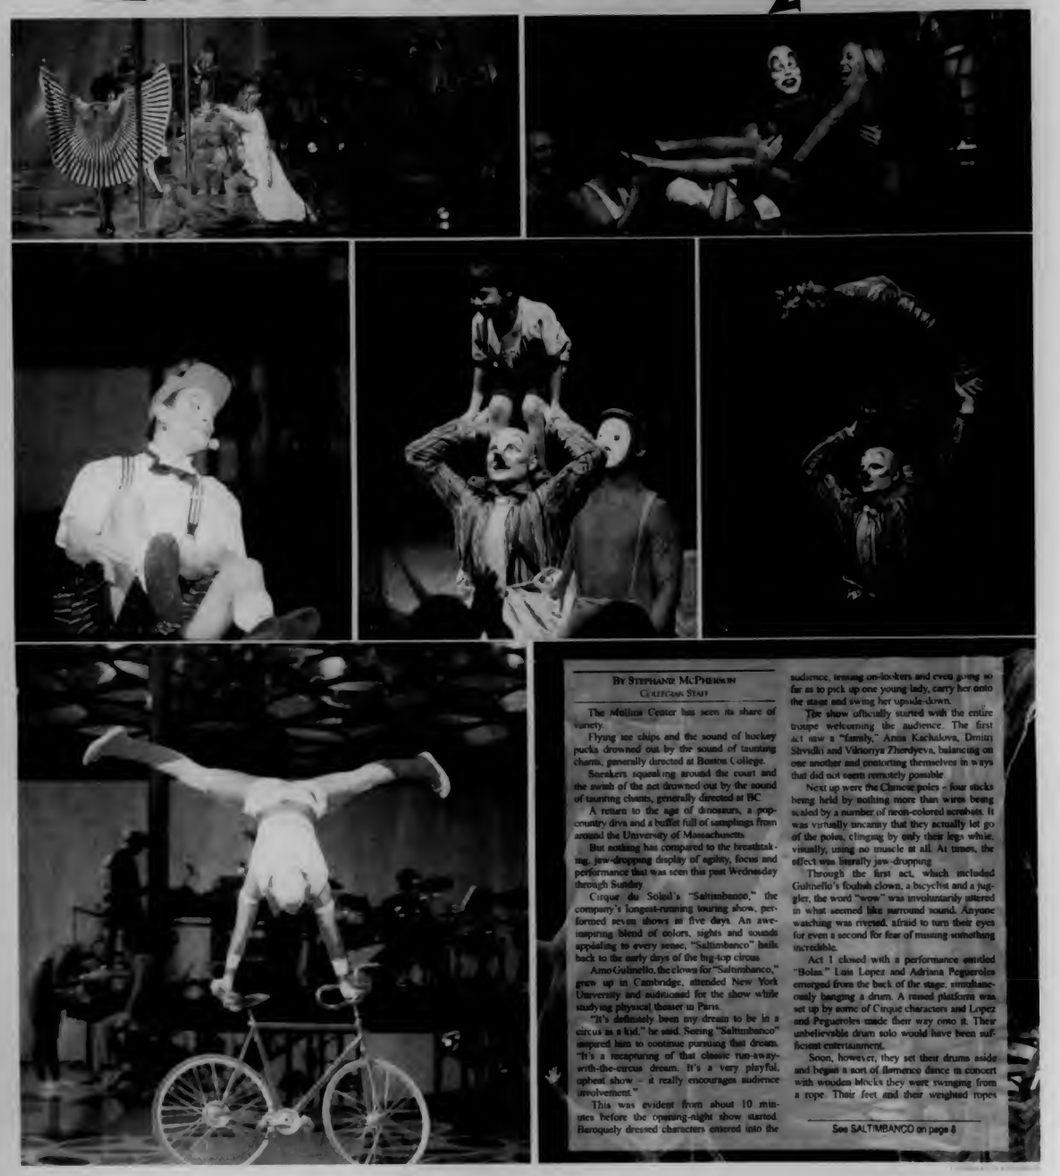
Student Government Association leaders said that despite the current administration's level of cooperation, the fact that the strike forced student participation was a huge step forward and an important precedent.



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Enter the Cirque!

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Mullins Center has seen its share of variety.

Flying ice chips and the sound of hockey pucks drowned out by the sound of taunting chants, generally directed at Boston College.

Sneakers squeaking around the court and the swish of the net drowned out by the sound of taunting chants, generally directed at BC.

A return to the age of dinosaurs, a pop-country diva and a buffet full of samplings from around the University of Massachusetts.

But nothing has compared to the breathtaking, jaw-dropping display of agility, focus and performance that was seen this past Wednesday through Sunday.

Cirque du Soleil's "Saltimbanco," the company's longest-running touring show, performed seven shows in five days. An awe-inspiring blend of colors, sights and sounds appealing to every sense, "Saltimbanco" hails back to the early days of the big-top circus.

Arno Gulinello, the clown for "Saltimbanco," grew up in Cambridge, attended New York University and auditioned for the show while studying physical theater in Paris.

"It's definitely been my dream to be in a circus as a kid," he said. Seeing "Saltimbanco" inspired him to continue pursuing that dream.

"It's a recapturing of that classic run-away-with-the-circus dream. It's a very playful, upbeat show – it really encourages audience involvement."

This was evident from about 10 minutes before the opening-night show started. Baroquely dressed characters entered into the audience, teasing on-lookers and even going so far as to pick up one young lady, carry her onto the stage and swing her upside-down.

The show officially started with the entire troupe welcoming the audience. The first act saw a "family," Anna Kachalova, Dmitri Shvidki and Viktoriya Zherdyeva, balancing on one another and contorting themselves in ways that did not seem remotely possible.

Next up were the Chinese poles – four sticks being held by nothing more than wires being scaled by a number of neon-colored acrobats. It was virtually uncanny that they actually let go of the poles, clinging by only their legs while, visually, using no muscle at all. At times, the effect was literally jaw-dropping.

Through the first act, which included Gulinello's foolish clown, a bicyclist and a juggler, the word "wow" was involuntarily uttered in what seemed like surround sound. Anyone watching was riveted, afraid to turn their eyes for even a second for fear of missing something incredible.

Act 1 closed with a performance entitled "Bolas." Luis Lopez and Adriana Pegueroles emerged from the back of the stage, simultaneously banging a drum. A raised platform was set up by some of Cirque characters and Lopez and Pegueroles made their way onto it. Their unbelievable drum solo would have been sufficient entertainment.

Soon, however, they set their drums aside and began a sort of flamenco dance in concert with wooden blocks they were swinging from a rope. Their feet and their weighted ropes

See SALTIMBANCO on page 8

Rebagz joins in the eco-craze

Environmentally friendly line of bags durable and affordable

BY REBECCA BABIN

Eco-friendliness is America's new best friend. Whether eating organic food or driving a hybrid car, people are becoming more conscious of doing their part to be more eco-friendly, except when it comes to fashion.

No one is willing to sacrifice their style for the good of the environment because, until recently, eco-friendly fashion has been hemp potato sacks sewn into a cheap resemblance of a shirt. This has all changed as saving the environment has taken the main stage in pop culture. New designers have emerged, trade marking eco-friendly fashion as their niche. Sensing the popular trend, existing designers have begun to incorporate fair-trade and organic materials into their new lines.

Designer Marty Stevens-Heebner, founder of Half the Sky Designs, has taken it one step further by recycling materials otherwise headed for the trash into colorful and creative handbags. This new line, appropriately named Rebagz, uses recycled juice packs and nylon rice sacks to create everything from totes to diaper bags.

Heebner, a steadfast environmentalist and humanitarian, was inspired to create Rebagz during a recent trip to the Philippines. Colorful and versatile designs always being her trademark, she said she immediately realized how ideal these materials would be when she visited weavers cutting strips of juice packs and creatively weaving them into their own mosaics.

Her design aesthetic is bright and colorful, so when she was looking for recycled materials to use, she knew it could not be just anything. As soon as she saw what weaving these juice packs could produce, Heebner said she jumped at the chance to create something innovative with them.

"I look at these plastic juice packs and rice sacks as my fabrics," she said. "I approach it from the standpoint of a designer."

She sets out to design handbags that are not only eco-friendly, but fashion-forward, which is where her catch phrase "eco-fashion forward" was derived.

The bags catch on because they are stylish, which will allow this trend to last. "I'm definitely selfish. I design for me. When I am designing a bag, I think, 'What would I like?'" Heebener admits.

The designer is a fan of sensible storage in her bags and adds pockets anywhere she can to make them as useful as possible. The woven Chain-to-Me line features bags that have a removable chain so they can double as a small shoulder or waste bag and a clutch.

As someone who has always recycled, Heeber is excited that eco-friendliness finally has a role to play in the fashion industry. Because new and mainstream designers are trying to use organic and recycled materials, she believes eco-friendly fashion is here to stay.

"It is definitely a trend now. People have realized we've really got a problem on our hands…It's about time," urges Heebner.

Through her traveling, she has seen better recycling systems placed in impoverished countries, giving people all over the world a hope for a more eco-friendly earth.

Heebner says that she is happy that she can ensure a better quality of life for the weavers she employs.

"There is something uniquely disturbing about Asian poverty. Workers are being treated horri-

See REBAGZ on page 8

Eco-friendly bags such as these are becoming a hit among celebrities such as Angelina Jolie, America Ferrara and Heidi Klum.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"TREASON OF SPEECH IS OF NO USE TO A MAN WHO HAS NOTHING TO SAY"
FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 2008 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Pandora's 30-rack

Nicholas O'Malley

For those who have already heard of the Amethyst Initiative, the two sides of the issue are easy to determine: those who are under 21, and those who are above 21.

The first true challenge to the current drinking age since its inception 25 years ago, the Amethyst Initiative has been gaining steam recently with the support of college chancellors. Currently, 129 chancellors, including University of Massachusetts Chancellor Robert Holub, are backing the initiative that according to its statement is attempting, "to invite new ideas about the best ways to prepare young adults to make responsible decisions about alcohol."

The new ideas are based upon the concept that legalized drinking at 18 is safer than the current situation. The goal is to stop students from taking as many shots as possible from that bottle of cheap vodka they keep wrapped in a towel in a trunk under their bed, before an RA gets within a 50-foot radius. Backers of the initiative hope that lowering the drinking age will quell the urge to drink unsupervised in locked rooms and get students into bars and other venues where alcohol can be consumed in a healthier manner. Without the fear of getting written up for a game of flip cup, the taboo novelty of binge drinking would lose some of its attractiveness, causing drinking to become more social, as it is in Canada and European countries.

I, along with countless other students, would love to believe that this concept would work. But it's just too easy.

It's too easy too sit here and claim that the Amethyst Initiative is the answer and that it would reduce binge drinking. Believe me, I lose people not getting busted for something they do anyway. I'm a team player. And I'm sure many students agree whole-heartedly that they, along with their peers, are mature enough to handle the responsibility. We've all heard the arguments: if, at 18, you can go to war, serve jury duty, live on your own and vote, you should be able to get a beer.

But, as they say this, deep inside, students are thinking, "I can get trashed every Damn Night."

If the college chiefs that back this belief truly believe that lowering the drinking age is the absolute best solution to help reduce drunk driving and binge drinking, then the initiative is plausible. However, the Amethyst Initiative has only one shot to make this work, one shot to prove that 18 year olds are mature enough to handle legalized drinking. Because while their points about binge drinking may be true, they have either not considered or failed to mention the immediate effects of the policy.

I, along with countless other students, would love to believe that this concept would work. But it's just too easy.

If at some point the drinking age is lowered to 18, the floodgates would open the day the act was passed. The Amethyst Initiative is Pandora's Box in the form of a 30-rack of Keystone. The potential for even more rampant abuse of alcohol is just as prevalent as the possibility of the intended reduction.

If there was a proven connection between the lowering of the drinking age and an increase in binge drinking, alcohol poisoning or even drinking in general, even for a short amount of time, there would be intense backlash against the initiative.

Herein lies the idea that there is only one shot to lower the drinking age. Everything depends on the events immediately following the supposed change. If supporters are not able to endure the firestorm of scrutiny they would face, then everything the Amethyst Initiative represented would be for naught. There would be no second chance for a lowered drinking age.

The drinking age is one of the most volatile subjects that emerges around college. To pose a significant challenge to what has been established since before many of us were born would take monumental efforts that would require sacrifice from those who believe in the status quo. If they also hate for us to get arrested.

They can't ban alcohol (they tried once, it didn't work), but they can't stop us from drinking it either. So, since the current "zero-tolerance" policy for drinking has been proven to be ineffective, the powers-that-be are now attempting to make a compromise. I let's hope that they're willing to go all the way.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

A time for revival, a time for renewal

Eric Magazu

John McCain's convention speech, delivered last Thursday, was similar to the speeches of other prominent Republicans of recent memory. He echoed many familiar Republican themes. He spoke of lower taxes and spending, pledged to veto pork barrel projects and promised more choices in the delivery of public services. Other national Republican leaders spoke repeatedly of the necessity of electing a republican to keep the American people safe in a "dangerous world."

Many of these speeches spoke highly of the faith of the American people, without ever being too precise. Perhaps they were referring to the civic religion of Judeochristianity, a religion that seems only to exist among top-ranked, Republican politicians. I personally have not been acquainted with any Judeochristians in my life. In our own Massachusetts, especially here at UMass, it's a rare occurrence to find anyone with deeply-held religious convictions of any form, therefore, this apparent vagueness of Republican politicians is comforting.

It appears to me that John McCain didn't provide a strong vision as a basis for an American to embrace his campaign. He spoke platitudes expressing a love for our country, "the greatest country on Earth." He also spoke of the "decency, faith, wisdom, justice and goodness" of the American people. These words are politely received; it's certainly true that the American people are a decent lot.

Perhaps I should be used to this from politicians, but to me it's dishonest for a candidate to make such obsequious statements. I applaud John McCain for concluding by exhorting us to serve a cause greater than ourselves, but what is truly needed in America is a plenipotent religious and national renewal.

This renewal would entail a return to the principles of our wise, pious forefathers, who founded this nation, but more importantly, a return to the ideals that were implanted upon us at the establishment of humanity.

Despite what we are taught in our schools, the separation of religious and national aspirations is an abhorrent ideological fallacy of recent origin. America allows for diverse expressions of religious sentiments, which is good, but if religion expresses the covenant, the solemn agreement, between God and man and nation expresses the covenant between man and man, in the end, these ends are both one in the establishment of a civilization rooted in truth and justice.

The separation of religious and national aspirations is an abhorrent ideological fallacy of recent origin.

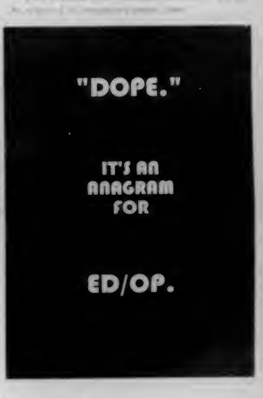
In our lives as college students, we engage in many behaviors that appear to bring us a sense of thrill in our lives, but I assert that we know in our conscience that something isn't quite right in these actions. In love we have been created and likewise we must therefore reflect this love in our love for God and in our love for our neighbor. Yet we strive against this truth by living lives of selfishness.

It is easy to perceive the flaws of others and point out the selfishness that governs the classes of the privileged. One solution offered by the political left is that this selfishness can be addressed by the use of government action to take from one citizen and give to another citizen. However, this method induces resentment among those who are compelled to give and ill-will among those who receive.

The political right intimates that true human failure ought to be embraced as a virtue that serves as a catalyst in the free market. The right holds that selfishness promotes the pursuit of profit-making enterprises and these enterprises lead to the acquisition of new wealth heretofore not seen by society. It is argued that no reform or button is needed since the overall wealth of the nation is increasing.



The author of Psalm 14 teaches: "They [fools] have become corrupt and abominable in their ways; there is none who does good. The Lord looked down from heaven upon mankind to see if there was any wise man who searches for God. They have all gone astray, together they have become corrupt; there is none who does good, not even one."

It would seem that selfishness governs all classes of men. It is the very nature of man that indicates we do stray against the same covenant that God set to expose more from ourselves. Rather than embrace our selfishness, as some in the extreme right recommend, or blame the fears and resentment to fight against the selfishness of others on the political left, as some on the left would like to seek what is wrong in our world, we can begin to live to the way we were created. There is room for a strong, yet spiritual, right that would place these ideals of love for God and for neighbor upon the hearts of men.

This is the conservative and political response most desperately needed in America. I am not deluded that any politician will speak of these things in a direct manner. Nevertheless, there are [illegible] a prophetic voice in our midst that will speak to our time with a clear conscience of the times we live in. Like the prophets of old, we must be willing to speak to our generation, no matter the consequences. After all, the reformers began the Protestant Reformation. And God help us if we become so comfortable in our own skin that we are unwilling to expose our own sins.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hannelson@student.umass.edu

McCain's pick, in the mix

Hannah Nelson

It's clear as day that Sarah Palin has the two things John McCain was lacking in his campaign against Barack Obama: She has youth and she's a minority in regards to the historically male presidential profile.

As a knee-jerk, McCain's pick was looking like a shameless ploy to steal the Hillary Clinton fans, an offensive insinuation.

It was an obvious and clever move on McCain's part to get his share of diversity on the ticket. But the choice of Palin cancels out the McCain claim to experience. Honestly, plug the responsibilities and merits of being a mayor all you want, or have Rudy Giuliani do it for you, but zero foreign policy experience is zero foreign policy experience whichever way you flip the coin. While Palin may make McCain's strongest issue difficult to keep strong, she challenges Obama's history-in-the-making power. She wasn't chosen for her experience, but McCain more than makes up for that. Actually, McCain could choose her because of the conservative claims of Obama's lack experience.

The ticket alone makes history, but the implied stigma of a working mother as the United States president's right hand is baffling. Glass ceilings were made to be broken. But Palin's continuous reminders of being the Average Jane, such as her bragging about moose-hunting abilities, are overkill. They attempt to make the prospective Vice President attractive, or qualified, in the eyes of voters.

Yes, we get it; you're the Alaskan equivalent of the Middle America soccer mom archetype. But the last thing I want in a veep is "7th Heaven" family values.

Palin being a self-declared feminist is something I find hard to swallow. To abide by Occam's razor, I'll give my simplest explanation, which also happens to be a well-worn, somewhat tired one. In order to be a political feminist, it is my belief and a hugely debated, refuted and controversial one, that to hold that one means holding the belief that pro-choice abortion rights are women's rights. Oh yes, there are some reading this who are already softening their trigger fingers, ready to curse me out on that statement and that is your right as a reader.

Palin is almost as prolife as they come, claiming that the only "right" thing to do is to take away the option of a legal abortion from women who are victims of rape, including incest. Only in the case of the mother's life being in danger does Palin condone abortion. This belief makes me sick and disgusted at the prospect of Palin ever sitting in the White House.

The implied stigma of a working mother as the United States president's right hand is baffling. Glass ceilings were made to be broken.

How dare she wish to take away safe options for victims, further injuring damaged mental and emotional states? Just because she has lived in a loving, and supportive and safe environment and has been able to do the same for her children, gives her no such right.

I believe that being pro-choice doesn't mean you have to believe abortion is "right." It means believing that a woman has the right to choose, and recognizing that right is governing an individual's right to control their own body. This is an old argument, but still worth its a mention, especially when a potential president

[illegible]

ED/OP FANTASY BATTLE #2
HEMINGWAY v. ROOSEVELT

Eco-friendly evolution

Organic fashion line moves forward with celebrity following

REBAGZ from page 7

bly, but they are so desperate they have no choice. I do not want to be the person who treats them this way," says the designer.

She says it is important for designers to get their hands dirty and see the factories, to make sure people are getting paid properly and working in good conditions.

Heebner says she admires and is inspired by other designers who use certified fair-trade labor and eco-friendly materials. Linda Loudermilk, an edgy ready-to-wear designer who has been gaining much publicity since the introduction of her label, "Luxury Eco" in 2005, is just one of many Heebner listed.

Celebrities have also been playing vital roles in the "eco-fashion forward" movement by adorning organic looks, backing eco-friendly designers and introducing their own eco-fashion designs.

Recently featured on an episode of Bravo's "Project Runway," Natalie Portman introduced an innovative vegan shoe line in collaboration with Té Casan. Other celebrities-gone-eco-fashion designers include Sheryl Crow, Kate Hudson and Bindi Irwin, daughter of the late Steve Irwin.

Heebner believes media exposure plays a huge role in how successful this eco-fashion movement will be. Celebrities caught wearing eco-friendly designs in magazines, newspapers and television news programs help to get the message across.

"We might have to rename our large tie tote the America bag," she says in response to ABC's "Ugly Betty" star America Ferrera, who adorned the oversized bag on an episode. Ferrerra, who reportedly received the tote in an Emmy's gift bag, liked it so much she decided to wear it on the show.

America Ferrerra is not the only celebrity tapping into Half the Sky's recycled bag trend. Rebagz has caught on like wildfire among celebrity A-listers including Angelina Jolie and Brad Pitt, Halle Berry, Sheryl Crow, Gwen Stefani, Eva Longoria, Tiger Woods, Heidi Klum and Dave Matthews.

"Media exposure doesn't hurt," Heebner says. "No one dog-piles a trend quite like Americans do, which isn't a bad thing."

As eco-fashion forward designs become more prevalent in the fashion industry and in the media, Heebner says it is important to create eco-fashion forward looks that are not only stylish, but durable and affordable.

This way everyone can participate in, what she has donned, the "next evolution in style."

To check out the Heebner's Rebagz collection, go to www halftheskydesigns com Rebecca Babin can reached at rbabin@student umass.edu

Rebagz' environmentally friendly handbags are making a huge wave on the eco-fashion forward radar.

CHECK OUT
THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
ARTS BLOG AT

allaccessarts.blogspot.com

THE BOLTWOOD
PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969—and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Fall Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 168C • Sept. 8 (Mon) • Sept. 9 (Tues) • Sept. 10 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Sept. 11 @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Silver Jews welcomed home at Iron Horse

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"We wrote that song down the street," explained David Berman after the end of the Silver Jews' first number, making it clear that he used to call the Pioneer Valley home.

The Jews' Thursday night performance at the Iron Horse was a homecoming of sorts for Berman, who took graduate classes and taught at the University of Massachusetts in 1993. The aforementioned first song, "Trains Across the Sea," was penned during this time, eventually appearing on the Jews' first full-length, 1994's "Starlite Walker."

Berman certainly looked the part of one immersed in academia. His borderline-ghastly brown wool suit coat was reminiscent of that of your high school chemistry professor, or possibly your creepy uncle. His band swayed in its matching black suits and red shirts, making them the Nashville eye-candy to his Robert Palmer.

The Jews cycled through their entire discography, playing tunes from all over their 15-year catalogue, though they went a bit heavier on material from their latest release, "Lookout Mountain, Lookout Sea" (2008).

Highlights from the new record included "My Pillow Is a Threshold" and "Strange Victory, Strange Defeat," though both were trumped by a gorgeous version of "Suffering Jukebox," which offered the spotlight to Berman's wife Cassie for her lush vocal part in the chorus.

Berman, though never physically smiling, made amusing small talk with the audience between throwback songs. After a solid "Horseleg Swastikas" from 2001's "Bright Flight," Berman asked the crowd, "What does a mother buffalo say to her kid when he goes to school?" The curious crowd waited for, and guffawed at, his response: "Bi-son."

Despite their efforts to mix the old with the new, Silver Jews came up short with a repetitious set.

Other older tunes included "Black and Brown Blues" from "The Natural Bridge" (1996), "Smith and Jones Forever" from "American Water" (1998) and the surprising pick "I'm Gonna Love the Hell Out of You" from the "Tennessee" EP (2001).

While the Silver Jews' sound certainly is not precisely the same as it was 15 years ago, the splicing of old material with new was hardly noticeable. The same simple percussion, meandering bass lines and dynamic guitar tones rang out, underscored by subtle keys and united under Berman's Johnny Cash meets Stephen Merritt monotone.

After a healthy portion of songs, the band left the stage only to return for its obligatory encore. Berman thanked stone-faced, gravelly-voiced, hunting cap clad opener Mike Flood (who took the liberty to throw rock 'n' roll devil horns after every song) before diving into the final four songs.

The first was "Pretty Eyes," another older one from "Natural Bridge," where Berman clearly outlines the politicized statement "When the Governor's heart fails, the state bird falls from its branch." "Wild Kindness" from "American Water" was next, followed by "Tennessee," which once again featured Cassie's sweet vocals.

The last song was "Punks in the Beerlight," from 2005's "Tanglewood Numbers," as Berman put the cap on a night of crooning to and making affectionate gestures towards his wife with the lyric "I always loved you to the max."

If nothing else, this is proof that great music can be born from love, and through think and thin, Berman has let it all hang out.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student umass edu

Cirque du Soleil blows away audiences at Mullins Center

SALTIMBANCO from page 7

were their drums. When their feet were tapping, the rope was in the air, coming down to the stage with a sound that rocked the audience. The synchronicity was remarkable—they were one artist.

The two would take turns; one would solo as the other drummed and vice versa. At one point, Lopez swung his rope around so fast it looked as though he was encased in a white bubble. The audience was so intensely focused there was no noise in the entire Mullins Center except the whipping of the rope through the air.

The intensity grew so vehemently that when Pegueroles joined on the drums, the whole audience could feel the release like a giant wave.

After this stunning act, the lights came up, giving the audience a 20-minute break.

If people were overwhelmed by the first act, it was nothing compared to what was seen in the next hour.

They began with a Russian Swing. The acrobats flew off a pendulum-style bench swing, propelling themselves at least 25 feet in the air, landing on the shoulders of the top of the human pole that had formed in front of them. This, combined with the vibrant colors and live music, made the whole act seem like a frat party where people are doing stupid stunts — except 20 feet higher, and much cooler.

One of the highlights of the night was the Duo Trapeze Ruslana and Taisiya Bazalii, two young women, were carried onto the stage. They were identically dressed with long blonde hair and moved in tandem until they mounted the trapeze.

There are no other words to describe this act besides unbelievable. Maybe heart-stopping. The girls would swing far over the audience, one sliding down the other, being caught solely by the other's foot. The audience emitted audible gasps almost every time the girls moved.

After such a radiant yet tense performance, it was nice to unwind with Gulinello's second appearance of the night. He welcomed an audience member on stage, teaching him the ways of the mime, ending in an Old Western-style shoot out. The new mime was an exceedingly good sport, eliciting as many laughs as Gulinello himself.

Gabor Ozvisz and Andrey Zhadan displayed Hulk-like strength in their hand-to-hand routine and the last act of the night was the gracefully mesmerizing bungee.

The troupe ended the show together onstage, bidding the audience farewell to music by the live band and singer, both of which performed throughout the night and were phenomenal.

The cast of "Saltimbanco" bid adieu after a night of performing that was unlike many in the audience could have imagined.

Needless to say, they got a standing ovation.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpher@dailycollegian.com.

Cirque du Soleil's "Saltimbanco" wowed the Mullins Center this past Wednesday through Sunday. The artistic director, Adam Miller, also gave a class for ballet students in Totman Gym on Sept. 4.

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION
Want Fun? Join us, enter by:
Flag Football (M/W/C).....9/8
Soccer (M/W).....9/8
Co-ed Softball .....9/9
Field Hockey (W).....9/9
Ice Hockey (M/W).....9/11
www.umass.edu/campusrec
LATE ENTRANTS SHOULD CHECK FOR EXTENSIONS IN BOYDEN 215

Write for Arts!
arts@collegian.com

Receivers perform, Coen sharp in win

FOOTBALL from page 12

The defense struggled in the first half, not forcing a single punt, but tightened up when they came out for the second half.

The Minutemen knotted the game at 28 on their first drive of the second half. Nelson (22 attempts for 82 yards and two touchdowns) took the handoff from Coen and raced toward the left side of his offensive line.

After bouncing off one tackler and spinning past another, he broke the plane to tie the game.

On the following drive, the defense came up with its first three and out of the game. It followed that with consecutive sacks on the next HC drive.

The stronger play on the defensive side of the ball gave UMass the opportunity to catch up and get ahead of the Crusaders.

The Minutemen scored 21 unanswered points to take their first lead of the game, 35-28, with 2:18 to play in the third quarter and never relinquished it after that.

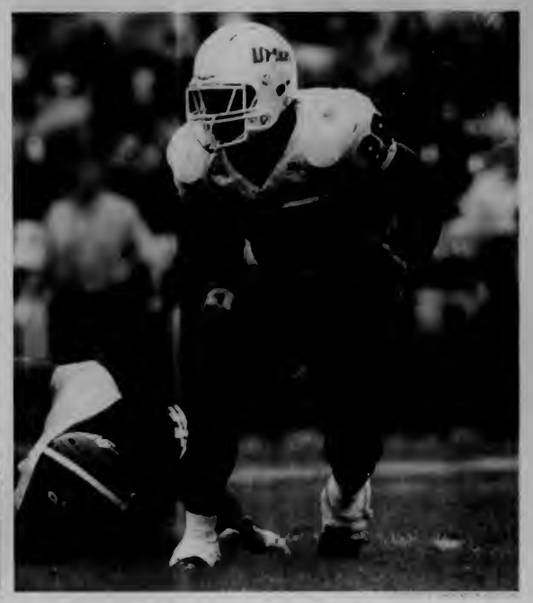
Coen and his receiving corps quieted a lot of their critics with their performance on Saturday. After throwing for 92 yards in Week 1, Coen aired it out for a total of 395 yards on 25-of-36 throwing, with four passes of 25 yards or more (47, 38, 34 and 25), and was helped by great play at wideout.

"I don't think there any more questions about our wide receiver corps anymore," Coen said. "I'll tell you that they stepped up big and made some huge plays for us."

Horne had a career day, setting highs for receptions (10), receiving yards (172), longest reception (47) and touchdowns (2).

Another receiver who made a big contribution was Victor Cruz. Cruz only had one career reception, but caught five against the Crusaders for 89 yards including a 38-yard hookup with Coen.

Joe Sanford added two catches, including one for a 25-yard touchdown where he avoided numerous tackles before crossing the goal line. After the game, Brown was not surprised with the performances by his wide receivers.



"We knew we had talent there. We knew we had confidence in those guys, just like Tony [Nelson], it just needed to be done on a Saturday afternoon and guys needed to become household names," Brown said.

The Minutemen play their second consecutive game on the road next weekend when they travel Harrisonburg, Va., to play No. 8 James Madison.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com

Armando Cuko is raised by his teammates after hitting a 42-yard field goal as time expired to propel the Minutemen, 45-42, over Holy Cross; it was Cuko's first field goal attempt in three years.

UMass running back Tony Nelson eludes a Holy Cross defender in Saturday's game in Worcester. Nelson rushed for 82 yards on 22 carries which included two key touchdowns.

Cuko hits game-winning FG

CUKO from page 12

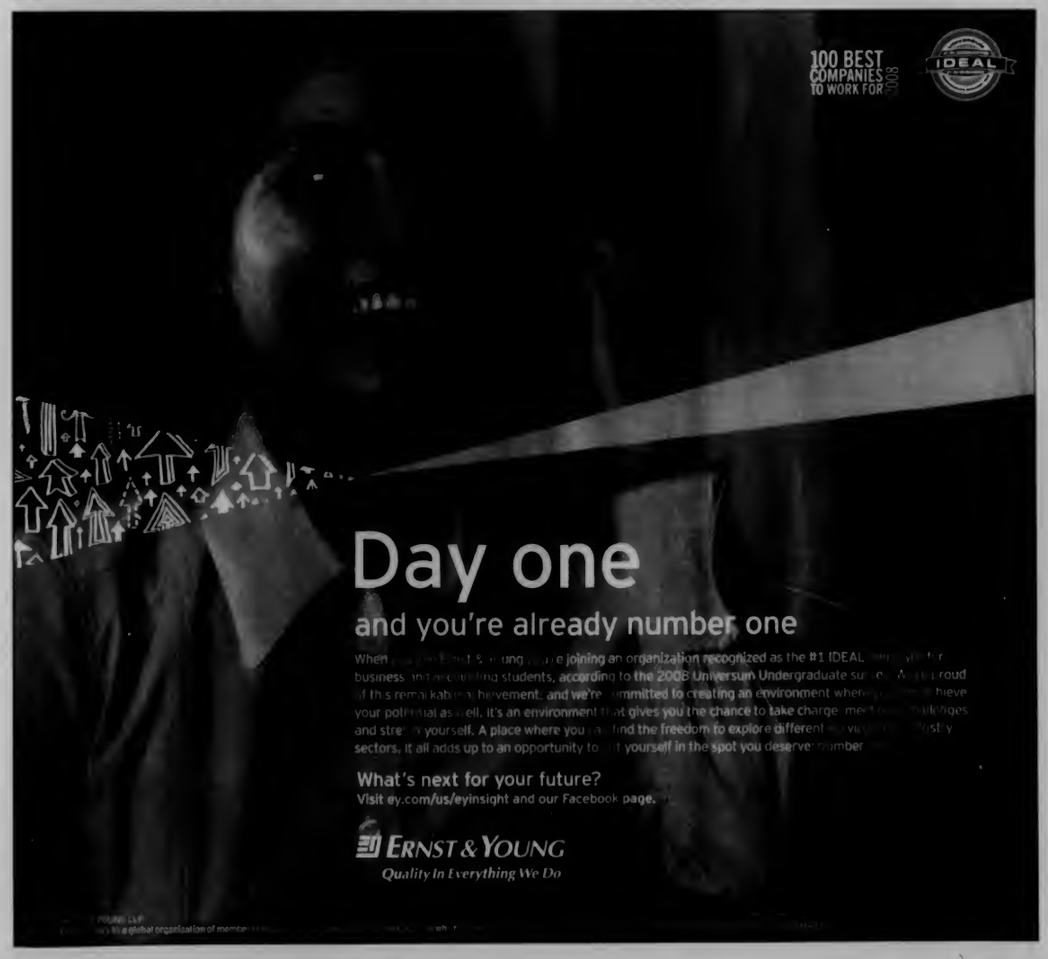
called a timeout, the team's second.

Gilmore then, this time before the Minutemen broke their huddle, called his team's final timeout.

"Between the timeouts I was using that time to my advantage I was always prepared," Cuko said. "By the time it came time for the kick I've already practiced it several times, my feet were landing in the places I made during the past timeouts."

The appropriate time passed Cuko and his teammates prepared themselves for what they hoped to be the game's final play.

Entering the season most kickers would expect their first kick to be a second quarter try, devoid of pressure and with hopes to put up points for his team, not a game-winner on the road against an in-state rival to squash a potential upset.



Following the third timeout, Cuko lined himself up five yards behind the holder, Scott Woodward.

"Armando came over on the last [timeout] and said 'Well, they can't call another one,'" Brown said. "'You're right, let's go hit it.'"

The snap was made, the ball set, Cuko charged and, in an instant, the hopes of the entire roster and scores of fans flew toward the goalpost and through. Cuko's arms went in the air and the two officials stationed under the uprights followed suit moments later. UMass 45, Holy Cross 42.

"I just knew I just put my hands up," Cuko said. Everyone told me I was going to make it."

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com

Minutemen led from back

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

Last year the Massachusetts men's soccer team had the most successful season in program history, earning a berth in the NCAA College Cup, thanks to its stalwart defense. It took a couple of games to get back in rhythm, but against Siena, the defense looked like a team capable of playing at an elite level.

There were questions about how this year's defense would compare to last season's. Most of those revolved around the departures of center back Kenny Cook and left back Doug Rappaport, and whether or not the team, as a whole, would maintain such a high level.

These questions grew louder after the Minutemen allowed 26 shots and two goals against Boston University last Sunday, during a 3-2 double overtime victory. But against Siena, the defense had a strong bounce-back performance.

Utilizing a very aggressive defensive strategy in which the backs would push up very high and midfielders would apply pressure on the ball, the Minutemen limited opposition scoring chances and created plenty of their own. UMass outshot Siena 27-8 overall and seemed to have the ball on Siena's side of the field throughout the game.

UMass coach Sam Koch said he was mostly pleased with his defense. He said he would like to have seen a few less turnovers, but by and large he was pleased with his team's performance as a whole.

"I thought we got caught stabbing for chances a couple times when we didn't need to, so there are definitely still things we can work on," said Koch. "Overall I don't think we gave up too many difficult situations [for our goalkeeper], so I feel pretty good about that."

One of the keys to such a solid defensive effort was the play of the midfield, which includes Amick, Roswess, Ben Arikian and senior leader Mike DeSantis. DeSantis, in particular, frustrated the Siena midfielders all game by being very physical and winning several 50-50 balls. The Saints seemed rattled by how strong and physical the Minutemen were, complaining several times to the referees about supposed fouls.

In the backfield, senior Chris Brown showed why he has started 68 consecutive games in his career. He had a fantastic game by not only directing the defense and attacking the ball carriers on the defensive end, but he also scored the game-winning goal off a header in the 88th minute of the game.

According to Brown, the key to the defensive effort was maintaining focus, especially when the ball was in opposition territory.

"For the defense, the strategy was to stay focused. We knew that we should be able to outshoot them, we knew that the test would be to maintain our focus so they don't get the breaks. We don't give up stupid fouls or silly opportunities for them get a lucky one," Brown said.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

Chris Vaccaro, above, and the Minutemen defeated Siena, 1-0, Saturday afternoon on Rudd Field. Vaccaro was part of a UMass midfield that prevented the Saints from generating consistent scoring chances.

Sophomore defender Jaime Bourazeris, pictured above against Connecticut in the NCAA tournament last season, and the Minutewomen defeated both Dartmouth and Northeastern this weekend. UMass takes on UConn this Friday at Garber Field.

UMass sweeps weekend pair from NU, DC

By Nicholas O'Malley
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team swept its weekend slate of games against Dartmouth and Northeastern as UMass coach Justine Sowry's team prepares for a three-game homestand.

The Minutewomen (3-1) dominated Friday's game in a 2-0 shutout against the Big Green (0-1) in Dartmouth's first-ever home game at the recently-opened Chase Field. The Maroon and White then traveled to Brookline on Sunday and came out with a tough win over Northeastern, 2-1.

UMass broke losing streaks against both teams this weekend, a three- game streak against Dartmouth and a seven-game streak against Northeastern.

Freshman goalkeeper Alesha Widdall, who has only allowed one goal in three games, continued her stellar play at Dartmouth by putting up her second straight shutout and allowing only one goal on 11 shots against Northeastern.

"She's leading a young defense," Sowry said. "She's controlling the circle well, and she's definitely making it easier for the rest of the team."

The defense, which was expected to struggle early on in the season, has played well despite its youth. Led by sophomore Jaime Bourazeris and newly-added transfer Jackie Tait, the backfield has impressed early after losing three starters to graduation. Adding to the unit's depth is freshman Nikki Panciocco who, against the Huskies, saw her first playing time at UMass.

That defense held the Big Green offense to a single shot and one penalty corner in the first half. The Maroon and White maintained its dominance by finishing with an 18-8 shot advantage and a 15-5 corner advantage.

Penalty corners played a vital role in the offense's success as well, as it accounted for both Minutewoman goals.

The game's first goal came off a scrum following a botched corner feed that was recovered by Erin Parker. Parker then found Jill Powers in front of the net to put UMass up with 4 minutes, 47 seconds left in the half, giving Powers three goals in her first three games for the Maroon and White.

Twenty minutes into the second half, the Minutewomen increased their lead with sophomore Makaela Potts firing a bullet that was tipped in by Katie Kelly. Potts' assist was her first career point.

The Minutewomen held on despite a late surge by Dartmouth when Kelly was hit with a yellow card, which sent her off the field. UMass kept the Big Green off the board while playing a player down for the last 17:51.

"It's never fun playing a player down," Sowry said. "Everyone has to put in an extra 5-to-10 percent. But I think we played our best hockey of the year during that time."

After its dominating effort on Friday, UMass pulled out a tough victory despite being outplayed by Northeastern for most of the game. The Minutewomen were outshot 11-8 and out cornered 7-5.

"Northeastern was definitely the better team in the first half," Sowry said. She also commented on the overuse of midfielders and turnovers that plagued her team in the beginning of the game.

The Huskies were in control for most of the first half and played strong during the second. However, two Kelly goals, one at the end of each half, were enough to get the win.

The UMass defense held off several Northeastern scoring chances to keep the game tight. Later in the half, however, Northeastern got on the board after a rebound off a Widdall save. The recoil was picked up by Meg Sweeny and fed to Annie Clayman for her first goal of the season.

With the half coming to a close, the Minutewomen responded with Kelly's game-tying goal with 38 seconds remaining in the half.

According to Sowry, her team found its footing a bit more, allowing them to keep the game tight for most of the second half. With 10:29 left in the game, Cher King's shot off the corner was blocked but found its way to Kelly who put it in for the winning goal.

UMass is coming out of the weekend with a three-game winning streak after dropping the season opener. It's now looking ahead to No. 4 Connecticut – the team that beat them twice last year – at Garber Field on Friday.

Nicholas O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

TO ALL STUDENTS OF
THE STOCKBRIDGE SCHOOL
OF AGRICULTURE

Alpha Tau Gamma
the Stockbridge academic, service & social fraternity
announces the fall rush opening for male Pledges
to become a member of the oldest, strongest,
most active and most enjoyable part of an SSA/UMass college education
with the best life long network
founded in 1919

Wednesday, September 10 at 6:00 p.m.
ATG Brothers will speak at the
SSA convocation in room 20 Goessman Hall
sign-up sheets for new Pledges will be available
ATG will give away FREE T shirts

Thursday, September 11 at 6:30 p.m.
ATG Brothers welcome SSA male students
at the Faculty Club, 243 Stockbridge Road
sign-up sheets for new Pledges will be available
learn more about ATG & eat FREE munchies

Saturday, September 13 at 1:00 p.m.
ATG Brothers welcome all SSA students
to a social at the Amherst Pub, 5 East Pleasant Street
sign-up sheets for new Pledges will be available
bring your SSA student ID & eat FREE munchies

Monday, September 15 at 7:00 p.m.
ATG Brothers welcome all SSA male students
to weekly meeting in the Campus Center
bring your $100.00 check to ATG for your
2008/2009 Pledge and social fee

The rush ends on Saturday, September 13.
The Pledge period begins on Monday, September 15.
The 6 week Pledge period ends on October 25

STOCKBRIDGE FOREVER!

FOR COMPLETE UMASS COVERAGE

CHECK OUT

THE COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG AT

http://blog.umassdlive.com/dailycollegiansports/

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION

Paid Officials Needed for Flag Football, Soccer
Field Hockey, Softball, Ice Hockey & Volleyball

CLINICS:
Football-Sept. 9, 10, Co-ed
Softball-Sept. 15, 16 11
Ice Hockey-Sept. 16, 17, 18
Soccer-Sept. 9, 10, 11
Field Hockey - Sept. 15
Volleyball – Sept. 30, Oct. 1, 2

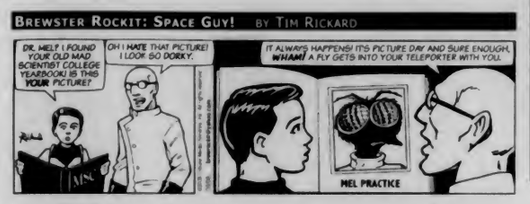
Call for requirements, times and locations
Still Time To Enter: Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, & Softball
More Info: 215 Boyden, 545-2693
www.umass.edu/campusrec

The look, the feel of cotton.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | 4 | 8 | | | 6 | 9 | |
| | | | | 2 | | 5 | | |
| 9 | | | | 5 | | | 3 | |
| 5 | 7 | | | | | | 1 | |
| | 3 | | 2 | | 7 | | 5 | |
| | 9 | | | | | | 8 | 2 |
| | 4 | | | 1 | | | | 5 |
| | | 5 | | 8 | | | | |
| 8 | 1 | | | | 6 | 3 | | |

ACROSS
1 Mongrel dog
4 Arthur of tennis
8 Beam forming a roof's framework
14 Small bill
15 Put away as cargo
16 Desert gully
17 Resistance unit
18 Seasoning herb
19 Intensify
20 Slip-on shoes
22 Wind indicator
23 First-born sibling
24 Pottery
28 Colonists
29 Kitty
30 With regrets
31 Party's choice
34 Light gas
35 Wasps genus
38 Diapidated dwelling
40 Robin
41 Famous cookie man
43 London stage
45 Ab exercise
47 Travelers stopover
48 New York Bay island
52 Theatrical look
54 Most despicable
55 Equipment
56 Die
57 Designers' IDs
60 Barrel race
61 Engage in litigation
62 Mistreats
63 Religious ritual
64 Moray or conger
65 Military lookout
66 Cold War power
67 60s radical org.

DOWN
1 Became less ardent
2 Profane
3 Created anew
4 Evaluator
5 Begin
6 Big motorcycles
7 Lamb's mom
8 Doppler, for one
9 Showplaces
10 Mona or Morgan
11 Surpass
12 Watch closely
13 Silver or Howard
21 Plant with fronds
22 Old hand
24 Satisfied
25 Concept
26 Drain obstruction
27 "Auld Lang ___"
29 More concise and meaningful
32 Thick pad
33 Have a meal
35 Aberdeen girl
36 Discharge
37 Small amount
39 Sermonizer
42 Propose
44 Otherwise
46 Kitchen gadget
49 Tenants' contracts
50 Published
51 Toughens up
53 Impertinent
54 Darkens
56 Lecture platform
57 Spanish article
58 Actor Vigoda
59 Bread roll
60 "Red River" co-star Joanne



Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Quote of the Day

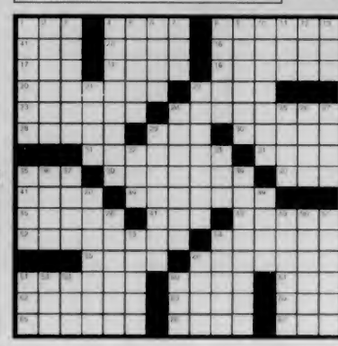
"Some mornings it just doesn't seem worth it to gnaw through the leather straps."



- Emo Phillips

ATKINS FARMS
Country Market
Now Hiring
For The Fall & Holiday Seasons
Part-time Sales Associates and Production Assistants
All positions require evening, weekend and holiday availability.
Customer service and food handling experience preferred.
Come in happily or contact Kelli at 253-9528 or kelli@atkinsfarms.com
(Employment opportunities are also available on our website!)

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You have "The Look," down, but unfortunately not "The Important Stuff" yet.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
When she told you on the phone that she was heading to the gym, she was actually heading to the Jim.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Even though your beads of sweat look deliciously red like a Gatorade commercial, you need to be taken to the hospital.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Your emotional turbulance is making me reach for the vomit bag.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Nothing makes me happier than seeing you playing XBox and eating Combos, Darling.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't let the fact you can't walk in a straight line stop you from attempting to explain away your herpes later tonight.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
America is to Mexico as:
A)Face is to beard B)Mark is to Miguel
C)Segway is to bike D)KFC is to Taco Bell

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
If you think textbooks are too expensive, try tapping your professor's phones.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your idea for a new WWE wrestler will be doomed from the start, now that you've settled on the name Rock Hard Harry.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
With the money you save from never doing your taxes, you should get a good lawyer and Star Wars-themed Monopoly.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Isn't it crazy that Miley Cyrus is going to enroll at UMass Amherst in two years? Wow!

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
The ripe fields of your love are ready for harvesting. Time to get out the farm equipment.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Drop catalogs for cash! Need responsible person with car to drop catalogs in Pioneer Valley, Springfield, and beyond. 10 hrs per day 2 days. postering@artspromo.org

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO expenence necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required: experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

The Town of Belchertown is accepting applications for the Recreations Department's Stingrays Swim Team Head Coach position. This is a non-benefited seasonal position for the months of October through January. Must be experienced in competitive swimming, have a current CPR certification and a current First Aid certificate or be able to obtain above requirements upon being selected for the position. Applicants shoud have knowledge of stroke techniques as well as patience to work with children of various ages and swim levels. Job descriptions and applications are available in the Selectmen's Office at the Finnerty House, One South Main Street, PO box 670, Belchertown, MA 01007. The deadline to apply is 4:00 pm on Thursday, September 11, 2008.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Two Yorkie babies for adoption. AKC, home raised in a good environment. Shots and health guaranteed. If interested, kindly contact me at crserendipity62@gmail.com

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S. Padre, Florida. Information/ Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.statravel.com

THE BIGGEST POSTER SALE. Biggest and Best Selection. Choose from over 2000 different images. FINE ART, MUSIC, MOVIES, MODELS, HUMOR, ANIMALS, PERSONALITIES, LANDSCAPES,

ANNOUNCMENT

MOTIVATIONALS. PHOTOGRAPHY. MOST IMAGES ONLY $7, $8, $9. SEE US AT Cape Cod Lounge - Student Union ON Monday September 1st thru Friday September 5th, 2008. THE HOURS ARE 9 AM - 5 PM. THIS SALE IS SPONSORED BY WMUA 91.1 FM.

SERVICES

AFFORDABLE, CONFIDENTIAL, SAFE. Get the care you need at Tapestry Health. Providing birth control, EC, Pregnancy testing, GYN and Breast Exams, HIV counseling and testing, STD Screening and treatment. 27 Pray Street, Amherst MA 413-548-9992 Walk ins welcome Tapestryhealth.org

FOR RENT

Three large bedroom Apt for rent located on Bay Road, Belchertown. 6 miles from Umass $1000 per month/negotiable. Call Agnes (413) 530-6996

SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIEDS...

(413) 545 - 3500

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Last-minute heroics

UMass cornerback Courtnee Robinson breaks a tackle on his 100-yard kickoff return touchdown last year against Holy Cross. On Saturday, the Minutemen defeated the Crusaders, 45-42, for the second straight year.

Midfielders Bryant Craft, left, and Mike DeSantis, center, celebrate with redshirt senior defender Chris Brown following his goal in the 89th minute of UMass' 1-0 win over Siena Saturday at Rudd Field.

Offensive showcase ends with last-second field goal

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

WORCESTER — With 4 minutes left and the No. 4 Massachusetts football team up seven points at Holy Cross, the team's field goal kicker Armando Cuko called one of the team's doctors over.

"I actually called Dr. [Pierre] Rouzier [over] with four minutes left in the game and we were still up seven, and I told him I'm going to win this game with a field goal," Cuko said.

UMass (2-0) led 42-35 when Cuko called Rouzier over, but with 2:22 remaining HC's quarterback Dominic Randolph, finished an 11-play, 77-yard drive, when he found a wide open Freddie Santana in the end zone for his second touchdown catch to tie the game.

The two minutes and change remaining were not a challenge for the Minutemen, who had scored in less time on four of their six touchdown drives; 1:58, 11:47, 2:18 and 2:09.

After HC's (0-1) kickoff went out of bounds (it kicked three other kickoffs out of bounds), UMass started on its own 40-yard line. After a 3-yard run, two completions and a costly illegal formation penalty, the Minutemen faced a fourth-and-one.

Liam Coen took the snap, trying to extend the drive, and bootlegged to his right before pitching it to tailback Tony Nelson who was running along side him.

"It's an option play and Liam has the option. It's only one yard, either keep it or pitch it, and he made absolutely the right decision," UMass coach Don Brown said. "We had it blocked at the perimeter and Tony didn't fool around, he just went north and south, made sure he got the one yard and I think he got five or six."

Four plays later, the Minutemen faced another fourth down and converted on a 16-yard pass from Coen to wide receiver Jeremy Horne that set up Cuko's late-game heroics with five seconds left.

After three Crusader timeouts, Cuko did just what he told Dr. Rouzer he would do.

"It wasn't even close. I mean he drilled it," Brown said.

The 42-yard field goal sent the Minutemen home with a 45-42 win and their second victory of the season.

For the second week in a row, the Minutemen struggled in the first quarter but started to find their rhythm as the game went on.

Coen moved the UMass offense down to the HC 19-yard line on its first possession of the game, before fumbling the snap and turning the ball over to Randolph, the Walter Payton Award candidate, and the Crusaders.

The turnover led to Holy Cross' first touchdown of the game, a 15-yard pass from Randolph (28-of-44, 249 yards and 3 touchdowns) to wideout Jon Brock. The touchdown would be the only one of the first quarter and the second game in a row where the Minutemen would not score in the first quarter.

Coen answered back on the next drive by hitting an open Horne for 47 yards, which set up a Coen rushing touchdown from one yard out. The touchdown was the second rushing touchdown of Coen's career, and the first since he rushed for one against Delaware in 2005.

Both teams tallied another touchdown before the Crusaders scored 14 unanswered points on an 88-yard kickoff return and an 8-yard touchdown pass by Randolph, to take a 28-14 lead.

UMass got back within seven on another touchdown toss by Coen. Horne lined up on the left side of the field and sprinted past a defender to get wide open in the end zone and caught a lob pass for his second touchdown of the game.

The 28 points allowed in the first half were the most given up by a UMass defense coached by Brown.

See FOOTBALL on page 9

Brown bags game-winning score in UMass home opener

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's soccer team proved once again that it works best under pressure in the 1-0 win against Siena (1-2) on Saturday.

Redshirt senior and defensive anchor Chris Brown headed in the game-winning goal with 1 minute, 8 seconds left on the clock. The goal came after sophomore Ben Arikian took a direct kick from the midfield after a foul was called on Siena. Brown was near the goal line as Arikian's shot went towards the left post and Brown jumped up to head it in.

"It's frustrating. You have good opportunities, but not putting one away. It's just being in the right place at the right time, late in the game trying to force some things. We got a little lucky," Brown said.

This was the second game that the No. 13 Minutemen (2-1) scored a goal when it counted most. On Aug. 31, senior Prince Ofosu scored a game-tying goal with 3 seconds left to send it into overtime against Boston University. UMass won, 3-2, in the second overtime.

"We made it a lot more difficult than it had to be," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "The bottom line is Brownie came up big at the end to get the goal."

The Saints started the game dominating play in the middle of the field, but as time progressed the Minutemen took control and used outside channels to move the ball around. Using the sides of the field was something Koch said he stressed in the game because Siena is known for playing strong in the middle.

"As a whole we created a lot of chances. We certainly moved the ball, we just didn't finish our chances," Koch said. "We took the extra touch at times that made it more difficult than it needed to be."

The Minutemen had numerous chances at a goal, especially in the 72nd minute. Junior Mark DeSantis took one of multiple consecutive corner kicks to junior Bryan Hogan, who headed the ball toward an opening in the top left corner. His attempt beat Siena net minder Steve Skonieczny but deflected off the crossbar. Brown sent the ball back toward the goal, but it was blocked by Skonieczny. Arikian took a shot after the block that went wide to the right.

"If you look at the number of shots we had and the opportunities we should have gotten the result, but this game could have gone either way, fortunate it didn't go the other way," Koch said.

UMass outshot Siena, 27-8, but struggled on finishing the shots because Siena's defense was strong in front of the net and didn't allow the Minutemen to take high quality shots.

"[The Saints defense] did a pretty good job staying compact as a group and we took bad shots. We took a lot of shots that were out of our range and we know better," Koch said. "I give [Siena] credit for holding strong in the back it made it difficult for us."

The Minutemen's defense played strong, allowing three shots on goal.

The Saints had two close chances at a goal, but redshirt senior goalkeeper Zack Simmons made a diving save. Only moments later the Saints took another shot and Simmons jumped to save it as it hit the crossbar.

"[Simmons] didn't get a lot of chances, but he came up big when he had to and the cross bar certainly did its job," Koch said.

The Minutemen will play again this weekend in the Old Dominion STIHL Classic.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com

Cuko field goal beats HC

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

WORCESTER — With all of the scoring in the Massachusetts football team's 45-42 win over Holy Cross on Saturday coming from its offense, no one expected the game-winning score to come off the right foot of redshirt junior kicker Armando Cuko.

That is, until, UMass took over possession late in the fourth quarter with senior quarterback Liam Coen moving the ball down the field as only players like him can patiently and smartly. The kind of drive that UMass coach Don Brown knows he can expect from his wily signal caller.

While Brown knows what to expect of Coen, that certainty isn't the case for Cuko — who hasn't attempted a field goal since starting as a freshman.

For the past three years he has sat on the bench while recently-graduated Chris Koepplin held the responsibility of the kicking duties.

"For a kid like that to step up and take the job back over, I think that shows a whole lot of mental toughness," Coen said. "The kid's made some great kicks and we've been counting on him."

Cuko held the starting job as placekicker for the Minutemen until the beginning of the 2006 season, when he aggravated a previous groin injury on the opening kickoff against Villanova on Sept. 16.

Since then, Cuko sat and waited for his turn. His patience and hard work seemed to all come together Saturday when he was called to do his job.

With 4 seconds left in regulation, UMass and HC were deadlocked at 42 with the ball on the Holy Cross 24-yard line, as Cuko jogged onto the field with the play clock slowly winding down.

As the Minutemen broke their huddle, Holy Cross coach Tom Gilmore called the team's first timeout in hopes that Cuko's head would get in the way of making the kick.

The Minutemen again broke their huddle, the players got in their normal spots to get set for the kick, and, again, Gilmore

See CUKO on page 9

Liam Coen throws over a defender in last year's game against Holy Cross. Coen went 25-for-36 which included 395 yards and three touchdowns in Saturday's victory over Holy Cross. Jeremy Horne, his main target, caught 10 passes for 172 yards and two touchdowns.

INSIDE: A TASTE OF COMEDY ON CAMPUS | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

T-STORMS : HI: 76 LO: 50 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 2008

Bylaw to target partiers

BY MATT ROCHELEAU AND WILLIAM MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Off-campus partiers may soon have to quiet down or pay up under Amherst's proposed Nuisance House bylaw which could hold landlords financially responsible for repeatedly disruptive tenants.

If approved, the law allows officers to issue a $300 ticket "for the nuisances and harm caused by loud and unruly gatherings on private property."

Amherst Police Capt. Michael Kent said he does not know exactly when the change will come, but expects approval from the Massachusetts Attorney General's office "any day now," thereby putting the law into effect.

The University of Massachusetts was recently lauded for its campaign against binge drinking.

UMass estimates a 36 percent drop in the activity, and cite dormitory restrictions and heightened enforcement of these rules as a major factor. In residence halls, drinking games are prohibited, no empty containers of alcohol are allowed and fewer students can be signed into dorm rooms.

The Campus and Community Coalition (CCC) is a major supporter of the action, and co-chairs Martha N. Patrick and Sally Linowski said in a letter to the Amherst Select Board that the move will do much to curb underage drinking, a common activity around campus.

In 2007, Amherst Police reported 429 arrests for the unlawful possession of liquor by an individual under 21 years old. Citing that these arrests take a lot of police resources and town money to process, the committee suggests passing the bill.

But UMass and the Amherst community are working to make sure that they have not simply channeled the flow of alcohol off campus, resulting in a financial burden for the town.

"The idea of cost recovery in a time of fiscal constraints to local communities is an important factor in allowing towns the financial ability to respond to nuisances that are detrimental to local neighborhoods without further burdening the local budget," the letter reads.

The town of Hadley recently adopted its own version of the law.

Underage drinking costs the nation at least $53 billion a year, mostly because of traffic deaths and violent crime, according to a 2003 report by the National Research Council's Institute of Medicine. Patrick and Linowski estimate overtime pay for officers during a springtime weekend were around $15,000. The new bylaw will not only allow for the fine, but also for the offender to pay expensive, police response costs.

Left to police discretion, enforcement would be a civil infraction "99 percent of the time," said Kent, meaning violators would not be arrested nor have the offense put on criminal record.

Property owners would be notified after each of the first two complaints, as was done in the past, he said.

However, if the landlord has not started an eviction process after a third violation within one year, he too could be penalized $300 and the town may require the landlord to cover the expense of responding officials, said Kent.

"It's kind of a tricky issue because the landlord does not live with the tenant," said Gokhan Altinay, a graduate student living in Lincoln Apartments, who was previously unaware of the law.

This is only the case if the property owners are not actively trying to evict their boisterous tenant.

The bylaw makes residents and property owners responsible for noise complaints as well as

See BYLAW on page 3

The proposed Nuisance House bylaw aims to cut down on off-campus partying, like at the apartments at Hobart Lane.

Tight squeeze for UM students

UMass transfer students Mastel Encarnacion (left) and Makeda Lewis (right) spend time in their assigned temporary room in Mackimmie Hall. They also share the room with UMass transfer student Stephanie Mamulski.

High demand for housing causes crunch

BY THOMAS FOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts freshman Brittany Dufault was dubious when she learned this summer that she would be placed in temporary housing — in her case a converted lounge in Webster Hall with three other students.

"I didn't know how rooms would be set up," she said. "I was skeptical coming into it."

Dufault, however, is happy with the way things turned out.

"It's not bad. I enjoy it," she said and praised the larger space, good view and balcony of her current accommodations.

This fall, the number of student requests for on-campus housing increased from last year by about 425 individuals.

David Vaillancourt, associate director of Housing and Residence Life at UMass, said the state of the economy is largely responsible for the increase, particularly as a result of higher utility and gasoline bills.

"It costs less than off-campus housing," he said in a statement, and added that other campuses have experienced similar increases.

See HOUSING on page 3

Vassell pretrial postponed

BY GISEL SAILLANT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jason Vassell was in court for two minutes, but left home with the support of over 100 people.

On Monday Sept. 8, the Justice for Jason committee planned carpool stations in front of the Student Union and in the Southwest horseshoe, where supporters for Vassell gathered before leaving to Hampshire Superior court in Northampton.

Inside the courtroom the pretrial was rescheduled to Sept. 29. His supporters stood outside of the courthouse while Vassell's lawyer and the Justice for Jason committee spoke and answered questions about the importance of community support and the case's status.

Vassell's lawyer, David P. Hoose, spoke on the insignificance of these conferences leading up to the trial, but emphasized the importance of the continuous support from the community.

According to Hoose, the next pre-trial conference will allow them to accumulate what they have and what they need before going to trial as witness statements, diagrams, police reports and forensic evidence will be shared.

Hoose said that Hampshire Superior court arranged a presumptive trial month of January, but it is not guaranteed that the case will be called as older cases and defendants that are in custody have priority.

UMass Professor Ekwueme Michael Thelwell, of Literature and Writing in the department of Afro-American Studies, reassured supporters that the case is stirring attention around the community as he delivered messages from representatives Ellen Story and Stan Rosenberg about the case and his belief that justice is served with the values of their representing communities.

Thelwell suggested to the supporters that letters be written to local media outlets and District Attorney Elizabeth Scheibel on their concerns.

"As university faculty members and librarians, we believe that the excessive prosecution of one of our former students, Jason Vassell, not only violates his right to justice under the law, but that this prosecution is an affront to the university community," political science professor John Brigham shared a statement issued by the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

"Jason was subjected to a racist attack in his dorm by visitors to campus. We believe their attack was an assault on all of us. Prosecuting Jason Vassell under felony charges and one of his attackers with misdemeanors seems to us unjust. We strongly object to the course our District Attorney, Elizabeth Scheibel, has taken in this case."

The Justice for Jason committee gave updates of upcoming fundraising initiatives that include Justice for Jason t-shirts, an awareness celebration, and a silent auction, which will all benefit Vassell's court fees.

"It is so important for our community to be involved in Jason's case, because if we do nothing we are ignoring the fact that a crime happened to a member of our community, and it only opens the door for it to happen again," said UMass sophomore and chair of Justice for Jason, Jasmin Torrejon Quiles.

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu

(Top) Jason Vassell's lawyer David P. Hoose (left) after the July 24 pre-trial hearing while Vassell and UMass professor Michael Thelwell look on. (Below) Jason Vassell stands next to his sister Tiffany Vassell, while she addresses the crowd.

VASSELL TIMELINE

- September 8, 2008 Vassell pretrial hearing postponed
- September 29, 2008 Vassell pretrial hearing
- January 2009 Vassell tentative trial month

Big Y WORLD CLASS MARKET
Only The Best...

SCORE BIG!

UNIVERSITY DRIVE, AMHERST, MA • 253-0416
WE ACCEPT OCMP!

From Our Kitchen
American Dinner Combos
19.95
SAVE ON UP TO $5
SERVES 4 TO 6!
Available Monday, Tuesday & Thursday Only.
See Store For Details.
Some Items Not Available In All Stores.

MONDAY'S COMBO

FAMILY STYLE MEATLOAF
Our Special Recipe, Made Fresh In Store

TUESDAY'S COMBO

SUPERBIRD ROTISSERIE CHICKEN
The Ultimate Rotisserie Chicken! Now Even More Value!

THURSDAY'S COMBO

8 PIECE FRIED CHICKEN
2 Drumsticks, 2 Breast Pieces, 2 Thighs & 2 Wings
We Use Only Zero Trans Fat Canola Oil

MAKE A COMBO WITH YOUR CHOICE OF ANY 3 FRESH SIDE DISHES
Garlic Red Skinned Mashed Potatoes, 2 lb • Creamy Mashed Potatoes, 2 lb
Buttered Green Beans, 13 oz • Buttered Corn, 13 oz • Buttered Baby Carrots, 13 oz
Roasted Butternut Squash, 13 oz • Gravy, 1 pint

FEED THE WHOLE TEAM WITH THESE MEALS!

FRIDAYS ONLY!
FAMILY SIZE CHEESE PIZZA
40 Pieces
$12

SATURDAY & SUNDAYS ONLY!
30" GRINDER
YOUR CHOICE OF HAM, TURKEY OR ROAST BEEF
$9

Cannot Be Combined With Any Other Offer.

Students pleased by lounges, hotel

HOUSING from page 1

With more students than room, the University initially attempted to convince students eligible to live off-campus to do so.

"We know that all late applicants who request an appointment will not be able to select an assignment," an e-mail from the Housing Assignment Office (HAO) read. "Because of the lack of on-campus housing, we advise you to explore your off-campus options."

Before the e-mail was sent in early August, apartment rentals were slow, according to Sarah Warren, property manager for the Mill Valley Estates apartment complex. After the letter, interest increased and about the same number of apartments were taken as last year. Warren said it was also true of housing trends in general in the Amherst area, according to trade surveys.

Transfer student Lee Taylor, who also received the letter, felt put off by the process.

"As a transfer student, I want to be part of the UMass community," he said.

Upon arriving to campus, Taylor was placed in a room in the Campus Center Hotel with a temporary roommate. UMass originally planned to place 60 students in the hotel.

Last Friday, the final 31 students moved into residence halls.

Currently, 300 students like Dufault are temporarily housed in residence halls' converted rooms. HAO plans to reassign women first and then men, with most men remaining until the spring semester.

But both Taylor and Dufault are pleased with their temporary rooms.

Taylor, who likes the hotel's central location, said that hotel rooms make decent housing.

Dufault agreed, enjoying the extra space her converted lounge brings.

"I wouldn't mind staying here," Dufault said.

Thomas Foley can be reached at tfoley@student.umass.edu

The demand for on-campus housing increased so that students were placed into temporary housing for the fall.

PHOTOGRAPHERS WANTED
photos@dailycollegian.com

Bylaw won't tolerate party noise

BYLAW from page 1

other nuisances such as littering, obstruction of public access and underage drinking, added Kent.

Stephen Walczak, president of the Pioneer Valley Housing Association and property manager of Puffton Village Apartments described the law as, "a happy medium that allows students to socialize and blow off steam, but not to destroy a whole neighborhood."

"This will hopefully make a few more people aware of their responsibility," said Walczak, who does not plan to change any policies at Puffton Village.

He feels the apartment complex has adequate security and said eviction matters can vary, depending on the circumstances.

Walczak was on the committee created by the Campus and Community Coalition to Reduce High-Risk Drinking (CCC) which brought the bylaw to the Amherst Town Meeting, where it passed in the spring.

He said the group also included the town manager of Hadley, where a similar law passed in May went into effect several weeks ago, and a resident of Sunset Avenue, where noise complaints have been of particular concern.

The Police and Public Health departments were also represented, yet no students were ever involved in the process despite multiple invitations, according to Kent and Walczak.

Both said it was unfortunate to not have any student participation.

"There was a lot of work put into this," said Walczak noting the CCC's two years of study and research into similar laws in college communities around the U.S.

Despite the committee's efforts, several students were not optimistic that off-campus behavior will change.

"People always find a way around it," said Sabrina Seiderman, a UMass freshman living in John Adams.

Freshman Sebastian Pukora who lives in Kennedy and plans to attend parties off-campus agreed.

"It's not going to stop me," he said. "I'll just have to have an escape plan."

Though not confident in the bylaw's effectiveness, Tim Keefe, an on-campus sophomore said, "It would kind of suck to have to pay $300."

If the law goes into effect, residents will be notified, including the UMass community and landlords, according to Kent.

The "Nuisance House" bylaw would then become the fourth bylaw aimed at curbing excessive partying in Amherst, joining the "Keg Licensing" bylaw, the "Open Container" bylaw, and the "Unlawful Noise" bylaw.

Kamins Real Estate, the owners of The Townhouses, Presidential, Crestview, Colonial Village, College Inn, Lantern Court and Mill Hollow declined to comment on the bylaw.

Lincoln Realty, who manages some rental property on Hobart Lane, was not available for comment.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@student.umass.edu

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinness@gmail.com

Gustav leaves LSU damaged

By J.J. Alcantara
The Daily Reveille (Louisiana State University)

He came, and now he's gone.

He left hundreds of thousands without power. He destroyed houses and uprooted trees. He left Louisiana State University with millions of dollars in damages. And now, he has left many students angry about living in the dark.

Hurricane Gustav ravaged Louisiana last week, leaving his mark in every city that stood in the way.

"It's the worst storm to hit Baton Rouge for the past 40 years," said Astrid Merget, provost and executive vice chancellor.

Yunchieh Chou, music doctorate student and Edward Gay Apartment resident, said her apartment lost power at 1 p.m. last Monday.

"It's been real uncomfortable trying to sleep in a humid apartment," Chou said. "Food has been ruined, and we've lost a lot of stuff."

The Edward Gay Apartments had its power restored Friday evening. But unlike most of the University, hundreds of students living off campus are still without electricity.

Chancellor Michael Martin said restoring power to the Edward Gay Apartments was a challenge because they needed a generator and a transformer.

"With Edward Gay, we're going to try to put one of our generators there because that is our facility," Martin said.

The addition of generators to campus apartments will help prevent students from living without power for extended periods of time, Martin said.

Unlike the Edward Gay Apartments, the fraternity and sorority houses are privately owned and unable to receive a generator from the University.

Greek houses on campus, where more than 800 students live, have been without power since last Monday. Houses along West Lakeshore recovered electricity Saturday evening. East and West Campus lanes and Fraternity Lane remain in the dark, as of press time.

All fraternity houses north of Dairymple, the Energy Center building, the print services building and all buildings on River Road don't have power. The Emergency Operations Center said late Sunday night.

Robin Kistler, the University's EOC public informations officer, said Entergy and the University are working together to restore power to those houses as soon as possible.

"We couldn't put one of our own generators in the fraternity and sorority houses, but we could give them a grant to provide a generator," Martin said.

Campus damage from Hurricane Gustav could be as high as $40 million, according to the University's EOC.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVV
Issue VI
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Wawrzyniak
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Huefner
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Stephanie McPherson
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Melissa Gerber
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenswaike
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor Brian Tedder
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager William Mulholland
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kocsvara
Asst. Arts & Living Heather Waxman
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial Leigh Greaney
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Assistant News Stella Cernak
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Lennard
Assistant Sports Melissa Turtinen
Assistant Photo P.J. Stanley

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenues. Printed in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1947, The Collegian has been awarded since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Kate Olesin
COPY EDITOR
Adam Miller
PRODUCTION TEAM
Michael Sarkes, Shana Jackson

From the White House to UMass
Wednesday September 10 > 9 pm Berkshire DC
★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★
Former White House Chef Walter Scheib III cooks UMass a 5-course fantastic feast of the First Families

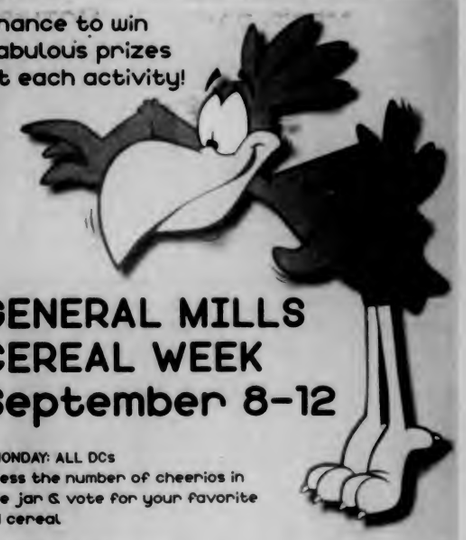
First Course
Thai Spiced Sweet Potato Soup (Democrat)
Corn and Scallop Chowder (Democrat)
Crab Cakes with Remoulade (Republican & Democrat)

Second Course
Southern Fried Chicken (Republican)
Rum and Pepper Glazed Snapper (Republican & Democrat)
Braised Pork Chops with Apples (Democrat)
Couscous Salad (Democrat)



Dessert
Fruit Bavarian
Chocolate Coconut Bar

Open to the public
$11.50 cash
and free to students
on meal plan

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/dineingservices
Festa Plants & Creations
Ivy Room Cafe

"Private Brieling" On the south side of Berkshire DC from 5:00 > 6:45 pm
★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Chance to win fabulous prizes at each activity!

GENERAL MILLS CEREAL WEEK
September 8-12

• MONDAY: ALL DCs
Guess the number of cheerios in the jar & vote for your favorite GM cereal

• TUESDAY: WORCESTER DC
Cereal Lab from 5-7 pm
Be the first to sign up!

• WEDNESDAY: FRANKLIN DC
Green Day...
learn about General Mills' green initiatives 11-2 PM

•THURSDAY: BLUEWALL
Sweet Minis Promotion Day

• FRIDAY: BERKSHIRE DC
Cereal Eating Contest 6-9 pm

GENERAL MILLS FOODSERVICE
Festa Plants & Creations
Ivy Room Cafe
DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/dineingservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY SEPTEMBER 9, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rejecting the party school stigma

Tina Ortiz

It's clear that the university is taking drastic steps toward shedding itself of the notorious party school image. But is there something positive to be taken from our party school stigma?

Dec. 17, 2006 Southwest Residential Area: 1800 students riot after the University of Massachusetts football team loses to Appalachian State.

I will admit that it's pathetic that our generation doesn't gather with this must intensity about things that actually matter, but the view from my window on the 22nd floor of Kennedy was gripping. Riots by nature cause a sensory overload, and as freshman, I found it nothing short of thrilling. I remember witnessing the irrepressible chaos that encompassed my entire line of vision while the pounding cacophony of the crowd assaulted my ear drums.

The threats that barked over the loudspeaker sounded discordant and electronic by the time it echoed up to my floor. The words melted together and all I heard were static and vowels over the loud chanting. Under blinding riot lights, the sight I saw can only be described as primal pandemonium.

Police presence, especially in Southwest, has skyrocketed since my freshman year. The UMass Police Department sets up shop in Southwest before any large sporting event, eagerly waiting to make an example out of anyone who attempts to disturb the peace.

I challenge those who claim that increased police presence means a safer, less violent campus. I'm not entirely sure, but I can see how someone could argue that it may just create new problems.

All the effort put towards increasing police presence hasn't caused a party scene morato-

Even though UMass has since fallen from the top 10 biggest party schools list, I can't shake the feeling that as UMass students we have something to prove.

rium, but rather a metamorphosis. Those who are called to party know that the "safest" way to get away with it, ironically enough, is to do so in large numbers and in one central place.

It's one of the qualities that makes the UMass student body unique. Our ability to effectively utilize the power in numbers theory, even by means of entertainment, is impressive. There're aren't enough holding cells for all of us, so if 500 people all choose to pack into the quad at the Townhouses or clog the sidewalks of Hobart, then officials are forced to switch gears from arresting people, to crowd control.

To be frank, the only people getting cuffed at these huge gatherings are those who are egregiously out-of-line and the freshman that stumble about with the type of mesmerized absentmindedness that infants have when they see bubbles for the first time. I think it could be argued that the partying issue at this University could just be a result of the sheer number of people that attend.

There are more than 25,000 people that make up the student body here at UMass. Our campus is considered to be a small metropolis and with urban living comes urban vice. If you confine a number of people that large to a small area problems occur. Whether it be partying or pollution, the issues are going to be concentrated.

The strides being taken to make UMass admission more selective might be a more reasonable fix to the partying issue, but I don't have faith in it being a panacea. Even though UMass has since fallen from the top 10 biggest party schools list, I can't shake the feeling that as UMass students we have something to prove.

I have no respect for rioting and meaningless destruction, as it costs the University – and ultimately the students – large amounts of money in damages. However, what fundamentally defines a "party school" is the capacity of its student body to be a strong, cohesive unit.

I almost feel proud of the reputation that UMass students have for not being afraid to assemble for what we want. Imagine what a force 25,000 students gathering for the environment, or human rights would be. We should recognize our power as a unit and that it's our right as students of a publicly-funded University to gather freely with one another.

So don't let some arbitrary ranking on a list change the way you view your experience at UMass. Every school has parties and the social scene at any university is entirely what you make of it. I think it's about time that we all pooled our resources and used our strength as a whole to seek change for the better on our campus.

Let's prove to the Princeton Review that we have the most fun, but at the same time get the most done.

Tina Ortiz is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kortiz@student.umass.edu.

An Obamanation of economic literacy

Greg Collins

Barack Obama and his supporters need to take Economic Literacy 101.

If they were truly concerned with helping people move up socioeconomic brackets in order to obtain better food, clothing and education, they would find that Obama's economic plans would hinder this growth.

For example, Sen. Obama's constant focus on strengthening America's middle class assumes that the middle class is a static entity, with similar incomes, family sizes, residential living expenses, and educational levels. Such assumptions demonstrate why the Democratic Party should look deeper into the specific characteristics of people who make up the middle class. The middle class, like any other socioeconomic bracket in America, changes more frequently than in any other major, industrialized nation.

There may be people who recently moved into the federally recognized "middle class" who are young professionals that recently graduated college, like many of our friends. There may be established professionals who took a lower-paying job at a different workplace in order to work closer to their spouses or to move into a better school district for their children. There may be women who had to take a leave of absence from their work to raise their children. There are people who have earned "middle class" income for years, but who also may have been accumulating the skills and experience necessary to be promoted to higher-paying jobs in the future.

Furthermore, many college students who have studied abroad have comments about the middle class in the country he or she has studied – if you ask them.

If a particular country's government is heavily involved in the economy, which can be reflected by high taxes, government-guaranteed jobs or strong tariffs, you will invariably hear that there is a permanent rich class and a permanent poor class, yet there is a weak middle class. The reason this is so is not because the government is not involved in the economy enough, but because it is too involved.

By consistently saying they want to "strengthen the middle class," Obama and his supporters are simplifying an economic issue with many deeper variables that show the incredible diversity of Americans expanding from different income levels, races and ethnicities.

Obama's plans for refundable tax credits and earned income tax credits essentially give money to Americans in order to qualify for existing federal programs. Many of the programs already pay little to no income taxes, according to the Congressional Budget Office. The question Obama supporters should ask themselves is: where is the federal money given out through these tax credits coming from? The answer, of course, is from other taxes, such as many marginal federal tax rates Obama proposes to raise. People of all socioeconomic brackets are going to have to pay these taxes.

As for Obama's plan to cut taxes for 95 percent of "working families," the question of how Obama defines a working family begs to be answered. Why not cut taxes for 100 percent of "working families?" What about families who hold investments whose returns would suffer under capital gains taxes? Are families not working when their money is creating greater returns on investments that could pay for better housing, education and food?

Obama's plan also calls to end tax breaks for companies who outsource overseas. This would mean that because companies would be faced with higher costs and little incentive to innovate they would inevitably have to fire workers, including those in poor or middle class income brackets. Imposing further burdens on big and small companies means imposing further burdens on individuals who are rich, middle class and poor.

For a party which claims to look out for the poor, the economic policies of government intervention supported by Democrats do the direct opposite. This flawed thinking spans across party lines, as Sen. McCain twice voted against President Bush's tax cuts.

Looking at Obama's legislative career in Illinois suggests that he has always embraced the notion that government – essentially rich bureaucrats – should decide when and where money should go. But if Obama and his supporters really want to alleviate poverty and help the poor, they should ardently push for school voucher programs, stricter academic standards in public schools, and enable people of all income brackets to make individual financial decisions by lowering taxes on income, capital gains, and companies.

By consistently saying they want to "strengthen the middle class," Obama and his supporters are simplifying an economic issue with many deeper variables that show the incredible diversity of Americans expanding from different income levels, races, and ethnicities.

Coupled with freeing markets in energy and international trade, giving more economic freedoms to Americans will produce greater opportunities to receive better education, become energy-independent, and provide a stable and nurturing environment for children.

This is the real change Obama and his supporters can believe in if they become economically literate.

Greg Collins is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Olympic games to governmental blames

Vincent Capone

This summer, China's hosting of the Beijing Olympics was undoubtedly a major success for a nation with over a fifth of the world's population. Billions tuned into the games to see China eagerly showcase its hospitality and modernity.

However, America's news depicting China during the games was filled with anti-China sentiment.

From human rights issues within China, to China's inactions in Sudan, to an imagined gymnastics scandal, the news media targeted China. It seems that in America's eye, China can do no right.

Many feel that China needs to become a mirror image of the West. But who says that the Western way is the progressive way?

When it comes to China's bad reputation concerning Sudan, I fail to see how anyone knowledgeable in today's modern politics can assume that China alone can end the genocide in the area. China's interests in Sudan relate back to its dependence on their oil reserves. How can Americans blame them for failing to incite trouble just so they can ensure oil supplies?

The U.S. is so strongly tied to its oil imports that we went to war with Iraq to keep our oil safe. Therefore, why should we expect China to end its relations with Sudan and cut off a significant supply of its future foreign oil?

Americans love to blame China for all of our problems. We try to blame China because we have become so dependent on their exports.

China sees itself as the main force behind all third-world nations, and is using its growing world dominance to speak for these African nations, helping them in their struggles to be recognized. Compare that to the West's notorious history of abusing Africa. Whether through the slave trade, stripping the continent of resources or brutally forming colonies which Africans nations are still working to fix, the past actions and messes that the west created.

During the Olympics, many westerners argued that the Chinese glamorized the games by using fake fireworks and highlighting a little girl who sung the anthem who was more attractive than the actual singer. But we can only look to our own media to see parallels to China's so-called "forgery."

For instance, how many of us pick up a magazine with an overly airbrushed photo on the cover or attend a concert in which the singer, who makes a living through their vocals, lip-syncs all their songs? If you are one of those people that think that China should adopt more Western practices, than it seems they are moving in the right direction.

China's Olympic hosting can be related to a big coming out party for them to join the world stage. During this party, many westerners traveled to China with the sole mission to cause dissent. A majority are going there to argue for a "Free Tibet."

When Americans turn on the news and see that people in China are taken into custody for protesting, they act horrified that something so sinister could come from the communists. But you have to ask yourself, if America were hosting a major event, would we take foreign protesters so lightly and let them flounce on our laws to disrupt our national unity?

Let's look back at the Atlanta games. What if a group of Chinese citizens came to America to rally support for a free Hawaii or a free Texas? I don't see the US government just sitting back and allowing them to cause unrest.

It is said that about 80 percent of the Chinese people are content with being bullied by their government with the loss of American freedoms at the expense of increased wealth.

Where do these estimates come from? Having been to China this past year, all I saw were citizens who had more nationalism than we do in America. Let's take the Sichuan Earthquake, for example. Within mere hours, the Prime Minister was on the ground in the earthquake zone helping aid the relief efforts and to rescue children.

Let's compare that to Hurricane Katrina in which the Bush administration took over two weeks to end up on the scene. The disaster drew heavy criticism on how America takes care of its people and even to this day hinders evacuation efforts, as hurricanes in the south grow increasingly strong.

Americans love to blame China for all of our problems. We try to blame China because we have become so dependent on their exports. We blame China for not stopping genocide in Darfur when our government has made no real actions to stop it themselves.

We blame China because our economy is rubbish while theirs is growing at a rate that our economy has never even seen. But we have only ourselves and our leaders who play "pass the blame" when it comes to taking care of their own people to blame for these problems.

Vincent Capone is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at vcapone@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Felice at their finest

Folk band's home-town style pleases crowd at Club Helsinki

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

It is always difficult for a band not to sound at least partially derivative, let alone get away with performing versions of traditional arrangements.

The Felice Brothers are a different story. They know how to bring their down-home brand of authenticity to the table.

The Felice Brothers performed at Club Helsinki in sleepy Great Barrington, MA on Sunday night, backed into a small, dark corner amid oriental lanterns and oddly appealing folk art. The Brothers were a perfect fit for the club's dim, cramped atmosphere, playing a full range of their abilities from gospels to full-on hoedowns.

Before they really got going, the quintet started things off with a love ballad.

"Uncle Jerry always said to seduce the crowd with a love song," Ian Felice (guitar) croaked as he plucked the first few notes of "Murder By Mistletoe" from their new, self-titled record.

Part of the beauty of the Felice Brothers is the description's preceding songs, which they choose to interject before nearly every number. These are brutally honest small-town survivors of drug abuse and poverty, putting their experiences to song, never shying away from revealing exactly what inspires them: drink, death, love, and forgotten outlaw tales.

The Felice Brothers do not need any fancy bells or whistles to get their stories across. They perform with the bare-bones approach of a 5-piece drum kit, finger-picked guitar, bass, accordion, fiddle, washboard and the soulful yowl of their four-part harmonies.

The Brothers' second song was about the "Memphis Flu of 1929," a song the quarantined would presumably sing to each other to lift their spirits. This is the type of feeling the Felice Brothers create, music as an uplifting entity.

This extends to how they treat the audience, speaking to them as if they are one of the family. There was hardly a distinction between the stage and the dance floor as the small crowd gathered around, particularly when the bar began filling up. Newest "brother" Christmas Felice (fiddle, washboard) eventually pointed his microphone toward the audience to give them a turn to sing along.

Next came "Ruby Mae," also from the new record. "A Song About The Death of a Cabaret Singer." Whether the Brothers actually knew this singer or not is a mystery, but it would not be surprising if they did as they sang about her with such familiarity and gratitude.

The next song was also about a death, one of a great man named Lou who died in Penn Station. The homage to him included the gritty rasp of their four-part harmonies (if you could call them harmonies) and an overtly soulful tone to the balladry.

After that tune, the band formally introduced themselves to the crowd, citing their Palenville, NY home over the New York/Massachusetts border in the Catskill Mountains.

"We're just your bastard cousins from over the mountain," Ian admitted before dedicating the next song to a couple newlywed friends at the bar. "We, you know, try to kiss our cousins... in church."

The Brothers then dove into another jam, securing their role as authentic troubadours of a new old America as James Felice informed the crowd "this song is about the plight of the American farmer."

Issues like these are not dealt within today's contemporary music, though in the case of the Felice Brothers, they are not necessarily going for a contemporary sound. It is this idea of looking backwards that makes the Brothers relevant and exciting, for we can only learn from the past.

They certainly embrace this sentiment in more respects than one: their garb simple (t-shirts, jeans and durable boots), their appearance unkempt (James' burly beard, Ian and Simone's not-so-clean mustaches) and their faux sense of technology (their response to microphone feedback: "Devil's in the foolbox!") melding to seem as though these guys were rocketed from a Depression-era farm via new-fangled time machine.

One of the highlights of the evening was surely the pure gospel of "Mercy," which Simone took the vocal reigns for after stepping out from behind the drum kit. James' accordion wept while Simone clenched his fist and let his vibrato shake his entire being.

Another definite highlight came immediately after in the form of "Whiskey in My Whiskey," which Ian described as simply "a hillbilly song." The crowd sang along, sipped their drinks, and sure enough, got down with James' recommendation to "get drunk and dance."

"This next one's called 'Cincinnati Queen,'" said Ian before the next number. "It's about a woman five years older than our mother who seduced all of us in the back of her white limousine."

An iffy concept for a song, but the humor went over well with the amiable crowd. Ian bounced around and plucked frantically at his guitar while James shifted his bulk from left to right, coaxing

See FELICE on page 6

Pennsylvania natives, The Felice Brothers, put on a pleasing folk-meets-country performance at Barrington's Club Helsinki this past Sunday evening.

Moe Down festival proves to be ultimate sight for the soul

By Matt Solomon
Collegian Staff

On the last weekend of the summer of 2008, most University of Massachusetts students were relaxing and rearing for their trip back to the Zoo.

Yet, on a small, ski mountain in Turin, NY, Moe-rons (a self-given nickname for fans of the band "Moe") were raging hard, flaring and grooving wildly to top-notch groups such as The Presidents of the United States of America, The Yonder Mountain String Band, Umphrey's McGee, The Benevento-Russo Duo, The Sparrow Quartet featuring Abigail Washburn & Bela Fleck, Levon Helm, Fishbone, The Brew, The Macpodz and of course the explosively titillating rock-blues-experimental-cowboy-free-flow-space-jam band Moe (or jam-band for short).

Upon the mountainside ridges, throngs of shoeless hippies prowled the trails looking for something real to grasp onto. Like a game of Frogger, there were plenty of obstacles to avoid.

The good vibes were in attendance, but they needed to be pursued rigorously in order to avoid the bad news bears scavenging like crows. Life was constantly in motion on the mountainside as the planets were rotating around the everlasting sun, revolving on their shaky axes – per usual, right?

The atmosphere on the concert-grounds was that of utter excitement and shear pleasure. Once the music seeped into your pores, it set your soul free in a rapid explosion of color and light. Music was present not only on the main stage and dance tent, but also within the thick portable-village jungle of the campground.

Fans trenched within the tent cities could be found jamming out passionately at all hours of the day and night. There were sing-alongs, drum circles and an incessant buzzing of people hopping around like energizer bunnies.

The weather was beautiful as streams of hot, acidic sweat poured down your face, dripping into a giant puddle connecting the concert-goers in unison.

This was the true beauty of the festival. Everyone was a tight-knit community taking care of

See MOE on page 6

Before taking a year break to spend time with their families, Moe performed at the ninth annual Moe Down festival held this summer in Turin, New York.

Comedian graces Bowker tonight

Steve Hofstetter to bring the laughs to UMass auditorium

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

Everyone likes to laugh.

From children to inmates to hyenas, everyone short of Marilyn Manson and Hot Topic employees enjoys a good chuckle. It's a simple fact backed-up by the multi-billion dollar industry responsible for tickling our collective funny bone.

As of late, this country has seen an alarming trend in movies, TV shows and comics fishing for jokes on the more foolish end of the spectrum. This can be seen in the cancelation of "smart" sitcoms such as "Frasier" and "Arrested Development," the rise of Blue Collar Comedy and the continued existence of Fox's primetime lineup.

One comedian is on a mission to fix this problem, and he is coming to the University of Massachusetts.

One of the most sought after names on the college circuit, Steve Hofstetter, has been called "the thinking man's comic" and for good reason. His jokes are high-brow, if not always PC, taking on such issues as race, religion, obesity and the media.

Highly political, Hofstetter wears his views in plain sight, and many of his bits are decidedly left-leaning, playing to his audience of mainly liberal college students.

For all of his idealism, however, he is not above silly comedy. His Web site is filled, among other things, with treasured hate-mail addressed to him and abusive conversations with AOL helper robot, Smarterchild.

Born in New York City, Hofstetter graduated from Columbia University in 2002. His television debut came in 2006, when he appeared on ESPN's "Quite Frankly with Steven A. Smith." The ESPN debut is no coincidence, as he is also a widely published and respected sportswriter for "Sports Illustrated." His daily "Sports Minute (Or So)" is syndicated on over 150 radio stations and in more than 30 newspapers.

Hofstetter is also featured frequently on Collegehumor.com, as well as in National Lampoon. He recently released his latest book, "Balls: an in-your-face look at Sports" through Lampoon.

His most popular books series, "Student Body Shots," is a highly fated duo of satirical "guides" for the world of higher learning. Add that to his Sirius Satellite Radio show and frequent TV spots and it is no wonder that he has earned himself a reputation as the hardest working man in show-business.

His latest album, "Cure For The Cable Guy," debuted at number 22 on the charts, and takes aim at, among other things, Larry, the administration, and questionable modern parenting. This is his third album, following up "Taste: Like Bliss" and "Dark Side of the Room," which introduced a Radiohead-style pay-what-you-want distribution.

Although Hofstetter has been criticized for being an elitist, the comic has a strong nationwide following, among young adults and college students. His website, steveholstetter.com, is the number two comedian's site in the country, and he appears at over 100 colleges each year.

He will be performing at Mass on Tuesday, Sept. 9, in the Bowker auditorium of Stockbridge Hall. Doors open at 7 p.m. and the show starts at 8 p.m. Hofstetter will also be accompanied by two opening comedians, friends whom he often tours with.

The event is sponsored by the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, as part of a big semester kick-off. The sponsorship comes as little surprise, considering Hofstetter himself was a member of Sig Ep at Columbia.

"We met him at a national fraternity assembly, where he was performing," said Steven Ward, an event coordinator.

After seeing Hofstetter's act, they immediately knew that they wanted him at UMass. Aside from the publicity and good will such a gig would grant the fraternity, Ward expressed a sincere desire "to bring a great thing to campus."

For fanatic fans of high-brow humor, this show should be a real treat. As for the rest of you: take advantage of the first-week festivities while they last. Besides, who doesn't like to laugh?

Tickets for Steve Hofstetter are $5 and can be purchased at the door. They can also be purchased in advance from any Sigma Phi Epsilon member.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asheridan@student.umass.edu.

Steve Hofstetter will perform tonight at Bowker Auditorium.

STEVE HOFSTETTER
8:00 P.M.
BOWKER AUDITORIUM
$5

Moe goes on hiatus after festival

MOE from page 5

one another. If you help the Moe community, the Moe-rons take care of you. It is a give-and-take situation.

One Moe-ron, Jeff, called out in the spirit of Moe-rons everywhere for an evolution in consciousness. He claimed that the world has had too many revolutions already and it is time for our species to evolve. Revolutions bring nothing but more of the same. From his perspective, every action has a reaction. There are so many actions taking place so why not try to make them good ones? For our actions really do matter. In fact, every action has the potential to change the world. If this is true than we can also control our own destiny to some extent?

The festival spirit encourages people to stop letting the world happen to you and to make something happen for yourself. Through the eyes of the festival-goers, the world is but a clam waiting to be opened and have its juices sucked free.

The true splendor of the festival experience resides within the eyes of the sun-soaked people and the sounds of the eclectic tunes floating in the damp air like dispersing bubbles. The music was the glue that held it all together. Otherwise, the carnival-esque madness in the campgrounds would have probably driven attendees to polka.

Moe has announced that they will not be playing any more dates until next year in order to spend some much awaited time with their loving families. However, they will be holding Moe Down 10 next summer and there is one last very special event right here in our own back yard.

Farm Aid is going to be held on September 20 at the Comcast Center in Mansfield, MA. It is a great cause that has been supporting our local farming communities for twenty-two years.

At this years extravaganza, the stellar lineup includes the likes of Willie Nelson, John Mellencamp, Neil Young, Dave Matthews, Kenny Chesney, Arlo Guthrie, Jerry Lee Lewis, Steve Earle, Nation Beat, Grace Potter and the Nocturnals, Jakob Dylan and the Gold Mountain Rebels, Danielle Evin, Jamey Johnson, Jesse Lenat, Will Dailey, One Flew South, The Elms and of course, yours truly, Moe.

Matt Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu

CW's long-running show tries to hold on for another season

By Bill Radford
The Gazette

Critics doubt that TV's hit drama, "Smallville," will last much longer but writers are pushing for another successful season.

TV's "Smallville" has weathered cast losses before. But this season, the eighth, faces a special challenge: Michael Rosenbaum, who played Clark Kent's arch-enemy, Lex Luthor, and Kristin Kreuk, Clark's first love, Lana Lang, have left the cast.

Behind the scenes, the show's creators, Miles Millar and Alfred Gough, are gone. The show is moving forward, though. This season, which begins Sept. 18 on The CW, will feature major new villains, the return of some old allies and a new chapter in Clark's life as he moves closer to his destiny as Superman.

With Millar and Gough gone, the series is now in the hands of Kelly Souders and her three fellow executive producers, who have all been with the show since Season 2.

Clark's relationships with Lex and Lana have been key underpinnings of "Smallville," Souders acknowledges, and so the departures of Rosenbaum and Kreuk are more than just bumps in the road.

"When we heard neither would be back full time, to say it was devastating is not overstating it," she said. "However, we have these other great characters." While Kreuk is no longer a regular, she will be back for a handful of episodes, Souders assured. Similarly, while Laura Vandervoort, who played Clark's Kryptonian cousin last season, is gone from the cast, she'll make a return appearance.

As for Rosenbaum, "the door is always open," Souders said. And Lex's presence will still be felt, she says, even if he's not there. Meanwhile, there are other relationships to explore, such as the one between Clark (Tom Welling) and Lois Lane (Erica Durance), who will become co-workers at The Daily Planet in Metropolis.

The two stars have an undeniable on-screen chemistry, Souders said is a good thing, since it's Lois, not Lana, whom Clark is destined to be with. This season's theme is double identities. As Clark spends more time in the big city instead of Smallville, he'll find it tougher to swoop in to save the day and then escape unnoticed, Souders said.

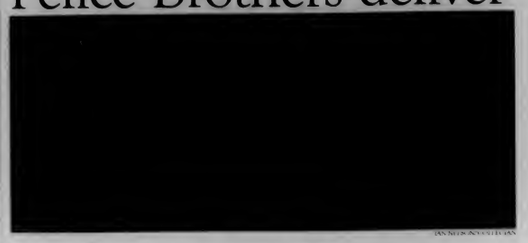
"In Smallville, there were often only cows watching him," Souders said.

The double-identity theme also encompasses Clark's best friend, Chloe Sullivan (Allison Mack).

"Chloe has some sort of secret life going on that we will discover as well," Souders said.

Then there's new cast member Sam Witwer, who plays paramedic Davis Bloome. Bloome's alter ego is Doomsday, the creature who killed Superman in the comics, though Bloome, himself, is apparently unaware of his double identity. Over the course of the season, Souders said, Bloome will discover he's not necessarily from this world and he's not the good guy he thought he was.

"It's kind of a tragic turn of events for him." Adding to Clark's headaches: Cassidy Freeman as Tess Mercer, acting chief executive of LuthorCorp in Lex's absence. "You will sense very quickly that she has been mentored closely by Lex," Souders said. "There's a little bit of Lex in her."



At least Clark will have some help against these new threats. The junior Justice League - Green Arrow, Black Canary and Aquaman - will show up in the season's first episode to bail out Clark. And Justin Hartley as Green Arrow will be sticking around as a regular.

"He's just fascinating to play against Clark," Souders said. Though the characters are allies, "there are parts of each other that they really don't like about each other."

While there have been reports that the eighth season will be the last, Souders said that hasn't been decided - and that there are plenty of stories left to tell.

"We are doing our best, everyone's working really hard, in hopes that this isn't the last season," Souders said.

Felice Brothers deliver

The Felice Brothers showed love to their audience and lived up to their hillbilly-esque personas, adorned in casual wear and scruffy beards.

FELICE from page 5

shrill melody from his accordion.

The histories never ceased, as Ian explained. "this one's about doing drugs in the Hudson River town where we grew up" before playing "Don't Wake the Scarecrow."

The second to last song of their set, "Hey Hey Revolver," from "Tonight at the Arizona" (2006), was "a song about armed robbery in the Catskill Mountains." This tune, which nearly glorifies killing for money, holds one of the Felice Brothers' best lyrics, likening the blue of "Burger King billboard signs" to the blue of pregnant teen Jeanie's mother's eyes.

The supposed last song of the night was "Frankie's Gun," the lead single off their latest release. The crowd sang along to the simple chorus of "bang bang went Frankie's gun, he shot me down" as the band gleefully played.

As the night progressed, it seemed nearly impossible for the Brothers to not sound credible in every way, even during their encore in which they covered their hero, Townes Van Zandt.

They wrapped up their set after a few more rollicking offerings, between which they sincerely made the audience aware of their love for them. This filtered into the sentiment that Simone left the crowd with, "love is all we need."

In their eyes, everybody was a member of the family Sunday night. Just imagine - a whole room full of Felice Brothers.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

Chick-flick slightly misses mark

All star cast comes up short in lackluster 'Sex' knock off

By Roger Moore
The Orlando Sentinel

"The Women" is "Sex and the City" without the sex, without the edge.

That's not to say it isn't the chicker of the two "chick pictures," with better actors trying their hand at the same sitcom-polished sort of patter.

But the "good girls" of "The Women" feel a little old-fashioned next to the bad girls of SATC understandable since "Women" is based on a 1930s Clare Booth Luce play and 1939 film.

After years of being the most talked-about remake in Hollywood, with many an actress (Julia Roberts, for one) trying to get it on the screen, "The Women" returns as a Meg Ryan production and Meg Ryan vehicle, a somewhat updated take on girl-bonding and the generational wars that "the younger, other woman" can stir up in a marriage or in the workplace.

Ryan is Mary, queen bee of her little circle of ladies who luncheon.

She's the sometime clothing designer who married well and juggles family, charities and work and "has it all." Or so she thinks.

But gal pal Sylvie (Annette Hening), the magazine editor, gets a tip from a chatty manicurist at Saks.

A "perfume girl" in the Manhattan store is having an affair with a married man. And he's Mary's husband.

Much kvetching ensues, as Sylvie tells the ever-pregnant Edith (Debra Messing) and lesbian writer friend Miriam (Jada Pinkett Smith).

Should they tell? Should they keep Mary from finding out? That'll never work.

Murphy Brown vet Diane English adapted and directed "The Women," and she gives her sitcom-vet supporting players the best lines.

Candice Bergen is perfectly cast as Mary's too-understanding, too-catty mom. She comments on a bad facelift.

"She looks like she's reentering the Earth's atmosphere!"

Or, "Don't be bitter, Mary. It leads to Botox."

But English has difficulty making this pleasant-enough confection hit all its marks.

It's a prim movie that only gets messy in a Messing-driven childbirth scene, with hand-held camera, jumpy action and the cast really mixing it up.

Every other scene is static, too carefully lighted, to flatter actresses of a certain age.

It's a movie of one-shots, with the ladies staying in their flattering light, delivering their lines to someone who reacts to that clever line in the next one-shot.

Eva Mendes goes full va-va-voom as the "other woman." Oscar winner and TV vet Cloris Leachman makes a funny housekeeper, and Debi Mazar steals her scenes as the gossipy manicurist who gives it all away.

And Bening and Ryan are quite good, giving emotional heft to their women, one whose career is in jeopardy because the "hip" world is passing her by, the other whose husband has taken up with a young hottie.

English also turns out some gems in the script, about feminine spirit and ambition that "shrinks to fit" whatever her spouse lets her be.

This is a movie world without men, which, considering how lacking the lads were in "Sex and the City," probably wasn't a bad move.

But "bad" is what's in short supply in "The Women."

It's not 1939 anymore, and while human nature and female nature haven't changed, attitudes certainly have.

This is like catching up on the gossip with an old friend who's too nice to really dish the dirt.

THIS WEEK ON CAMPUS

| Tuesday | Wednesday | Thursday |
|---|---|---|
| You may have seen him on VH1's "Countdown" or Showtime's "White Boyz in the Hood," but now comedian Steve Hofstetter will hit Stockbridge Hall at 8 p.m. with his act, "The Thinking Man's Comic," thanks to the brothers of Sigma Phi Epsilon. Hofstetter performs at over 100 schools each year, and will stop at UMass as part of his fall tour. Tickets are $5 and can be purchased at the door or in advance through his official website, www.stevehofstetter.com. | Feeling creative? The Student Union Art Gallery is hosting a Collaborative Art Social at 7 p.m. in preparation for its collaborative art exhibit in October, which will include visual art, sound art, movement, performing arts, music, literature, dance, and theater. To attend, contact Kerry O'Grady at kerryogrady@gmail.com or stop by the Student Union Art Gallery. | Author John Ashbery will be appearing at this week's Visiting Writers Series at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall. The event is sponsored by the MFA Program for Poets and Writers and the Juniper Initiative, the UMass Arts Council, the UMass Alumni Association, Vice Provost of Research, the English Department and the Dean of Humanities and Fine Arts. Ashbery has won a Pulitzer Prize, Yale Series of Younger Poets Award, the National Book Award as well as the National Book Critics Circle Award. This event is free for the public! |

Compiled by Elyse Horowitz
Collegian Correspondent

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Check Out The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Web site at
www.dailycollegian.com

UMass goalkeeper senior Zack Simmons saves a shot last season. Simmions is known to be one of the strongest and most vocal players for the Minutemen this season.

Simmons, Brown lead Minutemen in back

SOCCER from page 10

"If we're not sound defensively it doesn't matter how good offensively we are," Koch said.

Anchoring the defense is Brown who, after his game-winning goal on Saturday, has shown his versatility and leadership for the Minutemen. They played successful defense against Siena, only allowing three shots on goal, and with the help of senior goalkeeper Zack Simmons they shutout the Saints.

UMass will focus on making sure its defense is sound and organized by not losing focus when the ball is in the opposition's end. Doing so will limit the number of breaks opponents have and be more successful on the counter-attack.

Reserves step up

UMass returns 8 of its 11 starters from 2007. This gives the Minutemen a strong core of players, but that doesn't mean the reserves are any less important. In the match against Siena, the reserves had ample opportunities to prove that they are an important asset to the team.

Now that many players got the opportunity to play in the match last Saturday, the character of the team is important because not every player saw time on the field. The attitude of the team needs to stay positive to keep practices rigorous and beneficial for the team's improvement.

"What they don't understand, the guys at the end of the bench are the most important players on our team," Koch said. "We need them to be focused and to be energetic and to make training difficult and intense. Without them we're not going to do well."

With the reserves stepping up, there is pressure taken off of returning players that tend to be targeted. Junior forward duo Bryan Hogan and Mark DeSantis have yet to tally goals this season, but with the help of reserve Ofosu, the Minutemen are still creating scoring chances.

The diversity and skill level of the reserves will continue to help the Minutemen throughout the season.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com

Rhode Island returns successful defenders

A-10 from page 10

third for the A-10 preseason poll.

Although a plethora of newcomers have joined the roster, the Niners have security in preseason All-Conference selection Chris Salvaggione, who led the A-10 in game-winning goals (4) and overall assists last season.

Gunn's squad is slated to face the Minutemen in both teams' final regular-season game this November, in what could be a pivotal 2008 conference tournament preview.

Key returnees include Salvaggione at forward, along with fellow senior Kedan Crosby and All-Rookie goalkeeper David Martin.

4. Rhode Island (2007 record: 9-8-2, 7-1-1 A-10)

Second-place regular season finisher Rhode Island reached the A-10 Tournament semifinals in 2007, only to be upset, 1-0, by the Minutemen.

Though the Rams are only returning three starters this season, URI coach John O'Connor compiled a high-caliber recruiting class featuring preseason All-Rookie selection Franco Lo Presti. The freshman adds height and athleticism to the Rams' defense.

The Rams are returning fourteen players for the 08-09 campaign, including starting attackers Kedan Crosby, Greg Balicki and Andres Ruiz.

On the defensive end, Domenic Petranca is back in front of fellow junior Chris Pennock in goal. Pennock was among the nation's most dependable goalkeepers last season, finishing with five shutouts.

5. Dayton (2007 record: 10-4, 4-3-2 A-10)

After finishing sixth in the A-10 last season, Dayton reached the opening round of the conference tournament. This season, the Flyers may have more luck returning nine starters for 2008.

Herman Trophy, "Watch List" candidate Alex Torda headlines the list of returners for the Flyers. Torda, a junior forward, became the first-ever Dayton athlete to be nominated for intercollegiate soccer's highest honor when the National Soccer Coaches Association of America selected him this summer.

On the defensive end, A-10 Honorable Mention goalkeeper Zac Gibbons was lost to graduation. While the Flyers face the challenge of replacing Gibbons' stellar .899 goals-against average, the alum is back on the sidelines as an assistant coach.

Freshman Lucas Young has looked sharp in preseason matches thus far, scoring two goals against Central Arkansas.

6. George Washington (2007 record: 9-8-2, 3-4-2 A-10)

Though unranked in 2007 with a disappointing 10th place A-10 finish, the coaches' poll predicts the Colonials squeaking in for the final spot of this year's conference tournament.

GW returns six starters, including three key midfielders and junior Andy Stadler. The forward looks to provide stability up front.

Matt Scheer is returning for the Colonials in goal. He split goalkeeping duties with the graduated Greg Yahr in 2007, starting eight games to Yahr's 11.

7. Fordham (2007 record: 6-10-3, 5-4-0 A-10)

On par with fellow 2007 mid-conference finishers Charlotte and Dayton, fifth place A-10 finisher Fordham returns nine starters this season.

After a campaign that saw the program's first berth in the A-10 Tournament since 1998, the Rams are led by senior defender John Pardini, a 2008 Herman Trophy "Watch List" candidate.

Pardini headlines a promising Rams defense featuring sophomore keeper Dan Hajducky, who posted a 1.38 goals-against-average last fall.

Where Hajducky stands in the team's long-term plans, however, may be questionable, as coach Jim McElderry has added three freshman goalkeepers to the roster.

8. Xavier (2007 record: 8-10-1, 4-4-1 A-10)

After non-conference losses to Cincinnati and Radford, the Musketeers sit at 0-2 at the beginning of the 2008 season.

Coached once again by alum Dave Schurek, the Musketeers could be a surprise due to their gritty core of veteran underclassmen.

Xavier's leadership will stem from junior Jake Vollmer, the 2007 Musketeer MVP, and All-Rookie sophomore Ej-Hadj Dieng. Vollmer provides defensive and midfield versatility.

All-Rookie sophomore Brandon Buchner looks to improve upon a stellar freshman campaign where he led the team in both goals (5) and points (12).

Holly Galvin can be reached at hgalvin@student.umass.edu

Xavier's Jimmy Cummings and UMass' Ben Arikian compete for the ball last season. Xavier was picked to finish eighth in the A-10 coaches poll.

SCHOOL LOANS
WON'T REPAY THEMSELVES
After-grad careers, part-time jobs, and internships.
START BUILDING
collegecampus.com

FROM MELT-IN-THE-OVEN TO MELT-IN-YOUR-MOUTH
DOMINO'S INTRODUCES OVEN BAKED SANDWICHES
CHICKEN PARM | PHILLY CHEESE STEAK | CHICKEN BACON RANCH | ITALIAN
BAKED AT 450 AND DELIVERED RIGHT TO YOUR MOUTH $4.99
3 medium one-topping pizzas
$5.55 each
413-256-8911

For 24/7 coverage on UMass sports check out the Daily Collegian sports blog
http://blog.masslive.com/dailycollegiansports

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)
REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Fall Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 168C • Sept. 8 (Mon) • Sept. 9 (Tues) • Sept. 10 (Wed)
•Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Sept. 11 in Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pick up the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

Shake it.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | | | | | | 3 |
| 4 | | | | 6 | | 1 | | 7 |
| | 7 | 2 | | | 4 | | 8 | |
| | 4 | 7 | | | | | | 2 |
| 1 | | | | 5 | | 6 | | 9 |
| 9 | | | | | | 7 | 6 | |
| | 3 | | | 1 | | 2 | 7 | |
| 7 | | 8 | | 3 | | | | 5 |
| 2 | | | | | | | | |

ACROSS
1 Destines to a grim fate
6 Female fowl
10 Hard and fast rules
14 Dock device
15 Toast topper
16 Moran or Gray
17 Workers' association
19 Rein-A target
20 Dwindle
21 Tell the story
23 Rosy outlook
27 Submit payment
28 Flicka's foot
29 Faucet
31 Shouts derisively
32 Without a doubt
35 Jotted down
37 Peculiar
38 Madly foolish person
40 Double bend
43 Moroccan capital
44 Cultural
46 Pick up the tab
49 Natal starter?
51 Verdi opera
52 Charitable aid
54 Give rise to
57 Resident of Kampala
59 Transmit
60 Baby's bed
61 Fitted together neatly
66 Gambling game
67 Send forth
68 Shut
69 Fret and fuss
70 Aegean and Adriatic
71 Uses a keyboard

DOWN
1 Taboo spray
2 Shell propeller
3 Eggs to Caesar
4 Childbirth assistant
5 Energy form
6 Trustworthy
7 Whitney or Wallach
8 Light gas
9 Whale tracker
10 Well-educated
11 Games mall
12 Cold season
13 Looks of scorn
18 Cycle or valve starter
22 Turn down
23 Buckeye State
24 "On Golden
25 One of Taylor's exes
26 Sea cow
30 Kitty
33 Jubilant
34 Entitle
36 Equal score
39 Bert Bobbsey's twin
40 Bagnold or Bryton
41 Lateral part
42 Disfigurement
43 Trout type
45 With little difficulty
46 Pickups
47 Wish undone
48 Stretch or May
50 Beginnings
53 Loses brightness
55 Obtain
56 Make into law
58 Alaskan seaport
62 By way of
63 Cut off, as branches
64 Opposite of WNW
65 Prairies, IL

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Quote of the Day

"Last night I dreamed I ate a ten-pound marshmallow, and when I woke up the pillow was gone."

- Tommy Cooper

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your cat looks miserable. Let him out of that silly dress for once and he might cheer up.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
That's what you get for marrying a brain in a jar.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You are a ghost of a bygone era...the Tighty-Whitey Era.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Tonight will teach you to look up. You never know when a balcony will become a toilet.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
It's not technically a "farmer's tan," since it's on your tallywacker.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't worry when you see your family and neighbors being interviewed on TV, but it may be time to flee the country.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
This election has quickly turned from High School Musical 2 into a West Side Story knife fight.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You will get a surprising amount of use out of your new sausage maker.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You are like the Rembrandt of painting with bodily fluids.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't allow yourself to get caught up in boy-girl fights, unless you are Jerry Springer.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Since when is it okay to wear plaid shorts when not on a golf course?

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
They won't name a new building on campus after you, so you'll just have to settle for a deadly disease.

ATKINS FARMS Country Market
Now Hiring
For The Fall & Holidays Seasons
Part-time Sales Associates and Production Assistants
All positions require evening, weekend and holiday availability
Customer service and food handling experience preferred
Come in to apply or contact Kelly at 253-9528 or kelly@atkinsfarms.com
(Employment opportunities are also available on our website.)

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! By Tim Rickard

Welcome to Falling Rock By Josh Shalek

SEND IN YOUR COMICS
SEND IN YOUR COMICS

Generation Banking is here!
I'm Toni. I work here and I bank here too!
Check out mycoolbank.com today!
E Generation banking is here, delivered by E Generation bankers like Toni.
EASTHAMPTON SAVINGS BANK
My Bank. My Future.
mycoolbank.com | 413 527 4111

Classifieds

Employment

Drop catalogs for cash! Need responsible person with car to drop catalogs in Pioneer Valley, Springfield, and beyond. 10 hrs per day 2 days. postering@artspromo.org

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required: experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

Drivers and kitchen help wanted weekends. Apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Announcement

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S. Padre, Florida. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.statravel.com.

AFFORDABLE, CONFIDENTIAL, SAFE. Get the care you need at Tapestry Health. Providing birth control, EC, Pregnancy testing, GYN and Breast Exams, HIV counseling and testing, STD Screening and treatment. 27 Pray Street, Amherst MA 413-548-9992 Walk ins welcome Tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No. 13 UM strengthens defensive unit

Reserves play important role in Minutemen's success

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Three games into the season and the No. 13 Massachusetts men's soccer team is 2-1. The beginning of the season has been a test to show the team what it needs to work on before Atlantic 10 conference games begin on Oct. 12.

"After the first five games we'll know what kind of team we are, how good we are and the areas we need to get better at," UMass coach Sam Koch said before the first game on Aug. 29. "We'll be tested in these five games."

UMass Soccer

The test has just two games left, this weekend at the Old Dominion STIHL Classic. The Minutemen will be playing Old Dominion on Friday and William & Mary on Saturday.

The Minutemen have learned a great deal so far. They need to improve on their midfield, increase the speed of the game and limit extra touches on the ball, but overall they didn't give up many chances in the first three games.

"[There are] definitely still things we need to work on, but that's why you keep playing the game," Koch said.

The Minutemen scored when they needed to, making each game exciting for the fans and players. On Aug. 31, in a match against Boston University, senior Prince Ofosu scored a game-tying goal with three seconds left in regulation. The Minutemen won the game with a goal from Ben Arikian at the beginning of the second overtime.

The next weekend, the Minutemen had a similar golden-goal experience, this time it wasn't in overtime, but with 1 minute, 8 seconds left of the match against Siena on Sept. 6. Senior Chris Brown headed in Arikian's direct-kick for the only goal of the game.

WORKING ON DEFENSE

The Minutemen lost two key defenders coming into this season due to graduation, Kenny Cook and Doug Rappaport. This has devoted the majority of practices to focusing on core defensive strategies. As the most recent match against Siena showed, the Minutemen's strategies seem to be working.

See SOCCER on page 8

Junior attack Mark DeSantis had possession of the ball during a game last season. DeSantis, along with junior Bryan Hogan, lead the Minutemen at offense and are expected to be at the top of point earners for the 2008 season.

Dayton sophomore Josh Albers is challenged by UMass' Mike DeSantis in a game last season. Dayton was picked to finish fifth in the Atlantic 10 preseason coaches' poll.

St. Louis picked 1st

Preseason coaches poll ranks top Atlantic 10 teams for '08

BY HOLLY J. GALVIN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Along with a Top 25 national ranking for the Massachusetts men's soccer team (No. 13) and the All-American coronation of Zack Simmons as one of college soccer's top goalkeepers, the Minutemen hope to upend Saint Louis as the regular season Atlantic 10 Champions.

Here's a look at the teams – in order of the annual A-10 preseason coach's poll rankings – that UMass will be pitted against.

A-10 Soccer

1. SAINT LOUIS (2007 RECORD: 12-2-5, 8-0-1 A-10)

Although UMass' preseason rating slightly outranks that of No. 19 St. Louis, the A-10 coaches' poll tabbed SLU as the early favorite to capture a fourth-straight regular season title.

Armed with the conference's 2007 Offensive and Defensive Players of the Year – Kyle Patterson and Calum Angus – the Billikens look to maintain the dominance that has landed their program a record 44 NCAA tournament appearances.

SLU returns with the vast majority of its offensive corps, along with goalkeeping depth in senior Pat Disbennett and junior Ross Kaufman. After Disbennett suffered an surgery-inducing, facial injury last fall, Kaufman seamlessly took the reigns, posting a 10-2-2 record with six shutouts and a 0.66 goals-against average.

Despite Kaufman's success, eighth-year coach Dan Donnigan switched back to Disbennett for postseason play. The veteran handled both of SLU's double-overtime A-10 playoff shutouts, as well as NCAA tournament duties.

Saint Louis will rely on All-American Angus to once again anchor a defense that allowed a league-low 13 goals last fall.

On the offensive end, midfielder Kyle Patterson heads an attack that posted a near perfect conference record in 2007. The explosive Billikens were shutout twice during the 2007 campaign, once by UMass in a 1-0 home loss. In fact, UMass has been the only A-10 team to hand the Billikens a conference loss in the past two seasons.

SLU has tallied a 16-1-1 record from 2006-2008.

Notable returnees for SLU include junior defenders Rob Viviano and Tim Ream along with senior forwards Dado Hamzagic and Scott Wisniewski.

3. CHARLOTTE (2007 RECORD: 12-7-1, 5-3-1 A-10)

Undefeated Charlotte (2-0) looks to be a top contender, returning 13 letter-winners and 8 starters. After earning a fourth place regular season record, the Niners reached the 2007 A-10 Championship final before falling to the Minutemen, 2-0. The 49ers posted 12 wins for the first time in over a decade under first-year coach Jeremy Gunn and checks in at

See A-10 on page 8

Charlotte improving

BY KYLE PREDKI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

With the season just getting into the swing of things, Atlantic 10 teams have yet to play any conference games. They must play their early season games against different teams across the country.

CHARLOTTE

Now with back-to-back A-10 Conference Championships under its belt, Charlotte (3-1-1) started out its season with a tough loss to No. 3 North Carolina. The Tarheels topped the 49er's, 5-1, in this season opener. The loss seemed to wake the 49ers as they produced three wins and a tie in their last four games.

A-10 Soccer

With the help of Whitney Weinraub, the A-10 Player of the Week for the second week in a row, Charlotte displayed its experience with a 3-2 win over UNC-Wilmington, a dominating 8-0 win over Tennessee Tech and a 1-1 double-overtime tie at Ohio State. With the 1-0 win against Pittsburgh on Sunday, Charlotte solidifies itself as a top conference contender once again as they travel to No. 17 Wake Forest to finish up its three game road spell.

SAINT LOUIS

With a middle of the road start in the 2007 season (2-2), Saint Louis (3-0-1, 2008) exploded out of the gates this year. The Billikens won their first three games and showed their defensive strength with letting in one goal in their first four matches.

With the official season opener against Southeast Missouri State being postponed, the Billikens opened the season with a 2-1 victory over Seton Hall. Saint Louis then stood ground with a 2-0 win over Army and a 1-0 victory while hosting Nebraska. SLU heads into this weekend hosting Butler on Friday and Vanderbilt on Sunday.

DAYTON

Dayton came close to following in last year's footsteps (4-0-0, 2007), but at the start of the 2008 season, it fell short by an overtime goal. The Flyers started off the season with an unforeseen, 4-1, upset over No. 26 Indiana and a double overtime goal by Kelly Blumenschein to finish 3-2 over Pittsburgh.

Dayton headed into a match with No. 15 Illinois where it showed its strength, ending the game on an overtime goal. The Flyers then squeezed by Michigan with a 3-2 victory and now head into the weekend with a matchup with their in-state rival Cincinnati.

RHODE ISLAND

Rhode Island (1-3-1) kicked off its season with a few disappointing losses, but now are on the right track. The Rams opened to a dangerous No. 10 Texas A&M. Playing Top 10 teams is rare for the Rams, the last being No. 8 Portland in 2006. Despite the close match between the Rams and the Aggies, URI would score late to bring the final score to 3-2. Rhody went on to play Boston, losing again, 1-0.

After showing worthy performance in a 1-1 tie with Maine, Rhode Island still found struggles on the pitch in its match with Siena. The Rams were outplayed again in the 2-1 loss.

They eventually put one in the win column after senior defenseman Sarah Helldoerfer notched a double-overtime goal against New Hampshire. URI brings this breath of fresh air with them to Purdue for its next game on Friday.

Kyle Predki can be reached at kpredki@student.umass.edu.

Rhode Island senior defender Sarah Helldoerfer controls the ball in a game against UMass last season. The Rams struggled at the beginning of the season losing three games and tying one before their win against New Hampshire.

INSIDE: MURPHY AND BURR AT THE FAC | PAGE 7

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 70 LO: 42 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10 2008

Aim to sustain

The Central Heating Plant is one of many improvements cited in making UMass greener.

Green gaining steam at UM

EMILY REYNOLDS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Students at the University of Massachusetts have another color to add to the maroon and white: green.

A report on environmental sustainability initiatives presented to the Board of Trustees Committee on Science, Technology and Research said that the five-campus system has made progress on reducing its carbon footprint.

"The University of Massachusetts has had environmentally sustainable programs in place for several years and is a leader among Massachusetts state entities for its green efforts," said Robert Connolly, a spokesman for UMass President Jack Wilson's office.

The report came less than a year after Wilson joined the American College and University Presidents Climate Commitment. The group, which has 574 members, has pledged to reduce carbon emissions by 80 percent by the middle of this century.

According to the group's Web site, one of the steps included is the completion of an emission inventory and to make it public, which sets a target date to become carbon neutral, reduce greenhouse gas emissions and to integrate sustainability into the curriculum.

Connolly said UMass made all pertinent deadlines thus far.

As the plan's one-year mark draws closer, the UMass system must report on an emission inventory to meet the next deadline.

"We are on track to do this," said Connolly. "UMass has been

See GREEN on page 3

BASICS wins praise

BY LISA DIMATTEO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts' alcohol and drug prevention program, BASICS, received national recognition this summer and a grant for $199,120 from the Department of Education's Drug and Alcohol Preventions Models on College Campuses Program.

According to the University Health Services Website, BASICS, which stands for Brief Alcohol Screening and Intervention for College Students, is a "drinker's checkup that helps you examine your use, identify changes that could work for you and reduce your risk of future problems."

The program's three steps involve two 50-minute sessions with a prevention specialist and one web-based questionnaire. During the second one-on-one session with the prevention specialist, participants receive a personalized feedback profile based on the information they provided in the questionnaire. Working with this feedback profile, the prevention specialist will outline possible strategies which may lessen the probability of high risk drinking.

BASICS Project Director Diane Fedorchak explained that with the grant money provided by the Department of Education, the program is able to not only improve the UMass program but also programs at other schools. "Some of the money will be used to disseminate program work with two or three other states to help schools develop a program there," Fedorchak explained.

As well as at other schools, Fedorchak goes on to explain that the money will go towards improving and expanding UMass' BASICS program. Currently, students are only required to go to two one-on-one sessions and fill out one web-based questionnaire.

Fedorchak and Janet Mazzoni, the evaluation manager at BASICS, explained that they are conducting an experiment to see if students who receive additional feedback three months after the completion of BASICS are more likely to be successful. "In other words, does ongoing feedback help students make behavior

See BASICS on page 3

Program to monitor commute

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A campus-based program has come up with two new traffic-monitoring systems to keep commuters updated with conditions on busy local roadways.

Using FastLane technology, an electronic toll-collecting system familiar to frequenters of the Massachusetts Turnpike, the Regional Traveler Information Center (RTIC) supplies more accurate travel times for a span of roughly five miles on Route 116 between the Amherst-Sunderland town line and Routes 5 and 10 in South Deerfield, according to Paul Shuldiner, principal investigator for RTIC and UMass professor emeritus of civil and environmental engineering.

The system is expected to be activated along Route 9 between Hadley and Northampton in the spring of 2009.

Until then, Route 9 near West Street in Hadley has been set up with an automated traffic analyzer to provide measurements of average traffic there, Shuldiner said.

The analyzer picks up a signal at the downstream location and then picks that same signal up again at the upstream. The times at which those were picked up tells Shuldiner the speed of the vehicle.

"We don't know whose vehicle it is, but we do know the speed, and we average those over in one-minute intervals," he said.

RTIC also has Web cams posted on roadways in the area. Shuldiner says that one which

See TRAFFIC on page 3

Cars sit in traffic on Rt. 9, a common situation for commuters. UMass officials are looking to cut commuting time by informing drivers of road conditions online.

Murphy, show us your chops

Charlie Murphy and Bill Burr headlined at this weekend's Fine Arts Center show, put on by the University for First Week festivities.

Hottest Holyoke professors get top chili pepper awards

BY CHRIS SHORES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students looking for a class that will entice them to attend and get them motivated may have found some hope on RateMyProfessor.com. That hope could be fulfilled locally at the Pioneer Valley's own Mount Holyoke College.

Professors Constantine Pleshakov and Craig Woodard were awarded a special honor last year spots in RateMyProfessors.com's Top 50 Hottest Professors list. Pleshakov, who teaches "Critical Social Thought" and "Russian Culture and History," is ranked 29th on the list. Craig Woodard, an associate dean of science and a biological sciences professor, ranks 43rd.

RateMyProfessors.com is an online professor-rating database featuring over 6,000 schools and one million professors. It allows students the opportunity to view and submit comments and criticisms about particular instructors and their classes. Students rank professors on categories such as easiness of the class, how helpful and clear the professor was and whether attendance was mandatory. The site also asks about the appearance of the teacher, labeled on the site as a "just for fun" question. It then falls into the hands of the student voters whether the teacher is considered "hot" or "not."

According to the Web site's "ranking methodology," professors who receive a hot rating are awarded a chili pepper badge. Likewise, anyone that receives a "not" rating will lose a chili pepper. Rankings for the Top 50 list of 2007 were based on the total amount of chili peppers a professor accumulates.

Pleshakov is currently in possession of 28 chili peppers and received a series of flattering comments from students on the site.

"Pleshy is a dreamboat," said one student, while another one described him as a "stone cold fox."

A third student called Pleshakov an "absolutely brilliant" professor. "I love him like no other!" the student said. "He is caring, he leads discussion well, he knows how to relieve tension in the room, he is interesting and most importantly (wink wink), he is an extremely attractive Russian man with a sexy accent!"

Holder of 25 chili peppers, Woodard also received great praise from his students. One student summed it up in five words: "Woodard: so hot right now."

Besides his appearance rating, Woodard also received high marks from students in the categories of helpfulness and clarity. Said one user of the site, "Not only is [Woodard] an awesome professor, he is an extremely kind, down to earth and approachable person. He treats all his students with respect and genuinely cares about their level of stress."

A new Top 50 list will be released later this year with updated rankings of the professors, just in the time for students to check out, perhaps in more ways than one, prospective professors for the spring semester.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@student.umass.edu

MHC's Craig Woodard received 25 chili peppers and is ranked 43rd.

MHC's Constantine Pleshakov got 28 peppers and is ranked 29th.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIV
ISSUE SEVEN

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3679 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Waszczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Surkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COPY EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Garber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenwaike
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murrin
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tekker
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mulholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kozowarn
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Waxman
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cernak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey B. Larnard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIATE SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS NOT POLICY UNDER THE CONTROL OF STUDENTS, BUT IS OPERATED AS AN INDEPENDENT, SELF-SUPPORTING ENTERPRISE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BECAME KNOWN AS THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1947 AND AS THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED FIVE DAYS A WEEK SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN WON THE HOWARD R. LONG AWARD IN 1996 FOR EXCELLENCE IN COLLEGE NEWSPAPERS, AND WEEKLY MEETINGS ARE HELD AT 8:30 A.M. AND 7:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
David Humphreys

PRODUCTION TEAM
Mike Sarkes, Michelle Abbasciano

Protesters make like trees

Police use a cherrypicker to negotiate with UC Berkeley's tree-sitters who protested a tree grove's destruction in favor of a $125 million athletic complex.

BY WILL KANE AND STEPHANIE M. LEE
DAILY CALIFORNIAN (UC BERKELEY)

The longest urban tree-sit in history has come to an end with the descent of the final four tree-sitters from their post in the oak grove near the University of California-Berkeley's Memorial Stadium.

The tree-sitter known as Huck, who was escorted down scaffolding around the redwood, was the final protester to be removed from the grove at approximately 1:30 p.m. Tuesday.

As part of an agreement with campus officials, the tree-sitters agreed to come down after Vice Chancellor of Administration Nathan Brostrom issued a statement saying the university will involve the community in land use issues in the future, according Huck. Once Brostrom issued the statement, the tree-sitters said they will come down and hammer out the further details of the agreement.

"We were able to reach an accord under which we would come down peacefully," Huck said before descending the redwood.

The sitters and their supporters originally asked the campus to promise permanent and long-term discussions over the campus' use of land, as well as payment of $6 million in mitigation – that would be donated to groups of their choice – before the sitters would agree to leave the trees.

Huck said today that the tree-sitters requested that UCPD "back off so we feel a little bit decent," and UCPD complied.

When asked about the first thing he would do after descending, Huck replied, "Probably go to jail."

Ground supporters of the tree-sit had a scuffle with UCPD officers at the grove after UCPD Chief Victoria Harrison and Assistant Chief Mitch Celaya spoke with the tree-sitters from a crane-suspended platform at approximately 10 a.m.

Dan Mogulof, UC Berkeley's executive director of public affairs, said this morning that Harrison and Celaya were there to ask the tree-sitters to come down voluntarily.

UCPD began scaffolding around the lone redwood in which four tree-sitters remain this morning.

At about 8 a.m., UC Berkeley began moving cherrypickers around to prepare for work in the grove.

The campus began cutting down the trees at the oak grove on Friday, after an appeals court gave the go-ahead to begin construction of a $125 million athletic center at the site of the grove.

Money Watch: look before jumping to school

BY RUTH MANTELL
MARKETWATCH

WASHINGTON — The grim outlook for the labor market has been leading more workers to reassess their career options. And it's tempting many to contemplate a return to school to buff up skills or gain completely new ones.

More education can add significantly to earnings, according to a report from the Census Bureau. In 2006, among workers 18 and older, those with less than a high school diploma earned an average of $20,873, compared with $31,071 for those with a high-school diploma, $56,788 for a bachelor's degree, and $82,320 for a master's, professional or doctorate degree.

While such financial incentives may be alluring, experts say there are a number of important considerations that must be taken into account before pouring hard-earned cash into more schooling.

DETERMINE YOUR STRENGTHS AND WEAKNESSES.

Figuring out whether you need to go back to school should involve a self-assessment to determine what skills you already have and how you can build upon them to nab a job, experts said.

"Put together a picture of what you are good at and what you would like to do," said Deborah Russell, director of workforce issues at AARP. "If there is a skill gap, the next piece is to figure out where to get those skills."

It's also important to determine whether acquiring new skills will require taking just a course or two, or earning an entire degree. And workers should make sure to factor in family and social responsibilities, Russell said.

Those with tight schedules may want to consider taking online courses, or immersion courses that are more time intensive but last for a shorter period than a traditional course.

"Going back to school may look very different to different people," she said. "There may be caregiving obligations that may preclude you from taking courses during the day or evening."

Also keep in mind that a decision should be future-oriented, taking into account what employers will be looking for in coming years in addition to skills that are currently in demand, said Ronald Ferguson, an economist and lecturer in public policy at Harvard University's Malcolm Wiener Center for Social Policy.

"There are lots of different ways to arrive at estimates of what the future is likely to bring," he said. "Some combination or understanding of the current market and of what informed sources have to say about future demand would be prudent."

FIND LOCAL DEMAND.

Try to find out which types of employees and skills are needed in your community, experts say.

Russell said you can start by asking career counselors at community colleges, as well as checking out state and local career centers. "Having a better understanding of your local community is more important than looking at it from a national level," she said.

Once you know which skills are needed, you can tailor your education. More schools are cooperating with local employers to offer courses that suit workplace training needs, Russell said.

"Local training entities are much more in tune with developing training that corresponds to demands that employers have," she added.

WEIGH THE COSTS AND BENEFITS.

Make sure your financial gain from increased training is worth the expense, Ferguson said.

"Do some homework," he said. "To be sure that the skills [you] would be acquiring are both in demand and sufficiently compensated to make the time and effort and expense worth it."

Start by figuring out how much you are likely to spend. For the 2007-2008 academic year, in-state tuition and fees averaged about $6,200 at public four-year institutions, and about $23,700 at private four-year nonprofit institutions, according to the College Board.

Unless a degree is necessary, workers may be better off financially if they take just a course or two or pursue a certificate program. And make sure to take advantage of low-cost or free offerings from community colleges, local groups and employers, such as programs teaching basic computer skills. An extension class might cost a couple hundred dollars or less.

Prospective students also should keep in mind that student loans may be harder to come by these days given recent credit-market problems, said Mark Kantrowitz, publisher of FinAid.org, a Web site offering financial aid information.

"Lenders have tightened criteria," he said. "If you have a bad or marginal credit score, you are going to have a harder time obtaining a student loan."

Students claim excessive force

BY ELISE PHILLIPS
[illegible]

East Carolina University officials are investigating the alleged use of unnecessary force by police officers against fans rushing the field at the conclusion of Saturday's home football game against West Virginia.

ECU Police Chief Scott Shelton confirmed that some fans were tackled or pushed to the ground by police officers, and punches were thrown by a sheriff's deputy whose name was not disclosed.

In a briefing before the game, police officers were instructed to deter fans from rushing onto the field after an ECU victory. According to Shelton, officers were told to be conscious of their surroundings and "to make a visible presence" around the field. Shelton said Monday that approximately 114 police officers were present at the game, about 60 of whom were on the field.

ECU Police were not the only force on the scene Saturday. Kinston and Greenville Police and both the Pitt and Lenoir County Sheriff's Departments were also on site.

Shelton said that these five law enforcement agencies did expect an ECU victory and anticipated that some fans would try to run onto the field following the game.

Allegations of misconduct after the Pirates' 24-3 win include reports of officers pushing one fan and throwing another to the ground, according to a press release sent out by the university on Sunday. Other witnesses say that fans were punched, elbowed and held to the ground after running onto the field.

"I can't determine a reason why [these things] happened," said Shelton, "but I can determine that they happened."

Shelton said Sunday that he will look into the allegations by reviewing videotapes and photos, and interviewing witnesses.

"Preliminary investigation indicates excessive force was used in an incident of most concern by complainants," he said.

As of Monday, the police department was still reviewing videotapes and photos -- from several sources, Shelton said -- and interviewing witnesses or victims.

About a dozen complaints had been filed as of yesterday, according to Shelton, and more are still coming in. Lt. Curtis Hayes of the ECU Police Department will be receiving all complaints and leading the investigation. Shelton encourages individuals who were victims of unnecessary police force, or witnessed the use of unnecessary force by police officers, to step forward.

Only one arrest was made during the rush of fans onto the field Saturday, but two other arrests were made while the game was being played.

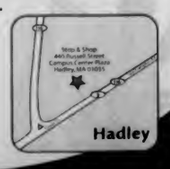
ECU football coach Skip Holtz said Monday that Saturday's win is being overshadowed by the fans' behavior.

"I hate that [the win] is being marred by some fans that rushed the field," he said. "I know their intentions were not malicious or negative. They were excited [and] enthusiastic and they wanted to come out and share in the joy and jubilation, but I enjoy it a whole lot more when our players can go over and enjoy celebrating with the entire student body."

Lifelong Pirates fan Thomas "Bubba" Rosenbaum, a teacher from Thomasville, N.C., attended the game, and said that the conduct he saw by police officers was uncalled for.

"I saw cops grabbing students and throwing them down. ... One cop was continuously punching one student in the face," he said. "People were just celebrating ECU's win, not bashing West Virginia."

STOP & SHOP



Stop&Shop

Head back to class with Stop & Shop!

Stop & Shop welcomes you back with special bonus coupon savings!

Exclusive Bonus Coupon
Valid Monday 9/8 - Friday 10/31/08
Stop&Shop
$5 OFF a purchase of $25 or more.
Limit one bonus gift cards, money orders, Western Union®, postage stamps, lottery tickets, gasoline, alcoholic beverages, tobacco products, pharmacy items and any other purchases prohibited by law. Coupon redeemable at your neighborhood Stop & Shop. Coupon not redeemable at Peapod by Stop & Shop. Duplicate or expired coupons will not be accepted. Limit one coupon per customer per visit. Coupon cannot be doubled or tripled, or combined with any other offer.
2 8 10000 01145 7 6 9

Plus! At Stop & Shop you'll find...
• A delicious variety of fresh prepared foods
• Natural and organic foods
• A Staples® aisle for school supplies
• Personal care needs
• Redbox™ DVD rentals
And so much more! All priced to fit a student's budget!

Hadley

stop&shop.com

THE BOLTWOOD
PROJECT™
Serving others since 1969 -- and STILL making a difference!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS ••GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE ••REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Fall Semester 2008 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 168C • Sept. 8 (Mon) • Sept. 9 (Tues) • Sept. 10 (Wed)
• Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Sept. 11 @ Boltwood table CC Concourse
No telephone inquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!!!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

UM goes for green

GREEN from page 1

gathering relevant data in consultation with state officials, but we are not yet at the one year mark.

Initiatives that would make UMass carbon neutral include recycling programs across all campuses, buying local produce, composting food and introducing green features into new building construction.

Last year, on the flagship Amherst campus, 3,700 tons of solid waste and 3,995 tons of other materials were recycled. The new Integrated Sciences Building and the Studio Arts Building on campus have green features included in their designs.

The report also comes a year after Governor Deval Patrick signed an executive order, the "Leading by Example Program," which, according to the state's Web site, mandates that state agencies minimize the impact of their operations and activities, while also creating solutions to environmental problems.

"We are charged with how to meet the commitment," said Craig Ruberti, the manager of environmental health and safety. "It involves conservation, renewable energy and alternative energy."

Since 2002, the campus has reduced electricity consumption by 9 percent, water consumption by 36 percent and steam consumption by 24 percent.

According to the UMass Amherst Environmental Performance Advisory Committee's Web site, steam line improvements have cut a third of losses during steam distribution. It will lead to more efficient heating systems and cost savings.

Ruberti also said one of the biggest of the campus initiatives was the recent construction and opening of a new central heating facility.

As a result of the Central Heating Plant, the campus can anticipate a 30 percent reduction in emissions based on projected fuel use associated with heating and cooling and electricity, said the Committee's Web site.

Another new initiative that will impact the students will be "eco reps."

"Eco reps are to educate students on basic fundamental things to do to reduce our carbon footprint," said Ruberti. "They will initially be unveiled in first year dorms."

Simple things that students can do in their dorms to reduce their carbon footprint is to not let sink water run, turn off electricity when not in use, and recycle.

The report will be presented to the Committee on Administration and Finance, a subgroup of the Board of Trustees, on Wednesday.

Emily Reynolds can be reached at ereynold@student.umass.edu

School of Health head named

Alumna Aelion ready to roll up sleeves come January

By Adam P. Coulter
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts has named Alumna C. Marjorie Aelion the new dean of the School of Public Health and Health Education. As the administration hailed her previous experience and dedication, she said she feels that she is "coming home."

The announcement was made by Charlena Seymour, UMass provost and senior vice chancellor for academic affairs.

"We're looking forward to her arrival and the energy and commitment she will bring to this important school," Seymour said.

"She is a talented and highly skilled individual who will help us move this University into the top ranks of the nation's public research schools," UMass Chancellor Robert C. Holub said.

Aelion received a Fulbright Advanced Student Award to study in France as a senior undergraduate honors student at UMass. Since 2000, Aelion served as associate dean for research at the Arnold School of Public Health at the University of South Carolina.

Aelion's expertise and research is in the area of environmental contamination. It is because of this concentration, she has also received the National Science Foundation Presidential Faculty Fellows Award in 1993 and currently has a National Institutes of Health R01 research award at the University of South Carolina to study metals in soils and their potential links to children's health outcomes.

Aelion served as graduate director for the University of South Carolina's environmental health sciences department from 2001-2006. In 2002, she was a Fulbright Faculty Scholar as well as a visiting professor at the University of Wageningen in the Netherlands. She has been a professor of environmental health sciences at South Carolina since 2001 and an associate professor from 1997-2001 and an assistant professor from 1991-97.

The new dean will begin her duties January 1, 2009, and is looking forward to returning to UMass. "The School of Public Health Sciences has great potential, and I am honored to be chosen to work with the faculty, staff and students to realize that potential," said Aelion.

"I look forward to becoming an integral part of the UMass community," she added.

Aelion earned her bachelor's degree in environmental sciences from UMass in 1980, a master's degree in civil engineering from MIT, and a doctorate in environmental chemistry and biology from North Carolina.

Adam P. Coulter can be reached at apcoulter@student.umass.edu

C. Marjorie Aelion will begin her position in January.

Tabs on traffic

System to track local commuter information

COMMUTE from page 1

uses pocket-sized devices attached to the inside of windshields, are now so common that they can be used to measure traffic flow. Shuldiner said this system works better than the old video-based system, which has been taken out of service and had been used to calculate vehicle travel times on Route 9.

In addition to live traffic images at different locations in western Massachusetts, the average travel times are posted by RTIC on its Web site, MassTraveler.com. Commuters can check the traffic before heading off for the day.

The technology for the new systems, which Shuldiner said cost roughly $50,000, is made possible by the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority.

"We've been providing similar information for quite some time, but we're very pleased with the way the fast[l]ane transponder system is working... It gives [commuters] a sense of how traffic is flowing on routes that are important people coming to and from campus," Shuldiner said. "We will, sometime in the next month or two, have picked up our millionth read."

Shuldiner said that during a test of the system in December all RTIC technician spotted travel times rising up to one hour as a large snow storm was coming toward the area. The impact of the storm was immediately picked up, Shuldiner said.

RTIC is a project of the University and the Massachusetts Highway Department in partnership with the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority and the regional planning agencies of western Massachusetts. It is managed by the UMass Transportation Center with the operational and facility support of UMass Transit Services.

Shuldiner said RTIC has been operating in one form or another since about 1999.

Dimenna Pierre can be reached at dpierre@collegian.com

Traffic is backed up on Rt. 9, where authorities hope to place analyzers by spring of 2009.

BASICS grant may expand award-winning program

BASICS from page 1

changes around drinking," Mazzotti added.

To determine this, students who are willing to participate will receive another questionnaire three months after they complete the BASICS program. Of those students, half will receive feedback from the questionnaire and half of them won't. After another three months, the students will then be asked to fill in another questionnaire. Taking into account the information students provided for the two questionnaires and whether or not they received feed-back after the first questionnaire, Fedorchak and Mazzotti will be able to gauge the success of continuing help.

UMass program, which is one of the in the country to be rated as exemplary, has been shown to greatly reduce high-risk drinking in students who participate in the program. Also, according to the BASICS Web site, there has been a 15 percent drop in binge drinking, a 26 percent decline in frequent binge drinking and a 14 percent decline in underage binge drinking as a direct effect of the University Health Services' Center for Alcohol and Other Drug Abuse Prevention, of which BASICS is a part.

The program is targeted at students who receive low-level violations of the University's alcohol and drug policies and rarely seek help for problems. Students who choose to participate in the program or who are referred to it by their residential directors, the program is free of charge.

Cara Bo Mazzeo can be reached at cmazzeo@student.umass.edu

First Week at the DCs, hope you enjoyed it. The Best is yet to come!
Global Dining, Smart Eating

Ivy Dinner · Guest Chef Series · Restaurant Nights · More Local Produce · Live Music
Alaska Wild & Natural Seafood Week · Lobster Night · Small Plate, Big Flavor

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
local HERO
Food Management's BEST CONCEPTS
Ivy
RESIDENT
YCMP

Montana's ice a US problem

Melting glaciers expected to add to global warming problem

By Deborah Brae Tanner
Montana Kaimin (U. Montana)

What does the rise in sea level have to do with Montana?

Most Montanans would say nothing, but Professor Joel Harper, a glaciologist at the University of Montana, knows that there is a connection.

According to Harper, the melting glaciers in the Northern Rocky Mountains - like the ones in Glacier National Park - not only provide an enormous amount of water during Montana's dry season, but also affect the level of sea rise, which is inevitable due to climate change.

Harper said Montana's glaciers, part of 300,000 or so glaciers around the world, are responsible for 60 percent of any sea level rise.

Harper said most people don't understand that floating sea ice, like the ice shelves that break off from Antarctica and Greenland, doesn't affect sea level rise.

"That ice is already in the ocean, and the water is already displaced," Harper said. "It's the ice that's sitting on land that changes the sea level."

Water from inland glaciers ultimately winds up in the ocean. Melt water from the surface of glaciers with outlets to the ocean causes ice motion —referred to as "ice dynamics." This lubrication increases the glacial rate of speed to the sea, where they break off - a process called "calving" - and adds to ocean ice, raising the sea level.

The term "ice dynamics" is a "wildcard," Harper said, because the behaviors of the ice sheets are unpredictable.

"Sea level is going to rise. It's going to happen," he said.

The question is by how much.

There have been a lot of projections, including one recently from Al Gore's group, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, a group of 600 scientists who projected a sea level rise of 18 to 60 centimeters - 7.2 to 24 inches - by 2100.

Harper's team, which spent the summer in Greenland studying glaciers, returned to publish an article in Science Magazine that contradicts this projection.

"We're saying 80 centimeters is plausible, but two meters will be within the realm of what's possible," Harper said.

Harper, who has been inundated with calls from around the world about his study, said the numbers his team published are higher than the panel's, but that they ruled out a lot of projections that were more outrageous.

"We bracketed the results of current projections by including ice dynamics," Harper said.

The numbers matter, Harper said, because sociologists predict that a sea level rise of even one meter could displace 148,000,000 people. Most of those will be from Asia, but sea level rise is an economic issue that will affect Montanans because most preparations will be made with federal monies, to which Montanans will contribute, according to Harper.

Glacial waters are expected to play a major factor in global flooding. The glaciers aren't displaced and are expected to count for more.

At Yale, discovering a tiny gene's role in big diseases

Genome acts as map for cutting edge research

By Ambika Bhushan
Yale Daily News

Nearly 15 years ago, scientists completed one of the largest international projects in research history, tremendous in its scope and importance. They determined the sequence of the nearly 30,000 genes in the human genome.

Although the Human Genome Project introduced the concept of 'completeness' to human biology for the first time, it was just the first step toward the eventual goal of using genomics to diagnose, treat and prevent disease.

Now, armed with a basic physical map of the human genome and novel advances in molecular biology, Yale scientists and others across the country are working on discovering the functions of each human gene.

"We already have a physical map to work with," said Tian Xu, vice chairman of the Department of Genetics at the Yale School of Medicine. "But we have to encode the functions of that map."

Xu's lab is responsible for having determined the function of 1,000 of the approximately 5,000 genes for which functions are currently known. He said his goal is to map 10,000 genes over the next three years.

His lab's method for analyzing gene function, he said, is more efficient than the Nobel Prize-winning "knock-out" technique, which introduces specific mutations into individual genes to disrupt their normal function in the cell. It makes use of transposons, mobile genetic elements that can alter gene function and provide a straightforward means to identify mutant genes.

But the puzzle of genomic functionality is not as simple as "one-gene-one-function." Far from having consistent or singular functions in cells, genes interact with other genes in complex pathways, are continuously influenced by the environment and even appear to have different functions in different contexts, Xu said.

For instance, while some diseases, like sickle cell anemia, are clearly inherited in the form of faulty genes, many diseases, such as diabetes, heart disease and Alzheimer's, which have a strong environmental component, have a more complex genetic basis, said Daniel DiMaio, vice chairman of Genetics.

"There's a spectrum: All diseases have some genetic basis, but some diseases are more clearly genetic," Xu said.

Speaking in such indefinites is necessary, considering many common diseases have not been mapped to the genes that help cause them.

Understanding disease genes — genes that cause or are implicated in disease — is not only crucial to understanding how diseases develop but also to how they can be reversed and prevented.

Here at Yale, a team headed by Erol Fikrig, chief of Infectious Diseases, is making headway on just that. The group recently characterized the several hundred genes that impact the West Nile virus infection, a potentially serious illness spread by infected mosquitoes.

In his study, which was published earlier this month, Fikrig and his team used RNA interference, a technique that uses small fragments of interfering RNA to systematically "knock out" individual genes to determine their functions. Testing the entire human genome, the group found 305 genes that impacted the virus's ability to enter, survive or replicate in the cell to create disease, he said.

About 30 percent of the genes involved in West Nile infection also appear to play a role in Dengue fever, a mosquito-transmitted disease prevalent in tropical areas, Fikrig said.

Theoretically, some of these genes could be targets for new therapeutics if scientists can figure out a way to turn off their expression without interfering with other bodily processes, he said.

"Now that we have a dictionary for these genes, we can block these genes or the pathways associated with these genes, or modulate them to develop new drugs," Fikrig said.

Fikrig said the team is now working on determining the individual functions of and interactions between the 305 genes, a task that will help them to understand which genes would potentially be effective targets.

While drugs may be able to change the way our genes function, can faulty disease genes themselves be changed?

Research conducted by Yale scientists earlier this month suggests that we may indeed be able to alter our genetic destinies — at least in the case of some inherited diseases.

Headed by Joanna Chin from the lab of Peter Glazer, chair of Therapeutic Radiology and professor of genetics at the medical school, the study corrected a specific defect within a human gene that causes the blood disorder thalassemia. The disease weakens the body's ability to produce hemoglobin, an oxygen-carrying molecule found in red blood cells.

The team designed a set of DNA fragments that bound in vivo to specific locations along the genome, creating a triple helix of DNA. Once bound, these fragments triggered the cell's own repair machinery to permanently correct the defective DNA by making the appropriate sequence change.

"Because the sequences [of the synthetic and natural DNA] are aligned just right, it triggers the cell to realize something is wrong and try to fix it," Glazer said.

Since in genetic disorders like thalassemia, every cell carries a copy of the disease-conferring gene, it is laborious to correct every faulty red blood cell, he said. Glazer's team got around this by conducting this process on hematopoietic progenitor cells, which give rise to red blood cells.

Though the procedure cannot stop defective hematopoietic cells contained in the body from producing faulty red blood cells, the corrected red blood cells have a survival advantage over the faulty blood cells. The process of generating blood cells is more robust when the hemoglobin gene is correct, and the healthy blood cells also last longer in the blood stream, Glazer explained.

The technique — the first of its kind to be applied to human stem cells — improves upon the traditional method of gene therapy, he said, because "it modifies the natural gene in its natural place." In comparison, conventional therapy, which involves inserting a synthetic gene into the genome via a virus, usually causes the gene to insert into the wrong part of the genome. This can interrupt cellular processes or activate genes that are normally suppressed, he said.

The lab is now working on developing an even more efficient procedure for sequence change, and testing the technique on mice. The mouse serves as an effective analogue to the human, because many of the genetic pathways important for disease development in humans are evolutionarily conserved.

Since the days of the Human Genome Project, much headway has been made on genomic technologies that are accelerating scientists' understanding of how the human genome functions.

Scientists hope to eventually use genomic technologies to personalize medicine, DiMaio said, by using information about a person's genetic makeup to diagnose, treat or prevent disease. For instance, as rapid DNA sequencing becomes more affordable, scientists are now talking about sequencing patients to individualize drug therapy.

"It's not inconceivable to say that in another five years, sequencing every gene in a single patient will be possible in an affordable way," DiMaio said.

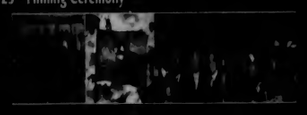
Currently drugs treat all patients as if they have the same genetic makeup and respond identically to drugs. This means that subsets of patients who respond differently are effectively "lost," he said.

But sequencing individual patients will allow doctors to separate subgroups of patients based on their genes that respond most similarly to drugs.

"Ultimately, rather than treating patients as a large group," he said, "we want to be able to profile any patient that comes in the door."

Delta Chi
Fraternity Since 1890
Friendship • Character • Justice • Education

Some hear an inner voice that calls for something more out of their college experience. Something that you can start from the beginning... taking your personal experiences and creating a new organization with clear values, goals, and a fresh new image. Discover what can be accomplished when strong and capable men bond together for a common purpose.



This spring, the opportunity to become a Founding Father at UMASS will call.

Will you answer?

Contact Adam Jones:
AdamJ@deltachi.org
319-621-2301
www.deltachi.org

September 15th and 16th: Information Sessions, 11am and 7pm. Campus Center room 803

September 25 - Pinning Ceremony

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781.396.1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com

Not sure what you're doing next?

Keep your options open.
Take the GRE® Test for grad school.
You're more likely to do better while you're still in school — and your GRE Scores are good for 5 years.
Practice for free now.
Text GRE16 to 78473.
startGRE.com
ETS GRE

THE COLLEGIAN'S "OLD NEWS"
-check in every Friday for a week's worth of campus news.

Camping to fight cancer

From left, Georgia Martin, Mike Harris, Carl Saccone, Brandon Harris and Luke Niederpruem stand outside their tent where they are raising money all week for the American Cancer Society on the Library lawn.

Local police log

Sunday

TILLETT, Brian A., 23, of 27 Highland Ave. Fairhaven, Mass. was pulled over and subsequently arrested on University Ave at 3:11 a.m., Sunday. Tillett was charged with OUI liquor (2nd offense), possession of marijuana and failure to stop.

TRUPIN, Daniel J., 21, of Roslyn Estates, N.Y., was arrested Sunday at 2:15 a.m. on Meadow Street on charges of operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol, unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle and speeding.

REDDING, James H., 18, of Marblehead, was arrested Sunday at 12:15 a.m. on Hobart Lane on a charge of being a minor in possession of alcohol.

Monday

DELLORFANO, Jason A., 21, of Belmont, JANJUA, Bilal A., 21, of Braintree, and WILLIAMS, Irevin A., 21, of Millbury, were all arrested Monday at 1:32 a.m. at a Puffton Village home on charges of violating the town's noise bylaw.

Tuesday

RIVERA, Benjamin, 27, of 351 Pleasant St. 257 Northampton, Mass. was pulled over at 1:41 a.m. and subsequently charged with operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license, OUI liquor and not having an inspection sticker.

Wednesday

HONDEL, Samantha Ann 22, of 24 Hillview Ave. Saco, Maine was pulled over at 1:18 a.m. after failing to stop in Lot 43 on 15 Eastman Ln. Hondel was charged with a marked lanes violation and OUI liquor.

Thursday

DESTROMP, Joseph, 18, of 86 Batchelor St., Granby, Mass. was arrested outside of Gorman dormitory on 90 Butterfield Terrace at 1:14 a.m. and was charged with possession of liquor by a person under 21 and possession of marijuana.

STRATTON, Timothy A. II, 21, of 1915 Thayer St. Abington, Mass was pulled over on Thatcher Way at 1:39 a.m. and charged with a lights violation, the unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle and OUI liquor.

DEVEREAUX, Mark, 20, of 372 Spring St. Rockland, Mass. was pulled over on University Drive at 3:09 a.m. and charged with possession with intent to distribute a class D drug, and possession of a class D drug.

BURNS, Norman, 19, of 86 Gardner St. Rockland, Mass. was arrested at 3:09 a.m. for possession of a class D substance and possessing liquor when under the age of 21.

COOK, Galen, 20, of 335 Old Main Rd. N. Falmouth, Mass. was approached by an officer in lot 49, south of the water tanks, and arrested for possession of liquor while under the age of 21, possession/misuse of a false liquor ID card

THOMPSON, Justin Andrew, 20, of 91 Ferry Rd Bradford, Mass., was approached at the same time as COOK and arrested for possession of liquor while under the age of 21

Friday

BOWLER, David Louis, 18, of 60 Lillian St Pittsfield, Mass. was approached by UMPD in lot 33 on University Dr and arrested for possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Oil price drops, how far is unclear

By Kevin G. Hall
M[illegible] Newspapers

WASHINGTON — Oil prices declined nearly $6 a barrel on Tuesday following news that the Gulf Coast region's energy infrastructure escaped serious damage from Hurricane Gustav, and analysts expected the trend of falling oil and gasoline prices to continue.

Oil prices for October delivery fell to as low as $105.46 in early trading — the lowest they've been since April before settling down $5.75 Tuesday to $109.71 on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Having now crossed the psychological threshold of $110, prices seem headed toward $100 a barrel. Oil prices are almost 30 percent off their brief high of $147 a barrel in July.

The last time oil prices were under $100 a barrel, the week of March 14-20, the nationwide average price for a gallon of unleaded gasoline stood at $3.27. AAA said Tuesday that the nationwide average stood at $3.68, up 90 cents a gallon from a year ago.

For now, all signs point to lower prices.

"We see continued weak demand," said James Crandell, an oil analyst with Lehman Brothers, a Wall Street investment bank that has taken a contrarian stance in forecasting declining oil prices.

Lehman expects oil prices to average about $105 a barrel from October to December, then $100 a barrel or less at the start of 2009. The reason: Weakened demand in the U.S. now is being followed by weaker demand for oil in Asia and Europe.

"The European area has deteriorated and central bankers have changed their tone there," said Crandell, noting that inflation is no longer as problematic as slow growth in Europe, reducing demand for oil. "In terms of oil demand, we see continued weakness in the United States, which has not gotten better as prices went down."

Another factor, albeit one that's harder to quantify, is weakening demand for oil and its refined products in China. Chinese consumption statistics have long been viewed as being insufficiently transparent. Oil analysts also believe China was building gasoline and diesel-fuel inventories ahead of the Beijing Summer Olympics last month, reportedly to ensure backup supplies in the event of any major failures along its power grid.

"It's pretty clear that they were building up stockpiles ... not only will they not be building stockpiles but they will be de-stocking," Crandell said, meaning the Chinese will be drawing down from their existing oil inventories rather than sucking oil off a tight global market.

Other oil analysts believe falling oil prices reflect a correction in what was a speculative bubble, and suggest even lower prices are ahead.

"Despite the recent correction, we believe that crude oil prices are still inflated and do not reflect industry fundamentals," wrote Tadel Gheit and Daniel Katzenberg, oil analysts for Oppenheimer & Co., a New York investment-management firm.

In a research note Tuesday, the two suggested that recent hostilities in the oil-rich Caspian region should have reversed slumping prices if global supplies really were drum tight.

"The Russian invasion of Georgia and Hurricane Gustav have failed to stem the slide in oil prices, which proves to us that oil prices are inflated," Gheit and Katzenberg said, adding that "barring a major supply disruption, we think oil prices have already peaked."

The 11-member Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is unlikely to watch prices sink too much further, however. OPEC members meet next Tuesday and some such as Iran have signaled they're willing to withhold supply to support higher prices.

For breaking news, dailycollegian.blogspot.com -launching this week!

Chance to win fabulous prizes at each activity!

GENERAL MILLS CEREAL WEEK September 8-12

• MONDAY: ALL DCs
Guess the number of cheerios in the jar & vote for your favorite GM cereal

• TUESDAY: WORCESTER DC
Cereal Lab from 5-7 pm
Be the first to sign up!

• WEDNESDAY: FRANKLIN DC
Green Day...
Learn about General Mills' green initiatives 11-2 PM

•THURSDAY: BLUEWALL
Sweet Minis Promotion Day

• FRIDAY: BERKSHIRE DC
Cereal Eating Contest 6-9 pm

GENERAL MILLS FOODSERVICE
Ivy
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst

From the White House to UMass
Wednesday, September 10 | 5 – 9 pm | Berkshire DC

Former White House Chef, Walter Scheib, will visit UMass to prepare favorite food of the First Families.

First Course
Thai Sweet Potato Soup (Democrat)
Corn and Scallop Chowder (Democrat)
Crab Cakes with Remoulade (Republican/Democrat)

Second Course
Southern Fried Chicken (Republican)
Ham and Pecan Glazed Sweets (Republican/Democrat)
Braised Pork Chop with Apples (Democrat)
Cesario Salad (Democrat)

Dessert
Fruit Parfaits
Chocolate Coconut Bar

Open to the public
$11.50 cash
and free to students
on meal plan

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Ivy

"Private Briefing" On the south side of Berkshire DC from 7:00 – 7:45 pm

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Freedom of speech is of no use to a man who has nothing to say" - Franklin Delano Roosevelt

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 2008

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Feeling the campaign heat

Parisa Saranj

Now that the subject of presidential campaign is significant and almost in every gathering and discussion the subject comes up, I find myself a little indifferent.

First, I am not an American citizen, and I have far more important worries such as surviving my classes and my immigrant life after all those loans I've taken from family members, friends and the university.

Second, I am beginning to lose all hope and start to believe that once again Americans are going to elect someone who is less concerned about public health, education, economy or peace and human rights.

It wasn't until a couple of days ago that I decided to write on this topic. I was waiting in the bus stop where I overheard a conversation between some foreign students. None seemed to be passionately following the presidential campaigns, yet each had interesting aspects to distinguish between the candidates. One said, "if the old guy wins, we all will be sent back to our countries." Another referred to a candidate as "the black guy." I thought of the strong role race plays in this vast land, where people have come long ways and sacrificed much to enjoy being equal. It is deep that a simple, naïve comment can remind us how there are still primitive prejudices and racial agendas.

It is an intense show that these hardworking candidates have put together. Watching the candidates, I am entertained, though I hope that entertainment is not their sole purpose. The media are not less guilty either. Being black and being a woman have been great tools for their agenda-making process. Isn't it true that the media have played with anything from Hillary's boring clothes and Sarah Palin's excellent sense of motherhood to Senator Obama's being an alleged Muslim?

Such wonders I have heard over the past year or so. I often think of how it would be watching Senator McCain running to the gates of hell to catch Bin Laden or seeing Senator Obama sit on a dialogue table with nations such as Iran, which are angry at America due to years of mistreatment and damage.

> I am just a simple immigrant, appreciating my exceptional education ... Yet, I feel that something is not right.

However, amusement is not all I get from witnessing such competition, I am somewhat saddened too.

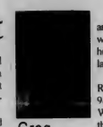
It is unfair to see how women are being exploited once again. I respect, for instance, the choice of Sarah Palin and her family to give birth to a special needs child, or to justify a teen pregnancy, but I wonder if it is moral to set these choices as standards for all women?

It is unfair to constantly hear about experiences of a veteran who is using war as a sacred opportunity that qualifies him for running a nation. I believe that war is a difficult situation to be in, but I often wonder whether feeling it shouldn't make a person more in favor of peace or a withdrawal of troop from an occupied country.

As a woman, I just felt so invisible when I came across the vice-presidential nominee Sarah Palin's veto to slash funding for a state program benefiting teen mothers in need of a place to live.

And there are all those scary talks on tax cuts benefiting the rich, encroachment on same sex marriage, or no plan for universal health care which remind me of the conversation on the bus stop. America is a wonderful country. I am honored to be here. But am I seeing what I thought prior to my trip I would be facing?

Maybe it is seeing or hearing such conservative stands on social, economical and international issues that make some of us feel unsafe and scared. I think of the people on the bus stop and I think of myself. I am no expert in American politics. I am in favor of no particular candidate. I am just a simple immigrant, appreciating my exceptional education. I am a woman from an old generation of subjugated women who have fought in their own ways to get a voice. Yet, I feel that something is not right.



I might have not been in the United States long enough to truly grasp the status of women in this society, but I can definitely see some double standards. When running for presidency, Hillary Clinton was criticized for her look. Now that, proudly, another woman has found a way into professional politics, she is favored for her "beautiful legs."

I wonder whether it is immature to raise a question of what is happening to the world. I had a difficult summer facing my birthplace, Iran, after many years with such dramatic, cruel changes. I escaped back to the U.S. to see that the world is still hesitant over an African-American president, or the world is still pondering upon the right of a woman to her own body.

Maybe I am too impatient. I want to see the world act its age. Maybe, I have a lot of faith in America, and my expectations are too high.

In commemoration, unity

Greg Collins

Only when we as Americans unite around commonly held values can we strengthen our eternal bond as human beings living for a purpose larger than ourselves.

This is why the UMass Amherst Republican Club (UMRC) holds a 9/11 flag display every September. We do this to honor those who lost their lives on that fateful day. We do this to commemorate their place in American history as symbols of heroism and patriotism. And we do this to make clear that the spirit of Americans – of courage, bravery, and a deep sense of respect for our fellow brothers and sisters – will never waver.

> The UMRC recognizes that honoring American heroism and bravery, and commemorating those who display such acts, transcends ethnic considerations.

Every year, the UMRC plants flags in the ground on the Library Lawn, next to the Student Union, with each flag signifying the lives of those deceased. In addition, we table the next two days and collect donations for disabled American veterans. This year the UMRC will also be playing "World Trade Center," a movie about the heroic efforts of New York City firefighters and police officers rescuing their fellow countrymen.

The UMRC recognizes that honoring American heroism and bravery, and commemorating those who display such acts, transcends ethnic considerations. It transcends the color of your skin, the amount of money you make and your academic interest. And it most certainly transcends political affiliation.

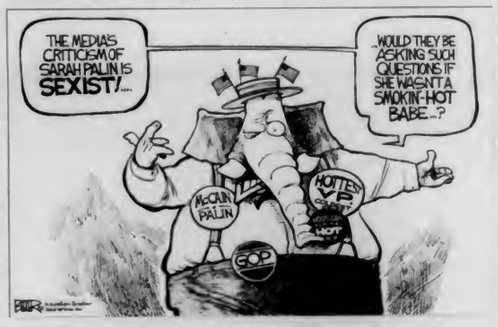
Which is why the UMRC decided to invite members from the College Democrats, Muslim Students Association and Students Alliance For Israel to participate in planting flags and collecting donations for veterans. Many students from these groups graciously accepted our invitation.

Make no mistake that the UMRC continues to hold true to its political convictions of free markets, a strong national defense and traditional family values. We believe that these are three of the most important pillars for sustaining American excellence at home and abroad.

But we also believe there are more important values deeper than economic policy or defense budgets. Because before we can advance as society, we, as people living on American soil, must establish some common ground with each other so as to discover what values truly unify us as Americans. A ground which places principle over partisanship, timeless values over temporal politicizing, and the eternal soul over ethnic or religious differences.

These are values of courage and bravery, of humility and decency, of respect, hope, and virtue. Values that are universal. And, most important, values that are unequivocally American.

This is why we invited members from clubs of all different political, ethnic and religious affiliations to participate. We can disagree over whether to support the Democratic or Republican Party; we can disagree over whether ethnic grievances against other people are legitimate or not; and of course we can also disagree over institutional religious tenets.



But where we can come to agreement is honoring and cherishing the lives of those lost on 9/11. Many at UMass Amherst have personal connections to these people – some were relatives, others family friends. And of course there were many more who previously had had no connection to the victims beside the fact that they were of our own. Some were American citizens, and some weren't. Some were Republicans, and some were Democrats.

But they were our own. When they died, their immediate family members were not the only people to have lost something that day. All of us lost something as well.

But we gained something also. We gained a greater respect for those who came before us. We gained greater respect for courage and bravery. And we regained the assurance that nothing will ever overcome the indomitable will and spirit of the American people.

If our commemoration the next two days contributes even in the smallest way to this assurance, then we, the UMRC, feel the 9/11 Flag Display and Commemoration will have succeeded in its mission.

Greg Collins is the president of the UMass Amherst Republican Club. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

Gambling on life, death

Matthew Broderick

There is a contest in which Michael Jackson slightly trails Courtney Love, Pope John Paul II once lead, and Britney Spears is surprisingly losing rank. No, it is not the results of yet another repulsive season of "Dancing with the Stars," but rather the popularity list for Rotten.com's dead pool.

In this morbidly fascinating version of fantasy football, participants earn points due to celebrity deaths rather than touchdowns. In the game you choose 10 celebrities you feel are most likely to die within the next year, then sit back and allow the hand of God to do its bidding. Easy enough.

Some people think this is pretty controversial, but I see it more as a harmless and creative idea. There is nothing violent involved – no blood and guts or obscene acts, just names and fate. Chance is really the catalyst to this game and the only controversy I can perceive is a superstitious inner guilt from paranoid users. By choosing a celebrity for my team I am not wishing death upon them, just merely guessing.

> In this morbidly fascinating version of fantasy football, participants earn points due to celebrity deaths rather than touchdowns.

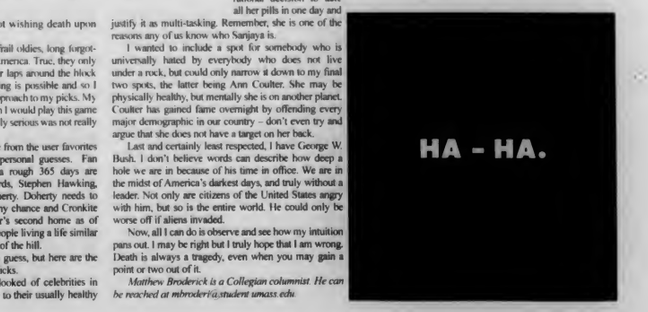
Most user teams consist of frail oldies, long forgotten in the eyes of a superficial America. True, they only have so many motorized scooter laps around the block left, but with the famous anything is possible and so I am choosing a more balanced approach to my picks. My sense of humor is the only reason I would play this game in the first place, so taking it totally serious was not really my goal.

I decided to pick five people from the user favorites list and take five of my own personal guesses. Fan favorites I could see having a rough 365 days are Elizabeth Taylor, Keith Richards, Stephen Hawking, Walter Cronkite, and Pete Doherty. Doherty needs to be locked in a cage if he has any chance and Cronkite looked deathly in 1970. Taylor's second home as of lately is the hospital and most people living a life similar to Richards' don't reach the top of the hill.

Call it a hunch or a random guess, but here are the reasons for my remaining five picks.

Athletes are the most overlooked of celebrities in the terms of croaking early, due to their usually healthy lifestyles, but somehow I feel golfer John Daly could prove the system wrong. The man is a large American and the only time he did lose weight was due to dieting from whiskey and cigarettes (kids: take note). Daly's golf career is almost as fragile as his ability to remain healthy. He remains a golf icon, but is clearly a ticking time bomb.

Bear Grylls makes my list thanks to the vicious power of sting rays. Steve Irwin showed the world that even the sweetest things in nature can be the ones that get you. Grylls has lived through more dangerous situations than the late Irwin, but I wouldn't count him out, especially the next time he is in the presence of a rabbit.



Since reality television is so popular these days, it wouldn't be a surprise to see one of its stars fall from grace. Paula Abdul grabs this acknowledgement, due to her spotted recent history. The woman has the ability to sometimes make a psych ward look like a Harvard law class, but still manages to hold a job. I would not be surprised if Abdul made a rational decision to take all her pills in one day and justify it as multi-tasking. Remember, she is one of the reasons any of us know who Sanjaya is.

I wanted to include a spot for somebody who is universally hated by everybody who does not live under a rock, but could only narrow it down to my final two spots, the latter being Ann Coulter. She may be physically healthy, but mentally she is on another planet. Coulter has gained fame overnight by offending every major demographic in our country – don't even try and argue that she does not have a target on her back.

Last and certainly least respected, I have George W. Bush. I don't believe words can describe how deep a hole we are in because of his time in office. We are in the midst of America's darkest days, and truly without a leader. Not only are citizens of the United States angry with him, but so is the entire world. He could only be worse off if aliens invaded.

Now, all I can do is observe and see how my intuition pans out. I may be right but I truly hope that I am wrong. Death is always a tragedy, even when you may gain a point or two out of it.

Matthew Broderick is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mbroderi@student.umass.edu.

Do your duty, democratically

Matt Kushi

In the United States, many years from now, 2008 will be sure to go down as one of major historical significance. It will be marked as the year of change.

The United States of America is one of the finest nations in the whole world. We are one of the world's countries that is fortunate enough to say that we are free. When you look at all of the world powers, not all countries have the luxury to speak the line, "we are free." However, that said, is "free" enough?

If one looks into the United States, they will find that we are far from perfect. We still have many bumps in the road ahead of us that we must face as a country united, not divided. Surely we can take our freedom and spread its domain to all of the inhabitants of this nation. Surely we can improve on the work that those before us have achieved.

There is a vision and a dream that defines the United States of America. This vision and this dream will forever be the guiding light to our nation. We will always try to make the seemingly impossible possible. We will always try to fight for human equality. That is why this upcoming election is so important. As a nation, we have the power to decide who we think will make the most progress towards keeping that vision and dream on the right course.

Voting in this upcoming election is important on many levels. Not only will history be made through who is elected, but history will also be made through the actions and ideals of the candidate that we elect.

What we need to do as a country is to put the country before ourselves. We, as Americans, need to cast aside whatever prejudices we have towards the people running. If you are voting because you don't want an African-American president or if you don't want a female vice president, than you are voting for the wrong reasons. This is not a popularity contest of what people look like or what gender they are. We are voting on the ideals that they stand for. Whether you vote for the Democratic Obama/Biden ticket or the Republican McCain/Palin ticket, you are voting for what they believe in.

> What this country is crying out to know from you is who you think the best person is to lead this nation.

What we do in November with our vote will dictate the future of our country. There are many issues at hand such as energy sources, abortion rights, the correct course of action in Iraq and Afghanistan, foreign oil dependency and health care issues. If you are one of those people that thinks that your vote doesn't count, or just don't care enough to vote, let it be known that you matter. If you choose not to vote, that is your choice.

However, no matter how small you may think that you voice is, it will be heard. We, the people of the United States, are what keep the machine rolling. Every vote counts. If you plead indifference about how your country is run, think on this: If you live your life in the United States, what are you going to do with your life? That is dictated by how the country is run by the government. Once the lights dim on the college parties and the record books on so many athletic careers come to a close, the government that runs your country is what you are going to have left. It is the part of the guide in which we live of our lives to.

College is a strange but sweet time of life for most people. It is the time when we stop relying on others for all of our needs and start to provide those needs for ourselves. We mature and learn to care about things that we never knew could interest. Some people find their voice while ultimately finding their identity. Others lose their voice, overwhelmed by the large crowds that swarm around them. For those who have found their voices, and for those who still want their voices to be heard, what this country is crying out to know from you is who you think the best person is to lead this nation. Do you believe in the change that Barack Obama speaks of or do you believe in the change that John McCain talks about? Perhaps you support neither and will vote for someone like Ralph Nader.

Whatever you choose, your voice matters. While people can encourage you how to vote, only one person knows how you are going to vote. Only one person knows what you believe is morally right and morally wrong. That one person is you. The choice is yours to make. Who do you think is the best fit to lead the United States of America into a new era? The choice may not be easy and people may not agree with you, but only you know what is right. Life isn't always about doing what is popular. It is about doing what is right.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY SEPTEMBER 10, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Ups, downs, beeping amid improv at FAC

Murphy, Burr perform at annual 1st week comedy night

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Correspondent

Last year, the University of Massachusetts was treated with two great shows from Lewis Black and Jim Breuer. This year's First Week '08 Comedy Night featured two comedians who appeared together on Chappelle's Show."

Although Tropical Storm Hanna kept most of the student body calling Wings and D.P. Dough from the comfort of their dorms, many others made the soggy trek to the Fine Arts Center to see comedians Bill Burr and Charlie Murphy take the stage.

Canton native Burr made his name by appearing on Chappelle's Show and Comedy Central Presents. He also just recently had a one-hour Comedy Central special called "Bill Burr: Why Do I Do This?" which aired on Aug. 31.

Comedian Charlie Murphy used crude humor and repeated punch lines through his set for the UMass Amherst Comedy Night on Saturday.

Joining him on Chapelle's Show was Murphy, who is more commonly known as Eddie Murphy's older brother. He is also noted as a writer for the box-office flop "Norbit," and had roles in "King's Ransom" and "Roll Bounce."

The two have been touring on and off together for more than five years. The show was hosted by comedian Freeze Love, who was first to take the stage in the partially filled FAC. He got the audience's blood flowing by making fun of his weight issue and his unorthodox ethnicity. Once his short bit was done, he introduced Burr, who electrified the auditorium with his crass, controversial humor about the elderly, race and sudden urges to clip people on the sidewalk, among other things.

The greatest parts of Burr's set were not in the jokes his fans knew or the monologues he rehearsed, but rather the improvisation that turned out to be the majority of his act. A few unlikely events occurred during Burr's allotted time on stage that turned an annoyance into stomach cramping laughter.

About 15 minutes into the act, an alarm started going off. The incessant beeping was inevitably not going to stop, so rather than allow it to get on his nerves, Burr made light of the situation. He told the audience that he thought "an invisible bus was going to back-up into [him] on the stage."

As it turned out, the alarm was to be out-done by someone who pre-gamed a bit too hard before the show. The young man vomited a few times in the first row and stumbled out of the theater not to be seen again. This, of course, became comedic fodder for Burr, who ensued in making fun of the puker and reminiscing on a few college yak stories of his own.

Burr's performance bested Black's and Bruer's previous shows, but Murphy had still yet to come out to prove himself. Buffering the two acts, Freeze Love made a second appearance, and treated the audience's curiosity to the truth behind the mystery alarm.

Supposedly, the water level outside had risen to a depth in which a certain alarm went off. The only way to turn off the alarm would be to remove the water which was impossible due to the severe weather conditions. He then did another quick bit and handed the mic over to Charlie Murphy.

Murphy's act was almost as bad as a "Love Guru" / "Disaster Movie" double-feature. His "comedy" was predominantly based on two things: the fact that his brother is Eddie Murphy and the fact that Rick James is. Rick James. Uh, and he brushed on a little politics and his penis, too.

Overall his humor was lazy. He screamed expletives into the microphone to get cheap laughs and actually repeated his punchlines a few times, so that the audience "got the joke." His pause and repeat routine did one thing and one thing only: remind everyone of that annoying beeping noise.

Sure, Burr's act was very tough to follow, but if Steven Hawking did stand-up comedy, he would have had an edge on Murphy. When he finally ended his shameful speech to nobody, everyone stood up immediately to leave.

Bill Burr and Freeze Love made the show well worth the walk in the rain and an economi

Bill Burr made the most of any situation that cropped up during his set, including an annoying beeping and a vomiting audience member.

Fox TV pilot gets back to beginning

By Phil Dosanjh
Collegian Correspondent

"Do Not Disturb"
Fox TV
Premieres Wednesday, Sept. 10 9:30 p.m.

Do not miss Fox's "Do Not Disturb" or it just might fail to reach its potential. The new show is a work-place sitcom with a funny ensemble cast airing on Wednesday at 9:30 p.m. The show was created by Abraham Higginbotham, whose credits include previous work on Fox's critical hit and ratings failures "Arrested Development" and "Back to You."

"Do Not Disturb" does not feature cutting edge comedy like "Arrested Development" and it does not boast a pair veteran sitcom stars like "Back to You," but considering those two short lived shows are cancelled, maybe it's a good thing.

The pilot episode introduces several staff members at an unnamed hotel. Neil, the general manager played by "Crossing Jordan's" Jerry O'Connell, is a self described "respectful and decent" boss. Unfortunately, Neil's staff sees him more as "some lecherous, hornball boss running around with his fly open."

In contrast, human resource director, Rhonda, played by "Reno 911!" star Niecy Nash, is known as the hotel "bastn of self-control." It is only natural that the events that take place in Jason Bateman ("Juno") directed pilot soon flip the roles of the characters. This very situation makes "Do Not Disturb" a difference from other recent sitcoms.

This sitcom places a beautiful, thin, wannabe-model against a plus-size model representing the "second largest plus size clothing chain in Indiana." It also features a witty bellhop named Gus, played by the dryly humorous Dave Franco (brother of the "Spider-man" series actor James Franco) teamed with a homosexual hotel worker with a muddled sexual drive.

The interaction between Neil and Rhonda and the other pairs create the show's stimulating plot hinting more potential than the pilot exhibits. Fox ordered twelve episodes of the show, which implies that the network has faith in the show's potential as well.

The question is: will "Do Not Disturb" share the same fate as Higginbotham's past endeavors? His works have digressed in edginess and originality since "Arrested," falling into a trend of conformity to the mainstream idea of sitcoms.

The traditional set-up for the situation comedy has been a rare event on network television. With everyone searching for the next new, outrageous idea, maybe it has become time to watch something reminiscent of where it all started.

"Do Not Disturb" isn't the next "I Love Lucy," and it's not original enough to be labeled "revolutionary." But its lack of originality isn't its downfall.

Then again, there is an "Arrested Development" movie in pre-production, so maybe edginess and originality isn't so out of style.

"Do Not Disturb" is a new show about an ecclectic group of hotel workers starrying Niecy Nash and Jerry O'Connell.

Practice makes perfect

Sebastian Wozniak practices with his alto saxaphone in Bezanson on Tuesday night. Bezanson, located in the Fine Arts Center, is an intimate setting that is home to a number of classes and recitals of all genres, including an 8 p.m. performance by horn professor Laura Klock with tenor William Hite and guest pianist Gregory Haves on Sept. 16.

New Roth adaptation lives up to name

Firey Cruz steals screen in Coixet's mournful 'Elegy'

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

An elegy is said to be a poem of sadness and of mourning. Isabel Coixet's latest film, "Elegy," captures both feelings. Currently showing at Amherst Cinema, the film stars Ben Kingsley as Professor David Kepesh forced to reconsider life after falling in love with a younger woman.

"Elegy" gains source material from the 2001 novella, "The Dying Animal." Penned by Philip Roth, the novella forms the conclusion of the Kepesh trilogy, which also includes "The Breast" (1972) and "The Professor of Desire" (1977).

As Kepesh, Kingsley is assertive and effective. A professor at Columbia University, Kepesh is all intellect and raging libido. He sates his appetites with any number of students or willing female participants. An occasional talking head on "Charlie Rose," Kepesh is not just a hedonist. He is also a vocal critic of contemporary social mores.

His book, "The Origins of American Hedonism," lays his values bare. In it, Kepesh rails against a puritanical society which idealizes commitment and condemns casual sex. In his early sixties, he seems like a character plucked straight out of the 1960s.

There's also sadness to him. His estrangement from his son Kenny (Peter Sarsgaard) dates back to his abandonment of his wife Kenny hasn't forgiven him, nor does he approve of his father's lifestyle. Fresh out of familial connections, Kepesh pulls his deepest bonds from a poet (Dennis Hopper) and from school, where he busies himself with teaching and seduction.

If "Elegy" had kept its original title, the film would seem more self aware. Kepesh is not yet a dying animal, yet he mourns his advancing age. His affairs invigorate his ego, but no fantasy can last forever. Bound up in fears of impending death, Kepesh is an anxious figure, even after he discovers a woman worth committing to.

Nicholas Meyers, who adapted "Elegy" for the screen, also did the 2003 film, "The Human Stain," starring Anthony Hopkins as an aging professor of classics. Like Kepesh, Hopkins' character finds cause to question life after he beds a janitor played, rather improbably, by Nicole Kidman.

There have also been other Roth adaptations. Released in 1972, "Portnoy's Complaint" is a dated (just take a look at Karen Black's attire) and somewhat crass adaptation of one of Roth's most enduring works.

"Elegy" is better than either previous adaptation, but is still a dour film. The script has a somber vibe which never relents, turning overwrought as it barrels towards conclusion. Kepesh's realization that

See ELEGY on page 8

"ELEGY"
STARRING: BEN KINGSLEY AND PENELOPE CRUZ
B-

New female buddy film out on DVD

Fey, Poehler team up, learn ins and outs of motherhood

By Frank Godinho
Collegian Staff

After a successful transition from Saturday Night Live to "Must-See TV Thursday," Tina Fey stars in the feature-film comedy "Baby Mama," alongside fellow Saturday Night Live actress Amy Poehler.

Fey, who often acts in supporting roles while simultaneously writing scripts (i.e. "Mean Girls," "30 Rock") does the opposite here – and it shows. The film, both written and directed by Michael McCullers, is clichéd, bland and predictable in so many places that fans of Fey (and "30 Rock") may be disappointed to see her in such dull work.

For moviegoers who decided to skip seeing this film in theaters last April due to its silly title, you now have a chance to rush out to and buy it, as "Baby Mama" is now available on DVD.

COURTESY | UNIVERSAL PICTURES

Amy Poehler plays surrogate mother for Tina Fey's child in "Baby Mama." The women learn to live with each other dispite different tastes.

Kate (Tina Fey), a powerful businesswoman in her late 30s, feels like her biological clock is about to expire. The film outlines all you really need to know about Kate within the first five minutes of the film, from her family life to her marital status to her career, allowing for greater character development throughout the film.

At work, life couldn't be better for Kate. After her boss (legendary SNL alumnus Steve Martin) gives her a large promotion to the company's vice president, she starts feeling envious of women with different career – mother.

At this stage of the film, it's evident that Kate wants to have a baby, but we soon find out that due her "T-shaped" uterus, the likelihood of her conceiving is like winning the lottery – one in a million. Therefore, in order for her to have a biological child of her own, she's left with no choice but to find a suitable surrogate mother to carry her eggs.

With the help of a surrogate mother agency, Kate is finally introduced to Angie (Amy Poehler). Angie, a Jerry Springer-ish "trailer park trash" woman, isn't exactly the surrogate mother Kate had in mind for her baby, leaving her speechless and perturbed.

Kate, however, makes the best of it and decides to let the pregnancy take its course. Sprinkled in throughout the film are two distracting side stories that change the film from a comedy to a romantic-comedy. Both a love/hate relationship between Angie and her husband (Dax Shepard), and Kate's love interest (Greg Kinnear), take away from Fey's and Poehler's comedic chemistry.

A spot where the script takes a strange detour is when all of a sudden the comedy gets mean, and we're left with a storyline that departs from an odd friendship through surrogacy to a betrayal and a lie that takes away from the story.

What saves the film in the end is the cast's talent. Fey and Poehler play off of one another quite nicely. It's rare to find a comedy in which two women can pull off the buddy-buddy format, but these two leading ladies succeed in a way that is comparable to your typical male buddy-buddy comedy.

The cast is seasoned with a variety of comedians and actors with both supporting roles and cameos. Steve Martin, who hasn't had a decent comedic role in a feature film since 1999's "The Out-of-Towners," is hilarious in his short amount of screen time.

Additionally, Sigourney Weaver as surrogate agency director adds her own flavor of dry humor to the film. There are several other recognizable faces scattered throughout including Maura Tierney as Fey's sister and Will Forte as Fey's ex-boyfriend.

Don't get me wrong, "Baby Mama" can't even compare on a scale to the likes of a Judd Apatow comedy. But this Tina Fey-Amy Poehler vehicle proves that gender plays no role in comedic talent.

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu

Slow pace leaves film with morose feel

ELEGY from page 7

love can be meaningful is expected long before it takes effect. The real fun occurs beforehand, in seeing Kepesh undone by his own desires.

Patricia Clarkson is one such desire. She plays an older woman still stuck in Kepesh's thrall. Penelope Cruz co-stars as Kepesh's other love interest. Cruz is older than the role demands, but believable as the object of Kepesh's obsession. Fresh off the heels of a dynamic performance in "Vicky Cristina Barcelona," her performance here botches on familiar ground.

In "Elegy," Cruz plays Consuela, a Cuban-born student in Kepesh's "Practical Criticism" course at Columbia. She has stars in her eyes from the moment her gaze locks on Kepesh, but for practical purposes, nothing happens between them until after her final grade has been released.

Consuela poses nude for Kepesh and poses the ultimate challenge. Kepesh wants her, but can he commit to her exclusively. His feelings for her are nearly as powerful as his doubts.

Almost from the start, the relationship seems to bring out the worst in him. He follows and dwells on her constantly, jealously guarding his heart against injury. Consuela, turned off by so much possessiveness, begins to wonder what she has gotten herself into.

Both Clarkson and Cruz's characters share similar traits. Each succumbs to Kepesh's advances, yet both are content to lead independent lives. Cruz delicately brings Consuela gentility and force of character, while Clarkson's rant against age hits on an emotionally resonant chord.

Beyond that, their presence in the story feels strictly technical. They're good for helping Kepesh regain a little of his own humanity, but not for much else. This has been a recurring issue for Philip Roth.

Notable writer that he is, in recent times Roth has faced criticism for objectifying his female characters. Some viewers will take offense to a tale where women are cast as disposable sex pots. Even if they are college-educated sex pots, it's not a desirable lot to assign for women.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu.

Exciting new artists to shake up airwaves

By Rebecca Babin
Collegian Correspondent

It's really frustrating to sit in traffic on North Pleasant St as streams of pedestrians cross the road with no regard for the hundreds of cars waiting for them to pass. Whoever gave the pedestrians the right-of-way in Massachusetts was seriously disturbed.

But what is equally frustrating, and only makes the agony of this traffic worse, is listening to the same CD for the thousandth time, then flipping on the radio to the same songs the stations seem to be putting on repeat.

It's then that you start thinking, "Wow I really need some new music" or possibly, "I am going to be really late for class." Unfortunately, state traffic laws are out of our control, but for the music problem, look no further. There are some exciting new artists popping up on the music scene that are begging to be listened to.

Mayday Parade – A Lesson in Romantics

Back in the mid-2000s, two popular Tallahasse local bands, Kid Named Chicago and Defining Moment, fused together to form Mayday Parade. The result was one melodic rock band and a big hometown buzz.

Shortly after the two bands meshed, Mayday Parade played at the 2005 Warped Tour, but it wasn't until 2006 that the band signed with Fearless Record. Their album, "A Lesson in Romantics" debuted in July of 2007, which features their current single, "Jaime All Over."

Mayday Parade sounds like the lovechild of Panic at the Disco and Something Corporate. Like its pop-punk relative, Panic at the Disco, Mayday Parade has a fast paced, exciting, and catchy sound that makes them hard to turn off. Like Something Corporate, they have the ability to infuse meaning, depth and an occasionally softer sound into their music.

This combination of qualities gives them not only versatility, but likability because there is something on the album for everyone. No two songs on "A Lesson in Romantics" sound the same, which was a common problem with many albums of similar preceding bands.

Any song could have been chosen to be Mayday's first hit single, but one that really stands out is "Ocean and Atlantic." Just listen to their clips on iTunes and you pop/punk fans will be sold.

Jazmine Sullivan- Fearless

It seems like every female artist breaking into the music business has had some help from some kind of reality TV show and is featured singing the same kind of bleeding heart power ballads or inspirational songs on this week's Billboard hits.

It's nice to hear Jazmine Sullivan, a talented R&B singer with a style and sound that differs from the rest of the pack. After recently signing with J Records earlier in 2008, she recorded her first single "Need You Bad," which is featured on her soon-to-be released album, "Fearless." Although her contract with J Records may be fresh, she isn't new to the music industry.

She was signed with Jive Records at age 15, but was dropped from the label before any recordings were released. After this huge disappointment she went on to write a few songs for Christina Millan's third album, including the hit single "Say I."

Sullivan has a sound that is literally unparalleled on the charts right now. Her music flirts with line between R&B and reggae, which forces a comparison between her and music icons such a Lauren Hill and Mary J. Blige. Based on her first single alone, she seems to be holding her own.

"Fearless" drops September 23, 2008. Be sure to check it out.

Vampire Weekend – Vampire Weekend

This indie rock band from New York City got their creatively off-beat name from an amateur film of the same title made by their lead singer and guitarist, Ezra Koenig. Inspired by African popular music and Western classical music, the band coined their sound as "Upper West Side Soweto." Soweto refers to an urban area in the South African city, Johannesburg. This unique combination of influences produces a very interesting and captivating sound.

Their songs have an enticing quality that draws the listener in. As each track plays you'll find yourself trying to put your finger on how to describe them. Many of their songs have their own original sound, making it hard to compare them to other artists.

Although they have just recently been getting more publicity, they caught the attention of Rolling Stone in 2007, when their song "Cape Cod Kwassa Kwassa" was recognized as number 67 on their list of 100 Best Songs of the Year.

If you're looking for something different but amazing, pick up or download a copy of Vampire Weekend. Focus your attention on "Walcot" and "Campus," two songs you're sure to love.

Like music? movies? concerts?
tv shows? fashion? plays?
musicals? fine art?
books? poets?
trends?
read the arts blog.
allaccessarts.blogspot.com

TO ALL STUDENTS OF
THE STOCKBRIDGE SCHOOL
OF AGRICULTURE

Alpha Tau Gamma
the Stockbridge academic, service & social fraternity
announces the fall rush opening for male Pledges
to become a member of the oldest, strongest,
most active and most enjoyable part of an SSA/UMass college education
with the best life long network
founded in 1919

Wednesday, September 10 at 6:00 p.m.
ATG Brothers will speak at the
SSA convocation in room 20 Goessman Hall
sign-up sheets for new Pledges will be available
ATG will give away FREE T shirts

Thursday, September 11 at 6:30 p.m.
ATG Brothers welcome SSA male students
at the Faculty Club, 243 Stockbridge Road
sign-up sheets for new Pledges will be available
learn more about ATG & eat FREE munchies

Saturday, September 13 at 1:00 p.m.
ATG Brothers welcome all SSA students
to a social at the Amherst Pub, 5 East Pleasant Street
sign-up sheets for new Pledges will be available
bring your SSA student ID & eat FREE munchies

Monday, September 15 at 7:00 p.m.
ATG Brothers welcome all SSA male students
to weekly meeting in the Campus Center
bring your $100.00 check to ATG for your
2008/2009 Pledge and social fee

The rush ends on Saturday, September 13.
The Pledge period begins on Monday, September 15
The 6 week Pledge period ends on October 25.

STOCKBRIDGE FOREVER!

Muller to see time if Luckey can't go

INJURIES from page 12

Syndey Stoll and Meghan Gould, Carvahlo could see some game action if and when she returns.

The decision to redshirt Gould is a difficult one for Rudy. She has been left out of contact drills in practice, wearing a red bib while continuing to recover from her injuries. It has been difficult for Gould to get on the field throughout her career, as she suffered a concussion last October while recovering from an ankle injury.

She played in 14 games last season, starting all but one while registering one point on an assist. Gould was able to make plays offensively, finishing sixth on the team with 14 shots, six of which were put on goal.

According to Rudy, there is a minimal possibility that Gould will suit up during the regular season.

"Gould has got a lot of tests to go before that becomes an issue," he said. "She could end up being a fabulous fifth-year senior."

Rudy will be redshirting Stoll, the major returning offensive threat for UMass who injured her knee during a spring league game. After she went down with the injury, he tried to put it in perspective for the forward who recorded six goals and three assists during the 2007 season – despite missing almost half of the season with a collarbone injury.

"I said, 'Sydney this won't mean a lot to you right now, but in my experience, people that become fifth-year seniors who've gone through rehabilitation are so far superior, that they're more superior to a fourth-year healthy senior,'" Rudy said.

Having both Stoll and Gould for another year could pay off for the Minutewomen.

This is one of the youngest teams Rudy has coached, with 12 of the 22 players being underclassmen. Gould and Stoll could step up into leading roles not only on the offensive side of the ball, but for an inexperienced team.

Rudy believes that fifth-year players are a great addition to any team.

"I love fifth-year players," he said. "Tina Rodriguez is a perfect example of that for us. I think they're fabulous."

Rodriguez tallied the first goal of the 2008 campaign against Binghampton despite a 2-1 loss.

The injuries have affected the defense, as well.

Junior goalkeeper Lauren Luckey was taken out halfway through Saturday's practice with a knee-cap injury.

"On one of the dives she rolled over and her knees slid and the knee-cap went," Rudy said.

If Luckey is not able to play today, Rudy will look to unproven freshman Katie Muller. Initially recruited to be the third keeper for UMass, Rudy missed an opportunity for another recruit, as Muller got the back up role. She might have to step up a little bit earlier than Rudy expected.

Even though Stoll and Gould have might not be on the field this season, Rudy still feels that having them be a part of the team is vital for the Minutewomen's success.

"They've been very supportive, they've been through every training session, they travel with us, they help me with statistics, and I think that's the way it should be," Rudy said.

"Your team is your team whether they are playing or not."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

UMass hosts Bryant at Rudd

SOCCER from page 12

well organized, they're blue collar,' because those are teams that in years past, we've struggled against," Rudy said.

Scoring does not appear to be at a premium for Bryant as five of its players have already scored at least one goal this season. Forward Kaitlyn Hinck and back Alex DiPippo lead the Bulldogs in scoring with two goals apiece.

It's the kind of offense that Rudy wouldn't mind having for himself. In previous seasons, there have been one or two main scorers for the Minutewomen, but this year he would like a more balanced attack.

"I would think once we get a little more match-fit, I think you'll see more goals out of [sophomore Therese] Smith and [sophomore] Kelsey Anderson will get some," Rudy said.

Unlike New Hampshire, Bryant is not a deep team, so Rudy will make more substitutions than he did in the previous game, allowing more of the seven new freshmen to get playing time.

The main weakness that the Minutewomen hope to exploit this afternoon is the Bulldogs' defense. Bryant has allowed its opponents to score 11 goals on 55 attempts while UMass has allowed four goals on 32 attempts.

Although the Bulldogs have played one more game than the Minutewomen, they still allow three more shots and almost a goal and a half more per game than UMass.

If the Minutewomen are looking for when the Bulldogs are most vulnerable to scoring opportunities, it's the first period. The team has allowed 32 shots by its opponents, but the opposition has not made the most of its opportunities with a .125 goal percentage in the first half.

The Bulldogs are an aggressive team, bringing as many as five players forward at once. Their aggressiveness is a big reason why DiPippo can lead the team in scoring as a defensive player.

Rudy would like nothing more than to exploit that strategy with an attack of his own.

"The further forward [DiPippo] gets, the more they're going to leave in the back," Rudy said.

Two of Bryant's losses came to future UMass opponents, Providence and George Washington. Rudy doesn't expect to gain any advantage from future opponents playing Bryant, but he is expecting other teams to contact him on the Bulldogs since they are unknown to Division I teams.

"We'll have good information to pass onto those other schools because I'm sure they'll be calling me," Rudy said.

In the game against Providence the Friars capitalized on some costly mistakes by the Bulldogs. Bryant goalkeeper Katie Mitchell threw a bad pass to Providence midfielder Kate DelCampo, who chipped in a goal from six-yards out to give the Friars a 2-1 lead in the first half.

Bryant came back in the second half, but an own goal in the 86th minute ultimately cost the game for the Bulldogs as Providence went on to win, 3-2.

GW and Bryant were tied for much of the Aug. 31 affair, but the action came at the end of the second half. The Colonials responded to a goal from the Bulldogs with two tallies in the final minute from midfielders Keara Mehlert and Misa Fritz.

One area of concern for the Minutewomen is fatigue. The Bulldogs will have 11 days off while the Minutewomen had five days off following three straight overtime matches.

Rudy believes Bryant has also used that time off to scout UMass.

"I'm sure they were sitting in the bleachers, looking [at our games] or they picked up some DVDs from someone," Rudy said.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmiller@student.umass.edu.

Junior Katie Ruggles is one of few Minutewoman players to stay healthy this season. Sydney Stoll, Meghan Gould, Lauren Luckey and Amanda Carvalho have all already sustained injuries.

New England Patriots quarterback Tom Brady is helped off the field by team trainers Sunday after sustaining a left knee injury. The long-time starter will have surgery and miss the entire 2008 season. Backup quarterback Matt Cassel will take over the starting job.

Pats can still make playoffs sans Brady

ROSENSWAIKE from page 12

is hope Cassel (although a poor backup quarterback) can lead this team into the playoffs. He has the weapons, he has the coaching and he has learned under the best for four years now.

I know the AFC East is much better than last year, but this is still the class team in the division. Maybe you should worry about the New York Jets a little bit, but I would be quite surprised if the Pats don't win at least 10 games this season and make the playoffs.

Just don't expect them to make a deep run once they get there. And that applies whether Cassel or Daunte Culpepper or Chris Simms ends up the starter. Belichick says Cassel is the guy, but we will see. They have to at least consider the possibility of bringing in a more experienced quarterback to run things for this season.

Culpepper may be the right guy to do it. He just announced his retirement and has struggled the past few seasons, but he has prior chemistry with Randy Moss and he's still just 31-years-old and only a few years removed from a monster 2004 season. This opportunity would simply be too good for him not to come out of retirement.

But the Pats could decide to stick with Cassel. It could be a Trent Dilfer-type situation where they don't ask him to win the game, but rather not to lose it. It helped the Baltimore Ravens win the Super Bowl. Maybe the Pats could pull off the same trick. But the AFC is stacked, so I don't see it happening.

Just like New England never foresaw Brady getting hurt, I can see why they didn't expect it, but he isn't invincible. Neither is Brett Favre (although, at times, he seems like it). All quarterbacks get hurt.

This team has refused to have a contingency plan for a Brady injury and it's likely to cost them a chance at avenging last year's 18-1 season – which resulted in the biggest disappointment and let-down of a season in sports history.

And when you didn't think it could get any worse to be a Pats fan...

Brady goes down.

Expect Cassel to be listed on the injury report any day now. Just don't expect him to play anything like Brady.

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Horne stepping up for Coen

FOOTBALL from page 12

yard field goal to escape Worcester with the victory.

Arnold, who had his ups and downs last season, punted the ball very well again last weekend. He has a 46.1 average on 10 punts this season in two games. Last year his average was 37.9 on 51 attempts.

Grabbing life by the Hornes

Entering this season, skeptics wondered whether Coen would have anyone to throw to with the graduation of receivers J.J. Moore and Rasheed Rancher and tight end Brad Listorti.

He does. And that player is Jeremy Horne.

The 6-foot-3 redshirt junior wideout wasn't much of a factor last season with all the talent on offense – catching 12 passes for 146 yards. However, three of those passes were hauled in for touchdowns, showing his play-making ability.

He showed it in a big way against the Crusaders – exploding for 172 yards and two touchdowns on 10 receptions. He now also had a touchdown reception in the win over Albany.

The pair of touchdowns came at great times against Holy Cross. His first, a 26-yarder, tied the game at 14-14 midway in the second quarter. His next one (19 yards) cut the lead to 28-21 just one minute before halftime.

"I don't think there are anymore questions about our receiver corps now," Brown said. "I don't think anybody can say anything about them now. They're a great group and have been working their tails off. It was just a matter of getting on the same page."

News and notes

UMass continues to have problems in the penalty department. It committed 11 against Holy Cross, resulting in six first downs and 107 total yards. ... The Minutemen lost the time of possession battle in three of the four quarters – including 35:01-24:59 overall and 11:40-3:20 in the first quarter. ... UMass was 2-for-2 on fourth downs and 4-of-5 in the red zone. ... Reserve quarterback Octavious Hawkins lined up at wide receiver for a few plays, catching one ball for 23 yards.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

For complete UMass sports coverage
visit the Collegian Sports Blog at http://masslive.com/dailycollegiansports/

Six Flags NEW ENGLAND
American Red Cross
UMASS Mullins Center
RED CROSS BLOOD DRIVE
September 11, 2008
12PM - 6PM
All presenting donors will receive,
COURTESY OF SIX FLAGS, A ONE DAY PASS TO THE PARK,
while supplies last.
Positive ID required. Call 1-800-GIVE-LIFE to make an appointment.
Walk-ins welcome, but appointments will have priority. Please Help!

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $40,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted. Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund.

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.

Seven O's
Every Wednesday
KARAOKE
* * * * * *
Friday, 9/12/08
Telephone Company
Saturday, 9/13/08
Half & Half

Looking for exposure? Student bands welcome to play at Seven O's

Looking for a place to have a private event/party?
Call 413-530-6996

Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-6766

3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Sat/Sun
Next to Cuffside Apts.

Twice the power.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | | 7 | 5 | | | 4 | 2 | 9 |
| | 2 | | | | | | | |
| | 9 | | | 7 | 8 | | | |
| | | 6 | | 2 | 1 | | | |
| 8 | | | | | | | | 2 |
| | | | 9 | 3 | | 7 | | |
| | | | 7 | 8 | | | 6 | |
| | | | | | | | 9 | |
| 2 | 4 | 8 | | | 9 | 5 | | 7 |

ACROSS
1 Kind of hog or block
5 Coop calls
10 Operatic voice
14 Hybrid fruit
15 Temporary money
16 Make a lasting impression?
17 Dog's bane
18 More chilly
19 Expensive
20 Senses
22 Fill with delight
24 Famed British school
25 Like a zebra
27 School kids
31 Golf period
32 Roller coaster unit
33 Earn
35 Bolsc and Aniou
39 Like the Sahara
41 Tendon
43 Winter coat?
44 Mooning area
46 Made well
48 Mai cocktail
49 Perceive
51 Vilifying
53 Starts business again
57 facto
58 Portable keyboard instrument
60 Bank, as a putt
64 Bivouac beds
65 Bones in forearms
67 Unit of mass, briefly
68 Swiss painter Paul
69 Course taken
70 Eye diaphragm
71 TV units
72 Cromwell's eardom
73 Relaxation

DOWN
1 Use a trump
2 Lecher's look
3 Sheltered
4 Touch-toned?
5 Trident-shaped letter
6 Quirky
7 Actress Gray
8 Boardwalk extensions
9 Jack and his spouse
10 When lots are tucked in 11 Consumed
12 Put to flight
13 Evidence unit?
21 Plum part
23 Type of sch
25 Fifths of five
27 Wound cover
28 Skater Lipinski
29 "Exodus" author
30 Skull cavity
34 Conclude
36 Part of ABM
37 Colorful mount
38 Gulp
40 Arranges
42 Sob
45 do-well
47 Recipe soupcon
50 Last
52 Newbie
53 Magazine displays
54 Pierre's school
55 Two quartets combined
56 Farm outbuildings
59 Fateful burden
61 Former Italian breed
62 Yale grads
63 Apothecary measure
66 Male or female

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

send in your comics
send in your comics
send in your comics

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY SEPTEMBER 10, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Battered UMass hosts Bulldogs

Sophomore Kelsey Anderson and the UMass women's soccer team welcomes Bryant to Rudd Field today for the fourth game of the 2008 season. The Minutewomen (0-1-2) have reached overtime in all three games so far this season, including two double-overtime ties.

Rudy and Co. face unfamiliar opponent in Rudd Field battle

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's soccer team looks to extend Bryant's losing streak today to four in its first season as a Division I team.

UMass (0-1-2) has needed extra time in all of its games this season. The Minutewomen came off their second double-overtime game of the season against New Hampshire in the home opener.

Everything seemed to be going the right way for the Maroon and White with two goals from senior forward Vanessa Patry in the first period.

But the Wildcats came back at the end of the second half with a goal by New Hampshire forward Sara Hourihan, who placed a shot in the lower left side of the net to tie the game at 2-2. At times, both teams came very close to securing the win during both OTs, but couldn't finish on the other end and were forced to settle for a tie.

One of the problems that arose during the game was that the Minutewomen gave UNH multiple free kicks, something that UMass coach Jim Rudy believes its next opponent, Bryant, will take advantage of if given the opportunity.

The Bulldogs (1-3-0) have been in every game they've played, despite having their first and only victory against Northern Colorado in the season opener. Since that game, they have allowed their opponents to score three goals in each of the following losses.

That fact does nothing to ease the nerves of Rudy because of its history against teams similar to Bryant.

"I get scared when I hear teams say '[the Bulldogs are]

See SOCCER on page 9

Injuries catching up to team, forcing inexperience in lineup

BY DAVID BRUNCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the Massachusetts women's soccer team plays the second contest of its three-game homestand today against Bryant, the Minutewomen will be shuffling their lineup due to injuries to key players.

However, some of these injuries might not be as serious as first believed, with some players having the potential to be available later on in the season.

Freshman forward Amanda Carvalho sustained a serious knee injury during the preseason, but had surgery last week and the injury was not as bad as first expected.

"They went in and it wasn't serious, so three doctors had it wrong," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "I talked to her father and he said they were amazed. She could be back in four to six weeks."

With an offensive unit lacking consistency due to season-ending injuries sustained by

See INJURIES on page 9

Accolades rolling in

Coen, Talley honored; UMass climbs in poll

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts football team keeps winning ugly. And they keep getting rewarded for it.

For the second straight week, the Minutemen have climbed up one spot in the Sports Network's Football Championship Subdivision poll. UMass is now the No. 3 team, behind only two-time defending national champions Appalachian State and North Dakota State.

UMass (2-0) started the season at No. 5, before climbing to No. 4 after a season-opening 28-16 win over Albany. The Minutemen – who received one first-place vote this week – moved up again after defeating Holy Cross, 45-42, on a 42-yard field goal as time expired.

UMass Football

While the team continues to move up in the poll, UMass players continue to collect accolades. Linebacker Josh Jennings took an award in Week 1, while quarterback Liam Coen and wide receiver Julian Talley were honored after their performances against the Crusaders.

In a classic quarterback battle with Holy Cross' Dominic Randolph, Coen had one of the best games of his career – throwing for three touchdowns (and running for another) while accumulating 395 yards in the air on 25-for-36 passing. For his efforts, the senior signal caller was named the Sports Network National Player of the Week.

Talley (four receptions, 71 yards) was named Colonial Athletic Association Rookie of the Week. The 6-foot-1 redshirt freshman wide receiver had only one catch for 20 yards in the opener against the Great Danes.

SPECIAL TEAMS FUN

For whatever reason, any and all games involving UMass seem to provide endless suspense on special teams – and last weekend's game was a perfect example.

Sometimes that drama makes UMass coach Don Brown ecstatic. But mostly, it seems to anger him to no end. Last year it was the problem with punting (starter Brett Arnold was benched in the playoffs, and backup quarterback Scott Woodward had to take over). This year, it seems to be the coverage teams.

Against Holy Cross, the Minutemen allowed an 88-yard kickoff return touchdown to Brett McDermott in the second quarter – giving the Crusaders their third lead of the game at 21-14. They also allowed a 32-yard punt return to Josh Jenkins, which help set up a touchdown to extend the lead to 28-14.

"Our special teams play was downright bad, especially in the first half," Brown said. "We played much better in the second half. We still have a long way to go there, but you have to give them credit too. McDermott is an excellent return man and he earned everything he got."

But special teams would ultimately lead to the win for Brown and Co., as senior kicker Armando Cuko – who hasn't attempted a field goal for the Minutemen in almost three years – nailed the 42-

See FOOTBALL on page 9

UMass quarterback Liam Coen talks with a coach during a game earlier this season. The senior was named the Sports Network Player of the Week on the strength of his 395 yards passing and three touchdown passes.

The new quarterback of the New England Patriots:

| | |
|---|---|
| Name: Matt Cassel | Career Stats (four years): |
| Age: 26 | Games: 15 Starts: 0 |
| Height: 6-foot-4 | Completions: 35 |
| Weight: 230-pounds | Attempts: 57 |
| College: USC | Completion %: 61.4 |
| Drafted: 7th round | Yards: 405 |
| | TD: 3 INT: 2 |

The old quarterback of the New England Patriots:

| | |
|---|---|
| Name: Tom Brady | Career Stats (nine years): |
| Age: 31 | Games: 113 Starts: 111 |
| Height: 6-foot-4 | Completions: 2,301 |
| Weight: 225-pounds | Attempts: 3,653 |
| College: Michigan | Completion %: 63.0 |
| Drafted: 6th round | Yards: 26,446 |
| | TD: 197 INT: 86 |

No Brady, no problem?

Eli Rosenswaike

For 56 straight weeks, Tom Brady was listed on the injury report for no reason whatsoever.

Now there's a reason.

Every week for over three years, New England Patriots coach Bill Belichick listed his star quarterback as "questionable" or "probable" to play, despite the fact that everyone knew he was perfectly fine and was 100 percent going to play. Why does he do such a thing? Well, he's Bill Belichick. That's why.

Could it be any more fitting, that the one week Brady isn't listed on the injury report is the one week he actually gets hurt? Was it justice? To the Patriots organization, I say yes, to Brady, no.

This is an organization that will do anything to get ahead. Cheat. Film other teams illegally. Cheat. Practice with players that aren't allowed. Cheat. Who knows what else? The guess here is that NFL commissioner Roger Goodell was sick of Belichick's antics with the injury report, and told him the shenanigans with Brady being falsely listed were to end immediately.

And now Brady's season has ended immediately – just minutes into the 2008 season. And it seems like Pats fans everywhere assume that their season is essentially over.

It's not.

They still have one of the best coaches – if not the best – in the NFL, cheater or not. They still have the best receiver in football. Wes Welker isn't bad, either. They have a good running back and tight end, and have a great young offensive coordinator and play caller (Josh McDaniels) to make sure the offense is productive.

Brady didn't play defense, so that side of the football should be as good as usual. Sure, without Brady the offense presumably won't be on the field as much, but the defense can handle picking up the slack for Matt Cassel and Co.

Speaking of Cassel…I would worry a bit if I were a New England fan. The guy hasn't started a game since high school. Not the pros. Not college. High school. I kid you not. How do the New England Patriots let this happen?

What is the most important position in pro football? It's the starting quarterback. What is the second most important position in football? It's the backup quarterback. And for some unworldly reason, Belichick and the ownership didn't think they needed one.

And don't give me this whole, "Tom Brady was a sixth-round pick, so Cassel (7th round) could be great too" garbage. He isn't great. And if he was, how would anyone even know? Up until this past weekend, the guy hasn't played a meaningful down in his entire life if you really think about it.

But like I said, New England's season is far from over. There

See ROSENSWAIKE on page 9

INSIDE: MINUTEMEN TRAVEL TO JAMES MADISON | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 73 LO: 51 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2008

Family housing trouble at UMass

University threatens to evict tenants with unpaid bills

BY ALYSSA CREAMER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When Ricardo Gomez lived in Colombia, the University of Massachusetts guaranteed him entrance into a great program for international education – but UMass never guaranteed Gomez housing.

For the past three years, Gomez, an international student and the head of the UMass Tenant's Association, has resided in the North Village family housing apartments with his wife Zulma, and his two daughters.

He and several others now face a daunting countdown to Sept. 30 – the date University Housing will evict residents who refuse to sign the North Village and Lincoln Apartments' new lease, which most significantly, includes a six percent increase in rent.

Originally, 93 of the 217 residents in North Village voluntarily converted their status as "tenants" to "tenants-at-will." These residents decided to continue paying the previous lease's monthly rent, ignoring the University's increased rent demand.

"Many people are scared because the tone of the [eviction] notice seemed threatening," said Gomez. "The administration is somehow making people believe that we are not paying the rent. And this is not the case, we are paying the rent, but we are paying the old rent. We have decided not to sign the new lease and not to pay the increase, but people are paying their rent."

The threat of eviction now faces what University spokesperson Ed Blaguszewski believes to be a "dwindling" number of individuals, now around 49. "We are getting more people to sign the lease," said Blaguszewski.

Though the number of people resisting the new lease may be shrinking, Gomez insists residents' financial concerns are not subsiding. With the increase, a two-bedroom apartment that formerly cost $704 each month now costs $746.

Ninety-five percent of those who reside in North Village are international students, and many of them are confined between visa regulations stating they cannot hold jobs outside UMass and University regulations stating they cannot work over 20 hours as students. Additionally, the international spouses of these students are not allowed to study at the University or get a job in the United States due to visa regulations, according to Gomez.

Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) Vice President Tim Sutton stated that "the rent increase alone must be covered with half of these students' salaries."

"The administration may say that it's only a small increase, yet, they don't realize that the rent is not the only expense students have on a limited income. The costs of telecommunications rose between 6 and 10 percent, parking fees increased from $80 to $96 and then there is the cost of food and medical insurance for their families. A lot of people just don't know how they can do it," said Gomez.

Blaguszewski said the University administration "very much wants this [housing issue] to work out for everybody."

This past May, the UMass Tenant's Association was told by the administration that energy costs increased, and therefore, family housing rent which includes utilities needed to also increase.

"When we started this protest against the rent increase we told the [interim vice] chancellor

See HOUSING on page 2

One of the family housing units off-campus where rent was raised earlier this year. The University may be forced to evict tenants in North Village and Lincoln Apartments at the end of the month.

Coalition for voter turnout

BY SARAH GIBBONS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Representatives from several campus groups joined together Tuesday to start planning how to raise the level of student voter registration as the 2008 presidential election draws near.

The group, called "The Voter Registration Coalition" consists of representatives from the SGA, UMass Democrats, Civic Initiative, MassPIRG and the Women of Color Leadership Network. Various other student organizations such as the UMass Republican Club and Greek Affairs have also conveyed an interest in an involvement in the coalition.

Each representative held clear ideas at their first meeting about how they were going to accomplish their goal and why it was important for this upcoming election in particular.

Jon Chase, Internal Affairs Coordinator for MassPIRG said voting is "the basic block of democracy," while Katy Perry, MassPIRG Campus Organizer shared a story of her Polish immigrant grandmother, who values the right to vote so much, she claims that she will make it to the polls for the rest of her life. president of the UMass Democrats, Emma Einhorn, said that in this election there is "a definite possibility that we can affect the outcome."

While each organization has resources and plans of their own, Shane Coleman, SGA Secretary of External Affairs, made the point that each group has, "different strengths, all useful," but emphasized that if they combined their strengths, they could yield much greater results.

This unity will be necessary to reach their goal of registering 9,000 voters before the general election voter registration deadline for Massachusetts – Oct. 15. The UMass Dems have already gained on that goal with the 200 students they have registered so far.

Several key strategies were discussed, each aimed at reaching a variety of students. The UMass Dems constructed 300 bulletin board kits to be distributed to resident assistants on campus designed to inform students how and when they can register to vote.

Other dorm-oriented strategies were examined such as "dorm storms," in which volunteers go door-to-door supplying residents with information and answering any questions they might have.

Floor events, involving games such as "Jeopardy" are aimed at providing an education of voter registration in a non-invasive, easy access manner. Setting up tables in the Campus Center and hitting classrooms, from large to small, are also on the agenda.

In addition to preparing information about registering and providing the forms to do so, the coalition aspires to maximize voter turnout. They plan to utilize the contact list of voters they have registered to offer e-mail and even text message reminders for Election Day.

However, failure to remember isn't the only obstacle in getting students to vote. Lack of transportation to polling stations is often a much larger impediment for on campus students to get around. The SGA will again provide vans to three different polling locations in Amherst for the six different residential areas. Last year two vans were rented, this year SGA president Malcolm Chu hopes to raise that number to three or four to accommodate the greater projected turnout.

While voter registration and turnout are the principal concerns of the coalition, many members, including Chu hope students will vote with an eye toward higher education. Wearing a T-shirt, emblazoned with a bold "Education is a Right," Chu cited that while "accessibility has decreased, the price of education has gone up exponentially in the last 10 years. 1996 was the last fee freeze that UMass students have seen."

He strongly believes it is necessary for students to vote and to develop their own legislation in order to affect the educational standards applied to them.

Students can obtain information online by e-mailing votecoalition2008@gmail.com or visiting the Facebook group, UMASSVotes.

Sarah Gibbons can be reached at sgibbon@student.umass.edu

UMass remembers September 11th

The UMass Republican Club set up hundreds of flags on the Student Union lawn Wednesday in commemoration of the attacks on the World Trade Center this day seven years ago.

Not forgotten

9/11 Fund director to speak

BY LISA DEBENEDICTIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Today marks the seventh anniversary of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. In remembrance, the University of Massachusetts will ring the campus' chapel bells four times this morning and will also host a lecture in the evening.

Alumnus Kenneth R. Feinberg will deliver the lecture entitled, "The September 11th Victim Compensation Fund: Private Pain and Public Compensation". It will take place at 4:30 p.m. in the Bernie Dallas room of Goodell Hall and is free and open to the public.

Feinberg, who received his law degree from New York University School of Law after graduating from UMass in 1967, directed the $7 billion fund that was enacted by Congress to aid the Sept. 11 victims' families.

"I think the key elements here are that we have a person of Mr. Feinberg's stature, who was so involved in assisting the victim's families in the terrible aftermath of Sept. 11," said Ed Blaguszewski, Director of UMass News and Information.

Feinberg's speech will discuss the circumstances surrounding the creation of the fund, its successes and the possibility of its use in the future. The focus of the speech will aim to question what the government's role should ultimately be should tragedy strike again.

This keynote speech commences the 2008-2009 Feinberg Family Distinguished lecture series, "Measuring the Value of Human Life", which is hosted by the UMass history department.

"It is part of a whole series that is going to look at measuring the value of human life, so over the course of this year, you will see the other topics and speakers," Blaguszewski said.

Many UMass students are looking forward to Feinberg's presence on campus, and find the topics to be discussed in his lecture both timely and intriguing.

"It is a good idea that [Feinberg] is coming. I think it is really commendable that he helped to provide relief for families who lost loved ones," said UMass sophomore and architecture major Chase Montecalvo.

"It will be interesting," added UMass sophomore and English major Lake Walsh. "I believe the government shouldn't take control of disaster relief, because each time the government takes control, it takes control away from the population. Social power is much more effective when the government takes less responsibility."

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebenedictis@dailycollegian.com.

Alumnus Kenneth R. Feinberg will speak today about his involvement with the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE EIGHT

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Mehosi
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COMICS EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Garber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenwaike
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mulholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kocsware
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Waxman
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cernak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SPECIAL IN 1903, THE MASS COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE BAY STATE COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN ONLINE SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL MEMBERS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITORS
Michael King

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michael Sarkes, Michelle Abbasciano

World's largest atom smasher online

By William Booth
The Washington Post

MEYRIN, Switzerland – It is the biggest machine ever built. Everyone says it looks like a movie set for a corny James Bond villain. They are correct. The machine is attended by brainiacs wearing hard hats and running around on catwalks. They are looking for the answer to the question: Where does everything in the universe come from? Price tag: $8 billion plus.

The world's largest particle accelerator is buried deep in the earth beneath herds of placid dairy cows grazing on the Swiss-French border. The thing has been under construction for years, like the pyramids. Its centerpiece is a circular 17-mile tunnel that contains a pipe swaddled in 'supermagnets' refrigerated to crazy-low-temperatures, colder than deep space.

The idea is to set two beams of protons traveling in opposite directions around the tunnel, redlining at the speed of light, generating wicked energy that will mimic the cataclysmic conditions at the beginning of time, then smashing into each other in a furious re-creation of the Big Bang – this time recorded by giant digital cameras.

On Wednesday, they fired this sucker up.

It will be months before the proton beams reach full power and produce the kinds of exotic collisions that may herald an age of "new physics." But if the machine works – this most ambitious, expensive, technologically advanced civilian scientific experiment in history – it would be a happening for humanity.

"I think we may have to rewrite our textbooks," said Fabiola Gianotti, a project leader for ATLAS, one of the four huge detectors that will record and analyze the collisions. "There must be something more than we have seen. There is something missing from the puzzle."

The Large Hadron Collider, as it is called by the 8,000 scientists, engineers and technicians from 85 countries who done on it, will probe the most fundamental mysteries. From the fireballs, there might spring forth black holes and the elusive thing that gives matter its mass. Or not. There might be particles called "strangelets" and evidence of "dark matter" and signs of "supersymmetry" and maybe a little antimatter.

Oh, and they might find some extra dimensions. But this is the delicious part. They. Don't. Exactly. Know.

That accounts for the last-minute legal challenges by opponents who worry that the Large Hadron Collider – hadrons, by the way, are collections of quarks, which are the particles inside protons and neutrons, which form the nucleus of the atom – might spark a chain reaction of runaway events that could destroy the planet.

Their greatest concern is that the black holes, the stuff of a hundred "Star Trek" subplots, could grow and suck, grow and suck, which is what black holes do. A retired radiation safety expert in Hawaii sought a restraining order in a U.S. court but was denied. Another group filed its doomsday appeal with the European Court of Human Rights, which also declined to act.

To calm public anxiety, the proton smashers investigated safety concerns and said any black holes "would be entirely benign" and would decay almost instantly. They would be "mini black holes," just like the ones that occur (the theorists say) whenever a couple of cosmic rays collide in space. Nature has already conducted experiments just like this, the report concludes, "and the planet still exists."

So make your plans accordingly.

The Large Hadron Collider was built by the European Organization for Nuclear Research, known as CERN, which on the surface looks like a slightly down-at-the-heels state college in the middle of a cow pasture in the dull suburbs of Geneva. CERN, however, is now the mecca for international physics, where the streets are named for Einstein, Newton and Curie. It is the place where they invented the World Wide Web. The cafeteria also serves wine with lunch.

To see what the excitement is about, you have to put on a hard hat and get into one of the elevator shafts and travel 300 feet below the Earth's surface to the tunnel, which was possible earlier this summer, before they closed the doors.

You drop into towering caverns lined with thick slabs of concrete that hold the detectors. The detectors look like building-size barrels, honeycombed with wafers of silicon and doughnut-shaped magnets. They are crawling, Medusa-like, with blue, red, green cables, like arteries and veins. They look muscular, beautiful, alive.

The tunnel itself is like a subterranean racetrack. Protons stripped from hydrogen atoms will be accelerated to high energies and whizzed around and around the tunnel, through an ordinary-looking blue pipe, which is not ordinary at all but quite extraordinary – because it is coiled with thousands of superconducting magnets, which bend the proton beam so it can travel in circles. The magnets are superconducting because they are supercooled by superfluid helium, which is superstrange.

"A completely novel engineering material," is how Lyn Evans, the project manager of the collider, describes supercold helium. "For example, if you were to put it into a beaker? It could crawl out."

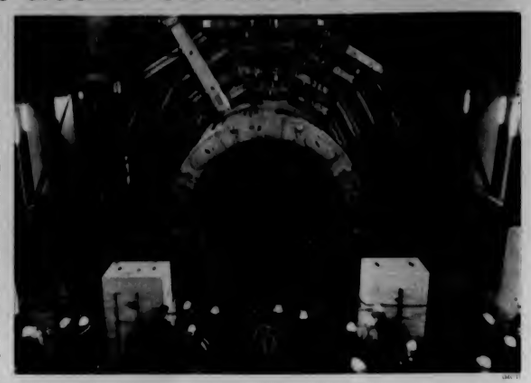
This is how they talk at CERN.

If you stop them, and say, "What do you mean, crawl out?" they might go to a blackboard and begin with the math. You do not want them to do this.

These protons whizzing through the pipe and around the track? They travel in bunches. These bunches are inches long and half the width of a human hair. Each bunch contains 100 billion protons, give or take a few. Each beam carries about 3,000 bunches. They travel at 99.9999991 percent the speed of light. So they are able to complete 11,245 laps a second. In 10 hours of operation, the beam could travel to Neptune and back.

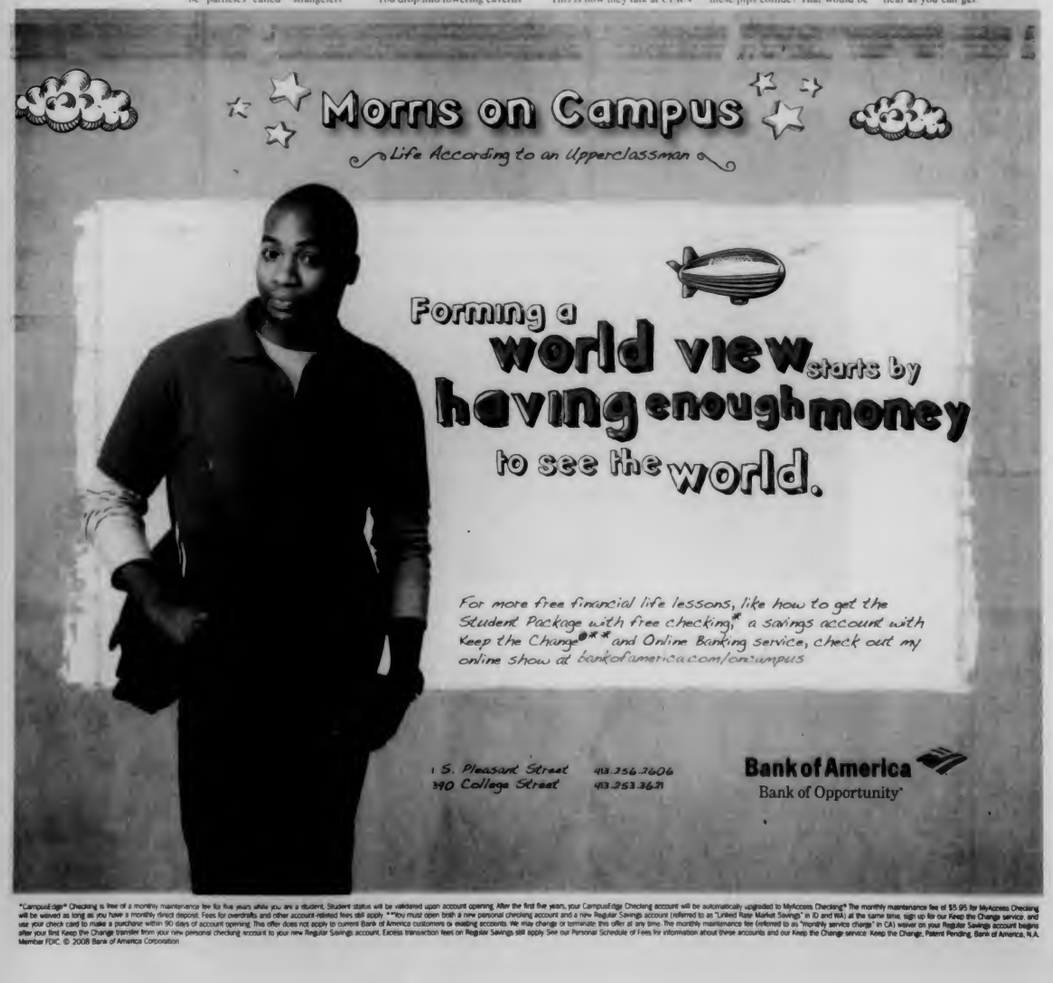
At four major intersections along the way, the parallel beams will cross one another and collide. The crash sites are the business end of the machine. That is where they put the detectors.

"Think of oranges," Evans said. "You collide two oranges together, you get a lot of pulp. We're not so interested in the pulp. What we want to do is see what happens when the pips – the seeds – hit each other."



And how many times will these pips collide? That would be 600 million collisions a second. The good head-on-smashup will erupt into a cloud of scattering particles, and the detectors (and their computers) will attempt to record the trajectories, energies, speeds, decays.

That's a lot of data to record.



"Quite," Evans said.

In one of the very useful cartoon books produced by the CERN public relations staff, an illustration shows a stack of 3 million CDs that is equal to the data flow from a year's worth of collider experiments. It is 12 miles tall. But the general idea is this: "Humans have always asked, 'Where do we come from?'" Cousins said. "And this is the way that physicists ask that question."

The Large Hadron Collider will not operate at full intensity for a year, and so many variables could hold up its work. But the physicists at CERN have reached a milestone. Now that the machine has been turned on, Cousins said, "the trick for us is to be as full of wonder as we can be – and simultaneously as skeptical as you can get."

One of the 13,000 ton particle detectors at the world's largest atom smasher, the Large Hadron Collider, now operational at CERN labs in Switzerland.

CampusEdge® Checking is free of a monthly maintenance fee for five years while you are a student. Student status will be validated upon account opening. After the first five years, your CampusEdge Checking account will be automatically upgraded to MyAccess Checking. The monthly maintenance fee of $5.95 for MyAccess Checking will be waived as long as you have a monthly direct deposit. Fees for overdrafts and other account-related fees still apply. You must open both a new personal checking account and a new Regular Savings account (referred to as "Linked Rate Market Savings" in ID and WA) at the same time, sign up for our Keep the Change service, and use your check card to make a purchase within 90 days of account opening. This offer does not apply to current Bank of America customers or existing accounts. We may change or terminate this offer at any time. The monthly maintenance fee (referred to as "monthly service charge" in CA) waiver on your Regular Savings account begins after your first Keep the Change transfer from your new personal checking account to your new Regular Savings account. Excess transaction fees on Regular Savings still apply. See our Personal Schedule of Fees for information about these accounts and our Keep the Change service. Keep the Change, Patent Pending. Bank of America, N.A. Member FDIC. © 2008 Bank of America Corporation

"Last resort" says University

HOUSING from page 1

[of student affairs] Esther Terry that we wanted to meet and talk about how residents could save energy. However, the last renovation of the apartments was 24 years ago, so its possible people were not being wasteful as the administration implied, but that the houses are old and not [energy-efficient]," said Gomez. "We said, 'Let's start an educational campaign to educate people about how to save energy.' They said no that's not necessary because everyone has their own thermostat. So they trivialized our problem."

"Eviction is a last resort. We are not trivializing the residents' arguments," said Blaguszewski. "We understand that the rental increase is something [residents] will have to find money for, and we recognize it will be difficult."

Blaguszewski added that UMass is attempting to accommodate those in financial hardship by offering payment plans for the rent increase and explained that this is the first rent increase for family housing in four years. These plans were not specified by the University.

Sutton believes the University is considering eviction a last resort, however.

"In the past, occasionally people have fallen behind in their rent," said Sutton. "Tenants are not legally allowed to sign a new lease until they are all paid up. There has never been a threat of eviction this soon. People are usually given at least until October to pay off their debt, and sign the new lease."

Prior to this year, many family housing residents were eligible for approximately $800 in fuel assistance. However, the state no longer recognizes the North Village and Lincoln apartments as different living situations from UMass' campus dorms.

"We are not University dorms. We are University apartments," said Gomez. "We have to sign a lease that is separate from fees and tuition costs, and we're not paying room and board, which comes with telecommunications included. We pay rent."

According to Gomez, the University told the Tenant's Association they would write a letter stating "family housing is not the same as University housing," but the Tenant's Association is unclear if a letter was sent to the state benefactors.

Blaguszewski said UMass is willing to reprieve the rent increase for those who recently lost fuel assistance.

"We responded to the tenant's fuel assistance problem," Blaguszewski said. "This sort of accommodation shows the University's good faith."

Sutton claims the reprieve offer is a public relations move by the administration "to make it seem like they are doing something when they really are not, because only a handful of people actually knew about the fuel assistance program."

Gomez speculated that the University does not focus on its graduate students as much as its undergraduate students. He feels that expenses such as the construction of a $50 million recreation center are being developed to attract undergraduate students, and Gomez does not agree that large investments like that should be built when UMass's child care does not have enough money to keep students' children off a two-year long waiting list.

The UMass Tenant's Association is trying to get the administration to speak with them about the tenants' options. Until then, Gomez hopes no one will be evicted, but believes this issue might be left to a court judge's decision.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

American Sudanese 'Lost Boy' fulfils dream

An Olympian after 17 years

By Daniel Bortz
Daily Orange (Syracuse)

SYRACUSE, N.Y. – Lopez Lomong walked five miles to watch the Summer Olympics on a black-and-white television in 2000. Eight years later, the Sudan native carried the American flag at this summer's opening ceremonies in Beijing.

It was a 17-year endeavor for him to reach the Games.

The Olympic runner and Sudanese Lost Boy made a trip to Syracuse last week to meet with members of the John Dau Sudanese Foundation. Dau, a SU policy studies student, founded the organization in an effort to bring awareness to Sudanese health care issues and garner support for the construction of health care clinics in Southern Sudan. The non-profit works to improve doctoral expertise, health facilities and medical supplies in the area.

At age 6, Lomong was abducted from a Catholic Mass and assumed dead by his family. Taken into captivity, he managed to escape and fled to a refugee camp near Nairobi, Kenya. At the refugee camp is where he met Dau, another Lost Boy of Sudan. A decade later, Catholic Charities moved Lomong to New York, where Robert and Barbara Rogers of Onondaga County took him in.

Chris Royce, the fundraising chair for the JDSF, learned of Lomong's connection to Dau through his friend Mike Riehard, whose father owned a farm where Lomong worked when he was younger.

Seeing each other last week for the first time in years, Dau and Lomong exchanged ideas on how to improve Sudanese health care. Dau shared his vision for the JDSF with Lomong. The foundation has already built the Duk County Clinic near Dau's home village in May 2007, Royce said.

"Lopez is in a tremendous position to bring attention to resources for the cause," Royce said. "They would be a very good match because it wouldn't be feasible for Lopez to start his own foundation right now, considering he's getting paid by night to travel the world."

Lomong's story goes beyond the concept of the "American dream" something he feels he's fulfilled. As one of the Lost Boys of Sudan, his connection with more than 27,000 others who were displaced like him or orphaned, prompted the 23-year-old track and field athlete to pledge his support for the John Dau Sudan Foundation.

Royce added that Lomong is just the starting point for a number of the JDSF projects that are in the works, including a major national recording artist potentially going on tour to raise money for the foundation.

Though Dau feels the foundation is off to a good start, he said in no sense has it accomplished what he and the other volunteers set out to do. The organization plans to fund the construction of more health care clinics in southern Sudan.

"To be able to expand to other areas, we can use Lomong's help," Dau said. "For example, we can help his home village. They have nothing at all. They're a small tribe, but they don't even have a single clinic."

Now an Olympic athlete, Lomong said he feels it's his responsibility to spread awareness about the Second Sudanese Civil War (1983-2003) because an estimated 1.9 million civilians were killed.

Recounting his time at the refugee camp Kakuma in Kenya, Lomong said even finding food and water proved extremely difficult.

"In a refugee camp, you don't know where you'll be getting a meal or where you're going to find medical supplies for when you get sick," he said. "It's tough. It's tough for me to go into detail of what it was like."

Despite the hardship of reliving such pain, Lomong said that when he was in Sudan, he felt at home because he was with his family.

"I was with my parents; I was with my mom," he said. "And I was so happy, but at the same time, there was a war going on."

Now that the war has ended, he and Dau said they believe the most important part of Sudan that needs to be revitalized is the area of basic health care. The JDSF is building clinics in order to treat diseases such as malaria, rag worm and malnutrition, and to help take care of expectant mothers with prenatal and postnatal care.

New energy source for Utah shuttle

Vegetable oil fuel of choice

By Isabella Bravo
Daily Utah Chronicle (U. Utah)

SALT LAKE CITY – One of the 28 campus shuttles now runs on waste vegetable oil.

Jake Green, manager for campus transportation, decided to convert a campus shuttle that previously ran on diesel fuel to an environmentally friendly alternative.

"This is one project that we're very excited about," said Alma Allred, Director of Commuter Services. "One of our shuttles now runs on the waste vegetable oil oil from restaurants."

Biodiesel was already used on campus when Green decided to make the WVO conversion. "This system is slightly different than biodiesel. Our vehicles run on a mixture that has 20 percent biodiesel," he said.

"There is no processing procedure for vegetable oil, but with biodiesel you have byproducts and we didn't know what we would do with them."

The WVO conversion recycles the used vegetable oil from restaurants and eateries on campus, filters the oil and injects it into the engine as a complete substitute for diesel.

The WVO conversions overhaul the fuel tank system of diesel vehicles, because the consistency of diesel fuel is comparable to hot vegetable oil. The engine starts everyday running on diesel oil to heat the WVO.

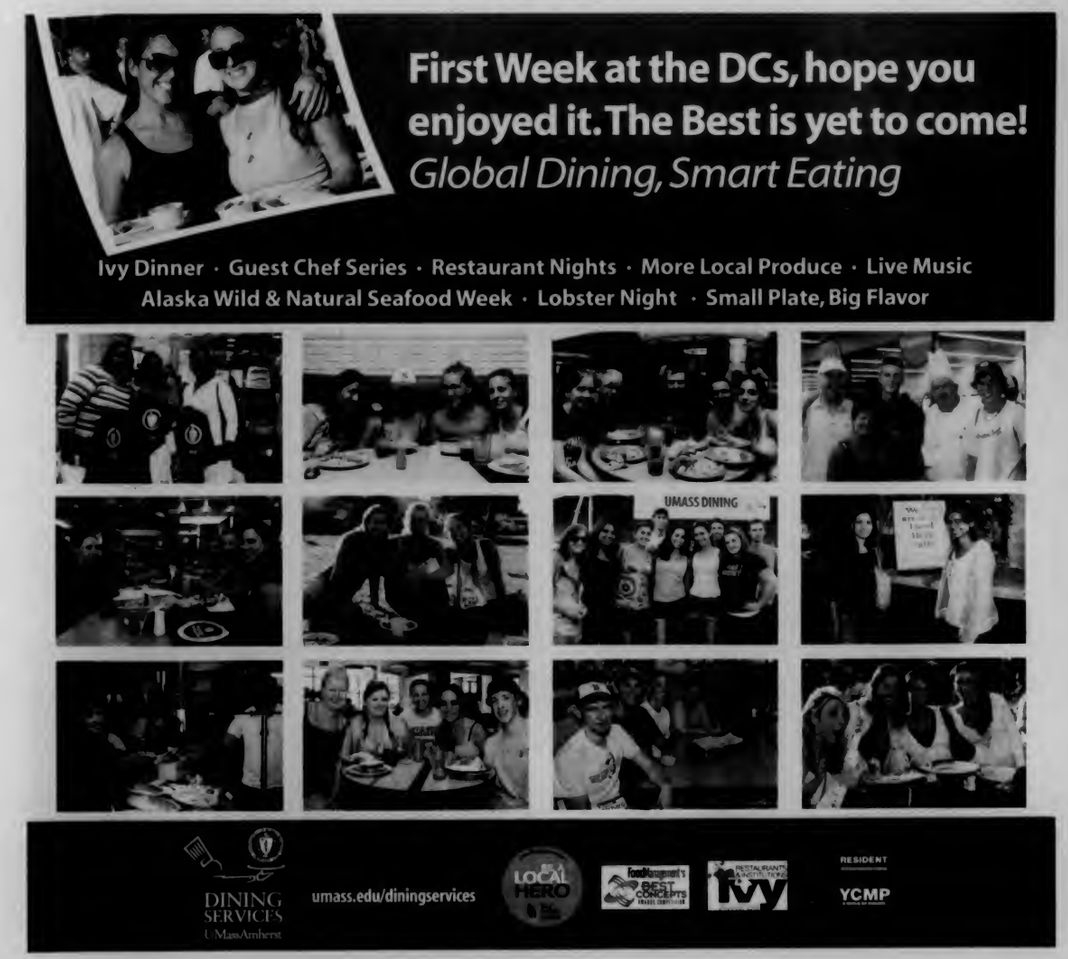
"Congealed vegetable oil can clog the fuel injection system," Green said. "It's important that you don't flip that switch to change from diesel to vegetable oil too soon." Hydrogenated oils and animal fats also make the oil thicker and harder to heat to the right temperature and consistency.

The shuttle travels 30 miles per day on the route from the Heritage Center to the Union, the same number of miles as the average student's commute. It uses about five gallons of WVO per day.

Although the level of carbon pumped into the air is about the same, the conversion severely reduces the amount of deadly gases emitted by gasoline and diesel fuel vehicles.

The U does not have any plans to convert another shuttle in the future.

"We have a limited source of vegetable oil on campus," Green said.



But the U was not the first in Salt Lake to take on this conversion technology.

Etta Crowley, a Salt Lake resident who converted her 1984 Chevy van in 2006, says the conversion for her vehicle cost only $800, two months of research and two weeks of maintenance. "I didn't have any experience working on cars. I think two months including research and two weeks hands on. It's totally possible to do it in less than that. I've heard it can take a couple of hours, if you have car experience," she said.

Over the course of the 10,000 miles she has traveled since the conversion, she says the differences in the van before and after the conversion are minimal. "I barely notice a power loss, sometimes when I'm going uphill," Crowley said.

The L conversion cost $3,100 for a new fuel system and a conversion company based in Logan, Golden Fuel Systems, was hired to help with project.

Although home conversions are cheaper than the L's project, Green says money is not the point. "We save money, probably not a ton. It's less about the money saving and more about the environment. Money wasn't the motivating factor."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2008

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Never forget

Brad DeFlumeri

The attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, brought instantaneous and profound horror to our nation. After two planes crashed into the twin towers of New York's World Trade Center, it became manifestly clear that our nation was under attack; indeed it had already been successfully attacked.

Less certain, though, was whether we would be faced with more hijackings; more nightmarish acts of brutality. When President Bush took to the airwaves to address the nation at 8:35 p.m. on that Tuesday night, many Americans harbored strong emotions about the unprecedented events that were being replayed on television screens all across the country.

Still more Americans struggled to make sense of how such tragedy could have overwhelmed the nation so suddenly, and so unpredictably.

For countless days and weeks following the 9/11 attacks, a surge of patriotism – forceful, meaningful and resilient – swept through our nation.

I was 16 years old at the time and can remember listening to President Bush address the nation from the National Cathedral three days after the attacks.

His speech was ushered in by the Navy Band's playing of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." President Bush's words that day were deeply moving and nothing short of sensational.

He called on America to respond to the tragedy as a great nation should, and must. He ensured Americans that we were strong enough to prevail in whatever tasks stood before us and resilient enough to dig deep within ourselves and unite around our flag in a time of national crisis.

That same night I remember vividly the omnipresent display of American flags on every street corner. Time seemed to stand still, if only for a few moments, while the unique people of a great nation got viscerally close to the profound notion of what it means to be an American.

Watching those events unfold turned a punk 16-year-old into a patriot.

Americans from all over the country hadn't been directly impacted by the attacks in Washington D.C., New York and Pennsylvania, yet they felt a deep connection to their fellow Americans and to a nation that had given them so much and asked for so little in return.

America had been shaken to its core in an unexpected and unfathomable act of murder and evil. Americans in a moment of true clarity responded by pronouncing their love for country and their resolve in the face of challenge and danger.

Selfishness and politics seemed to be absent from our television screens as an outpouring of support for the victims of 9/11 and respect for the heroic first responders were absorbed into the national consciousness.

Without a doubt, it was an incredible time to be American – one that most of us will never forget. The events of that week propelled me into military service and inspired in me an unquenchable and unwavering love for the United States – a love affair which intensifies every day.

Those hellish events, during which thousands of brave and innocent Americans lost their lives in the routine course of their day, and in some cases the heroic performance of their duties, revealed to me that a nation as great as ours ought to have men and women willing to fight and die for it. Watching those events unfold turned a punk 16-year-old into a patriot.

Through its freedom-upholding and liberty-enshrining institutions, this nation every day grants the gift of opportunity and the protections of its breathtaking Constitution to millions of people.

Many of us take the blessings of living in this country for granted. 9/11 threatened to take away the peace and freedom that so many Americans hold dear, and that is why the response from ordinary Americans expressed an extraordinary love for and loyalty to this country.

History will remember the outburst of unfettered patriotism after 9/11 as yet another beautiful chapter in the storybook of this great nation's narrative of freedom and human progress. It's a narrative so unique that millions of immigrants flee their own countries to live in ours every year.

President Bush has come to be known politically for things other than his magnificent response to a national crisis seven years ago, but history ought to view his superb leadership in that hour separate from anything else he did.

In a time of fear and shock, our country needed an individual to step forward and reassure us that America would still stand strong as the shining beacon of liberty that it has always been. President Bush – though we may not remember it now – emerged as that person and calmed a shaken nation.

Today, the nation marks the seventh anniversary of 9/11 in the height of a presidential election season. Economic woes plague many Americans. Two wars in the Middle East have come to chiefly characterize the Bush administration. The patriotic fervor produced by 9/11, once so palpable, is now but a distant memory.

Nevertheless, we must remember this week both the terror and the bravery that we witnessed seven years ago. All of those who were lost on that fateful day and a nation that has enriched us all with boundless opportunity obligate us to never forget. God Bless America.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

Empty hopes for change

John Glaser

Barack Obama is right; a John McCain presidency certainly would be an unresponsive continuation of what has come to be called Bush Foreign Policy. What he's not telling you is that so would his.

It takes but a modest broadening of this categorical foreign policy approach to realize that it is the vision and byproduct of not a single administration or a single party or a single political persuasion currently prominent in contemporary America's political landscape, but rather of the predictably unchanging, outmoded nature of the post-Cold War foreign policy of the United States.

Every administration's policy since FDR has been bred of the same ilk, as has George W. Bush's and as would McCain's or Obama's. We have been mired in the residual arrogance of Cold War strategy and the appeasement of the governing elite's insatiable eagerness to have the United States intervene abroad in all places and times, whether militarily, diplomatically or humanitarianly.

Our misconduct has not been contained in these past eight years, or in Iraq, Afghanistan, Vietnam, Korea or through other notable disappointments. It is an established, widespread institutional defect in our foreign policy that will not change once George is discharged or once Obama brings us all the change we can believe in.

Obama claims he would have a different approach to fighting al-Qaida and improving America's standing in the world, but he won't touch one of the most fundamental contributors to anti-Americanism abroad.

Providing various repressive regimes throughout the Middle East and Central Asia with a reliable and excessive annual dose of political, economic and military support is one of the driving forces behind why a March 2008 University of Maryland/Zogby International poll of public attitudes in Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Morocco and the United Arab Emirates found that 83 percent of those surveyed had an unfavorable view of the U. S. The same poll found that most of that is due to our foreign policy (80 percent) rather than on American values (12 percent).

Throwing our money around to autocrats with atrocious records of human rights violations, thereby subsidizing their brutal grip on power, at least had a sliver of justification during the Cold War; pushing back the Iron Curtain as far as we could. But now it has become an absurd residual leftover that is destroying our moral repute (or what's left of it) and threatening our national security.

Thanks to the political establishment, of which Barack Obama is a devoted member, we have become, among other things, the United States of Dictator Enablers.

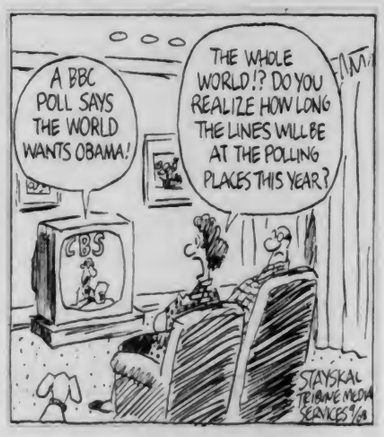
Our government gives over $2 billion annually to Egypt's Mubarak alone. Since 9/11, we've provided Pakistan's Pervez Musharraf – who recently resigned – with nearly unconditional economic aid to the amount of roughly $10 billion (while he provided safe havens for the Taliban and al-Qaida and funded their operations through his secret service).

Hundreds of millions of dollars go to the regimes in Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Qatar, United Arab Emirates, Oman, Turkey, Morocco and Yemen, all with similar horror stories of big money going to bad places. This is leaving out our incredible financial commitments in Iraq and Afghanistan, to say nothing of the human sacrifice expended there.

Thanks to the political establishment – of which Barack Obama is a devoted member – we have become among other things, the United States of Dictator Enablers, so far as the Middle East is concerned. And no wonder the perception of America is so low in the region.

Coupled with our support for tyranny and our impediment of liberalization for millions of Muslims throughout the world is the compulsion to erect military bases in nearly every corner of the planet.

Not only is this a contributing factor to the perception around the world of our martial arrogance, but it further weakens America's eminence by stretching us too thin and forcing us to struggle for the mere maintenance of our elaborate empire.



This dangerous and damning set of policies is one among many others, that is cemented into our system of hegemonic dominance and financial and military frivolousness.

It remains almost entirely constant regardless of which party is in control. Not only is it inescapably setting firmly in place the doom and defeat of America's standing in international affairs, but it is doing so at the risk of innocent lives abroad as well as the safety of the blissfully ignorant American public.

The aforementioned description of our government's foreign policy is based on fact, not ideology. Until a majority of Americans are enlightened of these facts, accept the undeniable verity that both parties have become destructive of our ends – and abandon the political establishment – we will forever be subjected to such imperial hubris until our downfall is a foreseeable inevitability.

Whoever told you change is coming once someone new walks into the Oval Office, lied to you.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jwglaser@student.umass.edu

Reforming the Amethyst Initiative

Seyi Obasa

The Amethyst Initiative, a movement sweeping college campuses throughout the nation has placed the current drinking age issue under the spotlight. College presidents from over 100 different universities, including UMass, have recently urged lawmakers to at least reconsider the current drinking age.

Many believe the current drinking age has been doing more harm than good ever since it was instituted. College presidents currently want to see that this issue at least gets reviewed and debated amongst lawmakers and other prominent figures.

If individuals under 21 are considered old enough to vote, sign legal documents, be drafted into the military and drive (which most individuals have been legally able to do since 16), then they should very well be granted the privilege to drink at this age.

The general public, as well as many university students, are divided at both ends of the spectrum on this particular issue. Powerful interest groups such as MADD (Mother's Against Drunk Driving) believe that lowering the drinking age will only cause and lead to more fatal car crashes.

This may be true if this new initiative is not properly instituted.

Part of the reason why binge drinking and other alcohol related fatalities have been such a major problem is the fact that drinking and alcohol are taboo subjects and considered off limits to individuals under the drinking age.

Many young adults go into college naive and unknowledgeable of their own personal limits, and as a result cause themselves serious injuries and in the most extreme cases, death.

There are 500,000 alcohol-related injuries, and as many as 1,700 alcohol-related deaths amongst full-time students between the ages of 18 and 23.

If young adults were exposed to alcohol at a younger age, parents as well as college faculty would legally be able to intervene and suggest ways that young adults can safely learn their limits.

Because the drinking age is 21, it's more difficult to prevent binge drinking. Oftentimes, such problems begin before the age of 21, and therefore cannot be legally discussed.

In order to safely implement this initiative, four major propositions should be either considered or enacted before the transition can successfully be made.

Many believe the current drinking age has been doing more harm than good ever since it was instituted.

Congress should repeal the National Minimum Drinking Age Act, which called for states to increase the drinking age to 21 in 1984. If this law were repealed, states governments known for being laboratories of democracy would have the opportunity to experiment with the drinking age in their state. They could work out measures that effectively reduce binge drinking and drunk driving.

Such actions would allow states to experiment without facing the threat of losing highway funding. Also, lawmakers must construct strong laws that work within America's individualistic culture.

Basically, lawmakers should make drunk driving penalties very harsh and stiff. Practically no adult wants to lose his or her ability to be mobile and independent.

If laws were constructed that are less lenient and permanently suspended a person's license, such statutes would be enough of a deterrent to prevent drunk driving and would allay and debunk many of the concerns of interest groups such as MADD.

If people still continue to be concerned about younger students' access to alcohol, perhaps another possibility lawmakers might want to consider is setting the drinking age at 19.

Generally, most students in America do not reach that age until their college years, which may help prevent high school students and other younger students from getting access to alcohol.

Lastly, another issue that needs to be widely addressed before implementing this law is an improvement of America's public transportation system. Americans are highly mobile people who want to go where they want whenever they want.

Oftentimes public transportation is not sufficient enough for the needs of most adults. Many halt their services after a certain time at night, which many adults choose to indulge in activities that involve alcohol.

If the government were to increase funding for better public transportation throughout the 50 states, this would prevent drunk driving incidents. And it would also help to modernize America and make our public transportation systems comparable to that of the United Kingdom and other industrialized nations.

If sensibly debated and thoroughly implemented, the drinking age can successfully be lowered while vastly improving America in numerous ways. Young adults can learn how to control and curb their drinking legally under the eyes of colleges and even their parents before they head off to college.

Seyi Obasa is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at lithium19@gmail.com.

FED UP?

ED/OP

Silencing UMass students

S.P. Sullivan

The town of Amherst would appreciate it if you kept it down.

Or else.

As reported in The Daily Collegian on Tuesday, Sept. 9, a new bylaw will be put into effect – pending approval from the state attorney general's office – putting pressure on landlords to curb the behavior of rowdy tenants.

Three strikes, you're homeless.

Titled the "Nuisance House" bylaw, it will require landlords to begin eviction processes after the third noise infraction committed by tenants within the period of one year.

The new "Nuisance House" bylaw is the forth in a quartet of collegiate fun killers: the "Open Container" bylaw; the "Unlawful Noise" bylaw; and the "Keg Possession" bylaw, which requires that any person within the town of Amherst that dispenses a malt beverage from a keg obtain a "valid keg license."

So they know where the kegs are at.

The "Nuisance House" bylaw also provides for, at the discretion of responding officers, a fine no less than $100 and no more than $300 to be levied even after the first offense. Additionally, landlords will be held accountable for "response costs." In effect, your landlord could be footing the bill for your arrest.

My landlord is a graduate student here at the University. His name is Ryan and in addition to being my landlord, he's also my housemate. The other day he made me an omelet.

I would not like to see Ryan go bankrupt over noise complaints. Eggs are expensive, and I don't know how to make omelets.

Of course, the question of personal responsibility is inevitable. It seems fairly reasonable to give a house full of undergraduates a cushion of two transgressions within the period of a year before they are threatened with eviction.

And shouldn't college students – degree-pursuing, voting-eligible young adults – be able to keep the stereo down and the urinating on neighbors' lawns to a minimum, anyway?

This is the school that brought you Giants-fan-pelting Patriots fans, the rioting Red Sox Nation, Humans vs. Zombies.

The personal responsibility question is moot.

I'm also skeptical of the effectiveness of enforcing stricter economic penalties – the $300 tickets and "response cost" compensation – on inebriated partygoers.

Problems with drinking on and off campus, of violence and rowdiness, are not going to be solved by "cracking down" on anything.

Being just shy of 21, I of course have never, ever touched an alcoholic beverage. Ever. But I hear that because your judgment after the first few. The house party is not the place one weighs the possible social consequences of the basement-shaking "Sweet Caroline" sing-a-long. Prevention starts with positive reinforcement before the fact, not negative reinforcement after.

The Amethyst Initiative is a step in the right direction, if not because of its primary question over whether to lower the drinking age – another column in of itself – than because it advocates "an informed and dispassionate public debate over the effects of the 21-year-old drinking age [and] new ideas about the best ways to prepare young adults to make responsible decisions about alcohol."

The initiative has the support of 129 top administrators around the country, including the presidents of Smith, Mt. Holyoke and Hampshire colleges, as well as the recently-arrived UMass Amherst chancellor, Robert Holub.

Way to get the students on your side, Bob.

Whether or not the drinking age will be lowered by the Amethyst Initiative, the call for "dis-

[illegible] of 21, I [illegible] to be outraged by [illegible] Amherst. In fact, when the Coalition to Reduce Binge Drinking drafted the bylaw, they [illegible] to invite students to [illegible] none showed up. I also don't [illegible] has escalated to the level of [illegible] informing the masses with [illegible]

So if students don't [illegible] probably not going to [illegible] laws they know exist all too [illegible]

As for Amherst [illegible] behind the "Nuisance House" [illegible] charging for "response costs" is [illegible] ate your tax burden, [illegible] lege students spend their [illegible] and quick-serve restaurants. [illegible] Think Wings Over Amherst. [illegible] neling – pun intended – into the [illegible]

Think about it.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at spsulliv@dailyco[illegible].com

THIS COULD BE YOU

Powerful ads

Solmaaz Yazdiha

It's been said that the average American sees 3,000 advertisements a day. Commercials appeal to any sense they can reach, sight, smell, sound, taste, touch or hormones.

If it doesn't score you hot chicks, it gets you the job, wins you the game or even gives you wings. For Americans, advertisements are second nature – expected and accepted.

Advertising has become a part of our culture, sparking discussions over the creativity (or lack thereof) of a commercial. Many people tune into the Super Bowl just for the half time commercials, which in 2008 ran a whopping $2.7 million for a measly 30 seconds of airtime.

We, as the general public, are in fact a commodity to advertisers.

Ads, which were once concentrated on television and in magazines, have now spread to the Internet, billboards and movie theaters. What was once a nice 10 minutes of previews before the big picture has now become 20 minutes of actual commercials followed by obnoxiously obvious product placement throughout the actual movie. Conclusively, we have in a sense, begun paying to watch commercials.

Advertising has made its way onto the floors in grocery stores and into the food we buy. CBS stamped over 35 million eggs with its logo and various promotions for upcoming shows in 2006.

I might be alone in this thinking, but as the crack of dawn when I'm grilling up my breakfast sandwich the last thing on my mind is what's on primetime tonight.

Advertisers have even begun aiming for the moon, with aspirations to reflect a silhouette of an ad onto the very moon we wish upon at night. Additionally, there have been plans made to send out satellites with expandable ads that will look like billboards floating in clear blue sky.

Ads appeal to what many would consider a very dumb crowd, easily convinced with a pocket full of cash. In reality, this crowd equates to the general public, you and me, innocent people just trying to make it to their next paycheck.

Advertisers use endorsement deals, parading around our favorite celebrities and All-Star athletes in the latest sneaker or fragrance, and hope we simply attempt to imitate. They use special effects, lifetime guarantees, catchy songs and stick-in-your-head slogans, anything to get us to pull out the plastic.

Anyone majoring in communication, marketing or a related field knows networks don't sell time to advertisers, they sell audiences. We, as the general public, are in fact a commodity to advertisers. Without our undivided attention they would be left aimless, scratching their heads and wondering where the big bucks went.

[illegible] fall for their marketing ploys and gimmicks? It's because we are a society that is deeply and madly in love with stuff.

If we don't have this, we must have that, and the newest model must watch the clock. It's only a matter of time before that shiny brand-new gadget is "so last week" and there's a new make to wait in line for.

The power of persuasion is toxic matter. The importance lies in identifying an advertisement for what it is, an attractive appeal to our senses, our desires, and our supposed needs. As consumers, it's important that we are conscious of persuading advertisements and tread attentively.

Advertisements will be around forever, it's a grave we have dug for ourselves. Increasingly, we will be tugged this way and that to try a sample or take a test drive. The final question remains: Can you resist?

Solmaaz Yazdiha is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at syazdiha@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

A HOUSING CRUNCH

Dear Editor

(Re: "Tight squeeze for UMass students," News, Sept. 9)

When I transferred to UMass in 1973 I was given a room assignment of Thoreau 9999. That meant they really didn't know where they would put me. I ended up switching to McNamara to be with a friend. Little did I know that suite rooms were the smallest and most expensive. I remember my father saying, "This is a nice closet, can I see your room?" I made it through and I am sure the current transfer students will too.

Lynn Katz Danzig
Former UMass student

WRONG APPROACH

Dear Editor:

I recently read an interesting article in The Boston Globe about UMass' campaign to fight its "ZooMass" image. Like many, I've seen the signs of recent years claiming things such as "Two out of three students have four or less drinks when they go out," with a nice "We got the facts from you" somewhere on the poster.

I've always wondered, "Who takes these surveys? I've never been surveyed about this." Further, I've never met anyone who has taken any of these surveys. So who are they getting these facts from?

Apparently the wrong people, because The Globe reported "68 percent of men and 58 percent of women report drinking five or more drinks in a row once in the past two weeks, according to the latest surveys."

That's a very, very different number, and sorry UMass, I trust The Globe more than your marketing department. I do have a problem with these posters lying to us, but I have a bigger problem with the more recent "figures."

Last year, we were told "Nine out of 10 UMass students know how to have fun without alcohol." That's great. I know how to have fun without alcohol, as do many of my friends. We did it for 21, 18 – or worst case scenario – 13 years before we had our first drink.

I know how to have fun without alcohol, but that doesn't mean I don't also drink sometimes. But you know what that does mean? One out of 10 students don't know how to have fun without alcohol.

That means 10 percent of our students are alcoholics – that's an absurd number. But that's nothing compared to this year's figure. According to The Globe, the new poster we should expect to see will say "Three out of four UMass students feel comfortable refusing a drink."

I feel comfortable refusing a drink, as do many of my friends. I know if I've had too many. But that doesn't mean we don't drink at all. But, apparently, one out of four UMass students can't say no.

Last year 10 percent of our students were alcoholics. This year, I guess we can expect 25 percent by the end of the first two months. To be fair, this campaign has been producing results.

According to the same Globe article, binge drinking has dropped 26 percent and heavy drinking (binge drinking three or more times every two weeks) is down 38 percent.

I just wish the University didn't feel like they had to lie to us to get us to stop. I wish they trusted us, as adults, to take these surveys. Who are they asking, the Newman Center, MERC/house and wellness floors?

These numbers are absurd, and the questions irrelevant. I don't believe UMass has a particular drinking problem, no more than any other college campus. But if the administration feels there is a problem, why are they also pretending it doesn't exist?

You don't get an alcoholic friend to stop drinking by saying, "Since when do you go to a bar? You must be confused, you don't drink." And if you don't say that to one person, why would you tell it to 20,000?

Alex Maslow
UMass student

TAX CONFUSION

Dear Editor:

(Re: "In Amherst, an Obama plan" Ed/Op, Sept. 2)

The first issue of The Collegian is out and the editorial page has already been ruined by a fantastically bad argument against welfare. The premise of the argument was "if you're such a big fan of Obama's tax plan, which increases taxes on the wealthy and decreases taxes on the middle and lower class, would you support taking points from your GPA and giving them to students who don't work hard?"

This is problematic because it suggests a few things:

Grades and income are the same thing, poor people don't pay taxes, taxes are only used to line the pockets of the poor.

So let's see:

1) If grades and income really were the same thing, then would the author of the editorial support "trickle down" grading? You know – take points off of the grades of bad students and use them to beef up the GPAs of students who already do well? Because then, surely the students doing badly would be inspired by how well the good students were doing and work harder themselves.

2) This isn't worth explaining, but poor people do pay taxes. Everyone does. Rich people seem to avoid them more than anyone. The point of Obama's plan isn't to stop the poor from paying – it's to increase the responsibility of the rich, those who benefit the most from America, and to reduce the burden on the poor, who need all the money they can earn.

3) Roads, schools, libraries, etc. Again, not worth arguing, but here goes. If you are a major CEO, earning millions of dollars a year and paying 40 percent of your income in taxes, you'd probably feel a little ripped off.

However, just as you give a lot to the system, you take a lot more from it. Forget how well you'd get by with no roads – how would your company survive without the infrastructure you're helping to pay for? Or how about the Army to protect the country you do business in? What about the schools which train your fellow executives? If anything, you should be a little more grateful to the rest of America for helping you pay for it – you probably wouldn't want to do it all alone, would you?"

Alex Forrest
U Mass student

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed.

Hofstetter brings big laughs to Stockbridge

The "thinking man's comic," friends deliver variety of styles

BY ANDREW SHERIDAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last Tuesday, Sept. 9, unbeknownst to most of the campus, Stockbridge Hall played host to a night of stand-up comedy. Student-sponsored and advertised by word of mouth, the event proved to be first-rate entertainment.

Headlining the evening was comic Steve Hofstetter. One of the most-booked acts on the college circuit, Hofstetter regularly plays in excess of 100 campuses a year. He is also a writer, having published two volumes of "Student Body Shots", humorous guides to the world of higher education, and his daily "Sports Minute (Or So)" is syndicated in 150 newspapers around the country.

The night began with performances by two of Hofstetter's fellow comedians and long-time friends, Mike Trainor and Phil Mazo.

Trainor, known by some as the "giant comic," is a writer for Maxim magazine, and opened with a larger-than-life routine. While sometimes seeming a bit too intense, Trainor never the less drew laughs with raunchy bits about masturbatory roommate rituals, pornographic Oompa-Loompas and the scientific approach to sexual experimentation.

Next up was Phil Mazo, whose style was very different but equally effective. Tiny in comparison, Mazo, who's latest album, "Phil Mazo: Pervert" was released in April, discussed the upsides of porn, the downsides of bathroom wiredaisy and the etymology of dirty words.

Mazo's style branches into the realm of college comedy," and while that does not necessarily carry universal appeal, it was well executed and received.

[illegible] was the first [illegible], it became quite clear why Hofstetter was the marquis performer of the event. Beginning with a rant about how we live in the middle of nowhere, he launched into a well-oiled routine on politics, geography and road life.

Hofstetter has garnered a reputation as "the thinking man's comic," and it is not undeserved. Though his language was colorful and his topics were often far from academic, his routine was both precise and topical.

Part of the way through the act, Hofstetter ditched his malfunctioning microphone, saying "Let's just have a nice little chat." From that point on, the atmosphere was noticeably more relaxed, as he conversed with audience members, picked on hometown mascots, and segued in and out of prepared bits.

After the show, The Daily Collegian had a chance to sit down with the comedians and ask a few questions.

Daily Collegian: Do the three of you often tour together?

Mike Trainor: About half of the time. Whenever we can, when our schedules allow it.

DC: (To Trainor) You mentioned that you started performing five years ago. How did you get into the business?

MT: I just started showing up to stuff. I didn't get into it until after college. Steve did it in college, but that's because he's a prodigy. Plus [Steve] was in New York, where there's a lot of stuff going on, and I was in North Carolina.

DC: (To Mazo) Your latest Album is entitled "Pervert" Is that a theme in your work?

Phil Mazo: Yeah, it is. At least in this album, there's a lot of that going on.

DC: (To Hofstetter) What do you think of your title as "the thinking man's comic"?

Steve Hofstetter: I think it's a very kind thing of a reviewer to say. I like it a lot because it's about my audience; it's not about me. It's saying "if you are a thinking person, you might appreciate this." Even if you don't agree with everything I say, I don't say things arbitrarily. I research before I write jokes. If you're offended by the things I say, that's ridiculous, because I can back up anything I say in a debate. There's nothing I say for shock value.

DC: I know that your fraternity Sigma Phi Epsilon sponsored this event. How is your relationship with the group?

SH: It's great, it's fantastic. I loved my experience as an undergrad. My chapter was really a gift from alumni, it was something where a group of alumni created our chapter. [...] I feel like I have a responsibility to help, too. So I try to do as many Rush events as possible. [...] It's been really cool and I guess the higher-profile things get for me the more it gets around that I am a Sig Ep and we're proud of our own, and they've been really good to me.

DC: I know you do a lot of sports writing, with your "Daily Sports Minute" syndicated nationwide. How much does sports writing define your career?

SH: I'm a comic first. If I never write sports again I would be OK, but I couldn't ever give up comedy. If I ever had to choose between the two, first of all I'd be like, "Who's making me choose this?" But if I had to choose I would definitely pick comedy. There is no better feeling than that tight-worked act you have to do up there, and sometimes it's great, sometimes it's wonderful and sometimes you bomb, but there's nothing like it.

DC: Is this your first time at UMass?

SH: I've never been to UMass before, but I played Amherst College a couple of years ago. I do over 100 colleges a year, so I realized like a year ago that I've played most of the D1 schools, so I'm slowly trying to cross off all the D1 schools. Now I can cross off the Minutemen.

DC: Are you going to be in the area again any time soon?

SH: I'll be in Worcester tomorrow. I'll be in Boston, I'm playing Wentworth. I tend to play the area a lot because there are just so many colleges up here. It's pretty easy to play.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at Asheri1@student.umass.edu

Headliner Steve Hofstetter abandoned his microphone to create a more intimate setting Tuesday at Stockbridge Hall.

Opener Mike Trainor delivered a larger-than-life routine full of material ranging from masturbatory roommate rituals to pornographic Oompa-Loompas.

'Legal Limit' delivers

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last year Static and Messiah were mainstays at UMass campus events, showcasing their hip-hop chops everywhere from performances in the Fine Arts Center to a widely disputed win at UMass' Battle of the Bands.

The duo didn't take the summer off as the two childhood friends spent much of their time recording their new mix tape, entitled "The Legal Limit." The new tape features 21 tracks of high-energy rap that never stagnates with beats that vary from danceable club tracks to slower grooves that let the pair showcase their expert wordplay and flair for dramatic timing.

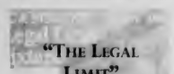
The tape starts with one of its weakest tracks entitled "Dark Side," which finds the duo evilly working Darth Vader into a club worthy chorus. Subsequently, the disc heads into its best territory, a trio of songs that showcase professional grade beats in a better-than-average attempt at more commercial work. "Prioritize" rides subtle horn blasts in a self mythologizing rap about the duo's high school days, setting up "Keep Wishin'," perhaps the album's most radio friendly track.

The later track boasts a killer soul sample that finds the right footing for lines that are fired off in a stream of consciousness style that ping pongs from subject to subject. Here the duo lire some of their best one-liners that showcase their more intellectual side. "You flat like a plateau. I'm elevated, bella bored, ante I'm underrated, you're gollick, I'm David."

Not content to let the tempo of the disc drop off, the next track keeps up the intensity while nodding their homage to "Beantown Nights." While the chorus finds the group dipping into some of raps most overdone cliches, including rhyming "grab your forty" and "grab your shorty," the beat pops and fizzes with enough energy to ground the track lyrically, melding the generic scenes with an air of nostalgia that keeps the track from devolving into mere parody.

From here the disc shifts down in tone, putting more emphasis on songs that showcase the duo's wordplay. "Gotta Survive" rides a meditative groove while they flesh out scenes from the streets where "clips go click click like hyperlinks." "Life is a Moment" rides a psychedelic dance groove into "Stay Positive" a bleak portrait of a neighborhood where the "child support money goes to the local stripper."

With 21 songs, the mix tape inevitably can't hold up the momentum of the first side. However the disc succeeds in showcasing the versatility of the duo, who despite the long length never run out of new ideas.



Like any good mix tape it can't be found at local stores. Static and Messiah will be out selling copies for $5 out on the basketball courts of Southwest, and if Southwest isn't close to you, copies can be ordered by contacting the duo through their MySpace or Facebook group, "Illtie Intertainment is a Movement."

Static and Messiah will also be appearing tonight at 12 on Sweet Baby Lou & The Reverends of Funk on WMUA radio 91.1 FM.

Pete Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

Static and Messiah show off their versatility and wordplay on their new mix tape "The Legal Limit."

"THE LEGAL LIMIT"

STATIC AND MESSIAH

7/10

Three American presidents worth sharing a brew with

BY CRAIG KRUGER
THE WASHINGTON POST

"Who would you rather have a beer with?"

In presidential politics, that simple question has become a litmus test for a candidate's likability and, it follows, his likelihood of getting elected.

In 2004, according to a Zogby/Williams Identity Poll, 57 percent of undecided voters said they would rather have had a beer with President George W. Bush than with Democratic nominee John Kerry (even though Bush doesn't drink). During last spring's Democratic campaign, Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama chugged beer to counter charges of elitism. If Obama made one, Raleigh, N.C., bartender Tim happy by tipping $18 for a $2 glass of Pabst. More recently, washingtonpost.com blogger Chris Cillizza called Obama running mate Joseph Biden "the kind of guy voters can imagine themselves having a beer with."

I'd have a beer with any of them. The real question is, which beer?

John McCain's wife, Cindy, is chairwoman of an Anheuser-Busch distributorship, so an appropriate tipple for him might be Budweiser American Ale, the St. Louis company's latest attempt to court craft-beer drinkers. Bud American Ale is more middle-of-the-road than maverick, with caramel malt dominating the flavor, a crisp, dry finish and a touch of fruity brew. It's pleasant enough, but the PR material goes a bit overboard in asserting that "Budweiser American Ale defines a new standard of ale — The American Ale." That will come as news to the brewers of Liberty Ale and Sierra Nevada Pale Ale, who set the parameters for American-style pale ale a generation ago.

Ad hype, like campaign speeches, shouldn't be taken too seriously.

Obama has his own beer connection. In Kenya, his father's birthplace, drinkers of a cut-rate brand called Senator Keg have unofficially renamed it "Obama Beer" to celebrate the Democratic candidate's rise to prominence. Senator Keg isn't exported here, but you can buy another Kenyan brand, Tusker. This European-style golden lager honors George Hurst, co-founder of Kenya Breweries, who was gored to death by a bull elephant. The name is almost an omen for Obama, who will have to dodge another elephant, the GOP pachyderm.

Let's extend this fantasy game further. Suppose you could have a beer with any U.S. president, living or dead. Who would be your barmate?

My one criterion: The president must enjoy the beer as much as I do. That narrows the field to three: George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Grover Cleveland.

Washington was a home-brewer. One of his recipes, for a molasses-based brew, is preserved in the New York Public Library. Later in life he acquired a taste for porter, ordering up to "three gross" bottles at a time from a Philadelphia brewer named Robert Hare.

Jefferson was an oenophile, but when the War of 1812 cut off supplies of European wines, he began making beer with an unbridled enthusiasm, producing up to 200 gallons a year of a wheat-based ale at Monticello. His brewer was a slave named Peter Hemings, older brother of the more famous Sally Hemings.

Williamsburg AleWerks, a micro-brewery in the former Virginia capital, brews a Washington's Porter, full of nutty and bittersweet chocolate flavors, and a spritzy, golden Colonial Wheat Ale. Brewery manager Charles Haines acknowledges that these are not re-creations of old recipes. He says his porter, brewed with seven malts, is more complex than the versions Washington would have quaffed (and it contains no molasses). As for his wheat beer, Haines explains that golden-colored ales brewed with lightly toasted grains were unknown in Jefferson's era. "They roasted grain in ovens, they did it in skillets. Everything was brown."

Does Haines think Washington or Jefferson would have appreciated his beers? "Everybody liked beer back then!" he replies.

Grover Cleveland was our only president to serve non-consecutive terms (1885-1889 and 1893-1897). While rising through the political ranks in Buffalo, he was a frequenter of bars and a prodigious consumer of lager. He grouped of the White House fare: "I must go to dinner. I wish it was to eat a pickled herring, a Swiss cheese and a chop at Louis' (his favorite saloon) instead of that French stuff I shall find."

If I were clinking glasses with Grover today, I'd choose a pre-Prohibition-style lager, maybe Participation Lager from Magic Hat Brewing in South Burlington, Vt. It's brewed with 20 percent flaked maize for extra smoothness, but it has a firm malt body and a backbide of flowery Hallertau and Columbus hops. This special-release brew is available only in the Participation Variety 12-Pak, on sale through Election Day.

Suitable for any chief executive is Capitol City Brewing's Election Ale, a crisp, drinkable golden ale to debut Sept. 24 at the Washington area brew pub chain's three branches. After Election Day, head brewer Mike McCarthy says, he'll add an extra ingredient (probably honey) from the winning candidate's home state to create Inaugurale, which will linger until the cheering is over on Jan. 20.

With a moustache like that, who wouldn't want to drink with Grover Cleveland.

Reality songwriter delivers debut

BY GLENN GAMBOA
NEWSDAY

Donnie Klang's rocket ride to stardom has come so fast, he hasn't had time to let it sink in yet.

A little more than a year ago, Klang was working in a warehouse and going to business school, thinking seriously about abandoning his dreams of being a singer after two failed "American Idol" auditions and years of struggling with little to show for it.

He auditioned for Sean Combs' MTV reality show, "Making the Band 4," on a lark and was shocked on live television last August when he wasn't selected to become part of the group assembled, Day26, but instead received a recording contract as a solo artist with Diddy's Bad Boy Records.

On Tuesday, only a year and a week after his selection, Klang's debut, "Just a Rolling Stone," will hit stores and, with Combs' backing, has a legitimate shot at No. 1.

"In case this is your first time here, we make bands here," Combs told the audience during the season premiere of "Making the Band 4," which features Klang, Day26 and Danity Kane. "They make albums and those albums go to No. 1. Donnie, his album hasn't come out yet, but it comes out Sept. 2. Hopefully, you guys will make it – What? – No. 1, my favorite number."

For his part, Klang understands the possibility, though he has a hard time processing it.

"My head is racing," Klang says on a recent commute from his Levittown, N.Y., home to dance rehearsals in Manhattan. "The only way to describe it is surreal. Sometimes, I feel like I'm standing beside myself, watching these things happen."

Klang's most recent out-of-body experience came earlier this month when he debuted his first video, "Take You There," on MTV's prime-time show "FNMTV Premieres."

"Just watching the video there was crazy, the hairs on my arms were standing up," Klang says. "I had goose bumps the whole time."

Then, after the video debuted, when it appeared MTV commentator James Montgomery was about to say something negative about Klang, Combs rushed the stage and started challenging Montgomery, saying "Who are you? Where did you come from? What hit records have you ever made?" before ending his tirade with, "The guy is a star! Donnie Klang is a star!"

Klang laughs as he remembers the moment. "Well, I certainly appreciated it," Klang says, adding he thought Montgomery, who artfully said that he "didn't see a lot in the video that really separated him from that field," was just stating his honest opinion. "You got to take the bad with the good."

And right now, there's not a whole lot of bad in Klang's life.

His album, "Just a Rolling Stone," turned out better than he ever expected, and he had a major role in it, collaborating with superstar producers including Seven, Danja and The-Dream.

"This was crazy for a first-time artist, especially one from a reality show, where you kind of just sign the contract just to audition," Klang says. "The thing about me was that I was a surprise. Lots of people were preparing stuff for the group, but they weren't preparing anything for a solo artist. That really worked in my favor. It opened the gates for me to write a lot."

The result reflects Klang's wide range of interests, from the rock-tinged "Catch My Breath" to the smooth R&B of "The Rain" and the club-oriented "Dr. Love."

"We wanted it to be so that you don't know what to expect from track to track," Klang says. "And we wanted to stay clear from other lanes but still stay commercial."

The most immediate track is the first single, "Take You There," featuring Combs, which gave Klang another out-of-body experience. "I had just finished the single after 20-something hours straight in the studio, I was exhausted and I was in the car about halfway home to Long Island and Diddy calls and was like, 'Come back to the city, I want to test it out in clubs,'" Klang says. "So it's like 3 a.m. and I go back to the city, and we go to this one spot and Jay-Z and Beyonce are in there, which was crazy. Diddy's playing the song on loop and then we went to the next spot. We were in the limo and he says, 'I want the video to be about this night and what happens after the clubs.'"

Of course, what Combs wants, Combs almost always gets. The video for "Take You There" is a night on the town with Klang and Combs, and too many young ladies to count. "When we did that video in March in Hollywood, it was just crazy," Klang says. "I remember being in elementary school watching all the Bad Boy videos. Now, not only am I in one, not only am I signed to Bad Boy, but Diddy is in my video. That's crazy."

It's a lot to take in, but luckily, Klang has been able to see how his friends in Danity Kane and Day26 have handled it. "Donnie has really learned a lot in this year," says Danity Kane's Dawn Richard. "Donnie doesn't need any advice. We've actually been writing a lot together lately. I hope I can get on his next joint with him."

Klang says he is hoping to join Danity Kane and Day26 as No. 1 artists, but relieving his debut is thrill enough for him.

"I grew up on the early '90s R&B groups and I was into the whole Bad Boy thing ... and I really liked boy bands, that's what really pushed me over the edge to do music," he says. "My sisters, my female friends, had these DVDs of 'NSync and Backstreet Boys going out on tour and I would see these swarms, this sea of people just going crazy in the audience, banging on the tour bus. And I was like, 'All right, this is what I need to be doing in my life.' This is what I've wanted since I could remember. And now it's here."

Donnie Klang's debut album "Just a Rolling Stone" will feature collaborations with high-profile producers including Seven, Danja and The-Dream.

Google's Chrome proves a worthy web alternative

BY TROY WOLVERTON
SAN JOSE MERCURY NEWS

Google has entered the Web browser market with Chrome.

Chrome, Google's shiny new Web browser, has some eye-catching features, but I'm not ready to trade in Firefox for it.

I downloaded Chrome last week, when it first became available. I haven't run any benchmark tests on it, but my impression is that it's generally about as fast as Firefox, which is my everyday browser. However, I had a hard time figuring out how to do simple tasks like printing in Chrome, found it more difficult to search sites other than Google and was frustrated that I can't yet use it on my Mac at home.

The big difference you notice with Chrome right away is that it doesn't look like Firefox, or any other Web browser. It doesn't have a menu bar, and there's no way to add one to it.

Instead, at the top of the Chrome program window, you'll find the browser "tabs" for each Web page you have open. In order to change Chrome's settings, print the page you're on or clear your cache, you have to click on one of two icons located near the location bar.

As Google developers describe it, their idea was to emphasize the "content" that you'd access through Chrome, not the browser program or its features. They thought the best way to do that was to keep Chrome's interface, the buttons, options and icons, to a minimum.

The problem is that a minimal interface makes it difficult to figure out how to get the browser to do what you want it to. In Firefox, if I want to, say, create some folders for my bookmarks, I go to the "bookmarks" menu option and click on "organize bookmarks." Easy enough.

In Chrome, though, it's not so clear. There's an "other bookmarks" button, but clicking on it gives you your list of bookmarks. Through trial and error I finally figured out that I needed to right click on one of the buttons in my bookmark toolbar and select "add page" or "add folder."

I mistakenly clicked on "open all bookmarks," the top choice when you right click ... resulting in dozens of browser tabs being opened at once. The good news is that I was able to close all those tabs without either Chrome or my computer crashing.

Other commands that are easy to find in the menu bars of Internet Explorer or Firefox are similarly difficult to uncover in Chrome. If I want to view the underlying code of a page, for instance, do I click on the "page" icon, the "settings" icon or right click on the page?

(Answer: right click, although you find the same command buried in a submenu under the page icon.)

The minimal interface also means that instead of having both an address and a search bar, Chrome has combined the two. So, if you want to search Google, you type in a keyword into the same area you'd type in a Web address.

Google is Chrome's default search engine, but the program asks when you are installing it if you want to choose a different one. You can also set a different default search after you have the program up and running by tweaking its settings.

Additionally, Chrome helps you use search engines built into other pages. To search for William Shatner's entry in the Internet Movie Database, for instance, you'd type in IMDB's address, then hit tab and type in "William Shatner."

In Firefox, and in the new Internet Explorer, you can add a whole slew of different search engines to your search box. When searching a particular site, instead of having to type that site's address, you simply select the one you want.

Chrome also lacks a progress bar. So, unlike with IE or Firefox, you don't have any sense of how much of a Web page you've already downloaded, or how much more you have left to go.

Another shortcoming of Chrome is that it currently runs only on a Windows operating system, though Mac and Linux versions are in the works.

But despite its shortcomings, Chrome has some features I really like. It seems as fast as, and more stable than, Firefox. I've noticed that Firefox can choke on Javascript, the coding language widely used to add buttons or other interactive elements to Web pages, and never completely load particular pages.

Chrome's Javascript engine was designed from the ground up to run faster than other engines and in a way that doesn't stop the browser from working if the Javascript engine gets hung up on something.

I love tabbed browsing, and often have half a dozen or more tabs open at once. But having so many tabs open can slow down your browser. And sometimes a coding error or script problem will bring your entire system to a crawl.

With Firefox, you generally have to guess which tab is causing the problems. Not so with Chrome. It has a "task manager" similar to the one for Windows that allows you to see how much memory or processor capacity each tab or plug-in is consuming and to shut down the ones gobbling up too much of your computer's resources.

That's something I wish I could do in Firefox, especially when it's about to

WRITE FOR ARTS
arts@dailycollegian.com

ALL ACCESS ARTS
allaccessarts.blogspot.com

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com

I love fashion.
Frye
Uggs
Steve Madden
Free People
Citizens of Humanity
7 for all Mankind
ZANNA
...n's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst www.zanna.com

Six Flags NEW ENGLAND
UMASS Mullins Center
RED CROSS BLOOD DRIVE
September 11, 2008
12PM - 6PM
All presenting donors will receive,
COURTESY OF SIX FLAGS, A ONE DAY PASS TO THE PARK,
while supplies last.
Positive ID required. Call 1-800-GIVE-LIFE to make an appointment.
Walk-ins welcome, but appointments will have priority. Please Help!

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
Show your College I.D. for a discount | Doors open at 9 pm
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female

NIGHTCLUB NOW HIRING
HOW TO APPLY
WHEN ... R-SUNDAY NIGHT
TIME ... PM ... PM
WHERE ... SKYPLEX
... STEARNS SQUARE SPRINGFIELD MA
WWW.SKYPLEX.US
Roof Top Deck Open
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq. Downtown Springfield 413 827 9000 www.SkyPlex.us

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future to start the business of your dreams or buy the home
Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.

UM travels to JMU

FOOTBALL from page 12

not have as versatile of a player as Landers, but with two games played, it's just as versatile as the Dukes offense.

In Week 1, UMass relied heavily on tailback Tony Nelson who ran for 171 yards and a touchdown against Albany. Senior quarterback Liam Coen only threw for 92 yards which left some questions about his wide receivers.

The Minutemen came out in Week 2 and quieted many of those critics when Coen threw for 395 yards and three touchdowns. Jeremy Horne emerged against Holy Cross as Coen's favorite target when he caught 10 balls for 172 yards and two scores.

Coen hopes his team cap have a more balanced attack this week, but knows they have the capability to adjust to the defense.

"We want to be more of a balanced football team. It just all depends on what the defense is doing to us and what they're coming out trying to stop," Coen said. "Whatever they try to come out and defend, we're going to adapt to it."

UMass' signal-caller was impressed with the performances of two of his new offensive linemen last week and will be looking for more from them.

"Brian Ostaszewski and Josh Samuda are two guys who, in their first collegiate games, didn't allow sacks and they are going to be looked upon to step up in the next few games," Coen said.

The play of the offensive line has been a large part of the offenses success. In two games, they have not allowed a sack despite having three new starters this season.

The last time the two schools met the Minutemen came away with a 10-7 victory in 2005 off a game-winning field goal by Armando Cuko. Last weeks heroics by Cuko reminded Coen of what he did in 2005, just this year his game-winner was a yard longer, 42 yards.

Brown won't let his team make any excuses if they don't perform up to its expectations, despite playing the second of three games on the road.

"We're in the middle of a three-game stretch here and the bottom line is, great teams win on the road, no excuses, you have to go out and find a way to win and that's the objective," Brown said.

The Minutemen and Dukes kick off at 3:30 p.m. in Harrisonburg, Va.

GAME NOTES

The UMass-JMU game can be seen on television throughout the east coast on CN8 ...The Minutemen lead the overall series 7-4-1... Don Brown has a lifetime record of 5-1 against JMU.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu

The No. 3 Minutemen will face off against another Football Championship Subdivision Top 10 team this Saturday when they face No. 7 James Madison. UMass will look to go 3-0 to start the season, for the second year in a row.

Senior cornerback Courtney Robinson will look to be a factor for the No. 3 Minutemen on the defensive side of the ball, as well as on special teams where he will return kick offs.

Minutemen defense takes on strong run game by Dukes

DEFENSE from page 12

ning back Eugene Holloman, or Griff Yancey and Corwin Acker. UMass knows they have to step up its overall defensive effort if it wants to limit the amount of scoring opportunities the Dukes have. The Minutemen will have to start this process at practice.

"We had two games that we didn't play to our liking," Robinson said. "There are some things we're going to change and we're going to come out Saturday and put up a different look."

In the first two games the Minutemen have allowed 348 rushing yards and three rushing touchdowns.

To be successful, the Minutemen will have to keep constant pressure on Landers whether it is from the front four, or blitzes from the linebackers or members of the secondary.

Special teams has also been an issue for UMass. Against Albany the Minutemen muffed the game's first punt and allowed the Great Danes (0-1) a huge punt return later in the game. Last Saturday the Crusaders returned a kickoff for a score (for 88 yards) and gave UMass' punt coverage team constant trouble.

To stay in this game the UMass defense will hope to see the special teams problems cease.

The Minutemen last played the Dukes in 2005 in what many describe as being a "mud-fest." Armando Cuko, much like last weekend, hit a game-winning field goal as time expired to beat the Dukes, 10-7.

With the offense finding the end zone with ease, the new wide receiving corps with a couple games under their belt and an offensive line that has kept quarterback Liam Coen off the ground, the only question to UMass remains to be its defense. If UMass comes out with a strong defensive effort while limiting its mistakes on special teams the Dukes could be in trouble.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com

UM struggles to hold leads early in season

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

In years past, the Massachusetts women's soccer team struggled to put goals away early games.

But this season, the Minutewomen have found a knack for capitalizing on smart offensive plays, enabling them to strike first against opponents in the first half.

"I think it's important for any team. And the last few years, even with the winning records, we haven't tended to get on board early," said UMass coach Jim Rudy.

The Maroon and White (1-1-2) defeated Bryant yesterday, 2-0, getting their first victory of the 2008 season fueled by a strong start.

Senior midfielder Amy Ballew put UMass up 1-0 just 13 minutes into the game, scoring her first career goal on assists from defender Meghan Collins and forward Vanessa Patry.

Even with the season-ending injuries to forward Sydney Stoll and midfielder Meghan Gould, multiple players on the offensive side of the ball have been able to step up and capitalize early in games.

UMass has had chances to put teams away early, but has struggled to play a complete game this season. Even though the offense is getting contributions from many players, (four different players have tallied goals), the Minutewomen have only managed a 1-1-1 record in the three games where they have scored first.

Patry was able to score early in UMass' home opener on Sept. 4 against New Hampshire, registering two goals in the first half in a 2-2 tie, while Tina Rodriquez scored the first goal of the Minutewomen's 2008 campaign on Aug. 24 against Binghampton.

The Minutewomen have been able to capitalize quickly because they have also had more shots earlier in games.

Against UNH, UMass took 17 shots in the first half, marking the most shots in a half since Oct. 29, 2006 at Duquesne. Yesterday, UMass had 13 shots in the entire game, mostly in part because of an offside call going against the Minutewomen.

In the game against Bryant, there were nine calls against UMass. Even so, Rudy likes what his offense has been doing this season by pushing forward and getting the offense established early in the game.

"A lot of their defense was their offside line and you live and die by that," Rudy said. "We've discussed getting people forward in numbers and sort of spreading the wealth around."

Despite getting different players involved in the offensive game plan, Rudy wants to capitalize on other team's mistakes and give UMass an advantage going into the later parts of the game.

"We have to keep working on, if we get on them early, let's put it away," he said.

UMass was able yesterday to put away Bryant, a team that has a knack for hanging tough in their first season as a Division I team. The Minutewomen's second goal came late in the second half, when forward Christina Adams stole a ball from a Bulldog defender and beat the goalkeeper one-on-one.

The Minutewomen have been making strides at pushing their offense up-field to create more opportunities to score by causing turnovers.

UMass has continually had passes from midfielders Kelsey Anderson, Ashley Hamel and Ballew get through to forwards Patry and Vanessa Lima on the offensive side of the ball.

"It allowed us to get balls and play the through ball [against Bryant]," Rudy said. "With the amount of through balls we played in the first half, not enough of them were quality. We didn't get on them on the back end, where as in the second half, we connected on a few more of those."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Bench plays valuable minutes in victory

W. SOCCER from page 12

that flew over the goal during the 60th minute.

However, it was a costly mistake from Bryant goalkeeper Katie Mitchell that sealed the game for the Minutewomen.

"We had found out that their keeper is very inconsistent on clearances," Rudy said. "We thought that if everyone stays awake and is ready for those clearances, we were going to get [a shot] in a good position."

Junior Christina Adams scored in the lower left corner of the net on a shallow punt from Mitchell that gave UMass its second goal of the game with 13 minutes, 36 seconds left to go.

"The cool part is that when she went through, she held off on a challenge from a bigger and stronger player," Rudy said.

Prior to the game, Rudy planned to go with a deep bench throughout the game because of Bryant's lack of depth. He threw in a majority of his bench at the end of the game, giving many players their first action of the season with seven substitutions in the second half.

Rudy would have preferred to play the bench a little longer than he did against Bryant, but was impressed with their performance. Despite limited playing time, Adams' goal and Natalie Muka play kept the Bulldogs defense busy.

"You usually like to get people on at a 3-0," Rudy said. "2-0 is tough, but I said, 'What the heck, let's do it.'"

The Minutewomen had another last-minute scare in the final two minutes of the game to ruin a potential shutout. Bryant had an opportunity to convert a scoring opportunity near the net, but Luckey kept her hands on the ball for her fourth save of the game.

UMass plays its next game Sunday against winless Holy Cross at Rudd Field before finishing the non-conference schedule on the road against Albany and Providence.

Rudy considers Holy Cross to be the best winless team he has seen this season.

GAME NOTES

Luckey recorded her second shutout of the season and picked up her third career victory. She currently has 18 saves with a 0.88 goals against average. The goalkeeper is one shutout away from tying former UMass keeper Kristen Walker's total (three) from the 2007 season.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill0@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen head to Va. to play 2 games in STIHL Classic

ATLANTIC 10 from page 12

and if we do that we'll neutralize them and we'll be alright," Koch said about the Tribe's midfield.

The Minutemen are not worried whether they win or lose this weekend. They are focusing on improving themselves for Atlantic 10 play.

"These games are obviously important, you want to win them, you want to win every game you play," Koch said. "More importantly we want to keep improving on the things we need to improve on."

The Minutemen are working to get better at not giving the ball away as much as they have been. In addition, they are making sure they are supporting their fellow teammates 'when they don't have the ball – making it easier for the person with the ball to play well.

This weekend the defense will again be an important aspect of the game for the Minutemen. They have continued to work on improving their defensive game, because if they aren't strong defensively, goal scoring can become irrelevant. Moreover, they have shown if they play strong defense they, are a hard team to beat.

"We have to make sure defensively we don't get caught stabbing at the ball, we have to stand them up, support each other, have good cover and balance," Koch said. "If we do that I think we'll be in good shape."

Being shutout by Holy Cross (Aug. 29) was disappointing for UMass, but scoring three goals against Boston University (Aug. 31) was a good accomplishment. In the Sept. 6 game against Siena, the Minutemen had numerous scoring chances, but finished with one.

UMass hopes to start focusing more on offense in coming weeks, depending on how well its defense plays this weekend.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com

Maroon and White's greatest strength is bench players

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

Nearly every team with high expectations and great success usually has at least one superstar player to push them over the top. Whether in high school, college or professional sports, stars will get the lion's share of attention.

However, even the greatest individual athlete cannot succeed in a team sport without the help of strong role players. Stars are the players who get the limelight, but as the No. 13 Massachusetts men's soccer team understands, often it is the players on the bench or not even playing in the games who are the key to making a good team great.

For example, UMass coach Sam Koch mentioned that eight players would be unable to travel to Virginia for this weekend's contests, but that it would be important to the team's season for those players to remain focused.

"Those eight players have the hardest job of all, because they're not traveling, and yet they've got to work out, while we're gone, to maintain their fitness level. Those guys are crucial for our team's success," Koch said. "If they work hard and keep the right attitude then our training intensity is going to be at a higher level."

Koch declined to name the players who would not travel this weekend.

Sometimes a coach brings a player off the bench because he feels they are more valuable to the team as a reserve then as a starter. Senior forward Prince Ofosu is a perfect example of this type of player. Ofosu is a senior who has been on the team for four years, earning the occasional start, (five games last year) but whose true value to the Minutemen is as a weapon off the bench.

"He's just very good coming in having not played at the beginning. To be honest, he's much more dangerous when he comes off the bench than he is when he starts," Koch said. "I don't know whether it's a mentality thing, maybe he catches teams that are a little tired and he's so quick, maybe he's mad that he didn't start, I don't know, all I know is he is better off the bench than as a starter."

Ofosu's greatest strength is his speed, which enables him to break away from defenders and create scoring chances. He scored both goals in regulation against Boston University, in addition to creating several chances against Siena. He leads UMass with six shots on goal, despite having played 159 minutes (by contrast, starting midfielder Mike DeSantis has played 280 minutes).

Quality play from their freshmen, whether in practice or in game situations, will be important to the Minutemen throughout their season. Koch mentioned freshman Chris Roswess as a player who has impressed the team with his speed and ball-handling ability, earning minutes at both the midfield and forward positions.

Roswess – a local product from West Springfield – has yet to score, but has created excellent chances, such as one against Siena where he knocked a header past the goalie, but the ball drifted wide right.

Koch also talked about Bryant Craft who has been pressed into action as a starter due to sophomore Stuart Amick's injury, which limits the midfielder's playing time.

"He has done a great job filling in for Stu; he is very quick and works extremely hard in training. I'm very pleased with how he has played," Koch said.

Koch is also pleased with the development of freshman defender Chris Gilbert, who has seen some playing time subbing in for senior Chris Brown. Brown has started all 68 games he was eligible for during his UMass career and is one of the defensive leaders of the team. Gilbert must make sure the Minutemen's play doesn't suffer when the senior needs a breather.

"[Gilbert has] been impressive, showing good size and strength. He's played well for a freshman without a lot of game experience, at a position where if he makes one mistake, he will be exposed pretty quickly," Koch said.

Saying depth is important does not mean that having stars doesn't matter. UMass would not be nearly as strong without All-American goalkeeper Zack Simmons or senior midfielder Mike DeSantis, but it is important to remember that every player on a team adds to its success, not just those in the starting line-up.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Want to write for sports?
Contact Eli Rosenwaike at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ATTENTION ALL RSOs

Advertising with the Daily Collegian is now cheaper than ever!

Get your student organization heard, and advertise with the Collegian.

From print ads to sudoku & horoscope spots we will help find the ad that's best for you.

Just in case the "I'm starting an online company" idea doesn't pan out

Now is a perfect time to take the GRE. Test for grad school. Your scores are good for 5 years – giving you plenty of time to try a few things first. Think of it as having an insurance policy for your future.

Text GRE17 to 78473 for a sneak peek at the practice questions.

gradtestGRE.com

ETS. GRE.

ACROSS
1 Carrier bag
5 Energy food, for short
9 Knitting stitch
14 Jamaican fruit export
15 Aleve target
16 Lustful looker
17 Colorful mount
18 Teach's title
19 Public uproars
20 Destroyer escort
22 In the middle of 24 Gumshoe Spade
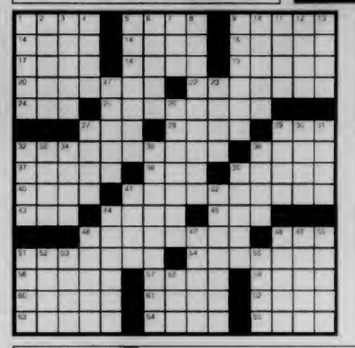
25 Taking cattle
27 In favor of
28 "Casablanca" role
29 Cribbage need
32 Infection stopper
36 Scottish trill
37 NCO, fondly
38 Participated in an 10K
39 Canal boat
40 Book after Joel
41 Chronicler of Paul Revere's ride
43 Family dog
44 Leslie Caron role
45 Finish
46 Without any loopholes
48 Bikini part
51 Vesuvius or Etna
54 Made certain
56 Actor Delon
57 Put in order
59 Highway
60 Ran the clock
61 "Picnic" playwright
62 Young lady
63 Kind of drum
64 Germ
65 Otherwise

DOWN
1 Rides the waves
2 Greek market
3 Assertion of truth
4 Royal flush card
5 Seize
6 Farm measurements
7 Greek letter
8 Happening to
9 Eclipse revelation
10 Growing old
11 Online journal
12 Tennis calls
13 Formerly, formerly
21 Left one's seat
23 Catchall abbr.
26 1997 blockbuster
27 Newtons' filer
29 Knitting stitch
30 Logistics sum
31 Enlarged
32 Quickly
33 Designate
34 Easy run
35 Forecast
36 Lacking locks
39 Curvee
41 One of the pride
42 Ate heartily
44 Rio
46 More frigid
47 Shirt size
48 Oven setting
49 Brings up
50 Befuddle
51 Large containers
52 Lena of "Havana"
53 Tibetan monk
55 Goad
58 ... more time!

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!



WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

amherst cinema
Fri Sep 12 - Thu Sep 18
TELL NO ONE 2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30
Elegy 2:15 4:45 7:15 9:45
Vicky Cristina Barcelona 2:45 5:00 7:30 10:00
28 Amity St. (413) 253-2547
Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Sep 5 - Thu Sep 11
American Teen 2:30 4:45 + 12pm Sat & Sun
MAN ON WIRE 7:15 9:30
Vicky Cristina Barcelona 3:00 5:15 7:45 9:45 + 12:30pm Sat & Sun & 10:15am Wed
27 Pleasant St. www.pleasantstheater.org
Downtown Northampton (413) 584-5848

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"You can't find any true closeness in Hollywood, because everybody does the fake closeness so well."

– Carrie Fisher

ATKINS FARMS Country Market
Now Hiring
For The Fall & Holiday Seasons
Part-time Sales Associates and Production Assistants
All positions require evening, weekend and holiday availability.
Customer service and food handling experience preferred.
Come in to apply or contact Kelly at 253-9529 or kelly@atkinsfarms.com
(Employment opportunities are also available on our website.)

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Uncle Sam wants you(r soul).

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't think you're fooling anyone; we know what you are actually doing behind those tinted windows.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
If you were a fruit company, your bananas would be enormous, and your grapes very tangy.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
As flattered as she is that you have memorized her schedule, the fact that you are showing up at class is disturbing.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Even though UMass may not be able to afford a Large Hadron Collider, we do have space-age suction ice cream machines.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You will find a potato chip shaped like Sting's face; no one will care.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Linens and Things; more like Sheets and S--t.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Ask your parents what they were doing between January and March in the year you were born.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Q: Should we encourage the elderly to have more sex? Why not? Discuss.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Tell Pisces to shut it.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You will plan on going to vote for Question 2, but will then decide to go to the Dining Commons instead.

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK BY JOSH SHALEK

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Drop catalogs for cash! Need responsible person with car to drop catalogs in Pioneer Valley, Springfield, and beyond. 10 hrs per day 2 days. postering@artspromo.org

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required: experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S.

EMPLOYMENT

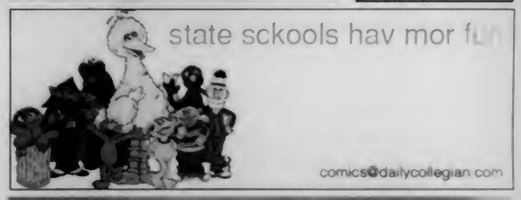
Padre, Florida. Information/ Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.statravel.com.

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Weekends. Apply at D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

Spring Break 09. Work for Sun Splash. Travel Free. www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

ANNOUNCMENT

AFFORDABLE, CONFIDENTIAL, SAFE. Get the care you need at Tapestry Health. Providing birth control, EC, Pregnancy testing, GYN and Breast Exams, HIV counseling and testing, STD Screening and treatment. 27 Pray Street, Amherst MA 413-548-9992 Walk ins welcome



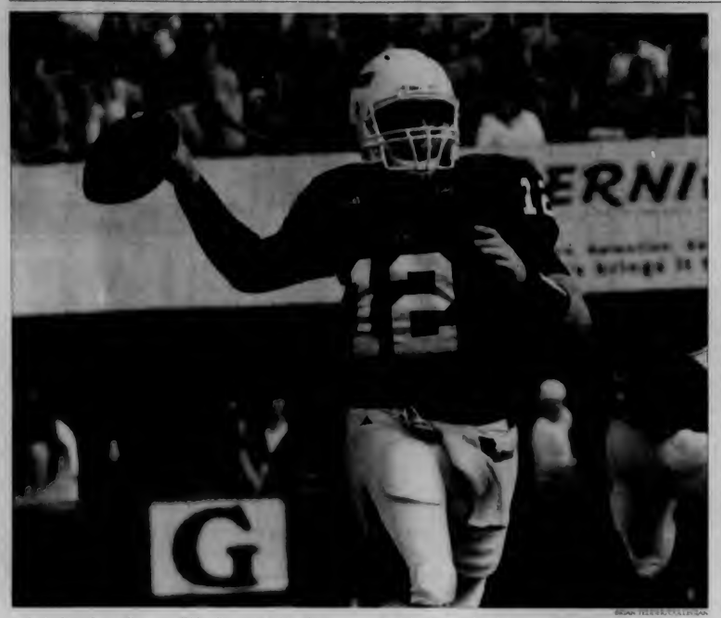
ANNOUNCMENT

Tapestryhealth.org

Three large bedroom Apt. for rent located on Bay Road, Belchertown. 6 miles from Umass. $1000 per month/negotiable. Call Agnes (413)-530-6996.

Montreal Weekends From $99. Complete RoundTrip, Motorcoach. 3 days, 2 nights. Hotel Downtown. For Details MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

Spring Break. Discounts. Free Travel/ Meals. Before Nov. 1. 1800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Senior Liam Coen will oppose a Walter Payton Award Candidate at quarterback for the second week in a row in No. 7 James Madison's Rodney Landers. The Dukes' senior quarterback is a threat to run the ball even more than he is to throw it.

UMass faces No. 7 Dukes

Minutemen play second of three-consecutive road games

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The No. 3 Massachusetts football team has been tested in many ways in its first two games this season.

In Week 1, it faced a strong run game from Albany, and then traveled to Worcester, in Week 2, to face one of the top passing offenses in the Football Championship Subdivision in Holy Cross. Now the Minutemen (2-0) will face a new test as they play their second of three consecutive road games when they take on No. 7 James Madison on Saturday.

UMass faces another strong running game this weekend, but this time from the man under center. For the second week in a row, the Maroon and White defense will have to deal with a Walter Payton Award Candidate in Rodney Landers.

"On offense, it all starts with Landers under center and they have two outstanding running backs in [Eugene] Holloman and [Griff] Yancey," UMass coach Don Brown said during a Colonial Athletic Association conference call. "They have an excellent offensive line and a great core of receivers."

The senior for the Dukes (1-1) is a versatile quarterback who can use both his legs and his arm to make plays. Landers was more of a threat running the ball last year when he ran for 1,273 yards on 223 carries with 12 touchdowns, but was efficient when he had to throw.

Despite attempting only 205 throws, 18 less attempts than he had rushing the ball, the Duke signal caller completed 130 passes, a 634 completion percentage, and threw 13 touchdowns with only five interceptions.

Landers averaged over 100 yards per game on the ground in 2007 and 140 yards through the air, but proved that he had the capability to adapt to a defense and throw more, when he had 300 yards passing against Villanova.

With the return Holloman, a senior tailback who missed 2007 with a knee injury, Landers had been leaving more of the rushing game to him in the first two games of the season. But Holloman, who rushed for over 1,000 yards in his last full season (2006) is listed as doubtful for Saturday's game.

His replacement in 2007 was Yancey, a redshirt who filled in with 6.3 yards per carry on 665 yards and eight touchdowns. He is expected to get the start if Holloman cannot play.

Sophomore Jamal Sullivan is returning after missing the first two weeks with a torn ligament in his left thumb, and is expected to contribute on the ground.

James Madison's running game, whether coming from Landers or one of their many talented tailbacks, starts with its offensive line, which returns four of five starters from last year.

The Minutemen's defense will face a spread offense for the second week in a row; last week it gave up 42 points to Holy Cross.

As for the Dukes defense, they are coming off a solid victory over North Carolina Central University, where they allowed one touchdown. The defense had three sacks, never allowed NCCU to enter the red zone and had a pair of interceptions from senior safety Marcus Haywood.

"We definitely have our hands full on all phases, but our guys are ready and we'll be excited," Brown said.

The Minutemen offense may

See FOOTBALL on page 9

Defense looks to come out at JMU

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last weekend against Holy Cross, the No. 3 Massachusetts football team saw first hand how successful an opposing team's offense could be. The Crusaders ran and passed with ease throughout most of the game. The Minutemen, over the years, have had a reputation for sporting a very stingy defense.

Teetering on the edge in the first two games of the season might have made UMass fans nervous.

Winning by only 12 points to an inferior Albany team and escaping Holy Cross with a last-second field goal might throw up warning signs that maybe this year the defense is not what it used to be.

The Minutemen allowed 28 points in the first half against the Crusaders – the most points allowed in any first half by a UMass team in the Don Brown era. They have constantly missed tackles, dropped interceptions and allowed numerous big plays.

This week against James Madison, the Minutemen, again, don't have an easy task ahead of them. The Dukes' (1-1) Rodney Landers, though listed as a quarterback, acts much more like a running back. Landers gained 1,272 yards last season on the ground and had six 100-yard rushing games using his speed and size (6-foot-1, 220-pounds) and tallied 1,678 passing yards while only throwing five interceptions.

The Minutemen still seem confident in their defense. They stress teamwork combined with a mentality to play the game out to the end.

"The defense we have is pretty good," said UMass cornerback Courtney Robinson. "We need to play together as a group, everyone needs to run to the ball. I think this week the defense will come out, we're just going to grind and put up a big effort."

JMU bases much of its offense on rushing the ball – either by Landers, starting run-

See DEFENSE on page 9

Minutewomen earn first win in shutout at Rudd Field

Ballew nets first-career goal, beats Bulldogs

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Yesterday's game might have felt a little short compared to the Massachusetts women's soccer team's previous three games. That's because it was the first game of the regular season to end in regulation. But even more important for the Minutewomen was ending the game with a 2-0 victory over Bryant.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 2 |
| Bryant | 0 |

The Bulldogs (1-4-0) played with an aggressive offense, bringing as many as five players forward in addition to an attacking defense. The strategy caused a few problems for UMass (1-1-2) as it was forced to end some of its runs prematurely with nine offside calls charged against the Minutewomen.

"I think we were at times perplexed by the highness of the offside line and how often they played it," said UMass coach Jim Rudy. "We're always looking for the through ball and it was hard to build up. I wish we could've gotten in again earlier and locked [the game] up in the first half."

That setback, however, did not influence the overall effect on the game as the Maroon and White capitalized with several open opportunities.

Redshirt senior Vanessa Lima got a breakaway in the opening minutes of the game and had a clear shot, but the Bulldogs blocked it right before she had a chance to set up. Bryant came back on the other end and battled with UMass senior Melissa Toulouse for the ball before goalkeeper Lauren Luckey slid into the ball and ended the play.

Around two minutes later, Patry dribbled past three defenders on a pass from forward Meghan Collins. Patry then kicked a through ball to senior Amy Ballew, who hit a chip-shot in the left part of the net. The goal was Ballew's first career goal and point.

UMass took 13 shots throughout the game with seven of them on goal. The offense was an all-around effort, with five Minutewomen in scoring opportunities.

The Bulldogs stepped up their attack in the second half when back Alex DiPippo took a long shot

See W. SOCCER on page 10

Freshman Meghan Collins pitched in with an assist on UMass' Amy Ballew's first-career goal. The goal gave the Minutewomen an early lead against Bryant, one they never let go of en route to a 2-0 victory.

Senior Prince Ofosu is a scoring threat for the Minutemen, but UMass coach Sam Koch likes him coming off the bench. Ofosu is the teams leading goal scorer (2) despite not getting a start.

Maroon and White look to improve for start of A-10 play

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This weekend is just two more games the Massachusetts men's soccer team is using to prepare for the conference games that begin in October.

The No.13 Minutemen travel to Virginia to play in the Old Dominion STIHL Classic. On Friday, UMass (2-1-0) will play Old Dominion (1-2-1) and Sunday it will take on William & Mary (1-0-0).

UMass has never played either school, but each team brings many skilled players that will challenge the Minutemen throughout the weekend.

Old Dominion has a strong defense, but a much stronger offense with a lot of speed and ball control especially with its two players from Cameroon – forward Ambane Emmanuel and midfielder Nane Joseph. The Minutemen need to make sure they are aware of where those players are on the field.

This season the Monarchs have played challenging opponents and struggled through their games, a stretch that affected their on-field chemistry.

"They aren't gelling right now, but there is only a matter of time before they do, we just hope its not this week," said UMass coach Sam Koch.

William & Mary has only played one game this season (other scheduled games have been cancelled due to Hurricane Hanna) – an advantage for the Minutemen who have played three games this season. Though the Tribe hasn't played as many games, they still have a strong midfield that will challenge the Minutemen's defense.

"We have to be aware of them, track them, don't give them time and space on the ball. We have to make sure we don't give them time to play,

See ATLANTIC 10 on page 10

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI ○ H:39 | SAT ⛅ H:28 | SUN 🌧 H:33 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2008

Capturing water

Engineers without Borders helps to bring element to African village.

BY MATT ROCHELEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When asked what stood out most during their recent volunteer work in Kenya, Christina Stauber and Patrick Border paused for a moment.

It's not that nothing came to mind, rather, they could not immediately choose from their inventory of special moments.

A University of Massachusetts graduate student in environmental engineering, Stauber served as the team leader for an Engineers Without Borders (EWB) student chapter that spent three weeks in July improving drinking water for a rural farming village in the Namawanga area of western Kenya.

Joining her and undergraduate Border, were graduate student Amanda Keyes, undergraduate Patrick Westropp, recent graduates Thomas Chase and Christopher Arsenault, professor of civil and environmental engineering John Tobiason, and professional mentor David Bakuli. Bakuli is a native of western Kenya who knows the local language. He earned his doctorate in industrial engineering from UMass in 1993 and now teaches at Westfield State College.

The trip was the third time the EWB chapter has sent a group to this location as part of the Kenya Water Program. The chapter's goal is to eventually provide a self-sufficient, reliable water supply for over 3,000 people. In this area, crops like sugarcane, sweet potatoes and corn are prominent, but lack clean water sources.

Villagers sometimes walk over two miles to find a source for water, which, if not dry, is often contaminated with animal or human waste. Households can spend as many as five hours in one day getting water.

Overall, Stauber felt the trip was successful in improving the villagers' situation.

"We hit all of our components and goals," she said, which included performing health surveys, educating students about clean water, working on construction projects and measuring the water quality of spring boxes. The spring boxes allow shallow groundwater in the hill to collect behind a concrete structure and pour out of pipes, where the water can be obtained.

Construction was focused on building another spring box and improving some projects done by EWB in past visits.

"The work we had done the previous year was well maintained in some places and not so well maintained in others," said Tobiason, who had also gone on the January 2007 trip.

Namely, wooden fence posts installed to protect the spring boxes had rotted or been knocked over by livestock. The group built new fences and mended old ones using steel posts held by concrete.

Although there was work to be done, the trip was also about interacting with the people of Namawanga.

"They are possibly some of the friendliest people I've ever met in my life," said Border.

"While one of us was working, the other would often be found taking pictures

See KENYA on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIV
ISSUE 9

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Waszczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COMICS EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Garber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenswaike
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mulholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kozwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Waxman
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cernak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALUMNI LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN MEMBERSHIP SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson
COPY EDITOR
Lucas Correia
PRODUCTION TEAM
Michael Sarkes, Paula Lavalle

Group offers Kenya a hand

KENYA from page 1

and giggling with the children in the village, making sure to display the pictures after taking them so that people could see what they looked like on the camera," reads the group's blog.

The group got to experience the Kenyan culture, eating foods like ugali, mashed bananas, rice, chipati and chicken. Both Tobiason and Stauber felt the villagers were very hospitable and kept everyone well fed.

"The food was excellent. I can't eat the D.C. food anymore after eating there," Border said.

Though the Kenyans spoke English – in addition to Swahili and their local language Bukusu – the difference in accents, as well as culture, made communication difficult at times, said Stauber.

Stauber recalls work being done on a spring box while her group was preparing to pour concrete for fence posts. A villager named Patrick was digging a deep trench and Bakuli was chopping wood. What stood out for Stauber was how cool it was to watch a group with such unique backgrounds working together.

As she described it, she was in Kenya alongside Americans, Kenyans and Bakuli who was returning to his native Kenya from America. Everyone was "putting their whole hearts into the work," said Stauber.

The proudest moment for Border was watching the water begin to come through the pipes on the spring box the group constructed.

"The best thing was to see the work we actually did pull through," he said.

Stauber said another special moment for her was reading the thank you notes given to them by a Kenyan man before the group left. One woman showed thanks by giving the group painted gourds.

Despite the Kenyans' thanks, the group knows there is more to be done. Their main objective is to drill a permanent well, said Stauber, but the group is $8,000 shy of the $20,000 needed.

According to Stauber and Tobiason, the EWB will be returning to the village next year, though no date has been picked. Stauber said several of the most recent group's members, including her and Border, plan to go on the next trip.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@student.umass.edu

UM RSOs join forces to remember

By Kat Manser
Collegian Staff

On the seventh anniversary of the deadliest terrorist attack on our nation's soil, in which more than 3,000 lives were lost, the University of Massachusetts Republican Club and other student organizations came together to remember the victims.

Organizers prepared for the event late Tuesday night when they planted 268 flags into the Student Union lawn. Members of the Republican Club, UMass Democrats, Student Alliance for Israel and the Muslim Students Association collected donations at a table set up in front of the display on Wednesday and Thursday.

According to Republican Club President Greg Collins, the nonpartisan and apolitical event, which occurred in past years, is unique this year because of collaboration with other groups.

Collins said he hoped the event would "recognize our eternal bond as human beings," while memorializing the 9/11 victims, "promoting common values as Americans" and creating opportunities to collect donations for disabled veterans.

In addition to the flag display, a moment of silence at 6:00 p.m. on Thursday honored the victims of the tragedy. The rally culminated afterwards with a 7:00 p.m. showing of the 2006 film "World Trade Center" in the Campus Center.

"It was a simple and respectful way of commemorating the lives of those who died seven years ago," said freshman Noah Simes, who attended the rally. However, he felt that it was "unclear" that the effort was nonpartisan.

Students could be seen pausing in front of the flag display, reflecting on where they were at the time of the attack and how they were affected.

Maggie Clayton, a first year student, remembered being in her world history class.

"We got called to an all-school assembly in the wooden gym. I was in the bleachers as they explained that two planes had flown into buildings in New York," recalled Clayton. A sixth grader then, Clayton remembers seeing crying eighth graders without fully understanding what had occurred. She remembers going home and speaking with her parents and seeing the destruction on the news.

According to a U.S. Department of State fact sheet published in 2002, the 9/11 terrorist attacks took the lives of people from more than 90 countries around the world. The attacks included casualties on four planes (Flights 11, 177, 75, 93), 125 deaths in the Pentagon, and upwards of 2,800 lost in the World Trade Center. Like many Americans, Clayton grappled with the question of, "what could make someone do something like that?"

Freshman Emily White remembers being in her sixth grade class.

"We didn't see the TV [news] at school. They didn't tell us anything. I came home, and my mom was there. I saw the TV then, and found out what had happened."

Commenting on the clearness of her memory, White stated a sentiment shared by so many on the UMass campus, "9/11 is one of those days that you'll forever remember with perfect clarity."

Kat Manser can be reached at kmanser@student.umass.edu

RSO Teaches Discipline, Builds

Parkour shows the art in movement

By Phil Donahue

At the Haigis Mall every Tuesday and Thursday night, a group of students gather to practice a modern art form and discipline known as Parkour. Parkour, sometimes called "PK," for short, involves those who practice known as traceurs and traceuses, moving from one point to another as efficiently as they can.

Parkour came to be in France in the late 1990s and was founded by French actor David Belle. The point of practicing Parkour is to be able to overcome obstacles in emergency situations using one's body. It can be practiced in rural and urban areas alike. Practitioners aim to be as fast and efficient as possible.

In English, Parkour literally means "the art of movement." Belle and his friend Hubert Kounde derived the term from the French phrase "parcours du combatant," which is a classic method of military training. Philosophy within the craft is the reason the activity is more than a sport or hobby and can be referred to as a discipline. The moves that male traceurs and female traceuses perform seem mind-boggling.

In recent years, the discipline has dug its way from an underground culture to mainstream media. It has been featured in two of Madonna's music videos, "Jump" and "Hung Up" and in blockbuster films "Casino Royale" (2006) and "Wanted" (2008).

The UMass Parkour Club was founded by senior journalism major Jackie Hai, and became a registered student organization in the Spring 2008 semester. The documentary "Jump London" was Hai's first exposure to Parkour and sparked her interest in learning it. She has trained with New England Parkour in Boston during her summers before bringing it to UMass.

"Some friends and I wanted to train together and get others into it as well," Hai says. "We decided that forming [a Registered Student Organization] would be the best route for clearing up misconceptions about Parkour and making sure UMass officials wouldn't bar our practicing on campus."

"Simply put, Parkour is defined as the discipline of overcoming obstacles in one's path using only the human body," Hai says.

The UMass Parkour Club's training, according to Hai, is "quite structured" and involves a warm-up, a high-intensity conditioning workout, stretching and some time

See Parkour on page 5

Yair Schatz, an experienced member of the Parkour Club, demonstrates techniques to the newer members outside the Franklin DC at last night meet.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Worship and Praise
10 a.m.
Every Sunday
Morning

North Congregational Church
United Church of Christ

Corner of Pine & N. Pleasant Streets at the traffic light in North Amherst 549-0500
north-church.org

A Safe Place for all God's People
Unconditionally Welcoming
Decidedly Christian Open and Affirming

Confidence

Parkour from page 4

at the end to work on technique.

Parkour is not all work and no play. Once or twice a month, the club hosts regional jams on Saturday afternoons. These meets are less formal. The club goes to multiple spots on campus for people to explore and play around on.

Ken Scriboni, vice president of the club, says that Parkour is heavily rooted in philosophical thinking.

"The thing to remember about PK though is it's not necessarily the stuff people see on YouTube," says Scriboni. "I would say the most important parts of Parkour are not the physical pieces but the mental aspects of the sport."

Hai says there are two important mottos in Parkour: "etre et durer" [to be and to last] and "etre fort pour etre utile" [be strong to be useful].

She explained that they apply the first motto to their training, which focuses on whole-body conditioning and steady progression. The goal of Parkour is to create durable, complete athletes who know how to take care of their bodies and avoid injuries.

Although it sounds like one has to be a finely conditioned athlete to join, the club members represent all fitness levels and can join throughout the year.

The second motto regards the life application of Parkour. Ultimately, they train to be prepared to handle any situation in life.

"I've gained confidence and an open-minded attitude to trying new things over the years I've been practicing Parkour," Hai says.

"PK can be tough! It takes a lot of strength to climb and jump over walls, to balance yourself on railings, and to be running between all of those," Scriboni says.

UMass freshman Travis Swain is one of the training mentors.

"Being liberated from the normal paths of life is very exhilarating," Swain says. "It's not as if we are trying to rebel against the paths society has placed for us, but to explore and interact with new paths."

Hai believes that practicing Parkour can help one develop a real sense of empowerment, knowing one can navigate the world on his or her own terms.

"I came to realize that much of Parkour is about letting go of fear," says Hai.

If you have aspirations to become a fearless traceur, or want to feel like a super-hero for a few hours a day, joining the UMass Parkour Club should be on your agenda after saving the world, of course.

Phil Donahue can be reached at pdonahue@student.umass.edu

UMass Sophomore and vice president of UMass Parkour Club Ken Scriboni leads warmups yesterday at the Haigis Mall.

YOU CAN'T MAKE UP YOUR INTERVIEW

After-grad careers, part-time jobs, and internships.
START BUILDING

cbcAmpus.com

EDITORIAL OPINION

Clean up your activism

Matthew M. Robare

This year has been a good year for environmentalism. Wacky weather has been factored into the global warming — excuse me, global climate change — theory, the Discovery Channel wrapped a glacier in a blanket, and any dissent from the established dogma continues to be burned at the stake without even so much as a formal argument between the scientists. The inquisitors, at least, tended to use logic to argue the heretics out of their heresy before putting them on trial.

Despite all the rhetoric about the environment, the trash still piles up on the ground around here. For some incomprehensible reason, fighting the global environmental catastrophe has never included actually putting trash in trash cans outside of Green-Up Day. Seeing MassPIRG pamphlets strewn all across the ground is one of the most ironic sights I've ever seen.

The sheer hypocrisy of it is staggering. Most people on campus at least sympathize with environmentalism even if they're not fellow travelers themselves, and yet they can't be troubled to "do their part" and throw their trash away.

I have never suffered from this deficiency and am not convinced that the universe will be destroyed unless we agree to kill 4 billion people so we can return to so-called "sustainable" agriculture and similar pro-environment and anti-human practices. Therefore, I have been wondering exactly why I can refrain from littering while others cannot.

The answer lies in a familiar theme for me — property rights. As an anarcho-capitalist libertarian, I have an enormous respect for property rights. I believe that the owner of something has the absolute right of disposal over it – the owner and the owner only can decide what to do with his or her property.

The owner's neighbors or the owner's government have no say in the decision. A vast majority of people value clean lawns over lawns filled with trash; hence, the property owners decide not to allow people to litter on their property and we end up with anti-litter laws.

Now, there is the key. I respect the absolute right of disposal in all cases (except movie theaters that don't let you bring candy in, but I digress), but here in very leftist Massachusetts, property rights are tenuous and what you can do with your property depends on neighbors and governments. So, the kind of respect that I've developed on my own does not really exist here.

It's assumed that others will take care of pollution and the environment. The majority must only speak out and others will take care of the problem. This attitude, which is by no means limited to Massachusetts or even left liberals, is best exemplified by the commercial that appeals to "our leaders" to solve energy problems.

If the country's – and even the world's – energy and environmental problems are to be solved, it is important that individuals take responsibility more than ever instead of abdicating it to others. Only as individuals, and in particular as consumers, can significant changes ever occur.

As long as there's a demand for gas-guzzlers and non-biodegradable packaging, any government action will only make things worse. Resources will be forced into unwanted goods and prices will rise. Federal monies for ethanol have already driven up food prices, making starvation a greater risk in poorer countries. The ethanol, for which the demand is mostly artificial, takes land away from food production. Furthermore, some 30 years of research has shown that ethanol would not be the wisest alternative fuel choice.

Informed consumer demand, however, has already led most grocery and chain stores to sell reusable cloth or canvas bags and to discourage plastic ones. Consumer demand has all but ruined the American automobile industry in favor of smaller, more fuel efficient Japanese cars – not to mention the hybrid imports and Honda's investment in hydrogen fuel.

America is supposed to be a democracy. A democracy where the citizens have abdicated their freedom, their responsibilities, and their option of choice to their leaders is no longer a democracy.

History is not made, as Thomas Carlyle believed, by the actions of the great, nor as Marx believed – by a mystical dialectic. History is made by the enormous amounts of decisions everyone makes. For those who believe that our planet is in danger, don't wait for Captain Planet – rise to the challenge of the ages on your own.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

If the country's – and even the world's – energy and environmental problems are to be solved, it is important that individuals take responsibility more than ever instead of abdicating it to others.

China's singing scandal

China has a reputation for keeping information under wraps.

From killer diseases to manufacturing slip-ups, the Chinese government has always taken extreme measures to keep their citizens and the international community in the dark.

Shruti Sehgal

So when the International Olympic Committee insisted that the Chinese authorities provide full media access during the Beijing Olympics this past August, the hosting country toiled away to orchestrate a performance that would makeover its damaged world image.

Part of the act included booting a 7-year-old girl from the stage for her plump face and buck teeth.

Yang Peiyi was supposed to perform the Chinese national anthem "Hymn to the Motherland" at the Beijing Olympics opening ceremony. At a dress rehearsal before the event, however, a senior official of the Chinese Politburo deemed Peiyi "not cute enough" to present at the show, and requested a sudden change. A replacement for the tiny singer was found in 9-year-old TV star Lin Miaoke, who lip-synched the song to a pre-recording of Peiyi's voice at the ceremony. And that is how China made a fresh debut on the world stage.

What makes matters worse is the grueling fact that the Chinese government prioritizes the well-being of its citizens well below its concern for outward appearances.

To add salt to the wound, Chinese authorities planned to keep the last minute switch a secret. Filmmaker Zhang Yimou, the ceremony's director, played along with the charade – despite being fully aware of the replacement. Yimou's quote, "She [Miaoke] is a lovely girl and she sings well," appears on the Beijing organizing committee's Web site.

Even Chinese TV broadcasts, radio talks and newspapers poured over Miaoke, calling her the latest musical sensation. CNN reported an article in the China Daily newspaper that read "Tiny singer wins heart of nation" without ever pointing out that Miaoke was not the actual singer.

Granted, it is possible that these sources were unaware of the switch. However, given that the state operates all realms of media – this allowance seems unlikely.

Thanks to the ceremony's musical director, Chen Qigang, Peiyi's talents were at the very least recognized. In an interview with the Beijing radio, Qigang explained that he felt the need to "come out with the truth."

"The little girl [Peiyi] is a magnificent singer. She doesn't deserve to be hidden," he said.

Had Qigang not publicly revealed the swap, Chinese and international audiences would have, once again, remained oblivious to the ongoings behind the government's set. Qigang's efforts are therefore commendable, even if his justification for the change is not. "The reason was for the national interest," he said.

To an extent, Qigang's claim rings true. With all of its negative press to recover from, the Chinese government needed to use the Beijing Olympics to improve its reputation and display its turning wheels of modernism and democracy.

But instead of reflecting admirable changes, this musical scandal portrays the communist state as still being dishonest and closed-minded. It goes without saying that the Chinese government is not yet prepared to allow the world to see China's very essence.

What makes matters worse is the grueling fact that the Chinese government prioritizes the well-being of its citizens well below its concern for outward appearances. The senior official who demanded the adjustment did not even consider the effect his decision would have on the two children involved.

Chinese retail worker Luo Shang in Beijing captures part of it: "This damages the reputation of both kids for their future, especially the one lip-synching. Now everyone knows she's a fraud, who cares if she's cute?" Though Miaoke attained success with her performance, her credibility in the TV industry may suffer from these poor domestic opinions. As a child, how is she to handle such emotionally scarring criticism?

The same goes for Peiyi, who, in all honesty, bears the brunt of it all. Though the darling girl told China Central Television that she was honored to have her voice used, she may not pursue her singing for fear of her looks. This awful possibility is made so much worse by her musical potential, and incidentally, her sweet, totally normal face.

At the least, several Chinese populations are outraged that the girls were used and abused to enhance the nation's image. Many have been voicing their opinions on blogs and articles. Even Miaoke's father Lin Hua insisted to China Daily that, "in my opinion, she [Peiyi] was not ugly. She looks cute."

Comments such as these offer some refuge from the stern grip the government has over the society.

Still, these criticisms cannot undo the damage. So while China did make a truly impressive spectacle out of the Beijing Olympics, its tremendous efforts hardly reflect the state's intentions, and can certainly not give good reason for the senior official's excessive and cruel decision.

As for now, Chinese Politburo, hold off on any encores.

Shruti Sehgal is a Collegian Columnist. She can be reached at ssehgal@student.umass.edu.

"Fauxminism" versus feminism

Like corpses from graves, hordes of outraged feminists rose out of irrelevancy last week to weigh in on the Sarah Palin fiasco.

Alana Goodman

Palin's experience and intelligence has been criticized by Democrats since she was tapped as John McCain's running mate last month. But instead of defending Palin against sexist attacks, or commending her as the first female Republican vice presidential nominee, feminist groups like the National Organization for Women (NOW) have eagerly led the most recent ambushes against her.

NOW Chair Kim Gandy scoffed at the idea of women voting for Palin, calling her "a woman who opposes women's rights," and citing that Palin "had to withdraw her appointment of a top public safety commissioner who had been reprimanded for sexual harassment." Without even seeing the irony, Gandy's next paragraph is a ringing endorsement of Hillary Clinton, who, as we all know, has no connection whatsoever to any sexual harassers.

Washington Post columnist Sally Quinn also sparked controversy for questioning whether Palin could juggle the demands of parenting with the demands of the vice presidency — an issue which has not been raised about the male candidates. "A woman with five children, including one with special needs…probably has got to rethink her priorities. I believe it's going to be very difficult for her. I think this is too much," she fumed on the CBS Early Show. Quinn then calmed herself with some smelling salts, stepped into her Motorwagon, and rode back to her home in 1908.

The hypocritical treatment of Palin by so-called feminists has confirmed what conservative women have known all along – they're nothing but a bunch of frauds.

Feminists have an opportunity to elect a strong, intelligent and capable woman into the second highest office in the country, and they're fighting it tooth and nail. Call it Clarence Thomas Syndrome. Call it "fauxminism." It's clear the "women's rights" groups don't want all women to be successful – just the women who play along with their left-wing agenda.

On the Los Angeles Times opinion page, that old dinosaur Gloria Steinem dragged out her cache of obsolete phrases to label Palin a puppet of the "right-wing patriarchs," as opposed to the pro-women Democratic party of Bill Clinton, John Edwards, and Eliot Spitzer. She went on to attack Palin's womanhood, saying "Palin's value to the patriarchs is clear…she opposes just about every issue which women support by a majority or plurality."

According to Steinem, "real" women oppose creationism, Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR) drilling and gun rights, and approve of abortion, the Fair Pay Act and stem-cell research.

The hypocritical treatment of Palin by so-called feminists has confirmed what conservative women have known all along – they're nothing but a bunch of frauds.

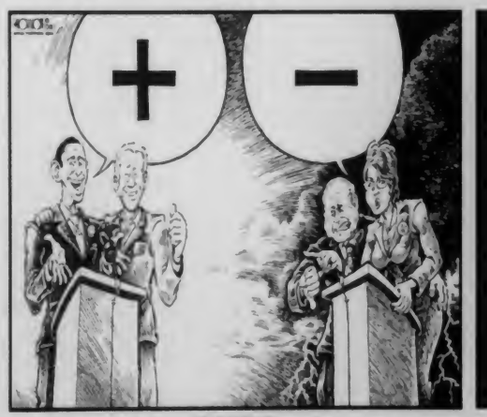
I understand that Ms. Steinem has been tucked away in a shoe box for the last 15 years, but is she really so out of touch that she believes all women vote as a single, homogeneous group? Sorry to break it to you Gloria Steinem, but you don't speak for American women – unless these women are using terms like "sexual caste system" and "gynocide" in everyday conversation.

It would surprise readers how few of the Steinem-proclaimed "women's issues" are not supported by the majority of American females. For example, according to a 2003 CBS News and New York Times poll, 61% of women think that abortion should either be limited more strictly or banned completely.

By Steinem's standards, these women are traitors to their gender, along with the forenothers of feminism. Susan B. Anthony and Elizabeth Cady Stanton. Anthony and Stanton viewed abortion as infanticide, and fought to reduce the need for such procedures. In 1896, Stanton wisely proclaimed, "When a woman destroys the life of her unborn child, it is a sign that, by education or circumstances, she has been greatly wronged."

If Susan B. Anthony were running for Vice President today, would she be barred from the Oprah Winfrey Show, too?



It's easy to see why feminists like Steinem believe that the vast majority of women vote similarly on all of the issues. These women are Ivy League feminists, their viewpoints honed by years in the women's studies departments of our country's most prestigious – and radically left-wing – universities, where questioning the orthodox is frowned upon and dissenting opinion is unheard of.

Their elitism is obvious. In a New York Times opinion piece feminist Maureen Dowd giggles at the thought of a Palin vice presidency, sneering, "Obama may have been president of The Harvard Law Review, but Palin graduated from the University of Idaho with a minor in poli-sci." Ouch. That's condescension you can believe in.

The reason for the feminists' inconsistent and moronic jabs at Governor Palin is that they have been caught off-guard, and can't seem to figure out how to attack her. They're desperately grasping for their familiar weapon to bludgeon the Republicans – "sexist" and "chauvinistic" – and finding that it no longer exists. Somewhere in between their exclusive San Francisco fundraisers and their self-righteous blustering on MSNBC, the feminists failed to notice the slow and steady trickle. Nancy Reagan, Elizabeth Dole, Condoleezza Rice, Mary Matalin, Carly Fiorina, Kay Bailey Hutchison and now Sarah Palin. The Democratic monopoly on powerful women has been over for a long, long time.

The "fauxministas" are shaking in their Louboutins.

Alana Goodman is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at opendiscussion@student.umass.edu.

THE DIFFERENCE

Opinions are sexy.

Show me your wits.

Write for ed/op.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

ARTS & LIVING

Campus conquest

New game mixes reality and Internet

Morgan Meagher
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This past Tuesday saw the start of a new kind of game for the University of Massachusetts community. Go Cross Campus, or GXC for short, is a hybrid type of competition, combining online gaming with real life interaction. GXC was created last year by four students from Yale and one from Cornell. It has gone from roughly 40 locations last year to hundreds this semester.

The game is played out on a detailed map of the UMass campus, split into 104 territories, most of them individual buildings. Each territory is controlled by a randomly assigned team at the start of the game. For instance, the North team controls the Student Union, Webster and Field, and Central controls Dickinson and Grayson. The only team to control buildings in its own residential area is the Southwest team, which has dominion over Mackimmie and 10A.

Players join a team but move independently. For UMass's GXC tournament, the teams are divided by residential areas: North, Northeast, Sylvan, Orchard Hill, Central and Southwest. There are also two off-campus teams: North Amherst and South Amherst.

Upon starting up with the Go Cross Campus Web site, the player picks a game to play then joins a team. The next decision the player faces is where to start playing. Players put themselves in any territory belonging to their team. The game consists of turns, each lasting about a day. The first few turns are for recruitment. There is no attacking during these turns. Once the conquest mode begins, players log in once each turn to move across the board or make attacks. The game plays out like a more complex online version of the classic board game Risk.

Players gather energy each turn, which is then spent on moving across the board and doing battle. Players attack opponents in order to take over the territory occupied by those opponents. The winner of the battle is decided by which player has more energy, although the ratio is weighted towards the defending unit. Defeated players retreat to the closest territory controlled by their team. The game continues until one team completes the quest for campus-wide domination by conquering the entire map.

Upon logging into the Go Cross Campus Web site, registered players are presented with the game map, along with links to execute or edit their own orders for the current turn. It is also possible to chat with teammates or everyone playing the game via different message boards. Players can elect team leaders, flag spies and view team standings on the site. In order to access the UMass game, students must search specifically for "University of Massachusetts." Searches for "UMass" or "Amherst" will yield no results.

The goal of Go Cross Campus is to combine online gaming and real-life involvement. Ideally, teammates will meet up in person to discuss strategies and goals. Players can spy on other teams by acting as double agents, ostensibly playing for one team in real life, and actually playing for another in the game itself.

The current low player counts may be attributable to the lack of advertising around campus after two days, a scant 27 students are registered North Amherst and Southwest have the most with seven players each. Although few people are involved at this point, the game is open to anyone and everyone at UMass, and students can join even after the designated recruitment turns are finished. Go Cross Campus is meant to be as accessible as possible. Sean Mishra, one of the Go Cross Campus co-founders, explains that the goal is to "open up the world of college competition through tournaments based on highly social game play, fueled by team spirit and competitive rivalries."

Go Cross Campus comes on the heels of Humans vs. Zombies, and while Go Cross Campus is similar in that it is a kind of tournament anyone can join, the differences between the two are stark. Although there is opportunity for real-world interaction in Go Cross Campus, the game is played mostly online, and the "real life" portion is up to ambitious players to organize. Conversely, Humans vs. Zombies is a primarily physical game, with some of the technical aspects taking place on the Internet. The action of Humans vs. Zombies takes place whenever a player is out and about, while GXC players only move once every day or so. This makes Go Cross Campus more accessible to students who don't have a lot of time and energy to spend on the competition, are not as physically inclined, or have little to no desire to be pelted with marshmallows and old socks, but who still want to take part in a campus-wide game.

Morgan Meagher can be reached at mmeagher@student.umass.edu

Dan Goitein (above) will be joined by other jazz musicians this Friday at the Basement in Northampton.

Local musicians jam out

Basement offers dynamic setting

Jon Stahl

For years now, The Basement in Northampton on Friday nights has been a spot for local and sometimes widely regarded, musicians to assemble and play. Despite The Basement's elusive location, the tradition continues to thrive.

The Friday Night Jazz performances are free to the public. The show begins around 10 p.m. and ends early in the morning. The reason the shows start later than most is because unlike rock or pop concerts, Friday nights at The Basement deliberately cater to a crowd that want to come and go as they please.

The majority of people that attend these live shows are looking for a refuge, to escape the stresses of work or home. Its lounge layout promotes relaxation and tranquility. The Basement parallels the texture of velvet, where cocktail jazz and quiet background music are embraced. Down-tempo vibes from the Friday night kickback sessions are put to the forefront.

The Basement is part of the Iron Horse Entertainment Group. Performers at the other venues – Iron Horse, Calvin Theater, Pearl Street – are often known to stop in after their sets. These dignitaries are also another allurement of The Basement.

Some jazz musicians like 1982 UMass Alum Dan Goitein (who will be taking the stage tonight) and a few of his friends have become well-known at The Basement. Since the start of Live Jazz Fridays four years ago, Goatein has played over 225 shows and doesn't seem to want to stop anytime soon. "I used to play in a jazz duo in a few restaurants. This isn't high art music. We all have day jobs." When Goitein isn't performing he fathers five children, while working as an accountant, mobile service technician and owner of a large franchise.

Many of the patrons that go to The Basement on Friday evenings happen to be musicians themselves. When mainstays like Goitein and long-time accompanists John Trankshaw (drummer) and George Phoutte (organ and baby grand pianist) perform, these guests occasionally contribute to the show. Anyone able to incorporate his or her talents into the show is politely welcomed to do so. Friday evenings are known to be full of free improvisations and the unexpected.

When more popular musicians like guitarist Burt Teague or Cicet Santucci, a trumpet player that contributed to the

See JAZZ on page 10

Metallica returns to form

Back to the basics with new album

Michael Toomey
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Metallica fans weren't happy with 2003's "St. Anger," the group's last full-length studio album. Nor were they happy with "Some Kind of Monster," a documentary about the three core band members undergoing group therapy to save the life of a band barely hanging on, which yielded "St. Anger." Most people complain that "St. Anger" doesn't sound like Metallica. It turns out the guys in Metallica agree, but they also say the album's difficult music was a necessary step to regain their strength as both people and a band.

Metallica releases "Death Magnetic" today. First of all, "Death Magnetic" sounds like a heavy metal album. Unquestionably, this is a thesis statement on metal, and it sounds like they researched Metallica's catalog extensively. On "Cyanide," the chugging chorus might recall a similar groove from "Blackened" on 1988's "And Justice for All." A section of "The Judas Kiss" builds on the simmering intro to the ubiquitous "Enter Sandman." The chorus of "All Nightmare Long" has remnants of "The Four Horsemen" or something off the group's first album, 1984's "Kill 'Em All."

Even with elements of the band's past plainly evident, the tunes are far from uninspired rehash. The riffs have that muscular swagger of classic Metallica, but are a bit leaner and simpler than before, packing a mean, modern-sounding punch. The album is largely bare of some of Metallica's more indulgent leanings, like layering a dozen acoustic guitars a la "Battery," or playing a four minute song twice with a solo in the middle. And "Justice for All" instead of adding pretty flourishes to their attack on Death Magnetic, Metallica mostly choose to go directly for the throat.

Metallica front man James Hetfield now a sober, devoted father, sounds just as fierce as he did in 1989. His vocals have all the snarl and bite of the meanest, most forcefully commanding Hetfield of the past. His successful bouts of therapy haven't kept him from writing grim lyrics. "Suicide, I've already died, you're just the funeral I've been waiting for."

Lead guitarist Kirk Hammett's playing needs special mention in any discussion about "Death Magnetic." Hammett didn't solo in "St. Anger" at all, and was criticized harshly by fans and reviewers alike. As might be expected from a band with a lot to prove, Metallica leaves plenty of room in "Death Magnetic's" song structures for Hammett to shred his heart out. What might not be expected is for Hammett to play better than ever before, the leads on "Death" range from futuristic, laser-beam fast runs warped with wah pedal, to that delicate, lyrical playing Hammett has used in fan-favorite solos like "Fade to Black" and "One."

For a band accused of turning "soft" when "metal" is part of their name, this album bears a lot of personal significance to the members of the group. From the relentless thrash-metal riffing in "My Apocalypse" and the aptly-titled pummeling of "Broken, Beat and Scarred," you can almost hear Hetfield and Hammett saying to each other, "Hey, we wrote 'Master of Puppets.' We used to be the biggest, baddest metal band in the world. They might have forgotten who they were for about a decade, but the guys in Metallica have since remembered their glory days, and it sounds like they want them back.

Death Magnetic is an unrelenting, numbed and catchy manifesto of what Metallica does best.

Michael Toomey can be reached at mtoomey@student.umass.edu

DiFranco back strong

Parenting brings on new outlook

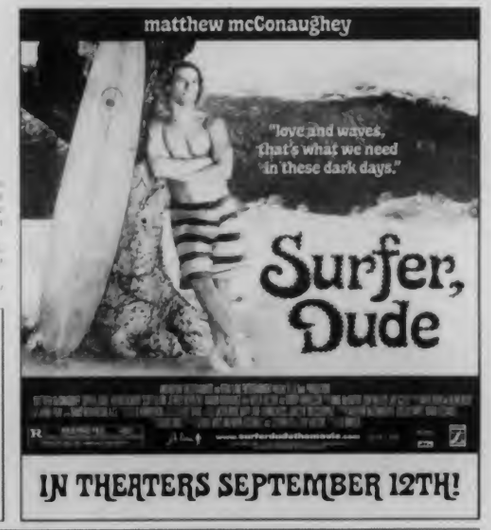
By Alex Tillotson
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

While both her sound and style have transformed since the release of her self-titled, debut album in 1990, Ani DiFranco's upcoming album and 20 release, "Red Letter Year," (September 30, Righteous Babe Records) delivers a mix of 12 tracks with punchy vocals backed by intriguingly simplistic instrumentals, which is exactly what one might expect from the seasoned recording veteran. With 18 years of professional experience under her belt and her first child, DiFranco shows the audience a different side of herself, one that has not readily been expressed in some of her previous work. It's a change that is, in many ways, inevitable.

The opening and title track, "Red Letter Year," features the Rebirth Brass Band of New Orleans, which is also where the album was recorded. The sounds of the band and the calming mix of guitar and piano melodies eventually lead into an upbeat mix of synthesized vocals and firm percussion. An unexpected twist is presided in the form of militia band sounding instrumentals accompanying lyrics such as "and representing the white race, a man with a monkey for a face is flying over in a helicopter, whistling Dixie and playing dumb."



The song ends in a way that eliminates the need for anymore, "they're gonna show the truth on TV," a clear stab at the country's current state and its exposure in the media. DiFranco's opening selection sets the tone for the rest of the album.

Taking two years off to produce both album and child has given DiFranco a fresh new subject to focus on: her daughter, Petah Lucia. In "Present Infant," a track about the joys of motherhood and the confirmation that there is more to life than just the physical, DiFranco admits, "always glaring into mirrors, mad I don't look better, but now here's this tiny baby and they say she looks just like me…love is all over the place, there's nothing wrong with your face."

In an interview for the May/June issue of Mothering magazine, DiFranco said, "It's taught me to be more patient, to stop doing and start being. Resisting change is an automatic human response, but I need to change. This is a beautiful one, and I'm going with it." It seems, so far, that she has done just this. By focusing on something that nearly any woman can relate to, DiFranco is able to express how giving

See DiFranco on page 10

Free concerts on Fridays

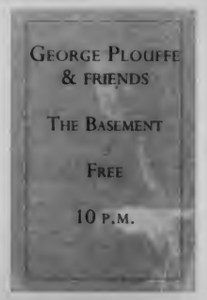
JAZZ from page 8

soundtrack of the 2004 movie "Cold Mountain," come into The Basement, the stereotypical sophistication that draws people away from jazz is lost. Most of the tunes heard are jazz standards so crowd participation is common. Because of this, the pretenses about jazz music are minimal. You can catch Teague at The Basement on October 3.

People from different places can flock to The Basement without any reservations to witness this small-town jazz subculture.



"It is our social scene. We strive to keep an ambiance atmosphere. It is very loose," said Gotein.

UMass Music Professor Theodore Brown often sends his students specifically interested in jazz studies to The Basement to see performances. In the course Music 103 "History of Jazz," it is mandatory for his students to review one live jazz show. "The atmosphere at The Basement is intimate. They [his students] can actually talk to the musicians. They are able to ask important questions to help them better understand the music," said Brown.

Another local figure in the closely-knit music scene is Ellen Cogen, a fellow UMass Alum. Cogen gained a love for music while attending UMass, and later went on to receive a Master's degree from The New England Conservatory of Music. When Cogen performs at Live Jazz Fridays, she adds a feminine flare to a genre of music dominated by men. Cogen keeps busy in the Pioneer Valley, Holyoke, South Hadley, Westfield, Sunderland and more. She will be making her visit to The Basement on September 26 at 9 p.m.

For more details on The Basement's schedule of performers, visit lheg.com. On the site, one can view biographies of local and national artists that are scheduled to perform.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu

We Tackle College Football!
UMass vs. JMU
Saturday, 3.30pm on Channel 188 or online at CN8.tv cn8 — comcast network comcast

Ani DiFranco explores new themes and genres on her new album, released September 30.

New disc explores genres

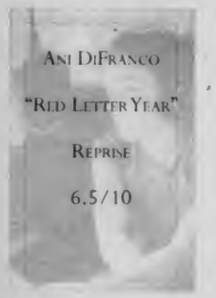
DiFranco from page 9

birth and becoming a mother has enabled her to see past the vanities of everyday life and enjoy the simple things.



"Smiling Underneath" provides a constant, supporting tempo which parallels the song's description of the constancy and support of the singer's lover. Describing a myriad of not-so-pleasant situations, "stuck in traffic for over a week with a car full of quintuplets who are all cutting teeth," DiFranco responds with a cool and collected, "I don't mind ...I'd be smiling underneath ...long as I'm with you." "Way Tight" is an instrumentally light and airy song that acts as both a compliment and a confirmation of her love for this person. The lyrics "and baby there's no other place I'd rather be than here," follow the instrumentation, creating a duo that blends to form the perfect description of anyone's ideal mate.

The very funky "Emancipated Minor" is done in a style that is a bit new to the experienced artist, using a perky and almost chaotic beat to echo the lifestyle of a young adult who is seduced by life's temptations. In contrast, "Round the Pole" has a very soulful sound, another trait not normally related to DiFranco's music. "Star Matter," one of the best tracks on the album, is a mellow, easy listening piece that praises true love. The song highlights the fact that no matter how great the distance, "love ain't far behind you."

"Red Letter Year," (Reprise) is a brilliant instrumental version of the original track, displaying the talent of the Rebirth Brass Band in all its glory. The piece closes the album with a hopeful and uplifting mix of brass and percussion instruments, all in perfect harmony.

DiFranco's new release does stray from some of her usual musical tendencies. Regardless of this, the newly introduced styles are put into a very well-organized and conceptualized record. It's the type of work that will redefine DiFranco as both an artist and a prominent female figure in the business, while still ending up on the playlists of loyal fans and newcomers alike.

Alex Tillotson can be reached at atillots@student.umass.edu

(hello artsy one!)
WRITE FOR ARTS
arts@collegian.com

UM after 2nd win

W. SOCCER from page 16

able to create scoring despite being called offsides frequently throughout the game.

"Their style presents some danger for us," Rudy said. "Their central midfielders get going, and all three of the centrals dribble and we're only playing with two in there. And that is a question, 'How do we deal with it?'"

UMass will alter their offensive game plan around short combinations of passes through the centerfield, as opposed to long balls which helped them create scoring opportunities against Bryant.

"I don't think we will be able to long ball them," Rudy said. "We will at times, but we have to get our short combos going and I think that's what we're going to do."

Holy Cross (0-4-0) has not won a contest yet this season, but have stuck around in games because they have a number of pure athletes who possess a good deal of talent.

The Crusaders have been outscored by opponents, 11-3 while being shutout the first two games of the season against Binghamton and Providence.

"They're the best 0-4 team I've seen," Rudy said. "It's the most skillful and most athletic Holy Cross team I've seen."

The Crusaders fell to Binghamton on September 7, despite a great defensive performance by freshman defender Meghan Neville and junior goalkeeper Jessica Stone.

HC had trouble getting their offense setup in that game, and UMass will look to take advantage of that with a strong defense. The Maroon and White will also try to get things started early on the offensive side of the ball.

"We're going to work some of our players with one-on-one work to jockey and control players who like to dribble and we're going to work on our finishing some more," Rudy said.

The last time the Minutewomen played Holy Cross was September 16 during the 2005 season, defeating the Crusaders, 1-0. The victory gave the Minutewomen a 6-0 all-time record against HC.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Rudy tries to work in youth into recent games

LUCKEY from page 16

n finding a time to play the younger players without losing trust from the veterans.

It's a struggle that Rudy faces every game. Even against Bryant, when he made seven substitutions in the first half and played almost everyone, he wanted to show off his depth even more.

The score prevented Rudy from going as deep as he would like. UMass was up 1-0 for most of the game against the Bulldogs and he knew they could come back at any point.

It wasn't until UMass' second goal that Rudy felt a little comfortable with his bench, although he would prefer a three-goal lead.

"If you go ahead and arbitrarily throw [the bench in] just to throw it, and those [players] make an error, then that can sort of ruin their confidence," Rudy said.

Last season, 13 players on the roster played an average of at least 45 minutes per game. Rudy is hoping that his young team will grow enough that his risk is minimized when he decides to go to the bench.

So far, he is pleased with how his young players have turned out, calling the performance of his bench "solid."

Injury update

At the end of the second half against Bryant, it looked like UMass would lose yet another player when sophomore Alyssa Visconti tripped during a play and fell on her wrist. Visconti got up and played the rest of the period.

After the game concluded, Visconti held onto her wrist, but Rudy was not sure to what extent she hurt it. Considering that she played the remainder of the match, the injury did not appear to affect Visconti and she should be available for the game against Holy Cross.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmiller@student.umass.edu

Junior Jacquelyn Desjardins and the Minutewomen look to continue the success they have had early in games so far this season. In 3-of-4 games so far this season, UMass has scored first.

INTERESTED IN WRITING FOR SPORTS?
E-MAIL ELI ROSENSWAIKE AT
sports@dailycollegian.com

FROM MELT-IN-THE-OVEN TO MELT-IN-YOUR-MOUTH
DOMINO'S INTRODUCES OVEN BAKED SANDWICHES
CHICKEN PARM
PHILLY CHEESE STEAK
CHICKEN BACON RANCH
ITALIAN
BAKED AT 450 AND DELIVERED $4.99
YOU GOT 30 MINUTES

Seniors Katelyn Orlando (3), Erin Parker (8) and sophomore Makaela Potts (4) have all contributed to UMass' early success by contributing with points on offense; Orlando (2), Parker (4) and Potts (1).

Minutewomen to face defensive test

F. HOCKEY from page 16

son quickly and are coming into the game red hot. After their 2-1 victory over Northeastern, the Minutewomen have only allowed one goal in the past three games. UConn, however, has had an even greater start to the season. The undefeated Huskies have outscored their opponents 13-2 this season, including a 1-0 victory over then-No.6 Penn State.

The Huskies feature one of the most aggressive and high-scoring offenses in the country, scoring 3.22 goals per game.

"UConn has quite an impressive press and we have to try and break that press. Not many teams can do it, because they do it very well," Sowry said. "The interesting battle will be their forward line against our young defense, because their attacking line is brilliant and our weak point is probably our defense."

The Minutewomen will have to be at their best to beat UConn this weekend, and will have to switch to a much more aggressive style of play to keep up with the Huskies.

"I expect us to be giving up more goals because we're young, but I'm expecting us to score more goals," Sowry said. "That's a shift for us. I think we're a better attacking team this year, which is excellent."

After its much anticipated matchup against UConn, UMass will face an easier opponent in Harvard. When the Minutewomen played the Crimson (1-1) last year, the Maroon and White set their season high in goals in a 5-0 rout. However, Harvard was still able to outshoot and outcorner the Minutewomen in the game.

UMass leads the season series 10-6-1 and have won the last two matchups by a combined score of 9-1. Harvard, which is coached by former UMass field hockey star Sue Caples, is coming into the game after a tough 3-2 loss against New Hampshire.

In terms of defense, the Crimson has the upper hand, sporting a defense that retained three starters in the backline and senior captain goalkeeper Kylie Stone. UMass, meanwhile, has a defense that has played well lately, but is still young and vulnerable.

This weekend's home games start a stretch where the Minutewomen play seven out of their next eight games at Garber Field. So if the Maroon and White are able to take advantage of this weekend's series, they will be in great position heading into conference play.

Nick O'Malley can be reached a nomalley@student.umass.edu.

X-country opens season

Sam Grossack
Collegian Staff

This Saturday the Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams will travel to Dartmouth to open their season at the Dartmouth Invitational. Men's head coach Ken O'Brien is entering his 42nd year as head coach of the team and is one of only four coaches to ever serve as head coach of the program.

In the preseason poll, the men's team was picked to finish third in the conference where they finished last year tied with Duquesne, and the women are expected to finish sixth, also where they finished last year.

The men's team will be led by their two seniors, Nils Fischer, and Jesse Regnier. Regnier is the team's captain for the third year in a row, but is not the only leadership on the team.

"We have a lot of leadership on the team, and we will be looking to pool from all of it to make a leadership counsel each week," O'Brien said.

The men's team has an extremely strong group of sophomores and juniors who give promise for the future of the program.

"[They're] really coming into their own, and will be a centerpiece of what should be a great team for the next few years," continued O'Brien.

The strong centerpiece of the team may hinder some of the new members of the team getting some experience this year.

"With our strong team, the freshmen will not get too much of a chance to compete at the top level, but will be a big part of the mix in the upcoming season," stated O'Brien.

O'Brien also mentioned that as of now, there are four very strong teams in the Atlantic 10 Conference, UMass being one of them, and he expects this team to be near the top when the postseason arrives.

Like the men's team, the women also have two seniors on their squad, which is made up primarily of sophomores. However, they do have 11 returning high-level competitors who will look to lead the team. The Minutewomen hope to make some noise in the conference this year while gaining vital experience to become an elite squad in the coming seasons.

Although UMass lost Christina DeRosa to graduation, the Minutewomen return all-conference athlete Shiyi Zan, who finished thirteenth at the Dartmouth Invitational a year ago.

The Minutemen are in good shape with two preseason all-conference athletes in Andrew McCann and Jesse Regnier. At the Dartmouth meet in 2007 McCann finished seventh and Regnier 13th.

Things look extremely promising for this season and upcoming seasons for both the Minutemen and Minutewomen.

After this weekend's meet at Dartmouth, both squads will return home to compete against Maine and Vermont. The men will also be competing against Colgate and Connecticut.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.

Comixxx

JORNALISM AT ITS FINEST

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO expenence necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required: experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Weekends. Apply at D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

SERVICES

AFFORDABLE, CONFIDENTIAL, SAFE. Get the care you need at Tapestry Health. Providing birth control, EC, Pregnancy testing, GYN and Breast Exams, HIV counseling and testing, STD Screening and treatment. 27 Pray Street, Amherst MA 413-548-9992 Walk-ins welcome. Tapestryhealth.org

EMPLOYMENT

Pottery Class Tuesdays Sept. 16-Nov. 4 6:30-9:00 Intructor Joy Fnedman $260. Inclusive 548-9673.

HELP WANTED

Spring Break 09. Work for Sun Splash. Travel Free. www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

ANNOUNCMENT

Montreal Weekends From $99. Complete RoundTrip, Motorcoach. 3 days, 2 nights. Hotel Downtown. For Details MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

ANNOUNCMENT

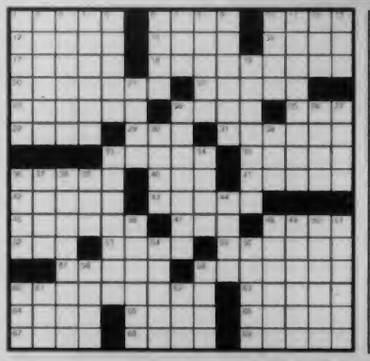
Spring Break. Discounts. Free Travel/ Meals. Before Nov. 1. 1800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com



Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S. Padre, Florida. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIEDS...

(413) 545 - 3500

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

This is the doodle box.

No you idiot, it's for drawing pictures not...well it's not for what you tried to put in here. Sicko.

A!

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | 6 | | 3 | 5 | | 2 |
| | | | | 7 | | 9 | |
| 9 | | 5 | | | 7 | | 1 |
| | | | | | 3 | | 6 |
| | 8 | 7 | | | 4 | 5 | |
| 5 | | 9 | | | | | |
| 8 | | 3 | | | 1 | | 7 |
| | 6 | | | 8 | | | |
| 7 | | | 3 | 6 | | 9 | |

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The man teaching your class all semester may say he is a professor, but he is actually a wandering, delusional vagrant.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Just say "No" to Facebook groups.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You brilliant council to the Chancellor will lead the UMass police to hire a new drug-sniffing dog that rides a longboard.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Freddie Mac collapses. Bernie Mac dies. Coincidence? You decide.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
If someone started a Flyering/Postering Club, it would just get larger and larger until the entire campus was covered.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
I am proud of the independent and strong decision you have made, but I'm still not sure wearing orange tube socks all over campus is going to pay off.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
When looking for off-campus housing, students often overlook the possible value of trailers and RVs.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Glory and self-esteem are just a bottle of Axe away, my man.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Do you hate your yellow teeth? Get jaundice, so people won't notice them.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Break your bad luck streak today. Take out its knees with a bat. Now who's boss?

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Another class, another hour left debating between your mechanical pencil and your Ticonderoga, to no avail.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Why so much makeup? Clowns are scary...

Quote of the Weekend

"In the land of the blind, the one-eyed man is stoned to death."

— Joan D. Vinge

Bliss By Harry Bliss

"We don't have to go there — I'm just saying they have good wings at Hooters."

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2008 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A little luck of their own

Offense will be key as UM faces HC

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

After getting its first victory of the season on Wednesday against Bryant, the Massachusetts women's soccer team will look to continue its offensive production in the first half when it takes on Holy Cross today at Rudd Field.

The game is slated for 4 p.m. and will be the final game of UMass's three-game home stand before it hits the road for two games against Albany and Providence.

The Minutewomen (1-1-2) were able to score just seven minutes into their game against the Bulldogs, with senior midfielder Amy Ballew recording her first collegiate goal.

UMass continued to put pressure on the Bryant defense, which let up another goal to junior forward Christina Adams towards the end of the game, as the Minutewomen went on to win, 2-0.

UMass coach Jim Rudy sees some similarities between the types of games played by Bryant and the Crusaders.

"[They have] a similar system without the high offside line," Rudy said.

With the Maroon and White pushing the ball forward against Bryant, the Minutewomen were

See W. SOCCER on page 11

Senior captain Vanessa Parry has filled in nicely for the injured Sydney Stoll. She leads the Minutewomen's offense this season in shots (10), goals (2), and points (5).

Luckey shines early in 2008 season

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

After spending nearly a year and a half on the bench, junior Lauren Luckey is showing off what she learned from Kristin Walker.

Luckey has already established herself as a premier goalkeeper in the Atlantic 10 with two shutouts and four goals allowed in four games. The junior is ranked third in the A-10 for both categories.

She previously injured her knee during the September 4 game against New Hampshire and hasn't done much in practice. However, Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy believes that Luckey should be ok for the game Sunday against Holy Cross and the injury will heal over time.

Rudy believes Holy Cross has a similar style of play to Bryant, who the Minutewomen defeated, 2-0, but does not move the offside line as much.

The Crusaders will also bring five players on offense, who according to Rudy, are all good at dribbling. That means Luckey will again have her hands full with protecting the goal from a strong attack.

"If [the ball] is close to the goal, she's going to be busy," Rudy said. "She's going to have to be on."

Bench not staying warm

One of the challenges with having a young team

See LUCKEY on page 11

Forward Cher King has helped the Minutewomen get off to a 3-1 start this season. In UMass' win over Quinnipiac, the junior scored her first goal fo the season.

UMass seeks revenge, host No. 4 Huskies

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team faces its greatest challenge of the regular season when it faces No. 4 Connecticut on Friday at Garber Field. The Minutewomen (3-1) are then moving on to face Harvard Sunday for their second home game of the weekend.

The Minutewomen, who are currently riding a three-game winning streak, are looking to avenge losses to the Huskies (4-0) last season. The first match was a tough loss for UMass as they fell after leading for much of the game. The second was the last game of the season for the Maroon and White as UConn ended their run in the second round of the NCAA tournament, 4-1.

Despite their struggles against the Huskies, who lead the all-time series, 28-12-3, UMass coach Justine Sowry and her players are looking towards playing one of the top programs in the country.

"An opportunity to play against a fantastic team like that, it basically is an opportunity to see where we're at," Sowry said. "Yes, we've had a good start to the season, but UConn, being as good as they are, is a true indication of where we actually sit in the scheme of things."

Both teams have opened up the sea-

See F. HOCKEY on page 12

INSIDE: MINUTEWOMEN WIN LATE AT RUDD | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 81 LO: 52 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 2008

Kenneth Feinberg, UMass alumnus and director of the Sept. 11th Victim Compensation Fund, held a talk in Goodell's Bernie Dallas room on Thursday.

The cost of Sept. 11

Feinberg lectures on victim compensation

By Lisa DeBenedictis
Collegian Staff

The Bernie Dallas Room of the University of Massachusetts' Goodell Hall was packed with students and professors alike, pouring in for the chance to hear alumnus Kenneth Feinberg speak on Sept. 11.

Chancellor Robert Holub began by remarking on many of Feinberg's accomplishments, most notably his appointment by the Attorney General in 2001 to serve as the Special Master of the federal Sept. 11 Victim Compensation Fund.

"Kenneth Feinberg is an example of just how far you can go with a UMass degree," Holub said.

Feinberg's speech, titled "The September 11th Victim Compensation Fund: Private Pain and Public Compensation," described the process through which he decided how much money should be given in compensation to each of the victims and their families, posing the question, "What is the value of a life lost?"

Feinberg began with a description of the fund, its uniqueness and the duties of his position.

"Eleven days after 9/11, Congress passed a law signed immediately by the president," Feinberg said. "It stated that anybody who lost a loved one or anyone physically injured in the terrorist attacks can opt out of the legal system and instead voluntarily decide to enter a 'no fault' governmentally administrative scheme to immediately get compensated."

He further explained that this law was the first of its kind in U.S. history to provide government compensation for a tragedy. Paid for by taxpayers, the average amount given to the victims or their families was nearly $2 million. For families of deceased victims, the average award was $1 million, while injured victims received an average award of $400,000. Injury compensation was determined on a case-by-case basis, "ranging from $500 for a broken finger to $7.8 million for a young woman with third-degree burns over 85 percent of her body," Feinberg said.

The real difficulty, explained Feinberg, was that he was not allowed to distribute anyone the same amount of money, as to deter people from filing lawsuits.

He also invited every family to come see him personally before he made his decision on their financial award. It was through these personal interactions with the victims and their families that Feinberg said he realized how difficult it was to determine the value of a human life.

As he spoke, he cited examples of families he visited or spoke with and their reactions to the fund. The non-U.S. citizens and illegal workers who where victims often had the reaction, "What's the catch?" There were countless family members of victims who came to see him with photographs, awards, videos and other mementos. One widow brought the audio recording of her and her husband's last telephone

See FEINBERG on page 4

Frat appeal improving

Recruiting rise encourages IFC

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

Thanks to better publicity, advertising and outreach efforts made by fraternity members, the consensus within the Greek Life community is that the number of students at the University of Massachusetts interested in joining fraternities is on the rise.

"I feel it can help me become more of a part of UMass Amherst," freshman and biology major Kevin McLaughlin said.

Although McLaughlin didn't originally think about Greek life, he began to really like it after learning more about it and meeting the brothers from Alpha Delta Phi.

"I think it will make me able to relate with people better," continued McLaughlin, who hopes to gain long-lasting friendships if accepted into the fraternity.

"It's a great opportunity to meet a good bunch of people," said sophomore Benjamin Langlois. Langlois also commented that Greek life can help its members expand their social horizons.

"There are many leadership opportunities within a fraternity," added freshman history major Jake Adams, "it's good to put on a resume."

According to Alex King, president of UMass' Inter-Fraternity Council, membership has "absolutely increased" over the past four years that he has attended UMass. He estimated, as of a meeting held Thursday night, there are roughly 220 students looking into joining a fraternity at UMass this semester.

UMass Director of Fraternities and Sororities Michael Wiseman said this number is significantly higher than the number of students that usually end up joining. He said an average of 100-to-110 students per semester join a fraternity at UMass.

"We're being cautiously optimistic. We won't know [the actual number] for sure until bids have been extended and accepted," Wiseman said.

King also added that the quality of interested students has gone up along with the quantity

See GREEK on page 3

Peter Lane, left, of Delta Chi fraternity addressed the IFC meeting Thursday in Isenberg School of Management on expanding Delta Chi to UMass Amherst.

Class gives women chance to fight back

By Kate Olesin
Collegian Staff

Jackie Chan, Jet Li and even Keanu Reeves may dramatize martial arts in their movies, but this week at the University of Massachusetts it's being taught as a way for women to protect themselves.

UMass' Everywoman's Center has teamed up with Valley Women's Martial Arts to host a "Women and Self-Defense" class. The workshop will not only teach women ways to protect themselves, but will also combine external and internal martial arts practice.

Much like UMass Police Department's Rape Aggression Defense program, the workshop will provide introductory martial arts training, assertiveness training and "discussion of the issues involved in learning effective methods for self-protection and violence prevention," according to a press release for the class.

The program will be run by head instructor and Director of Valley Women's Martial Arts Janet Aalfs.

Aalfs is a certified self-instructor of martial arts, a seventh degree black belt in Shuriryu Okinawan Karate, a fourth degree black belt in Filipino Modern Arnis, an instructor of Jian Mei Internal Martial Arts and a published poet.

In addition to being Northampton's Poet Laureate in 2004 and 2005, Aalfs has been the director of Valley Women's Martial Arts since 1982. The Martial Arts group is a not-for-profit school founded in 1977 that provides ongoing instruction for women, girls and men at various locations throughout the community.

The Everywoman's Center, located in Wilder Hall, was established in 1972 as a campus-based women's and rape crisis center.

The Women and Self-Defense workshop will be held on Tuesday Sept. 16 and Thursday Sept. 18 in the Newman Center from 4-5:30 p.m. The event is free and open to the public. Space is extremely limited, attendance is required at both sessions and those interested in registering must contact Sandy Mandel at smandel@admin.umass.edu.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kate.olesin@gmail.com

Self-defense instructor Sarah Mandel

UMass students find success at Big E

Prized sheep and cattle win big

By Nina Heikkinen
Collegian Staff

WEST SPRINGFIELD — This Friday was a big day for members of the University of Massachusetts Dorset Sheep and Belted Galloway Groups, who showed off seven of UMass' sheep and three of the University's beef cattle at the annual Eastern States Exposition.

The 17-day exposition, known as the "Big E" is the largest fair in the Northeast, featuring livestock shows, live music, vendors, food, rides and exhibits. Each year, the Big E attracts visitors from around the region and delivers a reported $2.24 million in revenue to West Springfield and Hamden County, according to a Big E press release.

For UMass students in the Dorset Sheep and Belted Galloway Groups the main attraction of the Big E was the livestock shows. The Dorset group is a student run organization that gives students of all majors the opportunity to manage and show UMass' registered Dorset sheep. The Belted Galloway group provides members with the opportunity to learn beef cattle management techniques, such as herd management, vaccinations, embryo transfer and calving.

The UMass livestock barns in Hadley and South Deerfield enter a number of their animals into regional competitions throughout the school year, including the Big E.

UMass senior Jane DiNicola, senior Allison Cornell and junior Hayley Yaglom won first, second and third place ribbons respectively in the livestock show's intercollegiate showmanship class Friday evening at the Exposition.

"In the showmanship class you are judged on how you show the animal and not on how it looks," UMass junior Joshua Munro explained.

For some students, this was their first time showing livestock.

"Many participants in this year's show had never handled a cow before," exclaimed DiNicola. "I find the fact that they went into that ring at all amazing. It can be a scary thing walking in front of a lot of strangers with a 400-plus pound animal at the end of a rope next to you with no idea what to do."

Overall, the Belted Galloways placed well in their respective classes. "UMass Durango," who Yaglom showed, won first place in the lightweight steer class. "UMass Denali" won second place in the heavy weight steer class and earned the title of "Reserve Grand Champion." "E + H Newman," a bull on loan from a farm in Maine, also won a second-place ribbon in his class.

"He was breeding all the cows in South Deerfield. The deal was we would take him for the summer and then get him ready and show him in the Big E," sophomore and Belted Galloway member Kelly Rooney said.

In the Mallory Building, one of the Big E's venues, the mood was all business as the students in the UMass Dorset Sheep Group got their sheep ready for Tuesday's Dorset class show.

"Getting sheep ready is called fitting. That means washing, carding and trimming the wool to make the sheep look as best as they can look," UMass senior and records officer for the Dorset Sheep Group Angie Locatron said.

See BIG E on page 2

Two members of the UMass Dorset Sheep group prepare a sheep for a competition at the Big E in West Springfield. The Dorset Sheep group and the Belted Galloway groups performed well at the event.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE TEN

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Waszczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COPIES EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Garber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenwaike
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR Victor Jurek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mullholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Irvin Rozewarz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Waxman
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cernak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedetto
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Tarrimo
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITORS
Joe Meloni

COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michael Sarkes Brandon Sylvia

Community Clips

Greeno Subshop Grand Opening
The Greeno Sub Shop, located in the basement of the Greenough Dorm in upper Central is re-opening for the semester.
Sun Sept. 14
5:00 p.m.

Local chef series
Chef Casey Douglas will dishes from his menu as part of a week-long visiting chef series.
Franklin DC
Mon. Sept. 15

Barnes & Yarns
Knit, crochet and share ideas.
Barnes & Noble, Mt. Farms Malls, Hadley.
Every Monday 6 p.m.
584-2558
Free

Baby Om: Yoga Techniques to Help Relax Busy Families
Dinner on Us is a weekly speaker series on topics related to parenting. This week UMass alumna Dianne Whitham will share yoga techniques to help relax the body and mind.
Student Union Earth Foods (a.k.a. The Commonwealth Room)
Mon Sept. 15
5:30 p.m.

University Without Walls Information Session
Sign up for a small group information session detailing the ins and outs of obtaining an individually designed bachelor's degree through University Without Walls.
Holyoke Community College
Mon. Sept. 15
5:30 p.m.

STEM Education Institute Tuesday Seminar
"Urban Ecology in an Urban After-School Setting"," with Emily Hoffman and Lindsey Cotter from the Urban Ecology Institute, Boston College.
Hasbrouck 138
Tue. Sept. 16
4:00 p.m.

Local chef series
Chef Jake Perkins will dishes from his menu as part of a week-long visiting chef series.
Hampshire DC
Tue. Sept. 16

Australia Study Abroad Information Session
Interested in studying abroad in Australia this Spring?
Hills (South) 455
Tue. Sept. 16
4:00 p.m.

Workshop: Women and Self-Defense
Janet Aalfs, head instructor and Director of the Valley Women's Martial Arts, will facilitate a two part Women and Self-Defense workshop.
Newman Center
Tue. Sept. 16
4:00 p.m.

UMass Amherst Republican Club Kickoff Meeting Featuring Sen. Scott Brown
Come join the UMass Amherst Republican Club (UMRC) and State Sen. Scott Brown for the club's first meeting of the semester.
Campus Center 168
Tue. Sept. 16
7:00 p.m.

An Improbable Journey: One Judge's Path to the Federal Bench
The Fourth Annual Dean Alfange, Jr. Lecture in American Constitutionalism.
Campus Center Amherst Room (10th floor)
Wed Sept 17, 2008, 4:00 p.m.

Local chef series
Chef Christopher Ramirez will present dishes from his menu as part of a week-long visiting chef series.
Worcester DC
Wed. Sept. 17

UMass sports luncheon
Football coach Don Brown and women's field hockey coach Justine Sowry.
Campus Center room 1009 (Amherst Room)
Wednesdays, 12-1 p.m., Sept. 17
$10. 545-4290 for reservations.

Continuing & Professional Education Information Session
Discover how UMass Amherst can help you achieve your goals at a free drop-in Continuing & Professional information session.
Mass Venture Center
Wed. Sept. 17
4:00 p.m.

Lecture: The Shifting Politics of Multiracialism
Public Preferences vs. Institutional Consolidation, a lecture by Jennifer Hochschild, the Henry LaBarre Jayne Professor of Government and Professor of African Studies at Harvard University.
Campus Center Reading Room
Thur. Sept. 18
4:00 p.m.

Science Research Opportunities Fair
The second annual Science Research Opportunities Fair for undergraduates will showcase programs, courses, internships and research opportunities in the sciences.
Campus Center 101
Thur. Sept. 18
4:00 p.m.

Five College Renaissance Seminar
"Wroth's Lyric Seduction" with Ilona Bell.
Renaissance Center
Thur. Sept. 18
4:30 p.m.

Malcolm X Cultural Center Open House
Learn what the Malcolm X Cultural Center has to offer and how you may benefit from the programs and services of the CCEBMS program.
Malcolm X Cultural Center
Thur. Sept. 18
5:30 p.m.

Conservative Intellectual Star Parker
Conservative intellectual and Founder and President of the Coalition on Urban Renewal & Education Star Parker
Bowker Auditorium 168
Thur. Sept. 18
7:00 p.m.

Holyoke Bound
A day-long orientation to the city of Holyoke for members of the Five College community who are planning on or are already working, interning or volunteering in Holyoke.
Peck Middle School
Sat. Sept. 20
11:00 a.m.

Free Adult Tennis Clinic
A free tennis clinic for all UMass employees, conducted by UMass Women's Tennis Head Coach Judy Dixon.
Varsity Tennis Courts
Sat. Sept. 20
2:00 p.m.

Amherst Farmers Market
Local farmers offer their harvests of fresh fruits, vegetables and more Amherst Common, North Pleasant St., Amherst, Mass.
Saturdays, 7:30 a.m.-1:30 p.m.

Sheep and cattle take home prizes

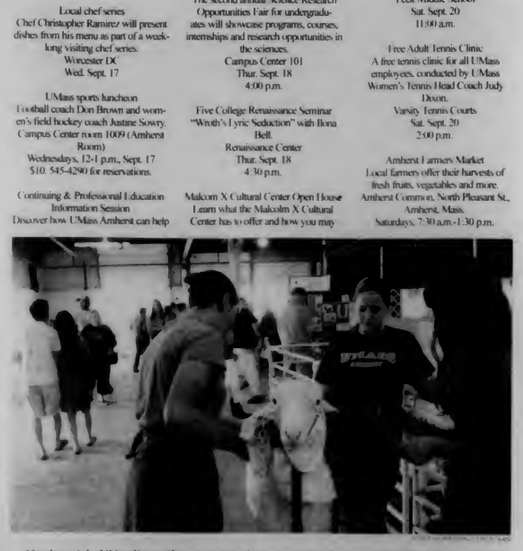
BIG E from page 1

"You want the sides and back, called the top line, to be flat. You want to trim the wool to make it look flat, even if its not. You want to make the butt and thighs to look as muscular as possible, that's why that area has the most wool," added Locantore as she wielded a pair of hand shears.



In the past, UMass students have earned the Big E's "Good Sheppard" award for helping other farmers show their sheep during the fair.

"One farmer brings 30 sheep, they do their own fitting and we show them in the ring," junior Katheryn Kuchyt explained. "We're usually able to help the most."

Two UMass market lambs were also shown on Sunday afternoon, though the results of the competition have not yet been released. In market lamb judging, lambs are evaluated using ultrasound to determine non-invasively the quality of meat cuts that could be obtained from that animal.

When asked why she showed animals, DiNicola replied, "It's a great atmosphere to meet people and to learn things about animal management that they don't teach you in lectures. Knowing how to care for and control an animal on a rope is just as important as knowing how its biological systems work."

Niina Heikkinen can be reached at nheikkin@student.umass.edu

Members of the UMass Dorset Sheep groups tend to one of their prized sheep at the Big E Saturday in West Springfield. The group is among the best collegiate teams on the East Coast.

UMass student attends DNC as delegate

By Michael Fox
Collegian Staff

Although thousands of Americans attended the Democratic Party's Primary in Denver this August to see Senator Barack Obama receive the Democratic Party's nomination for the presidency, University of Massachusetts junior Molly O'Grady's experience was unique.

O'Grady not only got to watch the conference, but was one of over 4,000 party delegates who participated in it.

O'Grady has been involved with the Obama campaign since last fall and decided to go to the convention, "to represent the youth vote and show how much youths have been committed to getting Obama nominated."

O'Grady was elected as a delegate during last April's caucus for the Massachusetts' First Congressional District, which includes Amherst. According to a poll conducted by CBS and The New York Times, only 7 percent of the delegates are under 30 years old, making O'Grady one of the states' youngest delegates. The average age of a delegate is 54.

The UMass undergrad, however, remains unfazed by the age of her fellow delegates.

"The older delegates didn't treat me any differently. They did take care of me though, but they didn't talk down to me. They accepted me on their level and they appreciated that young people cared enough to make the time commitment to go to the convention," she said.

O'Grady was also featured on CBS' evening news in a segment focusing on the diversity of delegates.

"At the beginning it was difficult. I'm not one to be really good with cameras and microphones but when a reporter is shoving a microphone in your face every other minute, you get used to it," she said.

There were many speakers at the convention, including Senator Obama, his wife Michelle, Democratic vice-presidential candidate Joe Biden, the Clintons and John Kerry. O'Grady said that aside from Obama, "Michelle Obama was definitely one of the best speakers and Senator Kerry's speech was very powerful and emotional."

Yet, O'Grady emphasized that she did not focus solely on politics while in Denver, stating that there was plenty to eat and that the organizers kept everyone in the city very happy, making sure they all had a good time.

When asked if she would attend another convention, she said, "For a lot of the delegates, this was their sixth or seventh convention, but I attended the convention because of Obama. So if there is ever a candidate in the future that I am committed to as Obama then I would definitely consider it."

Overall, she sees her time in Denver, "as a whirlwind and it seems like a dream now. But I came back with a lot of really good memories."

Michael Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu

The Democratic National Convention took place in Denver on Aug. 25-28. UMass junior Molly O'Grady took part as a delegate.

(Editor's note: The following was provided by Molly O'Grady when she was blogging for the University of Massachusetts for Barak Obama. It has been edited for length. The full text can be read on dailycollegian.com.)

GEARING UP FOR THE CONVENTION

Hi everyone! I'm Molly O'Grady, Obama delegate from the First Congressional District that covers UMass. I'll be a junior at UMass this coming year. I've been in Denver for the last 2 weeks and am now (finally!) on my way to the Massachusetts delegation hotel! They're keeping us busy tonight: welcome parties, a reception hosted by John Kerry and a social with the Maryland delegation. The Democratic National Convention kicks off in all its glory tomorrow morning and I'll do my best to keep you all updated on the excitement. Stay tuned!

DAY 3

The time here sure does fly by ... I can't believe that it is already Wednesday afternoon! I just returned from the Delegate community service morning. The volunteers from our delegation (there were only 4 of us!) planted trees in Bicentennial Park–rather hot work, but also very rewarding. President Carter was at our volunteer site and we had the honor of being able to listen to him speak briefly and witness as he planted his own tree. Quite the way to get the day started. Or rather, quite the way to keep the day going. We are bright-eyed and bushy-tailed at 7 AM for our delegation breakfasts and have been incredibly lucky with a fabulous line-up of speakers each day that serve as our boost of caffeine

This morning at our breakfast we had the opportunity to cast our votes. I proudly cast my vote for Obama, along with many others in the delegation. The voting is usually done on the floor of the Convention, but this year, the Mass delegation was given the opportunity to vote early. The rumor on the street is that this is because they didn't want the roll call voting on the floor to get rowdy or out of hand. However, not all states had the opportunity to vote in the morning, so the Convention floor should be not only surprising, but very interesting. We shall see how the voting process goes tonight. We were all told to leave for the Pepsi Center much earlier today than the previous evenings–we are being encouraged to arrive before 4:30 p.m., when Monday and Tuesday I didn't arrive until 5:30 or 6:00 p.m. However, that has nothing on Thursday. We're being told that we should arrive by 2:00 or 2:30 p.m. to be safe and I have an interview scheduled with CNN (and am already nervous for it) at 1:30 p.m. (3:30 p.m., ET). So I am planning on arriving at the field at 1:00 p.m. and will probably not leave until after 10:00 p.m. Invesco Field and I will be close friends after Thursday–as long as it doesn't rain! Fingers crossed!

DAY 4...AND THE CONVENTION COMES TO AN END

Wow. This may be the first time in my life that I am speechless. The last two nights were historic. Since I missed posting yesterday because I spent my entire day at Invesco, I'll start with Wednesday.

Bill Clinton's speech, while not the highlight of the night, was still certainly up to the high standards all of the other speakers have set. He joined Hillary, not only in his own support for Obama's candidacy, but also in urging all Hillary supporters to do the same.

Wednesday night seems so far away this morning that I seem to be blanking on the other remarkable speakers we witnessed. Maybe own Senator Kerry did an excellent job; he reminded the country how important it is to honor and take care of the veterans who made the ultimate sacrifice to our country for a war they had no hand in creating. But the highlight of the night was, of course, Joe Biden. I was touched by his son's introduction of him and he certainly lived up to the picture that Beau Biden painted for us. What struck me the most about Biden was how truly ordinary he seemed. The way he spoke, the things he said, the way he carried himself, his view of how he got to where he is today. They were not the story of a politician, an entitled member of the good old-boys club. This is a man who not only had to deal with the death of his wife and daughter, but also as a single father to raise his two sons over his Senate career, commuted from Washington DC back home to Delaware every night to be there for his kids.

After walking about a mile around from where I was dropped off to find an entrance that wasn't gated off, I then got to enter the place that the stadium was turned into to. 75,000 people all trying to find the right gate, the right entrance, the right seat is not an easy group to stroll through. Finding the seating for the MDC delegation wasn't exactly a picnic either after wandering through the other 49 states, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Guam. I found myself ushered into the back corner. I don't know who our State pissed off but Guam's seat were exponentially better than ours. Consequently, I missed the entire eight minutes my uncle Brandon Davis, chair of the delegation of the older men named after me [illegible] and being cared for properly. I [illegible] go back to see that all [illegible] matter, and was extremely proud. I have a big soft spot for someone being at last without [illegible] the best moment of my life. All of the speakers were interesting and had good stories to tell. Bill Richardson, Al Gore, the ordinary Americans who spoke, all fascinating to listen to in person. But everyone knew we were just waiting for the moment Obama spoke.

When Obama walked onto the stage, my mom, who I have to remind you is a grown woman, was crying. I have to admit, I was getting a little misty-eyed myself. I have been following Obama's campaign since the beginning of his campaign for the Senate in 2004. I have had the honor of meeting him on a few occasions and have been impressed by him every time. But I have never seen him as inspiring as he was last night. He was presidential, he was strong, he was confident, he was humble, he was everything that I believe a President should be. I am so proud to be a part of this campaign and to be a delegate for Barack Obama. I am so proud to be a Democrat. I am so proud to be an American. I am so proud to be a part of a party that has the ability to nominate a man who is truly capable of leading this country out of the mess it is in right now. I am so proud to be a part of a party that has the ability to nominate a man who is truly capable of leading this country out of the mess it is in right now. I am so proud to be a part of a party that has the ability to nominate a man who is truly capable of leading this country out of the mess it is in right now.

IFC shakes Frat Row stigma

GREEK from page 1

He feels the removal of "frat row" has painted a more positive picture of the Greek community at UMass.

"Frat row" refers to a group of five fraternity and sorority houses on North Pleasant Street in Amherst that were questioned in the past for their behavior. King said that since the demolition of the five houses in 2006 after the University purchased the property, his fraternity has encountered fewer students that look mainly into the social side of Greek life.

"Since 'frat row' has been demolished our image has become tighter and cleaner. It was absolutely the best thing for the Greek community. It got us down to the core of what our organizations are built upon: brotherhood, leadership, scholarship and community service," King said.

King also attributes the growing interest in fraternity life to an increased awareness and better advertising on campus.

"We've been getting more and more to kids rather than having kids come to us," King said. "Our advertising efforts, such as tabling at the dining commons and building information signs in the residence halls."

UMass' Greek community is also more enthusiastic than usual this semester because of a new chancellor, Robert Holub. Greek background.

Holub joined the University Sigma Alpha Mu as an graduate at the University of Pennsylvania

San Diego firefighters sue city government

By Tony Perry
Los Angeles Times

SAN DIEGO — Four San Diego firefighters are suing the city government for damages because they were allegedly sexually harassed while participating involuntarily in the 2007 gay pride parade.

The four say they were ordered to drive their firetruck in the three-hour parade even though firefighters at previous parades had been subjected to catcalls and sexually suggestive comments by parade watchers. The trial begins Monday.

The mandatory participation order was part of a policy by Fire Chief Tracy Jarman, according to the firefighters' attorney. Jarman, a lesbian, marched in the parade, which drew a crowd estimated at 150,000 people to Hillcrest, a neighborhood with a large gay population.

"This is not an anti-gay thing," said Charles LiMandri, the firefighters' attorney. "These guys have served the Hillcrest community for years with dignity and honor. They just feel firefighters should not be forced to participate in a parade where firefighters have been harassed in the past."

City Attorney Michael Aguirre, representing the city and the Fire-Rescue Department, says the firefighters are "required to serve the community without discrimination as to sexual orientation."

Riding on a firetruck during the gay pride parade is no different from other public-relations duties that firefighters do as part of their job such as taking firetrucks to schools, Aguirre argued in a court brief.

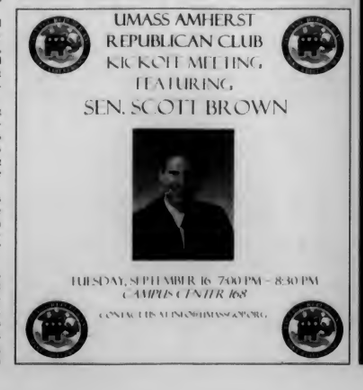
One of the firefighters alleges that after protesting the parade assignment, he was given an unsatisfactory job rating by a "lesbian battalion chief," LiMandri said.

The four, John Ghiotto, Chad Allison, Jason Hewitt and Alexander Kane, are seeking damages and reimbursement for therapy sessions, as well as attorneys' fees. The court papers do not mention a dollar figure, but published reports, based on settlement negotiations, suggest the four are seeking $3 million.

The parade is "a sexually licentious event, where raucous and lewd behavior, conduct and dress is permitted," according to the firefighters' lawsuit.

To buttress that claim, pictures were submitted to the court showing some of the floats in the parade, ridden by men in skimpy clothing. The lawsuit includes a list of the taunts and sexually aggressive comments allegedly hurled at the firefighters.

The four firefighters allege they were ordered to ride their truck in the parade when not enough firefighters volunteered for the duty. Also in the parade were several dozen San Diego officials, police officers and other employees, including the city attorney.



Along with the sexual harassment claim, the lawsuit alleges that the gay pride parade should be seen as a political event, "designed to advocate for the civil rights of homosexuals, and in recent years to promote the controversial concept of gay marriage." By forcing the firefighters to participate in the parade, the lawsuit contends, the city was improperly recruiting them to support a political cause.

Aguirre, in a brief, suggested that if the firefighters were feeling harassed, it was because of the negative reaction their lawsuit has garnered from the public and colleagues, including allegations that the four are "money-grubbers."

Among other cases, Aguirre points to a lawsuit by a writer's assistant from the television show "Friends" who claimed the "sexually coarse and vulgar language" of the writers amounted to harassment. The lawsuit failed, Aguirre said, because lewd talk alone is not sufficient to prove harassment.

The case has been covered closely by gay publications and Catholic publications. Aguirre, locked in a tough re-election campaign, has told reporters he might represent the city in court.

The Michigan-based Thomas More Law Center, which is involved in numerous cases across the United States involving religious issues, is backing the firefighters. LiMandri is the center's West Coast director.

Box office sales rise after previous dips

By David Colker
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — Finally, a weekend to hooray about in Hollywood.

After seven consecutive weekends of ticket sales below that of last year, box-office grosses came out on the plus side, led by an estimated $19.4 million for the Coen brothers' "Burn After Reading" and $18 million for "Tyler Perry's The Family that Preys."

"If we had done another down weekend, that would have been two months and people would have started to use the 'x' word," said Paul Dergarabedian, president of Media By Numbers, a box-office tracking company. "And in this town nobody wants to say slump."

Now it looks as if no one will have to, with four new films having crowded theaters over the weekend. Overall, according to Media by Numbers estimates, the box-office total will be about $105 million, respectable for the fall when there are no comic book heroes to save the studios.

"Burn After Reading" marks the biggest opening weekend ever for Joel and Ethan Coen, who snagged an Oscar last year for "No Country for Old Men."

"Better than our expectations," said Jack Foley, distribution head for Focus Films.

The Coens' biggest previous open was in 2004 for "The Ladykillers" with Tom Hanks, which had a $12.6 million debut. But it went on to tank, making only $40 million domestically.

Foley said his studio has no fear of history repeating itself with "Burn After Reading."

"This film did not just play to the smart, Coenesque group that always comes out to see their movies," he said. "They have really expanded their base."

The dark, spy comedy was no doubt helped by the teaming of Hollywood's sexiest male stars, George Clooney and Brad Pitt, to head the cast. And it generated 79 percent positive reviews among those tracked by the Rotten Tomatoes Web site.

Reviews didn't much figure into the success of the Tyler Perry film — there weren't any, at least in the mainstream media. The distributor, Lionsgate, didn't screen the movie for media before it opened.

But the film did so well on opening weekend that it had an $8,705 average per theater — about $1,000 more per theater than the Coen movie.

Writer/director/producer Perry has developed such a devoted following, especially among older black women, that he doesn't need strong reviews for big grosses.

"The Tyler Perry brand pretty much guarantees a solid opening weekend," Dergarabedian said. "He's maybe one of the most constant and most bankable filmmakers out there."

"Righteous Kill," staring Robert De Niro and Al Pacino, beat out generally poor notices — Rotten Tomatoes gave it a 23 percent positive rating — to take third place with an estimated $16.5 million.

"That is probably better than expected," Dergarabedian said. "People still want to see De Niro and Pacino in the same film."

"The Women" received even worse reviews, with an 11 percent positive rating, but still managed to attract an estimated $10.1 million in ticket sales.

The remake of a 1939 classic, with an all-female ensemble cast that included Meg Ryan and Annette Bening, gave the Picturehouse mini-studio its largest weekend gross ever.

"I think it shows that women really responded to the marketing of the film," Picturehouse president Bob Berney said. "It's a capper to a strong summer for women's films."

Last week's top grosser, "Bangkok Dangerous," slipped to No. 8 with an estimated $2.4 million, a drop off of 69 per cent.

The new film "Towelhead," by writer director Alan Ball, was in only four theaters. But it picked up a healthy $13,250 average per theater, according to estimates.

Feinberg speaks at UMass

FEINBERG from page 1

conversation while he was dying in the World Trade Center.

Feinberg also told the story of one of the first people to visit him — a widow whose husband died in the attacks. She walked into his office and said to him, "Mr. Feinberg, my husband died on Sept. 11. I heard that the government is giving us $2 million. I want it in 30 days."

Feinberg explained that he told the woman that it would be very difficult to get the money so soon and couldn't understand why she was so adamant. Finally, she said to him, "I have terminal cancer. I am going to die in eight weeks. I have two children, ages three and six. My husband was supposed to be their caretaker. Now they will be orphans and I need to set up trust funds for them."

As he paused to let those words sink in for the audience, Feinberg continued, "And we got that trust fund set up in seven and a half weeks, just in time to attend her funeral."

After describing the more personal aspects of his task as Special Master of the fund, Feinberg steered his speech toward the aftermath of the fund and its effects on the future.

"Was the 9/11 fund sound public policy?" Feinberg asked the crowd.

While he maintained that it was, he also went on to say that it was a "very close question" because while working on the fund, he received numerous letters and e-mails from survivors and families of victims of past tragedies asking why they were not eligible for the fund as well. He explained how he felt torn, as he felt that these people had a point: that it was extremely difficult to "evaluate victimhood."

Although he supports the fund, Feinberg said that in his opinion he doesn't believe that any government fund for tragedy will ever be set up again.

"There was no 9/11 fund set up for Katrina, no 9/11 fund set up for Virginia Tech. Congress does not want to replicate this fund," said Feinberg.

However, he added that should the government decide to do it again, his recommendation is simply to give everyone the same amount of money and not to steer people away from the civil justice system.

Feinberg concluded with an introduction for a new lecture series at UMass, "Measuring the Value of Human Life," sponsored by he and his family. The series will take place on campus, hosting visiting scholars who will discuss how different cultures and societies around the world value human life.

"I owe this campus a tremendous debt. It was here in the '60s as a student in history that I developed a great interest in public policy. I want to give a personal thanks to this great institution, which is prepared to step up and answer important questions, like this," Feinberg said.

Following Feinberg's speech was a brief question-and-answer period, followed by a dinner and reception.

Many UMass students gave their opinions about the morality of the fund and the larger questions it addressed.

"I do think that it [the 9/11 fund] was a good idea because it was the pinnacle of terrorist attacks. If there was any situation to do it that should be it," freshman and mechanical engineering major Matt Murphy said.

Freshman Derek Pires, also majoring in mechanical engineering, shared his opinion on the Fund.

"So many bad things happen that it is impossible to help everyone the same way. I love the idea, but I don't think it is rational."

Lori DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebened@collegian.com

UMass alumnus and Special Master of the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund Kenneth Feinberg spoke Thursday.

THE COLLEGIAN'S "OLD NEWS"

a Friday Podcast featuring the week's highlights, hosted by Massachusetts Daily Collegian editors and guests.

Peace Corps leaves volunteers hanging

By Cynthia Dizikes
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The Peace Corps boasts that it's "the toughest job you'll ever love," but this year, just getting hired may be the toughest part.

At a time when both presidential candidates have pledged to promote and expand national service, the popular humanitarian assistance program that sends thousands of Americans abroad annually is now planning to cut 400 volunteer positions in the face of an unexpected multimillion-dollar budget shortfall. With fewer spots, an increasing number of Peace Corps nominees who were expecting to begin service this fall have seen their deployments delayed at least until next year — and in some cases indefinitely.

"There are more people waiting this time than in years past," said Rosie Mauk, the Peace Corps' associate director of volunteer recruitment and selection. "The recruiters don't like to tell people that there isn't a spot for them. To have to tell people that they have gotten to know — and they know are passionate about the Peace Corps — that there is just not room for them now is the most difficult part."

Jen Casto, like many aspiring Peace Corps volunteers, applied to the program during her senior year of college. A double major in English and foreign affairs at the University of Virginia, she volunteered for years as a youth mentor and student tutor and speaks French and Spanish.

Last October the Peace Corps nominated her for a secondary education program in sub-Saharan Africa, with an expected departure this month.

"At the end of the interview my recruiter said that I was definitely nominated and that she was going to find me a spot in Africa," Casto said.

Over the next six months, she visited an array of doctors to complete the famously thorough Peace Corps medical clearance process. Although she passed without much trouble, others have had to have wisdom teeth removed and costly blood work done to gain medical clearance.

But last month, about six weeks before she was expecting to leave for 27 months of service, Casto received an e-mail informing her that her program was full. Along with about 125 others, she was told she would have to wait until another program could be found.

"There is just a sense of frustration," said Casto, who turned down several summer internship offers to prepare for deployment. "I am really committed to this. I have wanted to do this for so long that I am willing to put my life on hold ... but at what point do I just move on?"

The Peace Corps usually nominates twice as many people as it needs, so delays are not uncommon. Recruiters also make it clear that a nomination does not guarantee a formal invitation. But this year, as the agency cuts volunteer positions to save money, a greater number of competitive applicants like Casto, who have spent considerable time and money to join the Peace Corps, are finding themselves sidelined at the last moment.

With the bar suddenly higher, some of these delayed applicants have enrolled in extra classes and volunteer programs to improve their chances. After Dorian Connelley, 24, found out she would not be leaving in October as planned, she began studying French to make her application stronger. She is waiting to hear if that has made a difference.

"You have to go at it full steam, with no guarantees, because that is the only way you will be qualified," said Connelley, a 2007 graduate of California State University, Long Beach. "That is why people are frustrated. They have jumped through all these hoops and now the Peace Corps is saying, 'Not in this economy.'"

The agency, which has a budget of $333.8 million, is preparing for an $18-million shortfall over this fiscal year and next, primarily because of the declining value of the dollar and increased food and fuel costs worldwide. It estimates its foreign-currency losses from 2008 alone to be $9.2 million.

"We are preparing for the $18 million, but that is a worst-case scenario," said communications director Richard Parker.

The budget for fiscal 2009 has not yet been passed. The House Appropriations subcommittee that sets Peace Corps funding has supported the Bush administration's request for $343.5 million, and its Senate counterpart has approved $337 million. But until Congress passes that budget — which could be delayed until after the presidential inauguration in January — the agency must operate at its existing funding levels.

Even though the new budget is likely to mitigate some of next year's shortfall, the current funding problems are real. In addition to cutting volunteer positions, the agency has asked its managers in Washington and its 11 regional offices to reduce their budgets by 15.5 percent.

In what Parker called a move toward a more efficient recruiting model, the agency is planning to merge its Minneapolis office with Chicago's and its Denver office with Dallas.

Although the Peace Corps has made an effort to insulate current volunteers, the budget cuts have been felt overseas as well.

This year, the agency plans to stop providing copies of Newsweek to volunteers — a magazine it had provided since the 1961 because subscription costs are expected to rise $140,000.

Foreign posts also have taken measures to reduce spending.

In some cases, two or more employee positions have been folded into one, and volunteer training time reduced.

"This all adds up to less training and less support for volunteers on the ground," said Sanatee Marshall, who served in Mongolia as a volunteer from 2005 until August.

Despite the cutbacks, Parker said each foreign post still must meet Peace Corps competency requirements in such areas as safety, language skills and cultural and technical training.

Our priority would be to make sure we get as many volunteers out there as we can, but to support them," he said. "We believe that quality, safety and security is much more important than quantity."

About 190,000 volunteers have served in 139 countries since the program began in 1961. Long a symbol of U.S. efforts in person-to-person international relations, the Peace Corps now supports 8,079 volunteers in 74 countries — more than in the last 15 years, but well off the 1966 peak of about 15,000.

"Congress loves the Peace Corps ... and in most cases accommodations are made to give it a little bit more," said Maureen Quinn, who went to the Philippines as the first wave of volunteers in 1961 and still helps with training.

"But if they think it is a good thing or a nice thing, it seems the

Story continues on page 11

First Lady Laura Bush stands among a group of Peace Corps volunteers in January 2006 in Ghana. The organization is cutting at least 400 volunteer positions after an unexpected shortfall in its budget.

University blocks YouTube, BYU students speak out

By Todd Hollbrook
The Daily Universe (Brigham Young University)

PROVO, Utah — It could happen to you. A bright red stop sign-shaped image pops up on your screen, stopping you from going any further in your Internet search. As you frantically try to close the window without anyone thinking about what you may be up to, remember that at Brigham Young University, YouTube is not allowed.

In an effort to be more consistent with its mission statement, BYU limited Internet surfing in the fall of 2006 to exclude sites like YouTube from campus.

BYU implements many strategies to maintain the Honor Code. The offensiveness that can be found on YouTube is what qualifies it to be blocked from campus.

"YouTube relies on its users to report offensive videos, and unfortunately, not all of them are removed promptly," BYU spokeswoman Carri Jenkins said. "BYU's network resources can't be the means for these videos to be made available."

BYU does allow some video-sharing sites on campus.

"Some other video-sharing sites, such as Google Video, use different internal filtering systems that do a better job of catching offensive content," Jenkins said. "That's why Google Video is available on the BYU network. Now that Google has acquired YouTube, we hope that someday those systems will also be applied to YouTube."

The limitation makes an impact on students of all ages. Some incoming freshmen who have recently learned about YouTube being blocked on campus have questions about the rule, but are not entirely upset about it.

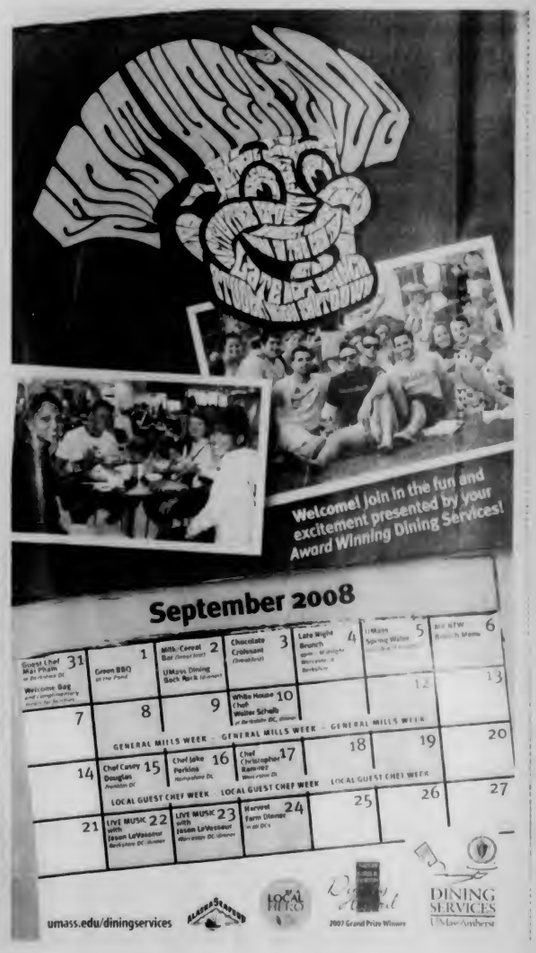
"Why is it blocked? The assumption that YouTube is entirely bad is wrong," said Jenn Woodward, a freshman majoring in physical and developmental biology. "I have some issues with it, but YouTube is not a necessity. My life has gone on without it."

Students, single and married, will also find that Internet restrictions also apply to on-campus housing. Older students said that while the reasons are understood, the YouTube restriction is inconvenient.

I understand BYU's argument that YouTube takes up too much space on campus computers that are for the sole purpose of education," said Erik Agle, a senior majoring in music dance theatre. "For students like myself, who major in the performing arts, there is a wealth of valuable educational material on YouTube that our educational provider is preventing us from accessing."

Agle's wife, Darlene, suggested the policy is still fair.

"I've lived on campus for four years now, so I don't know exactly what I'm missing, but I bet it's a good bit," she said. "We deal with a 24-7 block not just a school day inconvenience. However, our Internet connection is free here, so how much can one demand?"



Every department on campus has its own mission statement, including the Office of Information and Technology, the department that oversees open access computer labs and the on-campus Internet connection.

The mission statement of the office of IT is "to enrich the BYU environment by making it inspiring, confidence productive and safe," according to its Web site.

Once students know the university's reason for not making YouTube available, they are generally quite accepting of the decision, Jenkins said.

Brigham Young University, above, is a Mormon university in Provo, Utah. The school's officials recently decided to ban YouTube from the school's Internet server.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"FREEDOM OF SPEECH IS OF NO USE TO A MAN WHO HAS NOTHING TO SAY"
~FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 2008 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Questioning the questions

Nicholas O'Malley

Ever since the Republican and Democratic national conventions, much of the focus has shifted from policies and ideas to credentials and qualifications. With Sarah Palin and Joe Biden added to their respective tickets, all the debate has been over who's qualified for the Oval Office.

Republican vice-presidential candidate Sarah Palin has been consistently labeled as a controversial pick and has raised so many questions from her critics that they're still coming up with them. Probably the greatest knock against Palin is her experience.

Claims that her position as governor of Alaska does not provide the qualification for a good vice president were quickly drawn from democrats. However, Palin is the only candidate that's had media buzzword "executive experience."

With an inexperienced name on the ticket, backers of McCain can no longer justifiably call Obama's experience into question. That is unless, of course, the democrats choose to attack Palin's credentials anyway.

With these types of attacks that can apply to many candidates, it's inevitable that it will all wind up in an endless cycle of debates and snide remarks.

The topics that the networks have covered recently are trivial and honestly quite childish. Who cares what a candidates going to do if they're elected to lead the nation? What we want to know is whether or not they meet an arbitrary benchmark of experience, if they've ever done drugs in their life and what they did 20 years ago.

The mass media is missing the true story lines of this election. But luckily, the real issues have been gathered here, after being thoroughly and somewhat fictionally researched.

Many critics of Palin have called her ability to lead the nation into question, citing that the transition from her former post is simply too great. This, of course, is indirectly criticizing John McCain's ability to stay alive. Age may be relevant, but remember, Dick Cheney made it eight years in the office. McCain's got a little mileage left; he should be able to make it at least four.

What we want to know is whether or not they meet an arbitrary benchmark of experience, if they've ever done a drug in their life and what they did 20 years ago.

There was a great debate over who Barack Obama would eventually choose as a running mate; eventually settling on Delaware Senator Joe Biden. Biden has been considered a very vanilla pick, but might be a good compliment to Obama, who would be described as strawberry.

In addition to being another old, white guy who's been in Washington for a while, Biden hails from Delaware, labeled as maybe the nation's most boring state.

McCain may be criticized for calling for off-shore drilling and not supporting the environment. But little do people know that within 10 years, McCain is expected to turn to dust and do his part to help sustain life upon this planet. However, if he is elected, McCain promises to vaporize into super president dust that will be potted to grow magic beans that can be refined into renewable vegetable gas.

This plan has been criticized, however, because according to some pro-life organizations, McCain would be "participating in some sort of stem cell project, or something like that," we think.

It has already been well documented that Barack Obama is an avid basketball player and continues to play to this day. However, as his experience and ability to lead has been called into question, it has been discovered by the major networks that Obama once shot 2-of-31 from the field in a high school basketball game.

Critics are now questioning Obama on his ability to shoot from 3-point range and how that might affect his foreign polity. There are also questions on whether or not he hogged the ball and if that might bring forth an Obama dictatorship.

It cannot be questioned, though, that Obama has the uncanny ability to silence many of his critics by reminding them that he can "completely school them in a game of 1-on-1."

Much has been said about Sarah Palin's pastime of moose hunting and how that is a reflection on her character. The truth is, she is saving lives by doing this. It is estimated that there are at least 700-800 hit by automobiles annually in Alaska alone.

Remember, that when a car hits a moose, it has the potential to kill the driver and the animal. So with every moose that Sarah Palin kills, she saves a human and a moose from being hit.

Finally, there was the case of Barack and Michelle Obama's "terrorist fist jab" and its eventual depiction on the cover of The New Yorker. It was later claimed the image of the Obama's in Middle Eastern garb was merely satire.

But in this day and age, who uses satire anymore? It all ends up with people missing the point and everyone getting offended.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Platform priorities for students

Paul Payer

As the national media frenzies over stories of ice hockey moms and pigs wearing lipstick, the issues affecting ordinary Americans have become increasingly ignored.

The media whirlwind has resulted in a disoriented American electorate which is in jeopardy of going to the polls Nov. 4 to cast a ballot based not on what would have put more money in their pockets and food on their table, but on whom offered up the best sound bytes and attack ads.

Americans must put aside efforts by cable news stations and political pundits to sensationalize the presidential election and make an informed decision on a sound factual basis.

As college students, we must consider what issues directly affect us and not simply vote based on our "Anti-Bush" bumper stickers or along with our Republican parents.

Both Democrats and Republicans will likely pay more money next year to attend this University, as well as numerous other institutions across the nation. Yet we have chosen to once again become divided through polarizing political labels rather than united by our commonality as college students.

The cost of a college education has skyrocketed in the past 25 years. The average amount of money paid by a college student to attend a public university rose from an average of $909 in 1981 to $5,836 in 2006.

Even after accounting for inflation, that increase represents a three-fold escalation in college tuition and fees. Furthermore, a USA Today study found that tuition and fees charged by the University of Massachusetts amounted to the fifth-highest total of the 67 surveyed public flagship universities. Accompanying the rising cost of a college education is a continual reduction in state and federal funding for public university systems, a phenomenon especially noticeable in Massachusetts.

In addition, direct financial assistance to students from the government has seen a certain decline in recent years, highlighted by a $12.5 billion cut in federal aid for the 2006 federal budget.

Students are also feeling the repercussions of a collapsing economy and failing loan market. Massachusetts Educational Financing Authority, a major source of loans for Massachusetts' students, announced a suspension of its federal and private loan programs last July, forcing thousands of students to scramble to find means to pay their looming tuition bills.

Both presidential candidates have offered various proposals to deal with the increasing difficulty students are having financing their education. Democratic candidate Barack Obama has publicly stated he would restructure the Federal Family Education Loan Program, which currently operates through private lenders who receive subsidies and aid from the government.

Corruption and abuse in the industry are well documented and the Obama campaign claims that reforming the system as part of the direct loan program would save tax payers billions of dollars each year and the excess funds could be reinvested in various federal aid programs.

According to the Obama campaign, government subsidies and assistance to these private loan companies over the last few years has amounted to enough money to "provide every low-income college student an additional $4,000 in grant aid."

Moreover, the campaign estimates that nearly $6 billion would have been saved had loans processed in 2007 through FFEL been dispersed through the federal direct loan program.

As college students, we must consider what issues directly affect us and not simply vote based on our "Anti-Bush" bumper stickers or along with our Republican

Critics of Obama often attempt to paint the senator as an irresponsible tax-and-spend Democrat. On the contrary, many of his policies, including his platform on education, encourage and reward a brand of personal responsibility made popular by Ronald Reagan.

As part of a large-scale plan to expand community service programs throughout the nation, Obama proposes to offer a tax credit to students who devote 100 hours a year to community service. The credit would effectively pay for the first $4,000 of a student's college expenses.

Obama also plans to invest $25 million a year in Early Assessment Programs so that high school students are adequately aware of how to prepare for a college education.

Unfortunately, John McCain has offered little more than generic campaign language, which offers little substance to potential voters seeking real answers to real questions.

Furthermore, he supports maintaining private lender participation in federal loan programs and opposed the reformed GI Bill, which Obama supported and which included an expansion of numerous benefits for soldiers. These benefits included full coverage of college expenses for any public university.

The rising cost of a college education in a receding economy has been a relatively quiet subject in the presidential election. As an issue it does not command the same political clout as the typical hot button election year topics.

But in reality, it affects us as college students more than whether or not a homosexual couple in Oregon can marry or how many months along Bristol Palin is in her pregnancy.

Unfortunately, it is unlikely the issue will become an October game changer for either candidate. But as college students and educated citizens, we owe it to ourselves and our democracy to engage the issue and give it adequate consideration when formulating our decisions in November.

Paul Payer is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ppayer@student.umass.edu

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

How do you feel about the recent discovery of West Nile Virus in Amherst?

☐ I don't go out without bugspray.

☐ I ain't afraid of mosquitoes.

☐ I don't care at all.

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

ROBOTS

HAVE UNBIASED OPINIONS.

PEOPLE

DO NOT.

[ED/OP]

Defining a nation, looking to God

Eric Magazu

In one of my classes last week, an interesting discussion cropped up concerning the reaction of different people to the September 11 attacks on the World Trade Center.

One student said when he was in school at the time of the attack, his peers were sad about the incident, but did not have an internal reaction in a manner similar to what was described in the rhetoric of American politicians.

Another student felt the attack would finally give the American people an understanding of the gravity of terrorism that confronts people on a day-to-day basis in the Holy Land. Both of these viewpoints are expressions of what is often called identity, and, by extension, worldview.

Identity is expressed in many forms. Part of what comprises our identity is rooted in our own preferences. The groups with which we choose to affiliate, as well as our interests, hobbies, education and talents, are examples of this.

The remainder of our identity stems from those characteristics that are "left in the hands of heaven," such as our birth, family upbringing and other factors outside of our direct control.

Worldview is an extension of identity. Our worldview provides our mind with a method of rationalizing events and other people in our world. Most of the time, we fit different events into their proper context with the beliefs and attitudes we were raised with or have developed from our own experience.

It is when these events confront our worldview directly that we enter into a state of unease. This unease can result in despair, fear, violence or, occasionally, a change in our worldview.

Identity and worldview have a profound effect on politics, morals and community life. Casually dismissed by the political right and often misinterpreted by the political left, the politics of identity appears to be one of the most misunderstood ideological and philosophical phenomena of our day — particularly in America and throughout Western Civilization.

It is misunderstood, yet all the while the evidence remains in plain view in polling data, in the strategies of commercial advertisers, in casual conversation and in our own preferences.

For much of man's recorded history, identity was considered the natural method with which humanity organized itself. Nations were essentially the corporate unity of a group of people with a common identity.

Religion supplied the ideas, morals and worldview with which a nation would be guided. Nation and religion together provided an essential framework for the stability of society. This stability maintained the integrity of cherished institutions such as family, neighborhood and community.

The West, unique among civilizations it so appears, was driven by the humanistic tendencies of our Greek and Roman ancestors and the common brotherhood under God preached by the Christian religion, has always elevated universality and tolerance to the status of fundamental truths.

Without the stability that comes with a strong identity, human beings tend to give in to our baser instincts.

Thomas Jefferson expresses such universal sentiment in the Declaration of Independence, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights ..."

The notions of universality and tolerance themselves constitute an essential portion of the identity and worldview of Western civilization. This has allowed the West to realize strong rewards through the maximization of knowledge acquisition and talent diversification. That is the hallmark of allowing many groups to pursue their individual specializations within a broader civilization.

At the same time, this is a gamble, as part of tolerance means accepting multiple identities and dissenting worldviews. Identities in conflict with the universalistic tendency of the West can ultimately cause internal discord and social unrest. In the past, this has often been resolved by education and assimilation, but in recent times there has been an abandonment of these methods.

There are essential truths beyond universality and tolerance that form the backbone of Western civilization. Even Americans that have been here since the beginning, or the descendents of immigrants that arrived several generations ago, seem to have little understanding of these truths.

We permit institutions such as Hollywood and the popular press to define them on our behalf, and often with disastrous results. The product is what almost invariably occurs whenever there is a lack of strong identity, moral decay.

Without the stability that comes with a strong identity, human beings tend to give in to our baser instincts. Without common understanding of God, truth or right moral conduct, people are left adrift in a sea of relativism. Families, neighborhoods and communities are weak, and people become distrustful of one another.

Throughout history the West has occasionally responded to this decline with a strong reaffirmation of its own identity. In a sense, such an action temporarily suspends the ideas of universality and tolerance, in favor of other bedrock values.

However, this requires a betrayal of what it means to be a member of Western civilization. Therefore the challenge is left to us, in our day, to find a way to regain our confidence as a civilization, continually defend tolerance and do both while remaining resolute on essential moral truths.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@gmail.com

SHARE YOUR THOUGHTS, STUDENT.

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Disappointment on silver screen

Only danger in Cage's 'Bangkok' is boredom

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

People can be very particular about the way they take their Nicholas Cage. The wild, jittery thespian of "Con Air" and "Raising Arizona" fame has a tendency to polarize. Some like it when the actor lays it on thick, pumping his performances full of camp and bombast. Others can't abide Cage at all.

Love him or loathe him, there's one thing we can all agree on. As an actor, Cage has fun in the roles he inhabits. But in "Bangkok Dangerous," Cage is neither fun nor funny. He's a piece of walking scenery.

"BANGKOK DANGEROUS"

STARRING: NICHOLAS CAGE

GRADE: D

Cage stars as Joe, an international assassin on task in Thailand. In the voiceover that opens the film, Joe establishes his shaky credo, claiming: "The work is steady, the money's good, but it's not for everyone." On his final assignment before he quits the business, Joe strikes a cold first impression, but he's hungry for a human connection.

The actor who plays him also seems hungry - for a part of greater substance, perhaps. His weary face has begun to show signs of age and boredom. Is this the Cage of "Face/Off" or "Con Air?" His penchant for tacky hairstyles has remained intact; his enthusiasm has not. All the while, his performance in "Leaving Las Vegas" sticks out. That performance is one of such bare, heart-wrenching virtuosity that it remains the apex of Cage's professional career.

While the role of Joe requires no such ability on Cage's part, to see him here is a testament to how far the actor has fallen in prestige. Cage sleepwalks through the streets of Bangkok, moving yet seemingly still inert.

From the outset, "Bangkok Dangerous" struggles to give Joe the trappings of a hero. He wears thin awkwardly, as the film also wants to continue with his ruthless killer for hire façade. His character is given a conscience, but it flickers off and on at will. The shallow human connections he forges, first with a hustler (Shahkrit Yamnarm) and later with a deaf-mute pharmacist (Charlie Young), bring the character no closer to empathy.

If Joe fails to register sympathetically as a man, he also fails to register believably as an assassin. Do assassins kill as cars halt for red lights? Do they wait in idle at the bottom of swimming pools to snatch up their target as he backstrokes by? The answer is yes - imaginary assassins do. Grizzled vets such as Joe do not. But in "Bangkok Dangerous," the difference is moot.

With $7.8 million made domestically, "Bangkok Dangerous" currently vies for the coveted spot of worst film of the year. And while rottentomatoes.com may already have it pegged, there's something to be said for a film deemed purely awful. Often times, such films are the stuff of unintentional comedy.

"Bangkok Dangerous" is awful, but not in a way which redeems itself.

Directors Danny Pang and Oxide Pang Chun specialize in cheap Asian cinema, the kind that frequently crops up in American multiplexes in the barren months of winter. As the directorial tag team behind such cringe-inducing endeavors as "The Eye" (both the original and the Jessica Alba remake) and "The Messengers," the brothers have carved out a cheesy — if not highly bankable — niche for themselves in the industry.

"Bangkok Dangerous" is a remake of their 1999 original. There's a lot of pulp lurking in the film, just waiting to be explored on screen. The base underbelly of Bangkok, with its red-light districts and heroin cartels, would seem a potent source of inspiration. The Pangs, however, lack the constitution to explore anything too unsavory.

For a film with little else to commend it, "Bangkok Dangerous" is also surprising in that it refrains from graphic violence. The film spends so much time brooding that it tends to forget its own appeal. There are passing moments of interest for the bloodthirsty action aficionado in all of us. In one great scene, we're given full view of a severed hand left clutching onto a loaded gun. Unfortunately, these scenes are sparse and limited.

Even the big finale is relatively bloodless by genre standards. What the film's finale lacks in brutality, it compensates for in cliché. Abandoned warehouse? Check. A frenzied shoot-out with villains brought down in a hail of righteous gun fire? Check, check.

The only thing lacking is passion. "Bangkok Dangerous" is a derivative affair, which begs the question: why bother? The Pangs should know. They liked "Bangkok" so much they made it twice. Yet whatever appeal they saw in the original, they left behind in Bangkok.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at shkmurphy@gmail.com

In "Bangkok Dangerous," Danny Pang and Oxide Pang Chun's remake of their 1999 film of the same name, Nicholas Cage's lackluster performance as an assassin leaves much to be desired.

Overuse of slapstick shticks fail in 'Hamlet 2'

"Hamlet 2" is a predictable story about a high school drama club's attempt at staging a successful musical production. The jokes seem tired and recycled, rarely eliciting laughs from the audience.

By Morgan Meagher
Collegian Staff

Tucson: the setting of "Hamlet 2," and the place where dreams go to die. So proclaims the sporadic and unnecessary narrator at the beginning of the film. The dreamer on the verge of a rude awakening is Dana Marschz (pronounced "Marsh-z-z-z"), a failed actor turned drama teacher at a high school on the unfortunate side of town.

At one point, Marschz's main critic/nemesis asks whether his penchant for staging adaptations of popular Hollywood films is due to a keen sense of irony, or lamentable poor taste. And so the viewer wonders of the film itself.

With "Hamlet 2," director/co-writer Andrew Fleming walks the line between hilarious and hilariously bad. It's a solid hour and a half of drama cliché.

Marschz, played by Steve Coogan, is trying desperately to work through his daddy issues, his marital issues, his financial issues and his lack-of-talent issues, all the while sporting a frighful red bob, pasty skin and, more often than not, a caftan.

There's also Epiphany, the struggling young actress who prays for more racial tolerance but is still uncomfortable around "ethnics." Her partner in crimes against good theater, Rand, struggles to come to terms with his ambiguous sexuality.

One day Marschz arrives at school to find his drama class, once comprising just Epiphany and Rand, is suddenly full of Latino students. Octavio, known for most of the film by the name he gives Marschz on the first day, "Heywood," is the tough guy with the gangster persona, who secretly gets straight As and has undeniable talent as an actor.

The rest of the students are typical Latino Hollywood stereotypes and one white stoner who just wants everyone to loosen up a bit. The Man is represented by the grizzled old principal who tries to shut down Marschz's play and his drama department.

The film is riddled with predictable slapstick comedy — either a subtle commentary on Hollywood's trend toward cheap laughs, or an attempt to cash in on the technique's popularity. It only works, however, when it's accompanied by a touch of wit.

Marschz frequently falls down while roller skating, but the only time it really feels funny is when he cries out, "Gravel, you are the bane of my existence!" while attempting to skate down several hundred yards of gravel-paved drive and when it becomes apparent that he is wearing skates, as if roller blades would be too much for him to handle.

The character really is that pathetic. When the new students question the authenticity of Marschz's serious freak-out, the teacher's pet blurts out that "he's not that good."

Possibly sterile, totally broke and unquestionably a failure, Marschz is lame to a fault. Coogan's hammy acting in scenes where Marschz is performing is natural, but his continued haminess throughout the film is less apropos. Unless, of course, it's intentional - a mirror of the character's own struggle.

"Hamlet 2" continually calls attention to itself in this way. For instance, Marschz tells his group of unruly, racially diverse students that he recently watched "Dangerous Minds," a film where another white teacher has to figure out how to get through to her group of tough inner-city kids.

The film takes its name from and centers on the main character's opus, which Marschz is prompted to write in order to save the drama department and his career. The titular "Hamlet 2" is a hot mess of a play, peopled by Sexy Jesus and Albert Einstein, both portrayed by Marschz, as well as a host of greasers, young Marschz and his parents. The play is controversial, but it's also utterly awful.

Predictably, the God-fearing, morally upright townsfolk try to

See HAMLET on page 8

"HAMLET 2"

STARRING: STEVE COOGAN AND CATHERINE KEENER

GRADE: C

'Righteous Kill' dead on arrival at box office

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Correspondent

Director John Avnet does not have much of a resume past made-for-TV movies and series.

It doesn't seem like the skills needed to produce "The Mighty Ducks" or "Inspector Gadget" lend themselves to a high-powered crime drama and his lack of experience shows through in his latest film "Righteous Kill."

The acting, score, scene sequences and plot are the epitome of cliche, daytime TV crime drama, even with a cast of quite a few familiar faces like Robert De Niro, Al Pacino, Donnie Walberg, Brian Dennehy and Curtis Jackson, a.k.a. 50 Cent.

The plot is simple. Very, very simple. Turk (De Niro) and Rooster (Pacino) are old, tough, NYPD cops who should be retired. Soon, bodies of felons who somehow got off the hook start showing up with the gun that killed them and a poem explaining why. Sure enough, the serial killer is assumed to be a cop. You probably can figure out the rest of the movie from here.

The first element that was done unbearably wrong was the casting of Curtis "50 Cent" Jackson. He was visibly trying way too hard every time he spoke. It was almost as though he was reading off of a teleprompter.

There are a few scenes in his nightclub with unnecessarily loud "music" and scantily clad girls hanging all over DJs. Just take an episode of "Without a Trace" and add 50 Cent and you'll get the picture.

The second element is the only reason "Righteous Kill" is in movie theaters — the combination of De Niro and Pacino. They usually have a certain presence about them that brings audiences in to see their films time and time again, but watching them this time was just uncomfortable. They didn't have any on-screen chemistry and their acting was stale. Their characters were familiar, reminiscent of characters they've played in the past. It's hard not to love them, but it's getting old fast.

The third and most obvious element that was just awful was the way the film was put together. "Law and Order," "CSI" and "Without A Trace" all are edited very similarly. Quick scene changes, flashbacks with reality camera shots that make you nauseous, "suspenseful" score, cheap camera tricks, bad acting. "Righteous Kill" does it all.

On the other hand, Donnie Wahlberg wasn't bad. It's hard to find anything Avnet did right in this film, but Wahlberg did OK.

Judging by the trailer, moviegoers probably expected a great plot, decent acting and an action packed film with some good special effects. And they were disappointed. De Niro and Pacino failed to deliver in "Righteous Kill."

It's not totally their fault though. The burden lies on the shoulders of John Avnet and Russell Gewirtz, the writer of the screenplay. Gewirtz does have a good track record though. He also wrote "Inside Man," which had a phenomenal twist and terrific acting. He just got hurt with this one.

It's not often we see a crime drama as good as "We Own the Night" and it is for a reason. There are a lot of movies in this genre that have great ideas, but just aren't put together right. One could argue this point for "Righteous Kill," but the truth is, it didn't have that going for it either. The twist, the plot and the acting are sour. I don't get sick, I don't even rent it.

One Sunday afternoon when it's raining out and you've already seen the episode of "Law & Order" that's on, you'll find "Righteous Kill" on HBO. Watch it then if you have the time. Otherwise, don't waste it.

"RIGHTEOUS KILL"

STARRING: AL PACINO AND ROBERT DE NIRO

GRADE: C-

Top Box Office

| | Weekend Gross |
|---|---|
| 1. Burn After Reading | $19,404,000 |
| 2. Tyler Perry's The Family That Preys | $18,020,000 |
| 3. Righteous Kill | $16,500,000 |
| 4. The House Bunny | $4,300,000 |
| 5. Tropic Thunder | $4,180,000 |

Farce comedy underwhelming

HAMLET from page 7

shut it down. Marschz and his band of misfit students manage to put the play on in spite of all this adversity, owing to their determination, perseverance and street smarts. And equally predictably, the play turns out to be a raging success, swaying the hearts and minds of those uptight, uptight townsfolk with catchy songs like "Rock Me, Sexy Jesus" and touching moments of forgiveness.

In addition to the main thread of Marschz's underdog shot at greatness, there is a secondary storyline revolving around Marschz's marital issues with his alcoholic, ex-pot dealer wife, aptly played by Catherine Keener, and their barely even one-dimensional roommate, Gary.

Portrayed by David Arquette, Gary has only a few lines throughout the film and although one of these provides one of the few genuine laughs, the character comes off as little more than scenery. The story arc as a whole feels like filler and is again totally cliché and foreseeable.

Despite its numerous faults, "Hamlet 2" does have some merit. Elizabeth Shue, who befriends Marschz through her new job as a nurse (the actress plays herself, but in the film, she's grown sick of Hollywood and run off to Tucson), is about as wonderful as the star-struck Marschz believes her to be. A scene where Marschz tries to work through his writer's block rings true to anyone who's ever had to struggle with that issue and Amy Poehler as Cricket "I married a Jew" Feldstein, the American Civil Liberties Union lawyer who rushes to defend Marschz's First Amendment rights, manages to get a few funny lines in.

On the whole, however, "Hamlet 2"comes off as self-conscious as a pudgy 13-year-old at her first school dance. Every other thing in the film is self-reflexive. Fleming tries to comment on supposedly bad Hollywood trends, while simultaneously trying to use those same trends to his advantage. It's either a rather intellectual film tinged with self-mocking irony, or it's just another cheap, typical mainstream offering. Either way, it fails to truly impress.

Morgan Meagher can be reached at mmeagher@student.umass.edu.

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Monday, Sept. 15

The Fine Arts Center will be hosting Laurie Carlos, an award-winning playwright director and performer as she delves into her new works "The Pork Chop Wars," which explores the family activism conflicts and spirit of an African-American woman Carlos will conduct an open discussion after her readings which are open to the public and began at 6:30 p.m. To make a seating reservation, call 413-545-9590 or email nmyoung@acad.umass.edu.

Tuesday, Sept. 16

Horn Professor Laura Klock will perform in Bezanson Recital Hall at 8:00 p.m. accompanied by tenor William Hite and guest clarinet Gregory Hayes. The concert is expected to include works by French composers Maurice Ravel, Paul Dukas and Francis Poulec as well as the premiere of Jeff Myers' "The Age of Assassins." Call the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 413-545-2511 for ticket information.

Wednesday, Sept. 17

The "Petula Bloomfield: Laced" art exhibit will continue today in Hampden Gallery in Southwest. Bloomfield uses faceless figures to question identity. She uses layers in her art to reflect the layers in humanity. Admission is free.

Thursday, Sept. 18

The East Street Studio Theater in Hadley will host the Chaos Theory Dance performers at 8 p.m. This combination of works of Sorvino, Erica Dankmeyer, Arlene Stiener, Abby Bielski and Anya Raredon Brickman as well as music from Stephen Katz will explore the depths of modern dance and will be showings Friday and Saturday nights, as well. Tickets are $8 for students, and can be purchased by calling 413-584-5535 or emailing chaostheorydance@comcast.net.

– Compiled by Elise Horowitz

YOU CAN'T MAKE UP YOUR INTERVIEW

After-grad careers, part-time jobs, and internships.

START BUILDING

chooseCampus.com

New 'Batman' comic rife with accidental profanity

The "Batman" franchise has been popular for decades, the most recent installment being "The Dark Knight" (pictured above). A mistake in a recently printed comic sees the villains spewing graphic language.

BY GEOFF BOUCHER
LOS ANGELES TIMES

HOLLYWOOD — DC Comics is trying to pull back or destroy tens of thousands of copies of a new Batman comic book after a printing error put a barrage of especially obscene words on the pages.

The issue, "All-Star Batman & Robin" No. 10, was drawn by fan-favorite Jim Lee and written by none other than Frank Miller, the creator of "300" and "Sin City" who will be making his solo Hollywood directorial debut with a masked-man movie called "The Spirit" that opens on Christmas Day.

Hero Complex reached Miller by phone as he was getting ready for a trip to Germany to promote the film, and he was shocked to hear about the four-letter crisis.

"This is the first I've heard of it," Miller said. "I have no idea how this awful thing happened. It's just one of those terrible and glorious things that happen time to time in publishing."

Miller, of course, prides himself on being provocative – he gleefully baited critics who called the film adaptation of "300" a fascist work, and his work on "Sin City" and "Hard Boiled" brought new levels of sexualized mayhem to comics – so he let out a cynical chuckle over the fact that he has the first truly R-rated "Batman" comic book in the 69-year publishing history of the iconic DC character (traditionally, you don't see curse words in mainstream comics). That doesn't mean he wanted it to happen.

"I didn't, of course. It's a mistake. And my first reaction is simple: I want at least three copies."

Get in line, Frank. The issue was already heating up on eBay on Thursday, with bids of $60 and higher for a comic book that hit stands this week with a cover price of $2.99. DC Comics has asked retailers to remove all copies of the comic from shelves, but, of course, that has only heightened interest with an audience that loves to hunt for rarities.

DC, a New York-based division of Warner Bros. Entertainment, released a brief statement. "A printing gaffe has caused a problem with 'All-Star Batman.' As soon as the problem was discovered, we quickly asked retailers to pull the issue. We apologize to our retailers and fans for any offense or inconvenience."

What sort of "gaffe" leads to an F-bomb being dropped into a comic book?

Well, first off, it needs to be understood that "All-Star Batman & Robin" is not a comic book aimed at the youngest readers of the Caped Crusader.

The different Batman titles sold these days target readers of different ages, so the youngest consumers, who are also buying Batman Legos and lunch boxes, get a fairly tame version of Gotham City, while (presumably) older readers are buying books with a bleaker, more violent setting, one that dovetails with Christopher Nolan's "The Dark Knight," the biggest film of the decade and a movie clearly not intended for the elementary-school crowd. "All-Star Batman & Robin" is aimed at those older fans.

"All-Star" follows Batman in his earliest days with Robin the Boy Wonder and details the young orphan's induction into the world of crime fighting. It's more like a POW's ordeal than a training regime, at one point, the "mentoring" Batman leaves the spooked youngster alone in the frigid bat cave with instructions to catch and eat rats. There are also plenty of curvy women and bone-breaking gutter brawls, which fits Miller's standard approach to comics.

To heighten the grit, Miller wanted the street thugs in the stories to use the ripe language they would in real life, but of course DC didn't want its venerable and extremely valuable property to be given a total "Pulp Fiction" treatment, so a compromise was reached. In every issue, the graphic language was blacked-out (think of the dark bars that cross out words in a redacted police report). The real surprise is that this was accomplished by putting the explicit words on the page and then actually crossing them out. Miller said it was the most practical way to do it.

"I wrote the actual words in the script and had them put on the page so the black bars would be the right size on the page," Miller explained. You can probably see where this is going. In this latest issue, the blackout bars are there, but on a few you can read right through them; they're more gray than black.

"It's a simple printing error. That's what it is."

An error that has the visible F-word even coming out of the mouth of (gasp!) Batgirl, who always seemed like such a polite young lady in the past (in her defense, she's giving it back to the street thugs).

All of this is a sour subject for DC Comic-book circulation isn't what it used to be, and the toy aisles at Wal-Mart and Target are vital real estate: no one wants the mothers of America to blame Batman for teaching junior a new word when the Christmas shopping season is right around the corner.

DC is also not thrilled with the publishing history of "All-Star Batman & Robin," which has been a problem child since even before it got a potty mouth. Miller's Hollywood pursuits have turned the once-monthly series into a bit of a joke (there was only one issue published in 2006), and reviews have been "love it" or "hate it" since Day 1.

The real issue is the challenge for DC to keep the character truly elastic in pop culture, from Fisher-Price-friendly to rasping Christian Bale.

Miller asks the company to be kind as it looks to get back to the middle ground.

"Tell them not to shred the copies," he said. "Please, a single plea, just don't shred them."

Eating healthy during Ramadan

A woman cooks sahur, the traditional pre-dawn meal eaten during Ramadan, a Muslim tradition involving fasting during daylight hours. A sahur filled with complex carbohydrates is the healthiest way to start the day.

Doctors offer fasting advice

BY ROBERT MITCHUM
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Even Muslims without serious health issues can find fasting during Ramadan, which started on Monday, Sept. 1, a challenge as the body adjusts to going without any form of food or drink between dawn and dusk for a lunar month.

"For someone who is used to eating several meals a day and then you go to a long period between sunrise to sundown where you can't eat, that creates a whole new dynamic for your metabolism," said Dr. Memoona Hasnain, director of family medicine research at the University of Illinois at Chicago.

Though medical studies have not shown any serious adverse effects of the Ramadan fasting schedule upon healthy Muslims, doctors said they have seen patients suffer lack of sleep from waking up early for the traditional pre-dawn meal, called sahur, after staying up late for nighttime prayers and ceremonies. And counter-intuitively, doctors said many of their patients actually gain weight during the fasting month.

"When you are hungry, you feel like you want to eat everything and anything," said Dr. Mohammed Zaher Sahloul, a pulmonary, critical care and sleep specialist in Oak Lawn, Ill., who said caffeine withdrawal is his biggest Ramadan challenge.

To prevent weight gain and minimize daytime hunger pangs, experts recommend that Muslims eat a sahur rich with complex carbohydrates such as whole wheat bread or cereal, and break their fast with sugar-rich food or juices.

If a healthy diet is followed, research has found that fasting during Ramadan can actually have several health benefits, including lowered cholesterol and blood pressure.

Offensive surprise early on

Team chemistry building with more game experience

BY NICHOLAS O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A rain-soaked weekend brought a win and a loss for the Massachusetts field hockey team. But more importantly, it was another step in the young team's transition to a more aggressive, offensively-minded unit.

This weekend's 1-0 loss to No. 5 Connecticut (5-0) and 3-2 double overtime win over Harvard (1-3) did not have the Minutewomen (4-2) lighting up the scoreboard, but in the view of UMass coach Justine Sowry, it's about the process, not the outcome.

"I could not have asked for more fight, hard work and determination from this group of girls," said Sowry. "But we've just got to put a couple of more goals into the back of the net."

Last season, UMass was notably conservative in its overall game-plan, relying heavily on its experienced defense to hold back opposing offenses. This year however, the defense was weakened by graduation and is now growing as a unit.

The offense, meanwhile, has developed considerably early this season and in no small part by the addition of junior Rhode Island transfer Jill Powers.

"We were very fortunate to pick Jill up, obviously to the detriment to the field hockey program at Rhode Island," Sowry said. "She fills a void in our team in goal scoring and just competitive feistiness that we need on the forward line."

Powers started the season on fire, scoring three goals in three games, which places her second on the team. Sophomore Katie Kelly currently leads the team with four, including a spectacular two-goal effort against Northeastern.

The Minutewomen have drastically increased their offensive output from last year, raising their goals per game from 1.51 to 2.00. At this point last season, UMass had only scored multiple goals in a game once and had been shutout three times.

The major difference in this year's team is that the Maroon and White simply have more threats to put the ball in the back of the net.

"It's total team offense," Sowry said. "Last year, we only had a one or two player forward line, and this year we go deep. Our midfielders are attacking and we have five or six coming in off the bench and five or six total on the forward line that can contribute."

The team concept has lead to several players emerging as threats for the Minutewomen. Kelly has become one of the most dangerous players on the UMass front line while the offense has retained production from last year's leading scorer Cher King and offensive captain Erin Parker.

At times, the Minutewomen have fallen into conservative lapses where they attempt to move the ball slowly up the field from their backs. Recently, and especially against UConn, UMass was able to up the tempo of the game and stay aggressive.

"We played very aggressively [Sunday] and at times maybe too aggressively," Sowry said. "So we've got to have that balance of smart play and not over committing."

The offense has quickly transformed from the Achilles heel of the Minutewomen to a strengthening foundation. The unit is now picking up the slack for the defense that showed one of its few breakdowns in Sunday's game against Harvard when the Crimson scored on a breakaway goal 1 minute, 30 seconds remaining in regulation.

Despite the offense becoming more solid as the season progresses, the Minutewomen are still a young team that is in transition of play styles. But as the offense continues to progress, UMass looks poised for success going into conference play.

Nicholas O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Senior captain Erin Parker scored in the 99th minute in double overtime to lift UMass over Harvard yesterday, 3–2.

Sophmore Makaela Potts and her teammates are playing more as a team as the season progresses. The Minutewomen went, 1-1, in this weekend's games against Harvard and Connecticut.

UMass splits weekend

FIELD HOCKEY from page 12

Most of the second half went on without scoring as well, until Harvard defender Leigh McCoy stole the ball in the Harvard backfield and raced up the field past all UMass defenders for an unassisted goal – the last goal in regulation.

The two teams traded shots and penalty corner opportunities throughout the first overtime period, with neither team gaining an advantage.

With freshman goalkeeper Alesha Widdall suiting up for the United States in this year's Pan-American Games in a few weeks, Sowry started junior goalkeeper Sarah Williams to keep her fresh.

"Sarah's been performing well in practice and it's really important to have two solid goalkeepers because you never know what can happen," Sowry said of the decision to start Williams over Widdall. "You never know what can happen if one [goalkeeper] gets injured."

Widdall had two stops for the Minutewomen when she replaced Williams at the end of regulation.

Widdall earned the win thanks to a break in the Harvard defense that led to a 2-on-1 situation in the Crimson circle that lead to Parker's game-winning-goal.

Friday night's game against the Huskies was an entirely different game due in large part to the strong rain and light winds.

The rain prevented either team from having solid ball control throughout the game, even though the Minutewomen had shamrocks on the end their sticks in the second half to increase the hold of the ball against the stick.

To add to the confusion, the Huskies utilized a full-press defense that proved relentless throughout the entire game in an attempt to force mistakes on the part of UMass. UConn held the edge in penalty corners, 11-4, by the end of the game. However, the Minutewomen defense allowed just four of those shots to Widdall.

"It was a physical game where I think both teams left everything out on the field," Sowry said. "I commend to work very hard to win this game.

There was cause for concern in the first half as sophomore midfielder Makaela Potts was hit in the face by a ball off the stick of a UConn player. She would leave the game for only a short period of time before returning later in the half.

Potts would leave the field yet again when she argued a close call with an umpire who issued her a yellow card.

Sophomore back Jackie Tait moved up to midfield to compensate for the loss while Potts served her penalty time.

UConn midfielder Katie Sennicott scored the lone goal in the game to continue the team's perfect season.

Sennicott scored off of one of the many penalty corners, which sees how each team got most of its shots on goal.

The Huskies had six shots on goal in the Minutewomen's two in the second half and had eight second half penalty corners to UMass' one.

UMass continues its season at home on Sept. 20 against Vermont.

Mike Goldenziel can be reached at mgoldenz@student.umass.edu.

College football playoff system: a debatable topic for many

Many unhappy with the quality of games being played

BY BRANDON BOATWRIGHT
THE TIGER (CLEMSON UNIVERSITY)

CLEMSON, S.C. — In college football, every game counts -- especially those early on in the season. In many instances, the first several games set the tone for a team's season. Oftentimes, teams come out of the gate lethargic or just downright bad and lose to a team they really aren't supposed to.

In 1989, the then-ranked No. 6 Florida State Seminoles had high hopes going into the fall. They faced a little-known program in Southern Miss, with a little-known quarterback under center -- some guy named Brett Favre. The Seminoles were expected to shine that season and kick it off with a pounding of the Golden Eagles. As Lee Corso would put it, "not so fast my friend." Southern Mississippi shocked the nation that Saturday, dismantling Bobby Bowden's Seminoles on a touchdown pass from Favre with 23 seconds to go. An amazing nail-biter yes, but it was nevertheless a disappointment for the Seminoles who were highly touted and expecting an easy win.

Now think back to opening day 2007. Michigan, one of the most perennially dominant programs in all of college football, against Appalachian State of the Football Championship Subdivision -- blowout written all over it. As we all know, that didn't turn out quite how it was supposed to. Michigan was sluggish against an otherwise inferior opponent. At least, that's what it was supposed to be. It was another great game, but the Wolverines looked like the FCS team.

Then there was two weeks ago in the Georgia Dome, a little closer to home. Clemson versus Alabama, a matchup with huge implications and expectations on both sides. Fans packed the stadium in both crimson and sunset orange, expecting a nail-biter and getting a blowout. Granted, unlike the previous two examples, Alabama is certainly no slouch. But the point is that Clemson could and should have been much more prepared. Just like Michigan was not prepared for Appalachian State and Florida State was not prepared for Favre and the Eagles.

Typically in college football, opening games are normally played against cupcakes from lower divisions or equally unimpressive conferences around the NCAA (a tune-up, so to speak). But for some reason, catastrophic meltdowns are all too common for teams with high expectations that really have no other excuse other than the fact that they weren't primed to play the game.

Don't get me wrong, I love a good upset any day of the week -- so long as it's not Clemson, of course. It makes the game much more interesting. But an upset is one thing, watching one team that is anemic while another makes just enough moves to pull a win out of their butts is another.

What's the point? College football should implement a preseason schedule, simple as that. The Citadel game last week is a good example.

Stick them at the beginning of the year as a scrimmage and tune-up before the real season starts. That way, maybe, we would have been a little more prepared for the Alabama game. It may seem a little outlandish, but there are definitely positive aspects about a college preseason to make it more legit.

One is that it may reduce the potential for mistakes and growing pains as a team that would otherwise be very costly early in the season, especially under this BCS nonsense. Playing one of the aforementioned "cupcakes" would give players an opportunity to shake off the rust from last season and adjust to the speed of the game without having to mark up the loss column very early in the season. It also gives younger players a chance to learn the systems. My high school's playbook was literally about five pages long -- most Division-I schools are around 500 or so. Incoming freshmen, even those who would redshirt, would benefit from a pre-season game because it gives them experience with room for error.

Two is that it gives coaches a good measure of how their team is playing heading into the first real game, mentally and physically. If a coach notices that his team is just going through the motions and not really engaging in what they're doing, now would be a good time to pack up on that and fix it. Playing these preseason games would be great for working out any kinks they may have on offense, defense or special teams as well from a coaching standpoint.

Last, but not least, it provides for some more interesting matchups. Let's be honest, watching a top-tier team annihilate Lou Holtz Community College or somebody just really isn't that fun to watch no matter how funny the final score may be. We, as fans, love the nail-biters and instant classics. That said, preseason games would open the doors for new and exciting contests. That means more Ohio State vs. Southern Cal, or Georgia vs. Texas, Clemson vs. whomever, etc.

So here's the plan. Instead of the standard 12-game schedule, take out one of those games and add two preseason opponents to the list. Let's say the Citadel and South Carolina State, for instance. With those two games off the official season schedule it opens another slot for a more quality opponent, assuming we kept Alabama and South Carolina on. And with two weeks of added preparation time, we should be ready for that competition. This way you get more quality football week in and week out.

Some may say that a preseason would open too much of an opportunity for unnecessary injuries to star players. It would be no different if a player got hurt against a cupcake in a game that actually mattered in the standings. And, like the NFL, teams could sit their starters after a quarter or two and leave the rest to their bench to develop depth and experience. And some may oppose this in favor of the smaller schools' interests. Normally, when a team like the Citadel or Wofford travels to a bigger school, it receives a generous contribution to their athletic department in return. Some would say that this would limit their chances at that money.

Maybe. But it wouldn't be a dramatic payout, and it's not like they're reliant on that anyway. Plus, many coaches of lesser known programs like the challenge of playing an upper-tier program. It also gives their players experience.

Redshirt senior Vanessa Lima scored the first goal in yesterday's match against Holy Cross. She has tallied two points while starting every game for the Minutewomen this year.

UM streak now at 2

Injuries force Rudy to rework lineups early in 2008 season

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's soccer team had its sixth overtime match in seven games dating back to last year.

Yesterday's victory over Holy Cross marked the second time that an overtime game resulted in a win. The last time the Minutewomen won in overtime was Nov. 2 last year in a 2-1 decision against Richmond.

UMass needed only two minutes into the second overtime to get itself the victory. Freshman Natalie Muka helped the Minutewomen set up a corner kick for midfielder Therese Smith.

The sophomore made the most of Muka's efforts and got the ball high enough for senior Vanessa Patry to score on a header. Smith said she felt fatigued going into the game-winning play, but felt comfortable because of the practice the Minutewomen have with corners.

When Patry saw the opportunity to score, she positioned herself so that she was in the best possible area to score the game-winner.

"Once the ball was lobbed up there, you just know that you have to get it in," Patry said.

The Minutewomen had three corners throughout the game and 16 on the season. Patry also had a role in the first goal when she shot the ball of the left post, which bounced to senior Vanessa Lima, who got it into the upper left-hand corner of the net within the first two minutes of the game.

UMass coach Jim Rudy used Patry and Lima interchangeably throughout the game because Lima has a high hamstring pull. Lima sat out the first 19 minutes of the second half to allow herself to recover, as Patry's five shots on the day made the Minutewomen a consistent threat throughout the game.

Patry's score was the first game-winner of her career and puts her within one of tying her season-high in goals scored (four). She scored her first two goals of the season in the game against New Hampshire.

Patry currently leads the teams in goals (three) and assists (two). Her consistent scoring has been very timely this season as UMass continues battling injuries.

In addition to the injuries the Minutewomen suffered at the beginning of the season, sophomore Ashley Hamel is playing through a quad injury. The setbacks have forced UMass to use its bench more in the recent home stretch.

"We were harboring a few injuries out there that we were trying to hide a little bit," Rudy said.

Muka's play in the second half was something that Rudy wants from his bench and is starting to see. For the first time this season, freshman Lindsey DiOrio saw substantial minutes for the Minutewomen, however Rudy believes he can go even deeper.

"We're trying to break some more people in now," Rudy said. "I would love to get [freshman Rachel] Miranda in there, and I just couldn't work it out there in my head."

As UMass progresses through the season, the Minutewomen's depth will have to continue providing support, allowing the offense to keep its fresh legs.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill0@student.umass.edu

UMass downs Holy Cross

MINUTEWOMEN from page 12

really tired. I knew I had to get it in and I knew that someone would finish," Smith said.

Despite the Crusaders record, the Minutewomen knew they were up against a team that was capable of scoring.

"We are just happy to get an overtime win and also to get a win against a team that is much better than their record indicates, and they showed it today," Rudy said. "They gave us everything that we could handle. We were one goal away from losing this one so this was a tough game for us and a tough game for them too."

In the first half, UMass again got its offense going quickly and efficiently. Patry took a shot that bounced off the left goal post and into the path of a charging Vanessa Lima, who buried the rebound in the top of the net to put the Minutewomen up, 1-0, with just under three minutes in the game.

"We wanted to go out very quickly before they had a chance to organize and impress their system upon us," Rudy said.

The Crusaders (0-6-0) did not let up, putting pressure on the Minutewomen defense. They were able to capitalize in the 23rd minute, as junior forward Shelby Stand ripped a shot from the top left corner of the box past a diving Lauren Luckey in the upper right to equalize the game at one.

The Minutewomen picked up the intensity after the goal, while Lima and sophomore midfielders Kelsey Anderson and Ashley Hamel were constantly up field.

Patry almost scored twice in the later parts of the first half, but UMass was not able to put any more goals away.

A scoreless second half and first overtime were characterized by tough, physical play by both teams, especially the Crusaders, who had 19 fouls to the UMass's 15.

"We sort of expected that, I've seen them play before and they compete for everything," Rudy said. "I tell my kids to compete at the level the official is calling and we tried to do that."

Even with the one goal, Luckey was solid in net for the Minutewomen, recording five saves in her second win of the season.

The Minutewomen outshot Holy Cross 15-to-13, while the Crusaders registered more corner kicks. But no corner kick was more important than Smith's for the Minutewomen.

"I think that once I hit it I knew that she [Patry] would be the one to probably hit it in," Smith said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Minutemen struggle in Va.

MINUTEMEN from page 12

seman Tony Bassett passed to midfielder Mike DeSantis who set up Chris Vaccaro for the goal. It was Vaccaro's first collegiate goal as well.

The Minutemen earned six corner kicks compared to three for the Tribe. Both teams managed 14 shots throughout the course of the game.

The Minutemen had a much rougher game against Old Dominion on Friday. The Maroon and White were thoroughly beaten to the ball on numerous occasions; the Monarchs outshot the Minutemen, 15-5, and had eight corner kicks against one for UMass.

Old Dominion came out very strong in the first half of the game, taking the game's first four shots. Monarchs forward Nate Joseph was awarded a penalty kick in the 20th minute after he was fouled inside the box. UMass goalkeeper Zack Simmons deflected the shot. Simmons had eight saves on that day.

The Monarchs broke through in the second half when Trevor Banks scored from 20 feet away on a direct kick following a Minuteman foul.

UMass' offense was stifled for the remainder of the game, managing two shots in the second half.

Koch felt that the team did not play up to its talent and that a great deal of the success Old Dominion had been because of mistakes on UMass' part.

"We did not pass the ball as well as we needed to, which gave Old Dominion a lot of good chances," said Koch.

Koch was happy that a much better team showed up against William & Mary.

"I'm definitely pleased with the fact that as a group we are moving forward, I'm not pleased that it is taking this long, but we have to be patient," Koch said. "I think we have made a lot of steps forward, but we still have a ways to go."

The Minutemen resume their season this Saturday when they travel to Durham, N.H., to take on New Hampshire.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

Sophomore midfielder Chris Vaccaro scored a goal and tallied four shots in yesterday's match against William & Mary. The Minutemen next play Friday at New Hampshire.

Not sure what you're doing next?

Keep your options open.
Take the GRE® Test for grad school.

You're more likely to do better while you're still in school — and your GRE Scores are good for 5 years.

Practice for free now.
Text GRE16 to 78473.

startGRE.com

ETS GRE

Write for the Collegian

The Collegian is seeking writers for:
News
Arts&Living
Sports

Come down to the Collegian Office
Located in the Campus Center

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SET YOURSELF FREE IN COMICS

COMICS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Space between.

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | 3 | | 7 | 2 | | |
| 5 | 6 | | 8 | | | | |
| 4 | | 7 | 5 | | | 1 | |
| | 8 | | | | 1 | | |
| 7 | 3 | | | | | 8 | 6 |
| | | | 2 | | | 3 | |
| | 9 | | | 3 | 4 | | 1 |
| | | | | 8 | | 6 | 5 |
| | | | 1 | 4 | | 8 | |

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I told the doctor I broke my leg in two places. He told me to quit going to those places."

- Henny Youngman

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

BROTHERS WATT BY WILL WILSON

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELLY

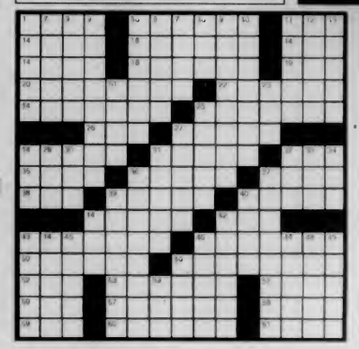
ACROSS
1 Dishonorable guys
5 Newton-John
11 Concorde, e.g.
14 Decisive defeat
15 Say by rote
16 Wanted letters
17 Advocate
18 More profound
19 Combine
20 First courses
22 Statuary stone
24 Hide processors
25 Ceremonial acts
26 Ship letters
27 Group of twelve
28 Flower holders
31 Parts of shoes
32 Make a wager
35 Diet for dobbin
36 Bogged down
37 Feathered friend
38 Bad-mouth
39 Becker or Karloff
40 Instruments for minstrels
41 Melodies
42 Turkish title of respect
43 Casual tops
46 Stiff hair
50 Magic potion
51 Cartoonist Berke
52 Gadgeteer Popeil
53 Greek sea
55 Persian Gulf nation
56 NYC arena
57 Most up-to-date
58 Verde National Park
59 That girl
60 Tree-hanging vegans
61 Mothers of lambs



DOWN
1 Pizza part
2 Blood channel
3 Dennis of "Parenthood"
4 Breastbones
5 Commands
6 Suggestive stares
7 Caps the cupcakes
8 Big wheel
9 Listed
10 Makes fizzy
11 Carioca's cousin
12 Expertise
13 Government's due
21 Hardy lass
23 Stocking flaw
25 Dramatic parts
27 Actress Day
28 Turf
29 Skater Babilonia
30 UFO pilots
31 Fathers
32 Bridle part
33 Alore
34 6-pointers
36 Canadian city
37 Stalls
39 Interments
40 Han Solo's love
41 Ducats
42 Sutter and Spiner
43 Provisions
44 Agitate a liquid
45 Door hardware
46 Impetuous
47 Let fly
48 Tenant contract
49 Ferber and Best
51 Borscht ingredient
54 Classic Pontiac letters

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

send in your comics
send in your comics
send in your comics
send in your comics
send in your comics
send in your comics
send in your comics.
send in your comics
send in your comics
send in your comics

send in your comics

comics@dailycollegian.com

ATKINS FARMS Country Market
Now Hiring
For The Fall & Holiday Season
Part-time Sales Associates and Production Associates

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Normally it's wise to leave your "Federal Prison" years off your resume.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Your idea for a breakfast cereal called "Crack Crunchies" is going to face an uphill battle.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Remember: Apathy is empowerment.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Hit your problems today like Kanye hits cameras: with authority.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Don't let little things like "classes" or "expulsion" get in the way of playing World of Warcraft.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Having an actual washboard implanted in your flabby stomach will CHANGE YOUR LIFE.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
I acknowledge you were your high school's starting quarterback, and don't care.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Your dream of being on American Idol will sadly be crushed today, when you realize that American Idol sucks.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Write a piece of Muzak to play when you have to leave your room for a moment.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Did you remember to do your homework? Tsk tsk tsk.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Pawn your roommate's laptop and TV, and then show him how much cold hard cash he's been missing out on.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Today you will fight the urge to let all your failures push you into a total meltdown!

Yee-Haw

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required: experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Weekends. Apply at D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

SERVICES

AFFORDABLE, CONFIDENTIAL, SAFE. Get the care you need at Tapestry Health. Providing birth control, EC, Pregnancy testing, GYN and Breast Exams, HIV counseling and testing, STD Screening and treatment. 27 Pray Street, Amherst MA 413-548-9992 Walk ins welcome Tapestryhealth.org

EMPLOYMENT

COLLEGE PRO- I could spend my summer sitting on the couch playing video games. Or I could take initiative, work hard, run my own business, and plan for my future. Real Life, Right Now. College Pro. 888-277-7962 www.CollegePro.com VISIT our Info. Session: Campus Center-Wed &Thursday 9/17 and 9/18 Room 805-09 -8th Floor 10am,11am,12pm,1pm, 2pm,3pm

HELP WANTED

Spring Break 09. Work for Sun Splash. Travel Free. www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

ANNOUNCEMENT

Montreal Weekends From $99. Complete RoundTrip, Motorcoach. 3 days, 2 nights. Hotel Downtown. For Details MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

ANNOUNCMENT

Spring Break. Discounts. Free Travel/ Meals. Before Nov. 1. 1800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S. Padre, Florida. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIEDS...

(413) 545 - 3500

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Finishing Touch

The Massachusetts women's soccer team celebrates after Vanessa Patry's game-winning goal propelled the Minutewomen, 2-1, over Holy Cross yesterday. Patry tallied a goal and an assist while Vanessa Lima scored UMass' first goal.

Vanessa Patry celebrates her game-winning goal in the second extra time period against Holy Cross yesterday.

Patry's header lifts UM late

By David Brincit
Collegian Staff

With a little over 8 minutes left in the second overtime of yesterday's game against Holy Cross, the Massachusetts women's soccer team was on the cusp of its third tie in its fourth overtime game of the season.

With an assist in the first half, senior forward Vanessa Patry had a number of opportunities throughout the game to score, but couldn't put anything away.

But when the end of regulation came, all of that did not matter.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 2 |
| Holy Cross | 1 |

The Maroon and White (2-1-2) got its first overtime victory of the year when sophomore midfielder Therese Smith took a left-footed corner kick and Patry headed the ball into the top-right part of the goal early on in the second overtime, as UMass defeated the Crusaders, 2-1, yesterday at Rudd Field.

The game was the final non-conference home game of the season, as the Minutewomen will begin a two-game road trip to face Albany on Wednesday and travel to Providence on Sept. 21.

The goal was Patry's third of the year and team-leading seventh point of the season as UMass recorded its second straight victory of the 2008 campaign.

"Once the ball was lobbed in there, we knew we had to get it in and we did," Patry said. "We have a lot of primary jumpers in there, so one out of three of us were going to get there and it happened to be me."

Smith was able to get the corner because of a smart play from freshman forward Natalie Muka.

"[Therese] Smith put Muka through and she got to the end line and played the kid for a corner and I wasn't sure that the left-footed cross was going to get in," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "But she played it for a corner, Smitty [Therese Smith] served a strike and we got Patry on the end of it."

Despite being exhausted from the long, intense match, Smith was confident that her pass would find Patry because of her versatility with corner kicks.

"We take a lot of corners in games and in practice and I was

See MINUTEWOMEN on page 10

Defense struggles, offense shines

Maroon and White lose shootout in conference play

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

If the Massachusetts football team continues to play like it did in its loss to James Madison on Saturday, expect its next opponent, Texas Tech, who sports one of the nation's top offenses, to score over 50 again.

| | |
|---|---|
| JMU | 52 |
| UMass | 38 |

Saturday the No. 3 Minutemen (2-1, 0-1 Colonial Athletic Association) played to a 52-38 loss against No. 7 James Madison, which was led by quarterback Rodney Landers. Landers almost single-handedly carried the Dukes' offense, rushing for 206 yards and two touchdowns, while throwing for 85 yards and another score. The 206 yards was the most rushing yards by any UMass opponent since 1991.

UMass' special teams continue to be a glaring problem. James Madison broke huge returns numerous times during the game. They returned punts of 37 yards and 49 and a kickoff return of 46 yards. UMass kicker Armando Cuko also kicked the ball out-of-bounds twice, giving the Dukes the ball on the 40-yard line.

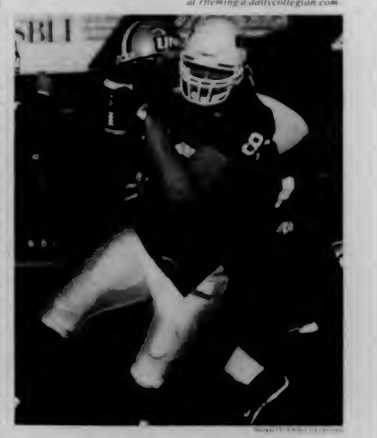
James Madison (2-0, 1-1 CAA) as a team rushed 58 times for 345 yards and tallied six touchdowns.

The Dukes' starting running back, Griff Yancey, rushed 19 times for 88 yard and three scores of his own. Yancey also scored the game's final touchdown with 1 minute, 56 seconds left to deter the UMass comeback for good.

The day wasn't all negative for the Minutemen; Victor Cruz had a career day catching 13 passes for 262 yards and two touchdowns. Cruz's yard total was the fourth highest in CAA history and the total shattered the old school record - set by Adrian Zullo, who had 210 yards in 1999.

Cruz's 13 catches matched the number set by former UMass receivers J.J. Moore and Brandon London.

UMass quarterback Liam Coen also had an impressive day, throwing for 339 yards on 26-of-39, passing with three touchdowns and one interception.



Landers was the story of the day however, tallying 187 total yards and three touchdowns in the first half alone. The quarterback took control of the clock and caused trouble for the UMass defense all day.

UMass tried to stage a comeback late in the game on two quick scores. Coen threw a 37-yard strike to Cruz to pull the Minutemen within 14. With the score the same, UMass marched down the field on its ensuing drive, which was capped by a 2-yard touchdown run by Tony Nelson.

With 6:00 remaining the Minutemen desperately needed a stop to have a chance, but JMU continued its dominance. The Dukes marched 71 yards down the field, putting the game away, 52-38, on Yancey's third touchdown of the game.

Nelson rushed for over 100 yards for the second time this season, piling up 109 yards on the day and scoring two touchdowns for the third week in a row.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

Massachusetts tight end Ian Jorgensen caught three passes for 19 yards and a touchdown in Saturday's loss to James Madison.

UMass happy with weekend outcome

By Miki Gillespie
Collegian Staff

One goal made the difference for the Massachusetts field hockey team in each of its two games this weekend. The Minutewomen (4-2) defeated Harvard (1-3), 3-2, in double overtime Saturday afternoon and fell to No. 5 Connecticut (5-0), 1-0, Friday night.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 3 |
| Harvard | 2 |

| | |
|---|---|
| UConn | 1 |
| UMass | 0 |

UMass overcame the solid play of Harvard goalie Kylie Stone, daughter of UMass baseball coach Mike Stone, to earn a double-overtime win.

"I think we're all feeling quite relieved," UMass coach Justine Sowry said of the win against the Crimson. "Harvard really brought their best game at us and we couldn't get any sort of good [rhythm] going with possession. They continually stepped up and intercepted the ball but one of our team philosophies is to keep going and work hard for each other."

Coming off a tiring game against UConn in which the Minutewomen dealt with a consistent press, Harvard's patient defense gave the Maroon and White an opportunity to set up its offense in the backfield, before it met Crimson defenders at midfield.

Sophomore forward Katie Kelly continued her productivity, scoring her team-leading fourth goal of the season. Sophomore defender Jaime Bourazeris fed Kelly the ball off a penalty corner.

After Harvard scored a corner goal of its own, Bourazeris again bothered the Crimson. Senior captain Mary Shea passed the ball to co-captain Erin Parker who faked a shot and Bourazeris deposited the ball while Stone was off-balance.

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 9

Minutemen winless in Va.

Mark DeSantis and the Massachusetts men's soccer team lost to Old Dominion, 1-0, and tied William & Mary, 2-2, this weekend in Virginia.

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team came within 4 minutes of a earning a split in its two-game road trip to Virginia this weekend, but the team had to settle for a tie on Sunday against William & Mary after a 1-0 loss to Old Dominion on Friday.

| | |
|---|---|
| Old Dominion | 1 |
| UMass | 0 |

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 2 |
| W & M | 2 |

The Minutemen (2-2-1) came away with a 2-2 tie after 110 minutes of action as both teams traded goals late in regulation, but were unable to break the deadlock in double overtime.

It looked as though the Minutemen were going to pull off a win when freshman Bryant Craft scored his first collegiate goal in the 83rd minute to break the 1-1 tie. However, UMass could not hold the lead as Tribe sophomore Nathaniel Baako tied the game with his second goal of the afternoon in the 86th minute to send the game into overtime.

"I was pleased with a lot of our performance, but I was disappointed we gave up the second goal," said UMass coach Sam Koch. "That was a bad mistake on our part with four minutes left. I felt we were playing well enough to get the win, unfortunately that just didn't happen."

Both team's defenses rose to occasion in the overtime periods, UMass and William & Mary each managed two shots during the games final 20 minutes.

The Tribe struck first when Baako scored in the 17th minute, but the Minutemen answered two minutes later when defen-

See MINUTEMEN on page 10

INSIDE: ROUSE TO PERFORM AT IRON HORSE – PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

CLOUDY : HI: 72 LO: 47 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 2008

Business booming, ABC to expand

By Matt Rochelleau
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Brewing Company, a full-service brewery, bar and restaurant is planning to expand its popular downtown location and open earlier on Sundays for brunch.

Pending town approval and building permits, the ABC will connect the vacant space next door to its present location at 24 North Pleasant St. in Amherst.

The space became available when the Mystery Train Record store relocated to 178-A North Pleasant St.

John Korpita, owner of the ABC, expects the estimated $100,000 project to start in mid-October and finish sometime in December.

Korpita said the construction will not disturb the existing location. The biggest change, however, will be moving the main entrance to the empty record store's previous entrance, as to eliminate the bottleneck that can occur on Friday and Saturday nights, according to Korpita.

Extending above the new entrance, they will construct a more permanent awning to replace the old one above the outdoor patio seating area.

"The new awning will really dress up the place," added Korpita.

The new space adds about 40 seats to the existing 150-seat restaurant downstairs and 100-seat lounge and game room upstairs. As part of a design to reassemble the upstairs, most seating will be benches or booths and the addition will be equipped with televisions to create a "lounge feel," according to Korpita.

"The downstairs dining room is not an appealing place to hang out compared to the upstairs and we want to bring that comfortable feel down here," he said.

Korpita hopes the new space will attract guests, especially if there is a line for the upstairs or if it is crowded.

Initially, the plans were to connect the new area by knocking down the entire wall. However, they have decided for now to have two regular doorways, allowing large groups to sit together but still have their own privacy.

The plans also call for a small retail space at the main entrance where patrons can buy T-shirts and growlers, or half-gallon glass jugs filled with draft beer. The ABC will also offer "sauces, dressings, pickles and other stuff that no one really knows we sell," explained Korpita.

The expansion will also give more room for storage and the kitchen, which Korpita said is currently crammed.

When asked additional rent costs the ABC would incur, Korpita said, "We're like Park Place," he said referring to the brewery's prime location. "But, it's worth it."

Korpita said several regu-

See ABC on page 2

The Amherst Brewing Company is buying out the space next door, formerly Mystery Train Records, to expand seating and decrease weekend crowds. The construction is set to begin in October 2008.

Visting chef on campus

From Washington, D.C. to Berkshire's DC, Scheib shines

By Haley Omand
Collegian Staff

On Friday, Sept. 10, the Berkshire Dining Commons hosted Walter Scheib, the former White House executive chef and author of "White House Chef: 11 Years, Two Presidents, One Kitchen" as a part of UMass Dining Services' ongoing Guest Chef series at the University of Massachusetts.

Throngs of students filed in between 5 and 9 p.m. to enjoy Scheib's creations. The feeling inside the dinning commons was one of happiness and content as students mixed Scheib's White House cuisine with the DC's usual staple foods.

Scheib, the White House's executive chef from 1994 to 2005, made his third trip to UMass as a visiting chef. As part of the presidential theme, the dishes he prepared included favorites of both the Clintons and the Bushs; the two first families he served under.

The three-course meal included both "Democrat" and "Republican" dishes, such as Thai spiced sweet potato soup and braised pork chops with apples, which were both favorites of the Clinton family. There was also corn and scallop salad and southern fried chicken, enjoyed by the Bushs.

When asked what his own favorite meal to eat was, Scheib simply chuckled and said, "The next meal someone prepares for me, whether it's a hot dog or a steak."

Later he admitted his fondness for Haitian fare.

Scheib explained that his cooking is about clean tastes and fresh ingredients. He added that he enjoys "coming to cook for UMass students and employees" and believes UMass Dining Services and its director Ken Toong, are "very progressive" in their ideas.

Above all else, Scheib's cooking was greatly enjoyed by many UMass students.

"He [Scheib] made smart choices on his menu selection by choosing food that appeals to college student's taste," said sophomore Courtney Anderson.

The change of pace from regular DC food was what appealed most to sophomore Rachel Murray.

"The food was really good," said Murray. "I wish I lived in the White House so he could cook for me all the time."

Haley Omand can be reached at homand@student.umass.edu.

Former White House chef Walter Scheib joins freshmen Raina Winkler, left, and Brittney Reney, right, in sampling some of his cuisine. Scheib was the visiting chef at the Berkshire dining hall on Friday, September 12.

New site gives interns advice

By Jessica Sacco
Collegian Staff

Endless coffee runs, making hundreds of copies and hanging your head in front a computer desk - in other words a day at a terrible internship - may have come to an end.

Thanks to a new Web site, www.RateInternships.com, students can share their experiences outside the classroom with others across the world.

University of Massachusetts senior and creator Alfred Megally, along with co-creator Michael Williams, launched the site in May 2008. Their goal was to create a place where the truths about internships, whether good or bad, could be used to let people know what to expect from different companies.

"We want students to be able to have the best internship out there," said Williams. "[Now] companies can't get away with advertising these great internships and then have people make coffee."

When accessing the site, students are greeted with the most current posts as well as a toolbar that allows them to rate, search or discuss different internships.

Those who choose to rate their internship have it split up into categories including: real world experience, networking, intellectual challenge, work environment, challenge and importance of work. There is even an optional section for "intangibles" and "daily potential" such what students can learn out left fun.

Megally and Williams even offered prizes to those who take the time to fill out a review about their work at a given company.

The posts can be as short or as long as desired.

"It surprises us about the actual amount people are writing in the posts," Williams said.

"The reviews are quite detailed. Some people go off the wall."

See WEBSITE on page 2

Heat plant testing

Yesterday afternoon the new Central Heating Plant performed a test on its boilers, resulting in periodic blow-offs out of exterior pipes around the University of Massachusetts campus.

Caution tape surrounded the sidewalk in front of the new Studio Arts Building, as something that looked like smoke poured into the air.

However, it was only steam, and entirely harmless, according to Jim Hunt, the communications manager at UMass's facilities and campus planning department.

"They are doing a test on essentially the entire plant," explained Hunt. "It requires intermittent blow-offs, not a constant. It should be over at 8 o'clock."

The tests occurred at the Central Heating Plant, as well as at other locations throughout the campus. The sound of the tests reached between 90 and 100 decibels at the plant, according to Hunt.

The purpose of these tests were to bring the boilers up to full capacity, and assess their potential for future use.

-Lisa DeBenedictis, Collegian Staff

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 11

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Waszczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Burley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COPIES EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Garber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenwaike
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Marrus
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mulholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kocewura
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Waxman
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cernak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS AN INDEPENDENT, STUDENT-RUN NEWSPAPER. ADVERTISING AND BUSINESS OFFICES ARE LOCATED IN 113 CAMPUS CENTER. ESTABLISHED IN 1890, THE PAPER WENT TO DAILY PUBLICATION IN 1971. THE COLLEGIAN BECAME AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER IN 1974. IN 1986, THE DAILY COLLEGIAN AND THE BAY STATE COLLEGIAN BECAME ONE PUBLICATION. SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED MORE THAN 50 ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS AWARDS, INCLUDING FIVE PACEMAKER AWARDS AND TWO GENERAL EXCELLENCE AWARDS.
PRINTING HOURS: MONDAY-THURSDAY 8:30 A.M. AND 5:00 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kate Olesin

COPY EDITOR
Dominic Poli

PRODUCTION TEAM
Shanna Jackson Paula Lavalle

ABC plans for new seating

ABC from page 1

lar customers have expressed excitement for the addition.

"I think they could use the additional room, and I like the idea behind it," said Glenn Coggins, a retired Amherst resident and a regular at ABC.

The ABC will also request to open at 9 a.m. instead of 11 a.m. on Sundays to accommodate for their recently introduced Sunday brunch menu, which is available until 2 p.m.

"There has been a good response to the brunch so far," said Korpita, who hopes an earlier opening time will increase the brunch's popularity.

The expansion and change in business hours proposals will go before a town hearing on Sept. 25. Korpita remains confident in gaining approval, as he believes the plans are straightforward.

Architectural plans of the expansion are on display in record store's old window. Since opening in 1997, the ABC has expanded and renovated on several occasions, most notably in 2002 when the second floor opened and became known as "The Upstairs at ABC," according to the company's Web site.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@student.umass.edu

The ABC will be expanding the seating both downstairs and upstairs, in order to make its dining rooms and bar more comfortable and accomodate more people.

Dissent with Facebook

By Wailin Wong
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO – Imagine coming home from work to find your house in a different color, the rooms switched around and the furniture rearranged.

That's the virtual equivalent Facebook users have faced or will face as the online hangout forces its 90 million members to adapt to a redesigned site, unveiled in late July. Beginning this week, users' profiles will be irrevocably migrated to the new site. And the changes are being met with a mix of protest and resignation.

Facebook's main purpose for redesigning was to declutter, and the makeover is noticeable. Instead of finding a glut of information on a single profile page, personal news and photos are split up into tabbed pages. Also, third-party applications are more hidden.

Still, it's unlikely that the dissatisfaction with the redesign will trigger a mass defection from Facebook to a competing social networking site, such as MySpace or Bebo. Instead, people will get used to the new digs, a now-common phenomenon as people reliant on the Web are at the mercy of designers who change the look and usage of sites as they see fit.

"Like anything, you have to get used to it, so there's always that period where you can't find things," said 28-year-old Mike Kelly of Chicago, who's been playing with the new Facebook since it debuted. "The functionality has actually improved. I have heard a couple people complain, but I think that's just growing pains."

The transition, which started Wednesday, will take about a week. Users of Internet Explorer 6 are still unable to access the new site, an issue that Facebook said will be resolved in the coming days.

Since unveiling the redesign, Facebook allowed its users to toggle between the two versions or just stick with the old one. In the last month of testing, thousands of users have joined online groups and signed petitions asking Facebook to either dump the new site or continue giving them a choice between the versions.

Facebook has faced member mutiny before. It backed down last year after users balked at an advertising-related feature that shared data about their external activities, such as online shopping.

But social media experts point out that the previous controversy centered on privacy, a weightier issue than the largely cosmetic changes now taking place. Between setting up a new profile on a different site or living with a redesigned Facebook, users likely will opt for the latter.

"I already can't remember what the old Facebook looked like," said Chicagoan Karrie White, 27, who had minor quibbles with the new version but said there is "no way" she would jump to MySpace. "Things change; we get used to them. I'm sure they'll change again too."

Web analytics firm Compete found that users trying the new version were gradually moving toward using only the redesigned site. During the last few weeks of August, roughly 60 percent of Facebook members stayed on the new version rather than click back to the old site.

Compete analyst Becky Bitzenhofer said resistance is to be expected.

"With everything Facebook does that shows it as being more public and people having easier access, (core users) freak out and they do forget it's Facebook and not their own site," Bitzenhofer said.

Unlike Facebook's abrupt introduction in 2006 of the

See FACEBOOK on page 3

Interns rate jobs, site allows feedback

WEBSITE from page 1

Students who are looking to see what others have said about a certain program can search by state or company, both of which are continuously updated based on the reviews submitted on the site.

The connection between students and companies that the site has created, allows for both parties to benefit.

"Students will get the internship they want, and won't go into it blind, and if companies do well, it will be giving them a good public face," said Williams. "It will also force bad companies to improve."

Although it's fully functional, Megally and Williams are still working on expanding and improving the new site by teaming up with other schools across the United States, through company advertisements and networking with students and companies.

By connecting with other schools all over the country, there will be a greater quantity of reviews to look at.

There is a large fan base from UMass students (currently about half the reviews are posted by students at UMass), but Williams is looking to get larger schools such as the University of Michigan, Pennsylvania State University and various schools in Florida to contribute to the site through a bilateral relationship.

Profiling companies on the front of the site will increase revenue, as well as provide companies with another way to offer and showcase their information to potential employees.

Also, as of right now, all student posts are anonymous, but there is hope in the future to allow people reviewing internships to be available for contact, as well as a "How helpful was this review to you?" section to be added.

Overall, Williams' main goal for the Web site is for it to grow into the primary source students go to when looking for an internship.

"We want to help people and help ourselves," he said. "We want to do something fun."

Jessica Saxen can be reached at jsaxen@student.umass.edu

FROM MELT-IN-THE-OVEN TO MELT-IN-YOUR-MOUTH
DOMINO'S INTRODUCES OVEN BAKED SANDWICHES
CHICKEN PARM PHILLY CHEESE STEAK CHICKEN BACON RANCH ITALIAN
BAKED AT 450° AND DELIVERED RIGHT TO YOUR MOUTH $4.99
3 medium one-topping pizzas
$5.55 each
413-256-8911

Write for news

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com

Today's blog
Visit our info. Session: Campus Center-West & Thursday 9/17 and 9/18 Room 805-09- 8th Floor 10 am, 11 am 12 pm, 1pm, 2 pm, 3pm my summer
work hard,
run my own business,
my future.
Real Life, Right Now.
College Pro.
888-277-7962
collegepro.com
college pro PAINTERS

If you can find the mistakes below:
r u a writer?
then write for us!
News@DailyCollegian.com

Just in case the "I'm starting an online company" idea doesn't pan out.
Now is a perfect time to take the GRE Test for grad school. Your scores are good for 5 years—giving you plenty of time to try a few things first. Think of it as having an insurance policy for your future.
Text GRE17 to 78473 for a sneak peek at the practice questions.
gradtestGRE.com
ETS GRE
Standard rates apply. Copyright ©2008 by Educational Testing Service. All rights reserved. ETS, the ETS logo, and GRE are registered trademarks of Educational Testing Service (ETS).

BSU hosts unity summit

By Jasmin Pendleton
Collegian Staff

The Black Student Union (BSU) joined forces last Friday evening with members of faculty, residence life staff, and students to hold BSU's Unity Summit at the University of Massachusetts.

The summit was held to discuss possible ways to increase minority recruitment, attendance and retention rates; as well as to inform students, specifically freshman, of the resources available on campus to help them to succeed. It also acted as an open forum where people were able to ask questions and provide their own solutions to the lack of diversity on campus.

Each representative had their own ideas about what could be done to solve the lack of minority retention and representation on campus. However, there was a major consensus within the panel that called for unity within the minority community.

"We believe our school lacks community among minority groups, which leads to freshman detaching from the community and prohibiting them selves to take full advantage of the resources on campus," said BSU member Casi Maziarz. "We need to come together as one, so we can grow and achieve our full potential, but we have to realize we need each other to do that."

Other possibilities to increase minority retention included having more spring informational sessions targeted at underrepresented groups on campus, such as black and Hispanic students. The panels would serve to make them aware before they begin of the different cultural groups on campus and opportunities for help and support.

Help from alumni was also a hot topic as they stressed the importance of giving back financially, but more importantly, giving back through being active members and role models in the community.

The summit urged students to unite together, and to help each other in achieving the goal of higher minority rates on campus, but also stressed that it is not only up to the students.

"It is everyone's responsibility to increase recruitment and retention... the University needs to hire someone with expertise in the recruitment of students of color," said Byron Bullock, associate vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life.

Another important issue stressed by the summit was that although there is a need to depend on each other to achieve their goals, help from the University is necessary as well.

Entering into UMass in the fall of 2007, according to the Office of Institutional Research, there were 380 incoming freshman who identified themselves as Asian-Pacific Islander, 201 as black or African-American, 181 as Hispanic or Latino, 15 as Cape Verdean and 18 as American Indian/Alaska Native, as compared to the 3,078 incoming freshman who identified as white non-Hispanic.

Overall, there was a 20 percent minority population of entering freshman in 2007. There is a projected 2 percent increase for fall 2008, but official statistics are not yet released.

Jasmin Pendleton can be reached at jpendlet@student.umass.edu

New face, new look

FACEBOOK from page 2

"News Feed," which summarizes friends' updates in a continually updated stream, the site rolled out its redesign slowly and asked for user feedback. Stratton Cheroun, creative director at Chicago-based Web development firm Gorilla, said such precautions are crucial for a popular site such as Facebook, which is "something you're really familiar with and is a social space."

Some critics of the redesign may follow the route of Ben Parr, who formed one of the original groups against the News Feed while he was an undergraduate at Northwestern University.

In response to the outcry, the site added privacy options to the News Feed. Two years later, the 23-year-old said he "couldn't imagine Facebook without it" and considers it one of the site's biggest benefits.

"I'm glad they're telling Facebook they're upset about certain things," Parr said of the users protesting the redesign. "Facebook does listen, and they'll probably change some things.

"But most of all, you have to give things time."

Solar powered car created

By Vanessa Liu
Washington Square News

Louis Palmer has been on the road for over 14 months. He's traveled over 28,000 miles, from Riyadh to Bombay, Sydney to Beijing, Vancouver to Los Angeles and now to New York University. But he hasn't spent a single cent on gas.

"The Solar Taxi has arrived," Palmer declared, upon arrival at NYU's Silver Center on Friday, Sept. 12.

The 36-year-old Swiss teacher is the pioneer of his solar-powered car: teal blue, door-less and attached to a trailer embedded with hundreds of solar cells. It's the first motor vehicle not powered by fossil fuel to circumnavigate the world.

Palmer's odyssey is the realization of a childhood dream to travel the globe in a car that wouldn't destroy the earth.

"I cannot pollute the world and try to enjoy a beautiful world," he said.

When Palmer arrived shortly after 1 p.m., unaccompanied by his usual team, there were a dozen or so people outside Silver, undeterred by the steady drizzle of rain that had begun to fall.

One of them was Jeremy Friedman, project administrator of NYU's Sustainability Task Force. Friedman, a Gallatin alumnus, said that Palmer was the one who asked if he could visit the university.

Having led NYU's energy conservation initiative, Friedman was pleased to welcome Palmer. "Being able to meet the people who are able to make this happen on the ground is an inspiration," he said.

Indeed, Palmer's revolutionary creation provides insight into the future of automobile technology, in a world that many say is undergoing an energy crisis.

The Solar Taxi is powered entirely by solar energy, with 50 percent coming from the solar cells on the trailer and the other 50 percent accessed via power sockets from the roof of the Swissotm building outside Bern, Switzerland.

"Global warming can be stopped. The energy crisis can be overcome," Palmer said. "What I try to do is to change the minds of the people."

Palmer said that the journey has been "the best time in my life."

He doesn't mind being away from his family or having to spend almost every night in a different place, so long as he is able to accomplish his goal of showing that solar energy is reliable.

Both the tour director and taxi driver, Palmer is modest about his achievements, but still speaks with conviction about his hopes.

"Battery technology is getting stronger," he said. "We have to come away from the idea that we need a big car. This is what makes sense."

Palmer has had few obstacles on his journey so far. There was one breakdown that slowed the team down for two days, he said.

However, the car's battery and motor are still the originals from when his world tour began in July 2007.

Though Japan did not allow Palmer to stop there, Saudi Arabia, one of the world's largest fossil fuel producers, did. He said that government officials provided him with a police escort and "treated me like a king."

The Solar Taxi is sponsored by Q.Cells, a German company that is the largest producer of solar cells. It has a maximum speed of 55 miles per hour.

Prior to stopping at NYU, Palmer took United Nations Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon to work, eventually obtaining his autograph. It's signature joins those of various famous personalities such as Mayor Michael Bloomberg and talk show host Jay Leno.

Palmer acknowledges that the solar car would be difficult to commercialize. However, he believes that a common solution would be to put solar panels on houses in the city.

As for advice for NYU, Palmer suggests the university do something to protect rainforests, in light of the amount of paper used daily.

The few students who withstood the rain to listen to Palmer praised him.

"I think it's the future of technology," Wagner graduate student Kanchan Banga said. "I hope it's viable."

NYU's efforts to become a university fueled by "green power" have been expanded in recent years, especially in dining halls. Hayden dining hall went trayless this year, and Friedman said a compost program is currently in development for all dining halls.

Palmer's tour will end at the World Climate Change Conference in Poland on Dec. 1. As for what he plans to do once his tour is over, Palmer has at least one idea.

"I want to race around the world ... to see who is the fastest, who has the best-looking car," he laughed.

Mark Zuckerberg (right) is the founder of Facebook. Its new format is debuting for all in the coming weeks.

YOU CAN'T MAKE UP YOUR INTERVIEW
After-grad careers, part-time jobs, and internships.
START BUILDING
cbCAmpus.com careerbuilder.com

LOCAL GUEST CHEF WEEK
SIGNATURE DISHES WITH LOCAL FLAVOR
MONDAY, SEPT. 15 FRANKLIN DC
CHEF CASEY DOUGLAS, APOLLO GRILL INC.
TUESDAY, SEPT. 16 HAMPSHIRE DC
CHEF JAKE PERKINS, EASTSIDE GRILL
WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17 WORCESTER DC
CHRIS RAMIREZ, PERSONAL CHEF
TIME: 5-9 PM
umass.edu/dineservices
DINING SERVICES
ivy

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bike path authoritarianism

Chris Amorosi

I used to be confused at the United States' rejection of social democracy. After all, there are a lot of poor people here who presumably prefer food to starvation and health to illness. When I join them in poverty after completing my humanities degree, I too, will wish for society to preserve my life at the very least. I puzzled over the current state of affairs. Then, I rode my bicycle.

I understand those who resent cyclists weaving in and out of pedestrians like they are so many Ewoks. I try to stay toward the side of paths when possible to avoid smashing into people. Imagine my euphoria when I saw the freshly painted experimental bike trail leading from the library to Whitmore.

Americans, against all reason, demand and defend the right to not be saved from themselves.

In case you have no liberal arts business in the area and thus haven't seen the path, it is about 6 feet wide and takes up one-fifth of the entire footpath. There are two lanes, so traffic can flow both ways, and overall the path is well marked and its purpose is obvious.

Now imagine the soul-crushing disappointment I felt when I found the bike path full of students on foot.

One particularly unobservant soul paused in my lane to take a phone call as I careened toward him. Typically these people not only walk on the path, but walk in the wrong lane as if to self-congratulate themselves on being doubly contrary regarding every aspect of the path.

The case isn't that the campus cyclists are an elite neo-equestrian order ready to lead the plebes. Those of us who wear helmets are in a minority as tiny as the brains of the majority. Consider the irony of those seeking a higher education who leave their heads at the mercy of a single wrong move and a hard surface.

This is why socialism doesn't work in America.

Americans, against all reason, demand and defend the right to not be saved from themselves. Where any reasonable man sees a seatbelt, an American sees a crate of tea begging to be pitched into the harbor in pale imitation of his forefathers. If an authority says "Don't jump," an American asks, "How high?"

Humans have come together in communities for mutual protection and benefit since prehistory. Every role and class served some purpose to the whole and even in the more tyrannical eras of civilization the lowliest peasant was respected to a degree lest he start a revolution with his numerous friends.

But a peasant himself could not rule, at least not effectively. Expecting a farmer to have the education and experience to be king is like making the mayor of Podunk, Alaska into the president of the United States. Why should economic policy be decided by millions of votes rather than a debate between nonpartisan economists? How many of those voters understand oil prices or the recent spate of bank failures? Do you understand?

Bike path walkers snub the path's purpose by placing themselves in danger of a collision that the path was made to prevent. When these people extrapolate their callous disregard for others into national policy, we all suffer.

Chris Amorosi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at

The poverty problem

Greg Collins

Do you think government welfare programs help the poor?

You would be surprised, at the answer.

This Thursday's lecture at the University of Massachusetts by Star Parker, a former mother on welfare and now advocate for limited government, strikes at the heart of the hypothetical situation liberals bring up frequently when discussing the benefits of government-directed welfare programs. It asks, "Shouldn't the government help a poor, single mother with multiple children?"

The answer, of course, is absolutely.

But why should the government only help a single mother with multiple children? Why not help lots of single mothers with multiple children?

The deeper issue is whether the government should create incentives to reduce the total amount of single mothers on welfare who are working multiple jobs while having to provide food, clothing, shelter and medical care for their children.

People have misconceptions about this issue because they concentrate on what government welfare programs propose to do without looking at whether these programs actually assist in helping the poor and ending poverty. If empirical results show that such programs are largely ineffective in meeting these aims, this would suggest that alternative solutions should be emphasized to alleviate poverty.

For instance, poverty rates for African-American families fell during the 1960s, a decade frequently noted as an era of social and racial progress for its passage of landmark civil rights legislation.

However, economist Thomas Sowell has pointed out that the poverty rate for African-American families began to fall far before mid-1960s civil rights legislation and before President Lyndon B. Johnson's "War on Poverty" government welfare programs. In fact, this poverty rate fell remarkably from 87 percent in 1940 to 47 percent in 1960.

More revealing are the types of jobs which enable African-Americans to rise out of poverty. The rates of African-Americans entering professional occupations were greater five years before the Civil Rights Act of 1964 then they were in the five years following its passage.

This is not to say that the civil rights legislation was not important. On the contrary, it was very important for symbolic purposes.

But the most important part of African-American economic progression occurred in the 20 or so years preceding such acts. This progress included rising education levels, decreasing crime rates and the maintenance of two-parent households, and reflected the overlooked efforts of millions of African-Americans to progress in a society which collectively still held racial biases.

People have misconceptions about this issue because they concentrate on what government welfare programs propose to do without looking at whether these programs actually assist in helping the poor and ending poverty.

It is easy to point to government legislation and programs as signs of progress or advancement. However, it is much more difficult to recognize the tireless commitment of African-Americans, or any other racial majority or minority group for that matter, in stressing education to their children and acquiring the skills necessary to be promoted to higher-paying jobs. Because such efforts occurred in private and in local households, classrooms, libraries and offices, people looking back on the 1960s have a much more difficult time identifying the underlying reasons that are responsible for providing the foundation for African-Americans' incredible progress.

Liberals will remark that African-American advancement was inevitable, because they had so much more to gain from America's dark past of slavery. But the question is: Did African-Americans progress because of federally mandated programs? Did African-Americans progress because of government-directed money transfers from richer to poorer people that enabled African-Americans to value education, acquire skills necessary for this to happen. It most certainly did not take federal government welfare programs attempting to alleviate the stresses on poor single mothers with multiple children for this to happen.

What it did take were government incentive structures to encourage people to achieve financial independence responsibly, which, in the particular historical period preceding 1960, meant little government welfare programs.

What else did it take? Answers to some complex questions are oftentimes very simple. It took hard work. It took strong families. It took individual responsibility. Every day we use these tools to accomplish our goals. Make no doubt – every single American is capable of applying these principles without the need for government to mandate or enforce them.

So what about reducing the number of poor single mothers with multiple children? Reducing welfare programs will do more to alleviate such unfortunate socioeconomic situations than sweeping proposals intended to wage a War on Poverty will ever do.

Instead of politicians or the government saying they want to combat poverty, we, the people, can actually try to do it.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

A candidate for "change"

Ted Rogers

You have got to hand it to Sen. John McCain. It may have taken him a little while, but he finally figured out that most Americans are put off by the abuses of power during the Bush administration.

What has he done with this epiphany? He decided that the Republican Party should be known as the party of "change." He should be the candidate of "change."

How original.

Just listen to him at the Republican National Convention: "We were elected to change Washington, and we let Washington change us. We're going to change that." Wow. Unfortunately, it takes a little more than using the word "change" three times in two sentences to prove he's serious. And, of course, his track record shows something completely different.

McCain's claims of change and reform come from mostly economic issues. This is a crafty tactic, as the average American will trust a politician when it comes to the boring facts and figures of the economy. True to form, McCain only mentions the economic practices that make him look good.

He'll gladly tell you that he never uses earmarks, a term used for the practice of giving money to a specific state through an unrelated bill, but he won't tell you that his vice president requested $256 million for this year alone. He'll smile as he talks about the extension of the Bush tax cuts, but will never mention his former opposition to them or acknowledge that economic guru Alan Greenspan says America can't afford them in the current recession.

Besides his unremarkable ideas on economic matters, McCain likes to mention the reform legislation he has passed. He'll bring up examples of the times that he passed legislation that bucked his own party's views. To be honest, there are good things to say about some of the bills he supported. His earlier votes on stopping US-sanctioned torture, reducing the unfair Bush tax cuts and campaign finance reform were logical and morally sound.

There are two things wrong with this narrative, however.

First, the bills he supported are not tough bills to agree with. Anyone with a shred of human compassion is strongly against the torture of anyone, even terrorists, even in times of danger. Everyone wishes for fair campaigns. The bottom 95 percent of America that gets screwed by the Bush tax cuts don't like the rich getting obscenely richer at the middle class' expense. Voting in favor of these bills isn't a risky move. As far as bills in Congress go, John McCain might as well vote for propuppy legislation.

I used to really like John McCain. From what I remember of the 2000 campaign, he handled himself with a dignity that George W. Bush will never hope to match.

Secondly, the John McCain that voted with his conscience has disappeared. In the past two years, the senator from Arizona has traded in his integrity for a shot at being the Republican nominee for president. You see the man who was tortured in Vietnam for five long years change his position on waterboarding to get in the Republican party's good graces. You can look through newspapers and watch McCain stop fighting for the middle class and start supporting the Bush tax cuts.

Remember the senator who wanted a fair, reformed campaign? The man who faced the dirtiest smears that Karl Rove could come up with in the 2000 primary season? He now ends commercials insinuating that Barack Obama wants to teach comprehensive sex education to kindergarteners with, "I'm John McCain and I approve this message"

Here's the thing. I used to really like John McCain. From what I remember of the 2000 campaign, he handled himself with a dignity that George W. Bush will never hope to match. Bush's team would spread smears about McCain fathering an illegitimate black baby, but McCain never went that low. Back then, McCain had guts. Sen. McCain would call out the bigots on the 700 Club as "Agents of Intolerance." That took class to go up against the established Christian right.

The time he spent in the Vietnamese prison camps also made an impression on me. I thought that a man who spent five years in a hut the size of a dog cage would have unimpeachable integrity. When he went against Bush's support of prisoner abuse at Gitmo, I had hopes for him. When he called out the Swift Boat Veteran for Truth as liars, I thought there was such a thing as a honest politician.

It's different now. Sen. McCain still calls himself a "maverick," but never strays from the far-right views of his party. From fair campaigning to the torture of enemy combatants, John McCain embraces the things that once disgusted him.

I guess it could be called change. It's just the change I would never hope to see.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tvrogers@student.umass.edu.

Hope for Democrats

Scott Harris

Barack Obama's plan for the 2008 election was simple: open up the map and make a play for traditionally red states like Montana, Alaska, North Dakota, Indiana, Virginia and North Carolina. For a while, the strategy was paying off, with polls showing Obama tied and, in some cases, leading. This strategy forced McCain to put his relatively limited human and financial capital in states that Bush won by overwhelming margins, thus diluting precious resources from kingmakers like Ohio and Florida.

Democrats should come to grips with the fact that the selection of Sarah Palin as the Republican vice presidential nominee was not the joke we all thought it was and that this strategy has been toppled. Alaska, Palin's home state, is registering 30-point margins for the GOP ticket in the latest polls. Montana is plus-12 for McCain-Palin. North Dakota is plus-10. Virginia, a red state that Democrats were actually slightly favored to pick off, is now plus-2.

Palin's selection effectively rendered all the time and effort spent in these states moot in just a day. Perhaps later in the cycle, if Palin is revealed as the fraud she is, this will change – but it's highly unlikely that we'll see any deep red states making a conversion in this go-around.

In the wake of a national poll-a-palooza which shows McCain/Palin gaining a hefty head of steam out of their convention, any Democrat, predictably within earshot of a reporter, has had something to say about how Obama is doomed.

In the wake of a national poll-a-palooza which shows McCain/Palin gaining a hefty head of steam out of their convention, any Democrat, predictably within earshot of a reporter, has had something to say about how Obama is doomed. The Financial Times ran a piece last Thursday, quoting one unnamed "Democratic fundraiser," and former Clinton supporter, as saying that folks on Capitol Hill are worried whether or not Obama will lose the Democrats, the House or the Senate. The embarrassingly ridiculous article was, nonetheless, plastered all over Drudge Report and broadcast in six different segments on Fox News.

It is amazing to me that the press would even bother publishing stories or airing concern troll commentaries from the guys like Bob Herbert or Bob Shrum. These two guys who, among others, helped place the Democratic Party in its six-year political slump from 2000 to 2006.

Let's examine the dynamics of this race.

First, Obama's strategy to make a few deep red states competitive was not the end-all-be-all of how Democrats will win the White House in 2008. Obama's job is actually pretty simple: Win all the states won by Kerry in 2004, plus Iowa, New Mexico and Colorado or Nevada, Missouri and Virginia. Obama has registered leads in every Kerry state except Michigan on a nearly unanimous basis, and Obama hasn't shown to be behind in Michigan since May.

Obama has never been behind in Iowa. Obama has lead in New Mexico in all but two polls since May. It has been a month since the last time a pollster showed McCain over 46 in Colorado. That's 273 electoral votes.

Second, Democrats have made dramatic voter registration gains since 2006. When pollsters configure their numbers based upon what they believe the electorate will look like in 2008, most aren't taking into account that there are 2.2 million more Democrats and 860,000 less Republicans in the 24 states that record party affiliation than there was two years ago. As noted conservative columnist George Will said during "This Week with George Stephanopoulos" on July 2, "A poll is only as good as its template for turnout."

In other words, there is legitimate reason to believe that Obama's support is being underestimated by 1.5-2.5 percent in every state poll. That may not mean a lot in Texas, but it will mean something in Ohio.

If you can't take my word for it, know that primary polling averages underestimated Obama's support by 5-points or more in 11 states: New Mexico, Colorado, Missouri, Indiana, North Carolina, Iowa, Nevada, Wisconsin, South Dakota, South Carolina and Oregon. See some battleground states on that list?

Third, there are several upcoming events that ought to help tip the race back in Obama's favor. The first presidential debate is on Sept. 26, covering topics of national security. Expect Obama to perform well and polling to show that, more and more, Americans can see him as their commander-in-chief.

The only vice presidential debate is on Oct. 2 and, if Palin's interview with Charlie Gibson from ABC is any indication, Joe Biden ought to be able to sit back and watch the Republicans' token candidate destroy herself. The press, initially brow-beaten into adopting the McCain camp line that any criticism of Palin is sexist looks like it is finally fighting back on the various smears and lies, from Bridge to Nowhere and Troopergate to the child sex education ads, and the Obama camp looks like it's ready to drop the hammer as well.

So, Democrats, repeat this line to yourself as solace: In the aftermath of the Republican National Convention, the highest press and polling favorability that McCain will get this entire election cycle, the GOP has fought Obama to a loss, with 265 electoral votes.

But if you can't help but live or die with every poll from a battleground state, then keep quiet and let the grown-ups handle the political punditry.

Scott Harris is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at sharris@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rouse readies NoHo

Folk legend Josh Rouse brings mellow tunes to Iron Horse

By Michelle Fredette
Collegian Correspondent

Singer/songwriter Josh Rouse will bring his mellow, folk-rock vibe to the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton for "An Evening with Josh Rouse."

The 35-year-old has slowly been gaining popularity over the past 10 years. Having toured with the likes of Guster, John Mayer, Aimee Mann and Wilco, Rouse will tackle the Iron Horse in his own right by headlining at tonight's show.

Despite his sluggish climb to fame, success for Rouse was almost accidental.

On the Web site for Rykodisc, his first label, he commented on the irony of the situation.

"As soon as I quit caring, a deal popped up," he wrote.

Born in Nebraska, the songwriter spent much of his childhood moving around the Midwest due to his stepfather's construction career and his biological father's role in the military. The frequent picking up and resettling gave Rouse a lot of life experience early on, and the constant change of scenery greatly influenced his music.

As a teen, Rouse was fixated on forming a band and "making it." As Rouse matured, he became less concerned with success and reverted his attention to making music for the sake of the music.

He jump-started his musical career in junior high, playing violin and trombone in the school band. In high school, he began to write his first songs with friends in a punk-rock band using rock legends The Smiths and The Cure as mules.

His modest beginnings with a self-recorded cassette led to the release of his first record, "Dressed Up Like Nebraska." The critically acclaimed album gained enough popularity for Rouse to quit his job as a hotel parking attendant and focus on his music career.

The impact of the different places Rouse has lived is evident in the titles of his albums, including "Dressed Up Like Nebraska" and "Nashville." Less evident is "Under Cold Blue Stars," which explores the story of a couple living in the Midwest.

Much of Rouse's music is autobiographical. The couple in "Under Cold Blue Stars" is loosely based on stories of his parents' own marriage in the 1950s, and in "1972," Rouse centers on life and music from the year he was born.

Josh Rouse
Sept. 16
Iron Horse Music Hall
$25

The title of his latest album, "Country Mouse, City House," is suggestive of Rouse's Midwestern childhood that has since been replaced by city-living.

His Midwestern influence has led the musician to be labeled as "country" by some, but he denies being a country singer. Nevertheless, there is a slight Texas twang in some of the songs from "Country Mouse, City House," such as "God, Please Let Me Go Back" and "Pilgrim."

Released July 2007, the album is his seventh studio release.

A recent BBC review compares his soft tones and laid-back melodies to the gentleness of Jack Johnson's music.

"Country Mouse, City House" is reminiscent of his previous albums as well. The slightly jazzy "Italian Dry Ice" could have been taken from Rouse's 2003 album, "1972," and the opening track, "Sweetie," would fit well with "Nashville," his 2005 release.

Audiences looking for something new and familiar appreciate his subtle musical explorations.

Rouse has delivered his latest albums from Spain, but the influence of life abroad has not caused him to abandon his roots. He manages to test out different sounds and techniques without wandering too far from what he knows.

His most upbeat songs, such as "Nice to Fit In," are reserved, yet far from boring. The record strategically features acoustics, organs, and horns to mix things up without disrupting the continuity.

Rouse lulls and soothes with his dulcet voice while delving into issues like death, jealousy, loss and longing. The overall calm of his songs on "Country Mouse, City House" give the sense of perspective.

After recording on two different record labels, Rouse has recently launched his own label, Bedroom Classics, as a means of returning to what gained him success in the first place: creating something he feels to be worthwhile, without compromising his creativity.

Tonight's show headlining Josh Rouse starts at 7 p.m. at The Iron Horse located at 20 Center St. in Northampton. Tickets are $22.50 in advance. $25 at the door.

Michelle Fredette can be reached at mfredett@student.umass.edu.

Josh Rouse will bring his folk talents to Northampton's Iron Horse Music Hall tonight with his headlining show, "An Evening with Josh Rouse."

Fashion designer blows out ten candles for label's birthday

By Rebecca Babin
Collegian Correspondent

Not only is Narciso Rodriquez's spring 2009 collection's potentially his best work yet, but it also marks his label's 10th anniversary.

Rodriguez is infamous for his sassy yet minimalist designs that play with the contrast between hard and soft. Many of his past designs remained in the neutral family but experimented with necklines and shapes that made them both inspiring and eye catching.

His style is American, but what separates him from many of his contemporaries such as Michael Kors and Marc Jacobs is his European influence with a Latin flare, not something often seen on the catwalk.

Both the celebrities he dresses and everyday women who don his designs inspire his work and serve as his muses. With every design, Rodriguez hopes to encapsulate the beauty of the female form and aims to make every woman who wears his clothing feel unstoppable.

In his most recent collection, he has accomplished the almost impossible: balancing architectural and structured with sleek and sensual.

With his focal point usually being floor length gowns, he took an interesting turn this season, opting instead to work around ready-to-wear separates.

This isn't the only alteration Rodriguez has made for spring. Not typically a pattern man, he incorporated both star and stripe prints into this collection, but don't worry – not together.

As the designer amped up the edge, he didn't sacrifice the allure.

Unlike his past collections, Rodriguez incorporated color, including more rustic hues of sage, kelly green, red salmon, rust and nude.

He uses a body-conscious banding technique by weaving different-colored strips of fabric into geometric patterns on the fronts and backs of his dresses, hugging a woman's curves in all the right spots. There are provocative cut-outs as strips of criss-crossing fabrics expose a peek of rib or back. Leather and lace lay sensually over the shoulder blades and lower back in such a way that guarantees a second glance.

His collection also features sleek, tailored double-breasted coats, graceful knee-length jackets that billow elegantly away from the body and tuxedos that truly capture the modern androgynous look to a "T."

There is a certain softness achieved in Rodriguez's spring collection as well. His day dresses made of tweed, a heavy and sometimes unflattering fabric, remain feminine with yarn discretely woven into chiffon.

For evening, sport a sexy, peek-a-boo dress with a skirt made of peacock feathers or choose a bright orange number with an elaborately crafted bodice.

Rodriguez has truly come a long way since his presence was first detected on the fashion scene in the mid-1980s.

Narciso Rodriquez, born in Newark, N.J., in 1961, is the son of two Cuban immigrants who were steadfastly against him becoming a fashion designer, with hopes that he would instead pursue a more conservative and profitable career.

His parents envisioned him becoming a doctor, lawyer or dentist, so when he told them about his passion for fashion, they were not very happy.

In lieu of the countless times he heard the word, "No," the fashion phenom persevered. As far as he was concerned, no was not an option.

Against his parents' better judgment, Rodriguez attended Parsons The New School for Design and later went on to work for Cerruti, Donna Karen and Calvin Klein before deciding to launch his own label in 1998.

This year marks the tenth anniversary of designer Narciso Rodriguez's self-titled fashion label.

A recent Narsico Rodriguez creation for spring 2009.

In 2005, he became the first American to be recognized by the Council of Fashion Designers of America as the Women's Wear Designer of the Year for two consecutive years.

Despite his innovative and fashion forward designs, in 2006, he was over $1 million in debt to his suppliers after his two prominent backers, Manchester-Alberta Torretti, pulled out after contract disputes. He required a fabric donation just to create his spring 2007 line.

That collection received rave reviews, adorned by celebrities such as Selma Hayek, Claire Danes and Sarah Jessica Parker.

This only helped his financial situation for a brief time, however.

His friends, fellow designers and executives of Liz Claiborne were astounded by his financial troubles, considering his growing popularity in the fashion industry.

With the help of long-time friends, Donna Karen, Ralph Lauren and "Vogue" editor-in-chief Anna Wintour, he found help from Liz Claiborne, Inc.

In May 2007, Liz Claiborne acquired a 50 percent interest in Rodriguez's label.

With the help and support of Liz Claiborne, he is now out of his financial rut and doing better than ever.

Rodriguez has expanded his label to both men's and women's fragrances and continues to challenge the high standards he has set for himself, aspiring to outdo the work he has done in his past collections.

Architectural, innovative, pure, precise, sexy, classic, womanly, feminine, elegant. Congratulations, Narciso, on 10 years of fabulous news.

Rebecca Babin can be reached at rbabin@student.umass.edu.

Study finds link to diabetes in black women who drink soda

By Meghan Satyanarayana
Detroit Free Press

DETROIT – Sylvia Johnson, 70, is an active, retired Detroit school teacher who rides her exercise bike and uses an abdominal machine to strengthen her bones and muscles. She eats well, too, having cereal and fruit for breakfast and sometimes fish in the afternoon. But Johnson has one bad habit that researchers at Boston University now have linked to diabetes in black women.

"I'm a Pepsi addict. I don't smoke. I don't drink. I don't curse," she said.

Johnson is one of nearly 44,000 black women whose diets were studied between 1995 and 2001 by Boston University and Harvard University researchers as part of the Black Women's Health Study, a national effort to understand what distinguishes black women's health issues from other groups'. About 4,000 participants came from Michigan. Every two years in the diet analysis, researchers asked who had been newly diagnosed with diabetes. Over the course of the study, they logged 2,700 new cases on top of the 4,000 diabetics who were in it at the beginning.

Researchers found that women who drank at least two sodas or sugary juice drinks, such as Kool-Aid or fruit punch, daily were diagnosed with diabetes more often than those who consumed less.

Most surprising, said lead author Julie Palmer, was those who drank juice drinks were leading healthier lives than their soda-drinking counterparts, but still getting diabetes. She said some women mistakenly considered juice drinks healthier when, in fact, they contain as much sugar as soda.

"People are trying to be healthier and replace soft drinks with fruit drinks, and it's not reducing their risk of diabetes," she said.

The American Diabetes Foundation says that one in four African-American women older than 55 has Type II diabetes and suffers from complications such as cardiovascular disease, blindness, amputation and kidney failure more often than whites.

Type II diabetics are insensitive to insulin, a hormone that tells cells to take up sugar and use it for fuel. Without it, glucose levels rise in the blood, gumming up the works and leading to complications.

Three months ago, Johnson learned she is pre-diabetic, showing early signs of the disease. One of the first things to go was regular Pepsi. At one point, she drank three Pepsis per day, consuming nearly one-quarter cup of sugar in the process. Now, it's Diet Pepsi with a splash of regular, just for the taste, she said.

Palmer said that many diabetic risk factors are difficult to change, but this one is easy.

"Whether fat or thin, cut out soft drinks or other" drinks, she said. "You'll cut your risk. It's not hard to do. Losing 20 pounds? That's hard to do."

A recent study by Boston University and Harvard University shows a link between black women's consumption of sugary drinks and a rise in their sugar levels.

1st loss for Saint Louis

George Washington improves record before A–10 play

By Kyle Predki
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Butler University (3-4-0) handed Saint Louis its first loss of the 2008 season. The Billikens (3-1-2) let two squeak by in the 2-0 loss this weekend.

With the loss on its mind, Saint Louis barely survived its match against Vanderbilt (5-1-0). The Billikins kept their one-loss record with the 2-2 come-from-behind tie against the Commodores.

A-10 W Soccer

Saint Louis finishes its last non-conference matches this weekend and starts the Atlantic 10 Conference games with Duquesne (2-1-2).

George Washington

Even after starting the year at a disappointing 1-4-0, George Washington (3-4-0) bounced back this weekend and put two marks in the win column. A dominating performance proved worthy for the struggling Colonials, tallying a 4-0 victory over Delaware State (1-5-0). The much needed win would set the tone for the Colonials, as they steamrolled into another 4-0 win over Howard University (1-6-0).

Now with two shutouts under its belt, GW heads to American University (3-2-1) with hopes of boosting its record to .500 before the conference opener against Fordham (3-1-1).

Richmond

Richmond won its sole match this weekend and improved its record to 4-1-1. The Spiders scored two goals against the UMBC (1-6-0), but it was enough for the 2-0 win. Richmond now looks forward to a two-game home stand before it dives into the Atlantic 10 Conference games.

Xavier

Still winless after three games, Xavier (0-5-0) went into the weekend in the hunt of its first victory, but they emerged defeated.

The Musketeers would suffer a disappointing 1-0 loss against cross-town rival Cincinnati (6-3-0) to start the weekend. Xavier's misfortune would continue through to its match against No. 16 Oklahoma. Oklahoma would topple Xavier, 5-1, and create another hurdle in the Musketeers' withered season.

Xavier has only two non-conference games to steer itself before its conference opener with Temple (2-3-1).

Charlotte

Despite having a player named to the Nation Elite Team of the Week, Charlotte dropped both of its games last weekend.

The first loss came from No. 19 Wake Forest (6-1-0), when the 49ers failed to match the three points Wake Forest scored. The troubles continued for the 49ers when they were handed an embarrassing loss by Virginia Tech (5-2-0). Charlotte lost the match, 5-1.

Charlotte has just one more match, against Francis Marion (0-7-0), before beginning the search for a third A-10 Conference title.

St. Joseph's

Kicking off the season with a 0-2-0 start, Saint Joseph's (3-2-0) couldn't have been happier with its results this weekend. By bombarding Lehigh (2-3-1) in the second half, the Hawks managed to put four points on the scoreboard and marked a 4-0 win.

Their winning streak would then rest on the foot of Maggie Lupinski. The freshman scored her first collegiate goal in double overtime to end the match against Marist (1-4-0) with a 2-1 victory. Saint Joe's must now get ready for Delaware (3-2-1) and Drexel (4-2-0) before traveling to Rhode Island (2-4-1) to start its A-10 Conference games.

Kyle Predki can be reached at kpredki@student.umass.edu

Vaccaro, Craft score first career goals at Old Dominion

Junior Bryan Hogan has yet to score a goal for the Minutemen, but will continue to be an offensive threat. In 2007, he scored his first goal of the season on Sept. 7.

SOCCER from page 8

the road]," Koch said. "We know what to expect, new players will know how we do things, so this was a good rehearsal for what we will have to deal with when we play in the conference."

You always remember your first

Two players scored their first collegiate goals in Sunday's match-up against William & Mary. The circumstances were different for both sophomore Chris Vaccaro and freshman Bryant Craft.

It took Vaccaro 27 games to score a goal, but he finally knocked one in 17 minutes into the game after a great set-up pass by Mike DeSantis.

Craft, playing in his fifth career game, scored his first goal in the 83rd minute to put UMass up 2-1. It may have taken Vaccaro 22 more games than Craft to get a goal, but both players will remember their first goal forever.

Same position as 2007

The Minutemen may not be doing as well as they had hoped for the start of their 2008 season, but they are in the same position as last year – when then made their way to the NCAA College Cup. In 2007, they had a 2-4 record on Sept. 16; this year they are doing better (2-2-1).

Last year's returning leading scorer, junior Bryan Hogan, hadn't scored a goal until Sept. 7, 2007 one year later, on Sept. 16, 2008 he has yet to tally a goal. Although not getting scores from Hogan might be contributing to less wins this season, it doesn't mean the Minutemen aren't going to improve their record.

The start of the season is used to show how much progress the a team has made and still needs to make. Koch uses the first five games to learn what the team's weaknesses and strengths are and how they are going to work to improve them before conference play begins in October.

Scott Feldman and Melissa Turtinen can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com

Tait, Bourazeris defenders supporting UM's offense

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

...time will tell which goalie will log the most playing time by the end of the season.

Dynamic Duo

The back line sophomores, Jaime Bourazeris and Jackie Tait, are doing well for the UMass Minutewomen.

Tait defeninitrates excellent defensive fundamentals and is one of the tougher defenders on the team. She plays high in the defensive zone, while Bourazeris tends to drift back toward the goal. Tait has 11 shots on the season, six of which have been on goal.

Bourazeris is dangerous on both sides of the ball. Her five points is the third-highest total on the team. Bourazeris recently found her offensive stride. She has one goal and three assists, a career high. Two of those assists came Sunday against Harvard (1-3), a game in which Bourazeris scored as well.

Hard work rewarded

After earning Athlete of the Week honors last week for her three goals over the previous weekend, sophomore forward Katie Kelly scored her team-leading fourth goal against the Crimson on Saturday. Kelly also notched an assist, giving her two on the season, good for second on the team.

Kelly has already surpassed her season-high for goals, assists and points. Already having one game-winning goal, she is also on pace to break her season-high two goals.

Kelly has made her way onto the stat sheet in four of the Maroon and White's six games.

The forward line has been stellar for the Minutewomen, scoring 75 percent of the team's total goals and accounting for four of UMass' 11 assists.

Mike Goldmeister can be reached at mgoldmei@student.umass.edu

Delta Chi
Fraternity Since 1890
Friendship • Charac ter • Justice • Education

Some hear an inner voice that calls for something more out of their college experience. Something that you can start from the beginning taking your personal experiences and creating a new organization with clear values, goals, and a fresh new image. Discover what can be accomplished when strong and capable men bond together for a common purpose.

Beginning September 2008, the opportunity to become a Founding Father at UMASS will call.

Will you answer?

Contact Adam Jones:
AdamJ@deltachi.org
319-621-2301

The Delta Chi Fraternity Information Sessions
September 15th - Campus Center room 803, 11am, 7pm
September 16th - Campus Center room 803, 11am, 7pm

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WHEN YOUR COMPLETED
SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD
AND SEE YOURSELF IN COMICS PAGE
COMICS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bambi's Mom.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 9 | | | | | | | |
| 6 | | 7 | 4 | 1 | | | | |
| | | | 9 | | 6 | | 4 | |
| 5 | | | 1 | 9 | 2 | 3 | | |
| | 2 | | | | | | 7 | |
| | | 8 | 7 | 5 | 3 | | | 4 |
| | 1 | | 5 | | 4 | | | |
| | | | | 6 | 1 | 9 | | 2 |
| | | | | | | | 8 | |

Quote of the Day

"If all the girls who attended the Yale prom were laid end to end, I wouldn't be a bit surprised."

- Dorothy Parker

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! By Tim Rickard

Brothers Watt By Will Wilson

Labrat By Richard Martelly

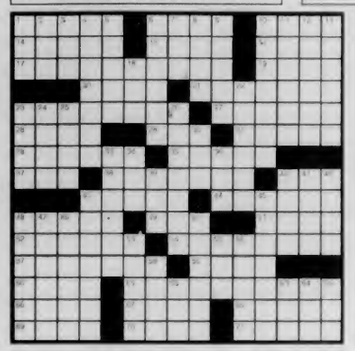
ACROSS
1 Lobon botanicals
6 Suffer defeat
10 Blemish
14 Early insect stage
15 Tel -Jaffa
16 Saintly circle
17 Burn to ashes
19 Gray or Moran
20 Sub shop
21 Isolated ethnic community
23 Kent's alter ego
27 Fusing material
28 Blood-related
29 Oolong or pekoe
31 Lascivious looks
32 Tenant
35 Diplomatic agent
37 Make a request
38 More prepared
40 Genetic stuff
43 Tag
44 Spots
46 Church recesses
49 Minute div
51 BA word
52 Hungers for
54 New model's debut
57 Sticks together
59 Declare
60 Track shape
61 Diminish in value
66 Withered
67 Famous cookie man
68 "M*A*S*H" locale
69 Old Russian VIP
70 Longest river
71 Guide

DOWN
1 Will Smith title role
2 PC group
3 Tolkien baddie
4 Plan to see
5 More rational
6 Lasso
7 Eggs to Caesar
8 Web location
9 Makes equal
10 "Ode to the Westwind" poet
11 Ceremonial procession
12 Cromwell or Goldsmith
13 Skin creams
18 Oak's cousin
22 Flag of a military unit
23 Poet Teasdale
24 Small Hawaiian guitars
25 Shocking color, maybe
26 Teaser
30 Tropical black cuckoo
33 Pencil topper
34 CSA soldier
36 Victory sign
39 DDE's rival
40 Dreadful
41 New Jersey hoopsters
42 Junior exec
43 Tool for evening
45 Nationalist
46 Confront boldly
47 Goes to show
48 African desert
50 Crude
53 Farmy cry
55 St. crosser
56 Packs of playing cards
58 Big rig
62 D.C. wheeler dealer
63 Exist
64 Place to drive from
65 Corn serving



WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

peer pressure

all the cool kids are doing it

comics
@
dailycollegian.com

ATKINS FARMS Country Market
Now Hiring
For The Fall & Holiday Seasons

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Applying your new "Everyday - No Less" deodorant regimen will pay big dividends.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Here are your Unlucky Numbers of the Day...8, 11, 2, 45. Beware.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
"Bush" is a four-letter word. Literally.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
If the electoral vote is tied, Barack Obama will have a big advantage in the Presidential tie-break ping-pong match.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Its going to be hard to explain how you got caught stuck in the Whitmore air ducts for a second straight week.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Applesauce is not a lubricant.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
A colonoscopy will finally prove that you are full of crap.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't continue to trivialize important things, such as ringworm.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Don't test librarians' patience. They might very well throw the book at you.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Refrain from non-coital activity for at least a week, if you know what's good for you.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Nothing is faster than a dog.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Selling advertising space on your crotch has been profitable, butt it is time to expand your business.

ROCK OUT WITH YOUR CLOCK OUT
comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Employment

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Weekends. Apply at D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required: experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

Services

AFFORDABLE, CONFIDENTIAL, SAFE. Get the care you need at Tapestry Health. Providing birth control, EC, Pregnancy testing, GYN and Breast Exams, HIV counseling and testing, STD Screening and treatment. 27 Pray Street, Amherst MA 413-548-9992 Walk ins welcome Tapestryhealth.org

Employment

COLLEGE PRO- I could spend my summer sitting on the couch playing video games. Or I could take initiative, work hard, run my own business, and plan for my future. Real Life, Right Now. College Pro. 888-277-7962 www.CollegePro.com VISIT our Info. Session: Campus Center-Wed &Thursday 9/17 and 9/18 Room 805-09 -8th Floor 10am,11am,12pm,1pm, 2pm,3pm

Help Wanted

Spring Break 09. Work for Sun Splash. Travel Free. www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Announcments

Montreal Weekends From $99. Complete RoundTrip, Motorcoach. 3 days, 2 nights. Hotel Downtown. For Details MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

Announcments

Spring Break. Discounts. Free Travel/ Meals. Before Nov. 1. 1800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

Announcments

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S. Padre, Florida. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIEDS...

(413) 545 - 3500

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen look to improve for A–10s

2008 UMass in same position as 2007 team

BY SCOTT FELDMAN AND MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A few days before the Massachusetts men's soccer team went on a two game road trip to Virginia, UMass coach Sam Koch said he would know what kind of team he had this season.

Now he knows.

He can see that his team has plenty of potential, but there is definitely room for improvement.

The Minutemen (2-2-1) went 0-1-1 last weekend during the two-game trip to Virginia. They lost, 1-0, to Old Dominion on Friday, but rebounded Sunday, tying William & Mary, 2-2, in a game that easily could have been a UMass victory.

UMass Soccer

Koch would have liked a better performance against Old Dominion, and feels they could, and should, have played better.

"We're a better team then what we showed. Old Dominion was very good, but I think we allowed them to play well," Koch said.

OFFENSE TRYING TO FIND ITS GROOVE

After getting only five shots against the Monarchs, UMass' offense got into a rhythm against the Tribe, making 14 shots and creating numerous scoring chances. The team's passing was much crisper against the Tribe on Sunday. The Minutemen avoided turning the ball over – something Koch will be continuing to work on in practice.

"Offensively we have done a great job of creating chances and we have got to continue to work on that," Koch said. "We have a good week of training coming up so I'm looking forward to that."

UMass hopes the offense can show more consistency and carry last game's strong effort over to New Hampshire. This season, the Minutemen seem to alternate good offensive performances with bad ones. They were shut out in their first game, but scored three goals in their second. They notched the lone goal in the third game, got shut out in game four and scored two goals in their last game.

HOMESICK?

The Maroon and White travel to the Granite State next week to face the University of New Hampshire. This will be the team's fifth road game in its first six games. It's a difficult stretch for a team that plays significantly better at home than on the road.

The Minutemen are 10-1 at Rudd Field since last year and 36-16-5 since the facility was built in 2002. However, dating back to last year they are 9-9-1 in away games.

Koch notes that it is much easier to play at home, but feels the early road schedule will help prepare the team for what it will have to face later on in conference play.

"This was a good test for us when we have to play La Salle, Fordham, St. Bonaventure and Duquesne [on

See SOCCER on page 6

Sophomore midfield Chris Vaccaro controls the ball past Siena's Sebastien Anzevui on Sept. 6. Vaccaro scored his first career goal on Sept. 14 in a 2–2 tie against William & Mary.

Senior captain Mary Shea is a team leader at midfield and has rallied one assist in her six games played. Shea helps support sophomore teammate Katie Kelly, the leading scorer so far this season with four goals.

Minutewomen change up goalies

Widdall, Williams promising for team's future in 2008

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The goalie situation for the Massachusetts field hockey team will undergo changes in the coming weeks.

Alesha Widdall is earning the most time in net because of her solid play and her international resume. Her tour on the United States U-21 national team while in Argentina sharpened her leadership skills and elevated her overall quickness.

UMass Field Hockey

In a few weeks, the freshman will be temporarily unavailable because she will be competing in the 2008 Pan-American Games.

UMass coach Justine Sowry said Widdall would be challenged by the schedule of the Minutewomen (4-2), but noted she has grinded out tough games for the Maroon and White. This is why she has seen more playing time than junior Sarah Williams.

Widdall has started five of the six games for UMass this season and has been the goalie in every victory. Her 0.93 goals-against average has been a big help to the Minutewomen because of the lack of experience on the back line.

Williams' stats look less than impressive, but that's only because she hasn't had the playing time that Widdall has seen. That's about to change, though. With Widdall leaving soon for the Pan-Am Games, Sowry plans to put Williams in a lot more, in order to keep her fresh.

Williams knows Sowry's coaching style more and that has given her an edge in practice, even if Widdall has experience playing overseas.

With Williams performing increasingly better in practice, she is more than just a suitable backup. There is no clear-cut starter in goal for the Minutewomen, so

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Men take 3rd place, women finish 7th

Mulvaney, Zan top scorers at Dartmouth Invitational

Last weekend the Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams competed at the Dartmouth Invitational.

The men finished in third place behind Dartmouth and Brown, trailing by only two points at the end of the day.

The Minutewomen placed seventh in the meet, behind Brown, Northeastern and Boston University.

UMass junior Andrew Mulvaney finished first on the team and third overall in the 8,000-meter run, and was the Minutemen's top scorer.

The top scorer for the Minutewomen was Shiyi Zan, who finished first on the team in the 5K run and eighth overall.

The Minutemen had several other high scorers, most notably were Robert Deegan and Sean Duncan. The two ran well, finishing 10th and 11th overall in the 8K, and only 0.6 seconds behind one another. Other notable members of the men's team included Michael Sullivan and Sonny Gamble, who finished 14th and 22nd overall in the race.

"I was really happy with the way the team preformed during the opening race," UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien said. "Our hard work is paying off and it should be a great season."

O'Brien is looking forward to this weekend's home meet, where the track is a little less challenging.

"The track at Dartmouth is a difficult one, and I thought our athletes handled it very well," he said.

Karen Roa and Kristen Darling finished second and third in the 8K race. Senior Beth Harlow placed fourth on the team, rounding out the top scorers for the Minutewomen.

Both teams will return to action next weekend when they host Colgate, Maine and Vermont. The men will also be competing against Connecticut.

– Sam Grossack, Collegian Staff

Dartmouth Invitational Men's Cross Country Results

| Name | Year/ School | Time |
|---|---|---|
| 1. Randall, Glenn | SR Dartmouth College | 26:00.10 |
| 2. Ashe, Eric | JR Boston University | 26:14.00 |
| 3. Mulvaney, Andrew | JR Massachusetts | 26:18.50 |
| 4. Duffy, Matt | FR Brown University | 26:18.60 |
| 5. Kenimer, Brad | FR Dartmouth College | 26:22.50 |
| 6. Schilder, Brian | SO Brown University | 26:25.70 |
| 7. Forgach, Peter | JR Monmouth University | 26:27.40 |
| 8. Iyer, Hari | SR Dartmouth College | 26:28.00 |
| 9. Treadway, Kevin | R Dartmouth College | 26:28.60 |
| 10. Deegan, Robert | SO Massachusetts | 26:39.20 |
| 11. Duncan, Sean | SO Massachusetts | 26:39.80 |

Dartmouth Invitational Women's Cross Country Results

| Name | Year/School | Time |
|---|---|---|
| 1. Lagasse, Erin | JR Boston University | 19:53.80 |
| 2. Webber, Eliza | FR Brown University | 20:30.90 |
| 3. Nelson, Michaeline | SO Brown University | 20:35.20 |
| 4. Moriarty, Brittany | SR Northeastern | 20:37.60 |
| 5. Stone, Caitlin | FR Brown University | 20:45.00 |
| 6. Conner, Corey | FR University of Maine | 20:47.60 |
| 7. Maxim, Hilary | FR University of Maine | 20:50.30 |
| 8. Zan, Shiyi | SO Massachusetts | 20:51.00 |
| 9. Lynam, Cailin | JR Monmouth University | 20:51.20 |
| 10. Gruneisen, Aryn | SR Dartmouth College | 20:52.00 |
| 37. Roa, Karen | FR Massachusetts | 21:50.70 |

INSIDE: A TASTE OF COMEDY ON CAMPUS | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 76 LO: 52 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2008

Holub, faculty look forward

Chancellor speaks of change, riding the stallion of success

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Chancellor Robert Holub gave his first address to the faculty this past Friday at Bowker auditorium, giving a preview of what he hopes to accomplish this year at the University of Massachusetts.

The small auditorium was filled with faculty in full regalia, who entered to a march played by a cross-section of the marching band standing in the balcony above.

While the event was a faculty convocation also serving as a venue to honor the achievements of a few highly decorated faculty members, many were more eager to hear Holub speak candidly about his vision for the University.

Holub delivered his speech in good humor, noting the student for whom the auditorium was named for 1914 became the president of a fertilizer company, "There may be some who see an intimate connection between university administration and fertilizer, but I'll leave further speculation on that topic to you," Holub joked.

Holub began by describing the strengths of UMass he had seen in his six weeks on the job. He praised UMass' faculty, student body and new construction projects.

"These initial positive impressions have been most gratifying for me," said Holub, "They reinforce the oft repeated claim that our campus is the foremost public research university in New England. In turn, all of us in this room should be proud of this achievement. But we should not be content with it. I believe … that the Amherst campus of the University of Massachusetts should be more than a regional power; it should aspire to the upper echelon of national public universities."

The rest of his comments were devoted to describing how he thought UMass should proceed to enter that upper echelon.

Holub continued to speak about research propelling UMass to new heights by intending to improve the level and amount of research being done at UMass by positioning the university appropriately for grants and building interdisciplinary research teams.

Holub said he wants to take a different approach to the administration at UMass, "First let me say that I view administration as a facilitator of teaching and research, not as an end in itself. Administration exists primarily for the sake of faculty and students, and we have value only insofar as we enhance their activities," said Holub, who said he wants to reorganize the administration and take a critical look at it.

See HOLUB on page 3

Chancellor Holub stands in full regalia while addressing members of the faculty on Friday. His speech was sprinkled with humor, but he spoke seriously on his vision for the University.

William McGuinness Collegian Staff

Campus grieves lost senior

According to an e-mail from Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin, University of Massachusetts student Randall E. Graham died yesterday.

The Worcester Telegram and Gazette reported that Graham, of Brookline Village, Mass. was traveling east on Rt. 2 near Athol, Mass. when she collided with a 2002 Ford Explorer driven by Annmarie Kemper, 37, of Winchester, N.H.

Kemper was treated for minor injuries while Graham was pronounced dead at Athol Memorial Hospital.

Members of the Athol police and fire departments assisted Massachusetts State Police on the scene.

The cause of the crash is unknown but under investigation by the state police collision analysis and reconstruction team and the state police crime scene services.

She was a legal studies major and lived in the North apartments, according to Vanin.

Vanin extended the University's condolences in the e-mail.

William McGuinness Collegian Staff

Aalfs teaches the art of defense

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Imagine walking into a bar and having a stranger invade your personal space, or imagine walking down a dark alley and being forcibly threatened.

For Janet Aalfs, UMass alumna and director of Valley Women's Martial Arts (VWMA) in Easthampton, teaching women to defend themselves, no matter how grave the situation, is her job.

"I truly enjoy sharing what I do," Aalfs said. "And when you're having fun you can learn more."

Yesterday, the seventh-degree black belt instructed the first of two installments of "Women and Self-Defense" at the University of Massachusetts. Her calm and collected, yet engaging style was instantly contagious as she taught the group basic, self-defense skills, both external and internal.

The crowded room in the Newman Center appeared nervous at first but proved ready to take up the challenge of learning a foreign art. Members of the community and UMass students all combined to create a network of support for each other through an emotional workshop.

To initiate that support, Aalfs had the class learn a shielding position – one foot forward with one hand in front of the other and palms out – switching the hands forward and backward. Then instead of the standard classroom icebreaker, she had each member say their name with the class confidently yelling it back to them, using the shielding position as a guide.

Aalfs used a unique method to teach her classes, incorporating poetry into her martial arts movements.

As part of the first few opening exercises, Aalfs recited one of her poems while moving fluidly between martial arts positions, as a demonstration of applying every-

See DEFENSE on page 3

Janet Aalfs demonstrates a shielding position during yesterday's martial art defense class.

Improvement slated for infrastructure

BY JOSHUA WALOVITCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts' Committee of Administration and Finance approved a $2.56 billion capital plan last week for the years 2009-2013, leading to the construction of a $100 million laboratory science building, a $53.3 million student recreation center and several other projects.

"I let me say that this is an historic and unprecedented moment in UMass history," said UMass president Jack Wilson. "We have never before seen such an amazing investment in the University, and if we do this well, it can catapult us into the top ranks of public universities."

To complete this, the University must generate funding from several sources. Ideally they plan on borrowing 57 percent of the revenue, receiving 31 percent from the state, directing eight percent in operating funds and generating four percent in private and federal funds.

UMass state funding from years 2000-2008 amounted to 16 percent of $1.7 billion, which is slightly less than $3 million. Close to $900 million will be received from the state between 2009-2013. This change marks a drastic increase in state funding.

The current budget has been beyond the school's expectations and has outdone past budgets. "It will take many years to work off the projects planned here. Each year we will review and refine the plan to see how things on campus have changed and what the highest priorities should be," said Wilson. "We will certainly expect that the Chancellor will lead a fund raising program that will bring additional funding to campus. I will do all that I can to help with that."

Such a drastic project has not been made since the 1960s when John W. Lederle sat as president. Over 40 buildings were constructed between the years of 1960-1970 and created most of the campus that we see today.

"I like the recent improvements that have been made to the buildings over on North Pleasant street, however I realize that the

See PLAN on page 3

Sliding away from home

Unbeaten in their last four games, Alyssa Visconti and the Minutewomen hit the road to face the Albany Great Danes.

Steam plant's budget boosted

Second hike brings project cost to $133m

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Like everything else in today's economy, replacing the University of Massachusetts' Central Heating Plant is getting more expensive. The building's budget saw an increase of $6.3 million, the second hike this year, bringing the total price $133.3 million.

Joyce Hatch, the UMass vice chancellor of administration and finance since June 2002, said new the plant was designed over six years ago and originally completed three years ago. However, UMass officials in June said the expenses to build the state-of-the-art plant were increasing, due to unanticipated costs and mandatory add-ons, by $9 million. A 2005 projection predicted a cost of $118 million.

Costs went up this time for multiple reasons, including materials, energy costs, legal fees, safety measures, project management fees, changes in the surrounding environment as well as related projects that have been combined with it. Such projects include $1 million invested in site development for the nearby recreational center that is under construction and the building of an east-west electrical distribution tie.

According to UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski, the tie will connect the east and west sides of campus for power distribution.

Hatch said she is certain students' tuition and fees and Massachusetts' residents' taxes will not be increased to compensate for the unexpected cost hikes.

The new plant, located behind the Mullins Center, is expected to be eco-friendly.

"We're using oil and gas to produce steam and the steam goes through the steam tunnels [under the Mullins Center]," Hatch said. "It provides all the heat for the campus."

The steam will also be used to create electricity for UMass, according to Hatch. The plant is expected to produce a maximum of 10 million watts of electricity an hour, thereby supplying 80 percent of the campus' power. In one hour, it should create enough electricity to keep an average American home powered for 11 hours.

UMass has to decommission the old heating plant, built across the street from the Mullins Center in the 1930s, because it doesn't meet any emission standards.

"It burns coal, which means it is a plant which creates a lot of pollutants compared to what the new plant will do," said Blaguszewski. "Clearly, the technologies have improved [since the '30s] to deliver energy more effectively."

According to the Daily Hampshire Gazette, Eva Tor, a spokeswoman for the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection, said UMass' new cogeneration power plant, which will produce less greenhouse gas by reaping the excess power by creating heat and making electricity with it, remains in the testing stages.

"You have to get through 30 days of this testing in order to have sign-off by the DEP and the EPA," Hatch said. "It's just a testing phase right now before we get our final permit [to operate]." She said the testing will be over around the end of September.

Though not yet fully operational, the plant this summer won a "2008 Pacesetter Plant Award" from the Combined Cycle Journal, a power-plant publication. The publication cited the plant for bonding energy conversion equipment and inventive building design.

The plant's construction budget is part of a $2.56

See STEAM on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 12

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasenuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COPY EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Garber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenwaike
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mulholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kuczwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Waxman
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cernak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larrard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Tortinen
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIATE SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALPHA DELTA, AND THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1892. THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1904 AND THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1906. PUBLISHED JULY 2008 – JANUARY 2009. FOR ADDITIONAL SALES AND INFORMATION, PAGE ASSIGNMENTS, CALL 545-3500.
PRINTED AT 8:30 A.M. AND 1:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
David Humphreys

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michelle Abbasciano

UMPD/Amherst police log

(Compiled by Adam P. Coulter, Collegian Staff)

Sunday September 7th – Saturday Sept. 13th

Sunday-

Brian A. Tillet, 23, of 27 Highland Ave. Fairhaven, Mass. was pulled over at 3:11 a.m. on Massachusetts Ave. and charged with OUI Liquor, 2nd offense, marijuana possession and failure to stop.

Tillett, who is not a student, was administered a field sobriety test on the scene as well as a Portable Breath Test on which he registered a .14.

Tuesday-

Mark Waiti, 18, of 88 Wheatland St., Apt. 4 Somerville, Mass. and Steven Domings, 18, of 82 Gilman St. Somerville were arrested in their Melville dorm at 9:39 a.m. and both charged with possession of a Class D drug with the intent to distribute and possessing liquor while under the age of 21.

The Detective Bureau had been investigating the selling of marijuana from the 2nd floor dorm and served the warrant on the room based on information from a confidential informant.

Wednesday-

Daniel T. Morrison, 19, of 47 Park St. Danvers, Mass. was arrested in his John Quincy Adams dorm room at 11: 26 a.m. and charged with possession and possession to distribute a Class D drug, and possessing liquor while under the age of 21.

A confidential informant was involved in the case and provided probable cause information, leading to the arrest.

Thursday-

Colin R. Bentley, 25, of 112 Eastman Ln. 307F UMass, Mass. was arrested at 8:37 p.m. on Thatcher Way as a result of a traffic stop and was charged with an outstanding warrant for failure to appear and possession of a Class D drug.

Friday-

David Louis Bowler, 18, of 60 Lillian St. Pittsfield, Mass. and Nicholas Anthony Simeone were arrested in Lot 33 at 4:06 p.m.

Bowler was charged with possessing liquor while under the age of 21, and Simeone, a Berkshire Community College student, was charged with possessing liquor while under the age of 21, possessing a false liquor ID card and possession of marijuana.

Brendan McCarthy, 18, of 14 Meade Ave. Hull, Mass. was arrested at 6:27 p.m. in Lot 22 and charged with possessing alcohol while under the age of 21.

Jesse D. Alonge, 19, of 55 Thicket St. Weymouth, Mass. was arrested at 9:31 p.m. in Lot 33 and charged with possession of a Class D drug and possessing liquor while under the age of 21.

Alonge also had an outstanding warrant for operating a motor vehicle with a suspended registration and operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license.

Saturday-

Kavita Hooja, 19, of 44 Appletree Dr. Stamford, CT. was arrested after a traffic stop on University Dr. at 12:49 a.m. and charged with OUI liquor, possession of a Class D drug, failure to stop/yield and failure to possess a license at the time of arrest.

Benjamin N. Parsons, 20, of 1214 Washington St. Gloucester, Mass. was arrested at 2:45 a.m. as a result of a traffic stop on Massachusetts Avenue and charged with OUI liquor, one-way street violation and misuse of a false ID card.

Benjamin C. Hodges, 19, of Abington, Mass. and Aby S. Youssef, 18, also of Abington were arrested at 2:50 a.m. on the Southwest Mall, both being charged with Disorderly Conduct.

Garrett Q. Moylan, 21, of 538 Parker St. East Longmeadow, Mass. was arrested at 10:49 p.m. outside Dickerson Dormitory and charged with OUI liquor, negligent operation of a motor vehicle, speed and proper operation on a sidewalk.

Adam P. Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

IF YOU SEE NEWS HAPPEN: 413-545-1764
news@dailycollegian.com

Cost of steam

More needed to finish plant

STEAM from page 1

billion, five-year capital plan approved last week by the UMass Board of Trustees Committee on Administration and Finance. Trustees are scheduled to meet Sept. 26 at UMass-Boston to vote to make the plan go into effect.

The plan also calls for $3 million in renovations to accommodate new faculty hires for the flagship.

When creating the $2.56 billion capital plan, UMass President Jack Wilson and UMass trustees took into account two recently-approved state bond bills – the higher education and life science initiatives. Together, the bills will provide more than $1.5 billion for UMass construction.

UMass has spent $1.7 billion on construction and building maintenance over the past eight years.

As for the students, some said the new plant will be worth it, despite the heavy expenses.

"Green is the future," said Mark McKenna, a sophomore legal studies major. "Personally, I'd rather see us go a different route than oil and gas – maybe solar."

"I think we're still going to have to spend [the money] some time, so why not now?" said Nicole Martin, a sophomore business major.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli08@gmail.com

The Central Heating Plant will require an additional $6.3 million before it is completed. This is the second time the budget was increased since the proposal's inception.

University of Utah shuttle shifts gears on gas economy

BY ISABELLA BRAVO
DAILY UTAH CHRONICLE (U. UTAH)

One of the 28 campus shuttles now runs on waste vegetable oil.

Jake Green, manager for campus transportation, decided to convert a campus shuttle that previously ran on diesel fuel to an environmentally friendly alternative.

"This is one project that we're very excited about," said Alma Allred, Director of Commuter Services. "One of our shuttles now runs on the waste vegetable oil from restaurants."

Biodiesel was already used on campus when Green decided to make the WVO conversion. "This system is slightly different than biodiesel. Our vehicles run on a mixture that has 20 percent biodiesel," he said.

"There is no processing procedure for vegetable oil, but with biodiesel you have byproducts and we didn't know what we would do with them."

The WVO conversion recycles the used vegetable oil from restaurants and eateries on campus, filters the oil and injects it into the engine as a complete substitute for diesel.

The WVO conversions overhaul the fuel tank system of diesel vehicles, because the consistency of diesel fuel is comparable to hot vegetable oil. The engine starts everyday running on diesel oil to heat the WVO.

"Congealed vegetable oil can clog the fuel injection system," Green said. "It's important that you don't flip that switch (to change from diesel to vegetable oil) too soon." Hydrogenated oils and animal fats also make the oil thicker and harder to heat to the right temperature and consistency.

The shuttle travels 30 miles per day on the route from the Heritage Center to the Union, the same number of miles as the average student's commute. It uses about five gallons of WVO per day.

Although the level of carbon pumped into the air is about the same, the conversion severely reduces the amount of deadly gases emitted by gasoline and diesel fuel vehicles.

The U does not have any plans to convert another shuttle in the future.

"We have a limited source of vegetable oil on campus," Green said.

But the U was not the first in Salt Lake to take on this conversion technology.

Etta Crowley, a Salt Lake resident who converted her 1984 Chevy van in 2006, says the conversion for her vehicle cost only $800, two months of research and two weeks of maintenance. "I didn't have any experience working on cars. I think two months including research and two weeks hands on. It's totally possible to do it in less than that. I've heard it can take a couple of hours, (if you have car experience," she said.

Over the course of the 10,000 miles she has traveled since the conversion, she says the differences in the van before and after the conversion are minimal. "I barely notice a power loss, sometimes when I'm going uphill," Crowley said.

The U conversion cost $3,100 for a new fuel system and a conversion company based in Logan, Golden Fuel Systems, was hired to help with project.

CAMPUS ALERTS
EMERGENCY TEXT MESSAGING
INFORMATION ABOUT CAMPUS EMERGENCIES SENT STRAIGHT TO YOUR CELL PHONE.
GET THE MESSAGE!
Go to www.umass.edu/campusalerts to sign up

STUDENT DISCOUNT!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.org
413-256-4071
Best 9 Hole Course In Western Mass
Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63
Free Hotdog when you mention this ad!
Walk on anytime! No Tee Times Necessary!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst

Kiai, Kiai

Class teaches defense of the spirit

DEFENSE from page 1

day activities to self-defense. As the 2004 and 2005 Poet Laureate of Northampton, and published author, for Aalfs it was easy.

While calmly going through the motions and reciting her poem, she suddenly emitted a loud yell, or "kiai," an expression of her spirit, startling a few members of the workshop.

"Voice is key," she said, explaining that tone, eye contact and the way one verbalizes commands can have more of an effect on the listener.

A pat on the back may be all right in some situations, but Aalfs led an activity in which the hand on the shoulder was not appreciated.

My partner and I came up with a variety of ways to ask someone to respect our space including: "Please take your hand off me," "This is uncomfortable" and "Don't touch me," in a voice which meant business, but made us laugh at our practiced confidence.

Confidence was a major player in the activity that followed which involved a martial art move representing a tiger – and the tiger roar given by the class members rang throughout the church was certainly included.

Most of the activities involved learning defensive stances, building confidence in tone of voice and developing aggressive-defense techniques – should the occasion arise.

Aalfs turned the defensive kicks and hits into a combination, using the children's tune "Head, Shoulders, Knees and Toes" to better remember it.

But instead of the harmless children's song, it became a fight-to-survive-ballad as "Eyes, Nose, Throat and Neck."

Despite the focus on defending oneself, Aalfs admitted one of the most important tools in self-defense was telling someone who can help.

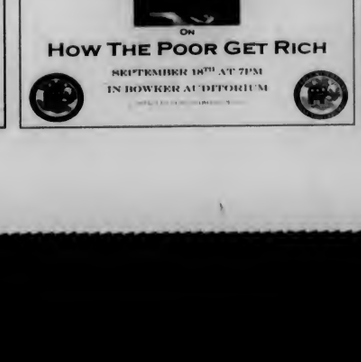
"The main thing each woman should take away is that she should feel like she has more choices within herself," said Aalfs. "It's so important to be able to ask for help and I offer a space for women to get to know each other. Every time somebody shares they learn."

Aalfs, a member of the class of 1979 and Northampton resident was involved in the Everywoman's Center while she attended UMass. But her inspiration for her current occupation came from the Valley.

She credits most of her passion for martial arts and helping women to the women's studies program at UMass, before it was even an instituted major. Women's studies was a Bachelors Degree of Individual Concentration (BDIC), during her time at the University.

Aalfs has been writing poetry since she was 13-years-old, and she felt as though martial arts – which she began researching as part of her degree – fit perfectly with her poetry.

"It found me as much as I found it," she said.



Associate director of the Everywoman's Center, Sandy Mandel, said she organized the event due to popular demand.

"After every event we have evaluations asking students what kind of other activities they'd like to see. Surprisingly, the program most frequently requested was self-defense. . . . In a way it's heartening and in another way saddening," she said, adding that it's more evident that women are more concerned with issues of rape and defending themselves.

Mandel plans on organizing another, similar event for the spring semester, since this event received a great deal of interest.

"The women have spoken," she said.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@dailycollegian.com.

Janet Aalfs teaches her class to get physical yesterday, but she said tone may be the most preventative exercise if approached.

Convocation connotes change

The marching band's horn section performed from a more stationary position during Friday's faculty convocation.

HOLUB from page 1

Graduate and undergraduate teaching were other areas Holub touched on, noting that the level of our graduate stipends is not attracting the top students, and to become an outstanding public research university UMass must have a "fully developed and vibrant graduate school."

He said that UMass can do better for its undergraduates as well, by making large introductory classes smaller and getting students involved with research. Holub also noted that the "general education" program needs to be overhauled.

Holub supported the continuing construction at UMass and renovation projects, calling some of the space he has seen so far "simply unacceptable ... We will never achieve our goals while first class faculty members have to work and teach in substandard laboratories, offices and classrooms."

Holub also addressed the controversial "Amherst 2010" plan, introduced three years ago which calls for the addition of 2500 new students. While the plan was widely celebrated by the faculty and administration, it has seen little progress this far. Holub said that while he supports the growth of the faculty, he wants to see UMass grow in a specific area.

I would like to see us increase the national profile in a given area, or the place that we occupy, and students studying that area appropriate. I would not like to see us simply add positions in such a generalized way," he said.

Holub touched on a number of other topics of conversation such as diversity growth, efforts to provide services for the community and the Commonwealth, fundraising and a streamlined communications effort to reduce "confusion about our identity and mission."

Holub ended his speech with a tale of the 1871 UMass crew team that competed against Harvard and Brown and which, despite odds stacked strongly against them, won.

"Evidently the President of our ancestor institution, William Smith Clark, was so excited about the victory that he plunged into the Connecticut River to greet the triumphant crew. Later he drove his team of horses back to campus in a frenzy to announce the astounding news.

"The spirit and determination of those young men is what we must recapture as a collective if we are going to be successful in our aspirations."

He added the University must act in a coordinated fashion "all pulling in the same direction with the identical purpose."

"My words and direction may assist us, but only with the activities of the entire campus and its many friends can we achieve our desired place among the finest public institutions of higher education. When that day arrives, I will be delighted to celebrate our collective triumph with a dip in the Connecticut River and an announcement to the campus from atop a frenzied stallion."

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliams@dailycollegian.com.

Members of the faculty rise in a standing ovation for Chancellor Robert C. Holub following his address.

Capital plan expected to bring new wave, projects

LOCAL GUEST CHEF WEEK
SIGNATURE DISHES WITH LOCAL FLAVOR
MONDAY, SEPT. 15 · FRANKLIN DC
CHEF CASEY DOUGLAS, APOLLO GRILL INC.
TUESDAY, SEPT. 16 · HAMPSHIRE DC
CHEF JAKE PERKINS, EASTSIDE GRILL
WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17 · WORCESTER DC
CHRIS RAMIREZ, PERSONAL CHEF
TIME: 5–9 PM
umass.edu/diningservices
DINING SERVICES
ivy

Write For News
news @ dailycollegian .com

Promotion, Booking and Management Company seeks:
Detail oriented, solid communicator and computer skilled multitasking individual for fast moving environment. Savvy with all online media: Facebook, Myspace, Photobucket, itika etc., wav to mp3 files, invoicing, website updates, solid typist.
$8, 2-3 days a week 10:30-3:30
Send cover letter and resume to artspromo@artspromo.org

Welcome Back Pancake Breakfast & Coffee Bar
Wednesday September 24
8:30 - 11:30 am
Memorial Hall
Start your year off with flap jacks & funnies!
Stop by Memorial Hall and enjoy pancakes, sausage and juice, while watching morning cartoons!
In addition, sample our specialty coffee bar and take home some treats, courtesy of the UMass Amherst Alumni Association
No registration required... just stop in!
The first 200 seniors will receive a special gift.
Must present valid ID
Enter to win a $25 UStore gift card.
Seniors can also enter to win a $1,000 cash prize from Liberty Mutual!
Drawing to be held at Commencement Ball on May 21, 2009
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION · STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION · Bud's
Visit UMassAlumni.com/students for more information

"Think Welfare Helps the Poor? Think Again"
UMASS AMHERST REPUBLICAN CLUB
WILL PROUDLY HOST A LECTURE BY STAR PARKER
ON HOW THE POOR GET RICH
SEPTEMBER 18TH AT 7PM
IN BOWKER AUDITORIUM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"WILL SMITH DON'T HAVE TO CUSS IN HIS RAP TO SELL RECORDS, BUT I DO"
-EMINEM

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2008 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

This old worn campaign

It troubles me to no end that we have arrived at a point in American history when an honest debate about issues is required for our national survival, yet this election shows no difference from elections past. It is truly chilling to see how polls impact opinion in this country, when informed opinions should sway the polls. Can you see how upside-down and inside-out American politics have become?

Adam McGillen

The race: watching how a speech, a comment, an appearance on "The View" brings about change in the polls. Not so much listening to the candidates words, we wait to see what those words win. Did McCain win over middle-class white women? How does Obama's religious history sit with black voters? We settle for watching the polls change instead of looking for the change in ourselves, the change necessary for a nation in the midst of an identity crisis.

Every four years we go through the motions. Two candidates arise, and the mainstream media draws our attention away from the people and focuses our attention on the race. The last two elections stand out like one long NASCAR race run in reverse, moving backwards and always turning right.

Change. Change, change, change. For all this talk about change, I have not seen any. How can we expect either of these candidates to affect any change as President when they cannot even change this filthy political process?

McCain tries to separate himself from President Bush. He does not disagree with the worst President in American history, but he knows that distancing himself from Bush helps him in the polls. McCain runs on the stump that he is a maverick, unafraid of splitting with his party on issues that matter. Yet, his campaign is unafraid to bend the truth and lie outright to Americans in vicious attack ads meant to sink Obama rather than lift McCain. If McCain can conscionably lie to Americans now, why would he stop as President? McCain promised "straight-talk," but I see the same willingness to manipulate facts that President Bush demonstrated in guiding America into Iraq.

Remember when Obama began his campaign promising higher-minded debates, and an unwillingness to resort to the attack-politics that have so defined recent American elections? Yet Obama has resorted to attack ads all the same, hiding under the guise of mere retaliation – only using them in response to McCain's attacks. Obama has trumpeted "Change you can believe in," and used the word "change" so often that it now rings hollow in my ears.

The last two elections stand out like one long NASCAR race run in reverse, moving backwards and always turning right.

Let us stop talking about "change" the word and start talking about what needs changing. We were promised a different election, yet Obama has allowed his campaign to sink into the same old tactics of driving the opposition down, rather than rising above. Touting change, but not really changing anything.

We can no longer trust this election to McCain or Obama. This election is about us, the American people, and how unhappy we are with the direction our country is taking. Both candidates merely use "change" to influence the polls, as if each time they use the word they win over a voter. McCain and Obama have stopped seeking the changes that will work for the American people in favor of making "change" work for them. The politics have not changed, and if the candidates are not willing to deliver the different election we have demanded, how can we ever expect them to deliver change in office?

Whomever you vote for in November, you cannot stop there. Demand integrity, demand more than policy change, demand a redefinition of American politics. The race: it has our country running in circles, starting, struggling, and crossing the finish line back where we began. Unfortunately, both candidates have slapped lipstick on a pig, calling their campaigns different but giving us the same filthy mud-slinging to which we have grown accustomed.

Will you pick McCain, truth-bender? Or will you go with Obama, whose change you can merely believe in, though you may never actually feel it?

When I began this column, I did not really know where it was going to go, much as we Americans stand right now. A new American story will begin in November, a new President the author. But as Americans we decide who writes our story, and we determine what direction our story takes.

A lot has changed in the last eight years. A lot will change in the next four to eight years, no matter whom we choose. Elections are not meant to be races to see who comes out first. They are intended to be debates that help us distinguish who is right. Until we demand this of our candidates, they will continue to give us the meaningless race that so fascinates us.

Adam McGillen is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amcgillen@student.umass.edu

The UMass pothole prognosis

I want you to take a deep breath and ease your mind into the land of imagination. Now picture this scenario in your mind: You are just driving your car, or bike, down the road.

Matt Kushi

Perhaps you are thinking about the weekend or about the cute girl that smiled at you this morning. You are just driving in peace, watching the landscape go by.

Suddenly, you see a hole in the road appear before your eyes. You swerve to miss it but not in time. You are violently jerked around as your vehicle crashes through the depression. You think, "Thank God I didn't crash." And then you think, "This school needs to fix that." You have just gone through the typical University of Massachusetts experience of driving through a pothole, a problem the University badly needs to address.

There is a saying that goes, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it." While that saying may be true, so is its inverse: "If it is broken, fix it." The University of Massachusetts is a lot of things, most of them good. You can complain all you want about the construction and the mess that construction sites have made around campus but, in the end, it is a mark of progress for the University.

How can the University be so good on making progress with the big stuff yet so poor with the small stuff? The condition of the roads is important to everyone who walks and drives around the campus. Sure, it would require some money to repave some of the sidewalks and roads, but it would be worth it. When a town has a water main break or road that breaks due to weather, they hurry up to fix it. They fix it because they know that many people depend on the condition of the pipes and roads to go about their everyday lives. The University is the same way. UMass is really just a community of its own where all of the inhabitants are generally of the same age.

How can the University be so good on making progress with the big stuff yet so poor with the small stuff?

Roads that have potholes in them look ugly. We are in the United States of America in 2008. There is no reason that the roads should look like World War II Germany after a bombing raid. Second, and most importantly, these potholes are a safety risk. There is no need to go to a fair and get into a flight simulator when you can just drive through a gauntlet of potholes, such as the ones south of the football field.

Those are only two, but there are many other dangerous zones around campus, including some of the sidewalks. If you are a biker, or even just walking, you could lose the tire edge with your bike and end up sprawled on your back, or you could twist an ankle. If you have an injury to start with, you could even make your injury worse.

Some may argue that they will put up with the potholes because of the fact that it makes people go slower while driving. If driving speed is an issue on this campus, then we need to put speed bumps in. That way only the people driving too fast pay the price and not the innocent drivers. Potholes hurt everyone's vehicle. Whenever you hit a pothole, you are essentially doing the same things as "bottoming out" on a speed bump. Your vehicle bounces so hard from the impact that the bottom of your vehicle literally hits the ground. This not only gives you a good bump, it can also ruin your vehicle. Ruining your transmission or messing up your steering calibration are a couple of things that can happen if you bottom out.

Do you really want to run these risks on a daily basis? I know that I hate driving my vehicle around campus at times due to all of the potholes. We all know that weather happens and that standing water can undermine the strength of the tar and crack it. It happens. It is a fact of life. However, when it breaks, please fix it. The University is not only slowly hurting its image with this, but it is also putting its students and staff at risk. What the University needs to do is make sure that there is change in the small things as well as the big things on this campus. Only that way will we make UMass a better place.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu

Mixed up culinary conclusions

There's a reason for the infamous "Freshman 15" – in fact, there's an entire food pyramid of reasons.

Coffee. Without late night trips to the Procrastination Station for a cup of Ravi's, we would doze off in the Learning Commons atop textbook pillows.

Chocolate. What a mood booster, judging by the skeleton-like vending machines during Finals Week.

Eggs. The omelet station at the dining commons is my sole motivation to trudge out of my dorm for an 8 a.m. class.

Pizza. Who doesn't like people-watching on the streets of Amherst while devouring some delightfully exotic slice of Antonio's pizza?

Alcohol. Enough said, for many undergrads.

Clearly, everyone has their reasons for indulging – but what's the official, clinical, scientific verdict on all our favorite food and drinks?

Everywhere you turn, there are conflicting studies. Even better are conflicting findings within one study, which might as well cancel each other out, leaving one solid conclusion: the researchers discovered nothing at all.

My all-time favorite, chocolate, has undergone the wrath of the clinical study. In fact, the sweet treat should be having an identity crisis by now, after suffering through a cycle of scorn, apathy and praise. Initially, the word was to limit chocolate intake, or brace yourself for breakouts.

Then, with the finding that a steady diet of Hershey's won't induce breakouts, the chocolate-acne link appeared as one of every magazine's top ten food myths. Now, researchers have ventured to claim that several types of chocolate are even beneficial to the skin and to overall health.

Katherine Marr

Bad effect, no effect, good effect – whatever. We're torn between the original "chocolate, like anything sold in a candy store, rots your teeth away to nothing while doing the opposite to your waistline" logic, and the revolution of dark chocolate (as I write, I'm eating a square of Lindt's 85 percent cacao dark chocolate, and supposedly simultaneously acquiring antioxidants, while either improving or dashing my chances of clear skin, depending on which study I've chosen to put stock in at the moment.)

How about eggs, the quintessential breakfast? Starting the morning with eggs always trumped donuts or a danish. But then came the sorry days of dividing the yolk between my two dogs – yes, eggs had gone down in the books as a food non grata for raising cholesterol. But – surprise, surprise – eggs are now back on the A-list for their protein and omega-3 fatty acids.

Coffee is one that we can't function without. A cup of joe boasts those ever-popular antioxidants and, more importantly, provides a much-needed jolt in the morning. But drink too much and you'll be jolted into a restless, sleepless night, not to mention put at risk for high blood pressure, ulcers and osteoporosis. Yet, all of the above considered, "Parade Magazine" recently called coffee "a health drink," showcasing java as on par with a glass of V8.

Pizza has lycopene in its tomato sauce, which prevents cancer, and its vegetable toppings contain – guess what – antioxidants. But between the crust and cheese, it's calorie-ridden, cholesterol-raising and oozing with saturated fat.

Wine. No amount of exaggeration can convey how many times I've heard the spiel on the benefits of red wine. But, in fact, grape juice is equally beneficial, and doesn't have the negative health effects of alcohol, like increased risk of cancer, diabetes and obesity. Maybe I'm oversimplifying, but the cancer-preventing antioxidants from the grapes are essentially canceled out by the fact that alcohol increases cancer risk. Per usual, the contradictions just keep on coming.

What's happening? Are people publishing just to see their names in print? Is corporate backing behind particular study results to blame?

What's happening? Are people publishing just to see their names in print? Is corporate backing behind particular study results to blame? How about "publish or perish" – are academics overproducing study results to stay alive in their fields?

In response to the "New York Times" article "The sunny side of eggs," a frustrated blogger wrote, "Sometimes health news feels like a trip to Wonderland, and sometimes it feels like Groundhog Day." ("Deja-vu" also works fine to describe the weekly repeats of the same old results from new study sources.) Another blogger added, "Every so often there is another study that disputes the previous 'wisdom' and/or study ... I for one am tired of being afraid with every new study." And there is no drought of new studies that make us rethink our diets.

It's like watching a tennis match. Back and forth. Tune into any major news network on Monday and the medical expert says that coffee is your ticket to a long life. Check in again on Wednesday, and there's evidence that coffee increases your chances of breaking a hip in 50 years. Watch one more time on Friday, and hey, coffee just might be good for you after all. Back and forth.

My not so-official, hardly clinical, unscientific verdict? You might as well ignore everything that you hear on the news about antioxidants versus osteoporosis, and drink that cup of coffee – for the simple reason that it'll keep you semi-conscious enough to write your English paper at three in the morning.

Katherine Marr is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kmarr@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Northampton to get Moore

Sonic Youth singer returns

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The term "masterpiece" is a very subjective one, which stirs argument and fervor, be it a centuries-old piece for flugelhorn or a minutes-old urban pop gem. Whether agreed upon or not, a masterpiece ultimately singularly defines one's greatness.

Oftentimes a masterpiece may be forgotten, or otherwise buried in other matters of the time, only to be rediscovered at a later date, pristine and fresh as the day it was created.

A shining example is Thurston Moore's "Psychic Hearts," a sonic journey through melody, cacophony and every nuance in between. Moore is set to perform the album in its entirety with the Thurston Moore Group today, Sept. 17, at the Pearl Street Nightclub's clubroom.

Moore, most widely known as guitarist and singer of New York City's seminal Sonic Youth, struck out on his own in 1995 to release his first solo full-length, the aforementioned "Psychic Hearts," on Geffen Records.

The record thoroughly blends Sonic Youth's thirst for aggressive, chaotic elements with washes of thick, metallic textures. Moore employed Sonic Youth drummer Steve Shelley to add his impeccable sense of rhythm to the album's fifteen tracks. Shelley will be on hand tonight to recreate the record with Moore et al.

The album, which seemingly went unnoticed in the off-center mainstream for years, was re-released in 2006 to much acclaim. The record features disturbing, childish cover art by Rita Ackermann, depicting a hooded youth intravenously funneling computer wire into her arm as well as a mother holding her child (complete with heart-shaped sunglasses) in one hand and a shotgun in the other.

This aesthetic superbly channels Moore's undying interest in violent sonics, often paired with more spaced out stretches experimenting with noise and feedback. Moore's legendary status is backed by his interest in guitar sounds: how to make them, how to sustain them, how to effortlessly create new sounds from found objects and not-so-obvious sound equipment.

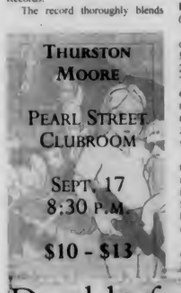
It's no wonder Moore was asked to attend and perform at Fender Guitars' 50th anniversary last week, along with Sonic Youth's Lee Ranaldo, Nels Cline, and J Mascis (Dinosaur Jr).

While "Psychic Hearts" is clearly on the noisy side, 12 years later Moore recorded his solo follow-up, 2007's "Trees Outside the Academy." This effort is largely crafted acoustically, utilizing violin to flesh out the mostly sorrowful arrangements. He recorded the album in Amherst with J Mascis, who contributed guitar on select tracks.

Last October, Moore played most tracks from the record at an appearance at the Pleasant Street Theatre in Northampton (also with Steve Shelley), along with a few key numbers from his first record in the encore.

Moore is also set to perform the entire "Psychic Hearts" record at the New York edition of All Tomorrow's Parties (ATP), who regularly curates sonically intriguing festivals, usually overseas. The NYC ATP also prominently features an appearance by fuzzy texture gurus My Bloody Valentine as well as Dinosaur Jr., Yo La Tengo, Bob Mould (of Husker Du), and Brian Jonestown Massacre.

Moore will also take part in an event simply titled "A Week of Noise" at the end of October at Brooklyn's Issue Project Room.



Moore's Sonic Youth recently made news signing to independent label Matador Records after their years-long contractual obligation to Geffen. They are hinting at an early 2009 release date for a new record.

Thurston Moore will perform his entire "Psychic Hearts" record tonight at Pearl Street's clubroom. The show will start at 8:30 p.m., with supporting acts Eat Skull and Little Claw to open. Tickets are available online at thegcom or at the Northampton Box Office. $10 in advance and $13 the day of the show.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

Thurston Moore, the guitarist and singer of popular group Sonic Youth, will show off his solo CD "Psychic Hearts" tonight at Pearl Street.

Double feature to frame cultural issues

UM program sponsors films

BY JOHN HAMILTON
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Asian Arts & Culture Program will be presenting a film double feature today at 7 p.m. at the Flavin Auditorium in the Isenberg School of Management building. The theme of the night is New Asian Cinema: Arab Cinema Panorama. A short film, titled "Under the Sun," will precede the feature length, "Door to the Sky."

"Sky" tells the story of Nadia, a Moroccan emigrant who returns to her home in Fez, Morocco after having left for Paris many years prior. Director Farida Ben Lyzaid creates a new world through which Nadia must navigate. She decides to remain in Morocco, following her father's death, in order to open a Muslim women's shelter in his newly vacated home. In this film, Lyzaid generates a fascinating and realistic account of one woman's spiritual quest to recapture and retain her Muslim identity.

Michael Wilmington, of the Chicago Tribune, writes that the film "shows us the Islamic religion and Arab women's issues with a thoroughness and bluntness and sympathy that seem genuinely surprising."

Originally released in 1988 and distributed by France Media, "Sky" is now only available to be seen in public, institutional, theatrical or festival screenings.

"Under the Sun," released in 2005, is a 23-minute short produced in the United Arab Emirates. Directed by Ali Mostafa, the film tells the tale of a young boy, raised by an English mother and an Emirati father, discovering the significant roles that religion and culture play in his life.

Both films are presented in Arabic with English subtitles. The event is free and open to the public.

These two films, along with several others scheduled to be shown in the upcoming weeks, are a part of the Asian Arts & Culture Film Festival series. A special presentation of "Hometown Baghdad" will be shown on Wednesday, Oct. 1, and the Palestinian film "My Simple Story" will be screened on Wednesday, Nov. 12. The director and composer of "Story" will be in residence at the screening to speak about the issues involved in making the film, as well as to answer audience questions.

For more information, contact Sue McFarland, Assistant to the Program Director of the Asian Arts & Culture Program, at aacp@acad.umass.edu, or visit the event website, at http://www.umass.edu/tfa/asian.

John Hamilton can be reached at jhamilton@student.umass.edu

"DOOR TO THE SKY"/"UNDER THE SUN"
SEPT. 17
FLAVIN AUDITORIUM
7 P.M.

Seeing 'Stars' at Pearl Street night club

Quartet to play Ballroom

BY JOE STAHL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Thank you, Canada, for exporting some of the greatest bands in indie music. You have given us bands like Broken Social Scene, Tegan and Sara, Arcade Fire, the New Pornographers, and the featured band for tonight: Stars – a big-hearted group scheduled to perform at Pearl Street, 8 p.m.

As Stars moves from east to west for its jam-packed North American tour with opening band BellX1, Stars is in pursuit of making and breaking some hearts with its eloquence and catharsis. This quartet is comprised of Amy Millan, Torquil Campbell, Evan Cranley and Chris Seligman. As a band nearly 10 years of age, the group has released four studio albums while racking up some commendable award nominations along the way.

Though Stars has been active for some time now, success and recognition didn't come too quickly until the 2004 breakthrough album, "Set Yourself on Fire." If you have ever watched popular teen shows like "The O.C." or "Degrassi," chances are you've heard one or two of the band's songs in the background. Songs were also featured in other major shows like "Sex and the City" and "Law and Order."

Indie musicians have to make revenue somewhere, right? In a recent Q&A in The Advocate, Campbell, the lead vocalist, made a statement about the decision to sell the band's songs to glib programming.

"We despise it [TV culture], just like everyone else does. And we are slaves to it, just like everyone else is," said Campbell.

Stars is a band that is capable of great things. In the recording studio and at live shows, the two lead singers, Campbell and Millan, switch off vocals to produce sounds that are breathily dulcet (via Millan) and courageously plaintive (via Campbell).

As a duo, the band relies on call-and-response technique, which in turn makes the music conversational and rounder sounding. The discordance and harmony in the lyricism is brought to the forefront of Stars because it works for them.

An element as important as vocals that gives way to Stars' distinction is the music. It is chamber pop filled with orchestral instruments that flirts with electronic synthesized keyboards. Stars produces some of the most poignant sounds heard in indie pop today. The melodies are infectious and have the ability to make you melt.

These mavericks play with different styles ranging from funk ("Ghost of Geneva Heights") to dark angular rock ("He Lied About Death"). The use of lush brass instruments gives Stars sex appeal. The band finds a happy medium between playing freely and using good technique, which is what makes a quality indie band.

On Stars' latest full-length

See STARS on page 6

The group Stars plays with the male/female dynamic, having their two lead singers do a call and response in their songs.

Students learn to live for less in London

BY CHRISTINA FONG
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Shopping around Oxford Circus is a challenge in itself. Throngs of people are constantly leaving and entering the tube stations located on all four corners of the intersection. Others are hopping in and out of popular stores such as TopShop, Urban Outfitters, and United Colors of Benetton, which add to the traffic. If people slow their pace or stop in the middle of the chaos, pushing and shoving becomes necessary.

American students, however, won't find it any easier to shop with the lofty prices.

The decline of the dollar has been difficult for American students studying abroad at Regent's College in London this semester. The conversion from the pound to the dollar has students automatically doubling all the prices they see to get the U.S. equivalent. Simply buying a movie ticket for 10 pounds would actually cost about 20 dollars.

"It'd be nicer if they had the euro here," said Chris Penberthy, a sophomore from Webster University. "The thing that's been killer is the tube prices."

A one-way ride typically costs four pounds, and that's only for stops in Zone 1, which is basically the heart of London. Prices increase accordingly when traveling further to the outer zones. For this reason, students opt to buy the oyster card, a pre-paid card that offers discounted rates on the tube.

Food has quickly become an issue with students as well. Erika Georgiou, a freshman from the University of Southern California said her dinner the other night cost, "eight pounds for the meal and then four pounds for drinks. I'd say an average night out would be 15 pounds." That translates to about 30 dollars. However, most students make one of the meal plans available at Regent's College. A good portion of the spending is done during the weekends.

With all that spending, students still manage to enjoy themselves in the bustling metropolis. Many go on excursions that include theater shows, overnight trips and bar hopping. In fact, Student Services at the college organizes plenty of events at discounted prices. Over the last two weeks, there have already been trips to the historic towns of Bath and Canterbury, and the Broadway show "Wicked", each costing 25 pounds or less.

Andrew Saunders, a sophomore from Webster University, mentioned having spent at least 300 pounds in the past two weeks.

"I guess I spent the most money on trips, events, plays, and a few practical items," he said. "Any of my field trips in my classes are all free." Many classes at the college, specifically art, theater, and history classes, include free field trips to theater shows, museums and historical sites. A lot of the students who chose these classes did so for this reason. These are just one of many opportunities available to squeeze in as much traveling as possible in one semester.

Since a mid-semester break is scheduled from Oct. 18 to 26, plans have already been made to travel extensively outside of London. Italy has become a popular choice among the students. A lot of them plan to make stops at Rome, Milan, Venice, and Florence, among other places. Other plans include favorites such as Barcelona, Paris and Amsterdam.

To save money, students rely on booking discounted flights on such sites as easyjet.com and ryanair.com. A roundtrip flight to Barcelona from London could cost as low as 70 pounds. For those uneasy about flying, the Eurail is another means of travel by train. They offer passes that include trips to multiple locations in the time period of two to three months at lower rates.

Even with what may seem to be a painfully high exchange rate, many chose to study abroad in London with little or no doubt. When asked why he chose to study abroad in London, Penberthy replied, "One, they offer film classes and I'm a film major. Two, they speak English. And three, it's a city I've always wanted to visit."

Christina Fong can be reached at cfong@student.umass.edu

Parliament is one of many sights for students to see while traveling in England, where one pound is the equivalent of two dollars.

Ashbery welcomes audience to his world

BY JULIE HOLBROOK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

John Ashbery, one of the most respected and beloved contemporary American poets, read a number of his poems to a packed house at Memorial Hall on Thursday, Sept. 11 as a part of the Visiting Writers Series.

Ashbery has published more than twenty books, which include poetry, art criticism, plays, lectures and novels. He has also won every major award there is to win in poetry, including the Pulitzer Prize, National Book Award and National Book Critics Circle Award, each of these for his 1975 publication "Self-Portrait in a Convex Mirror."

He is most famous for his unique diction and syntax and his "avant-garde" style, filled with both humor and ideas influenced by the human mind and emotion.

On Thursday night, even before he began his reading, he had the audience laughing with his references to his countless experiences at the University of Massachusetts, and how familiar Memorial Hall felt to him. His at-ease and comfortable nature made for a more relaxed and intimate feeling for the whole room.

Ashbery began the night with some of his earlier works, such as "How to Continue," which was written after a trip he took to Ireland when he was younger. "Sleeper's Awake," which describes the bizarre sleeping patterns of some famous writers, and the somewhat autobiographical "The History of My Life."

He also chose a few more serious selections, such as "The New Higher" and "Crossroads in a Pass," both of which displayed a more emotional side and created a feeling of intimacy between him and the audience.

All of these poems struck deeply with the audience, and showed his unique style. He continued with a number of poems from his most recent publication, "A Worldly Country," published in 2007. Some of those selections included the poem, "Phantoum," which is a "pantoon," a type of poem popularized by Lewis Carroll in which the lines repeat

See ASHBERY on page 6

Band to showcase unique sound

Stars doesn't limit itself to one genre - the group likes to experiment across musical lines. They also like to blend improvisation and freestyle with their well-rehearsed material to make shows interesting.

STARS from page 5

album, "In Our Bedroom After the War," has a fresh motif that is consolidated into the last twenty seconds of the track. "The Beginning After the End."

It is a question of lost time and the meaning of war and destruction. Another tune on the new album, "The Night Starts Here," is an empowering number that could be sung by a liberated disco queen. It starts out with epic keyboards that create a dawning sensation. Millan opens with, "The night starts here. Forget your name. Forget your fear." With lyrics like that, how much more Donna Summer can you get?

These earnest modern romantics yearn for a freer and expressive world and it is written on the band members' faces when performing live. Tonight, the band is likely to try out some new material that can only be obtained on-line.

The band's next performance will be, in Providence, RI at Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel tomorrow if you can't catch the Pearl Street show this evening.

Tickets for tonight's show are still available for purchase.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu.

STARS

PEARL STREET BALLROOM

SEPT. 17

8:30 P.M.

$17.50 - $20

You just saw a great show. Think to yourself. WWTASD?

arts@dailycollegian.com

STOP & SHOP

Head back to class with Stop & Shop!

Stop & Shop welcomes you back with special bonus coupon savings!

Exclusive Bonus Coupon
Valid Monday 9/15 Friday 10/31/08
Stop&Shop
$5 OFF a purchase of $25 or more.
2 10000 01457 5

Plus! At Stop & Shop you'll find...

- A delicious variety of fresh prepared foods
- Natural and organic foods
- A Staples® aisle for school supplies
- Personal care needs
- Redbox™ DVD rentals

And so much more! All priced to fit a student's budget!

Stop & Shop
440 Russell Street
Campus Center Plaza
Hadley, MA 01035

Hadley

stop&shop.com

Spill finally gets it 'Perfect'

Group to play all of third CD

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

No one knows that the third time's a charm more than Doug Martsch, lead singer and principal songwriter of the Boise, Idaho indie rock group Built to Spill. After all, it took three tries for his band to finally get their third album "Perfect From Now On" right.

After trying unsuccessfully to record all the instruments for the album himself, Martsch brought in bassist Brent Nelson and drummer Scott Plouf to re-record the tunes. As luck would have it, the records of this session were destroyed when the band's producer took them on a long drive in an overheated car.

After all these setbacks, the final version of the album hit stores in January of 1997 with the title "Perfect From Now On," forming a bitterly ironic moniker that is referential to its own creative struggles.

The culmination of these struggles will be showcased on Thursday Sept. 18 when the band is set to headline at Northampton's own Calvin Theater.

"Perfect From Now On" was received with great critical enthusiasm garnering raves from online sites, including the passing of the ultimate test of any indie rock band, a 9.2 from the ever fickle folks at Pitchforkmedia.com.

The history of the band is one steeped in irony. Aside from committing the sin of being a well-regarded indie band with the support of a major label, the band has often found itself reneging on previously assured promises.

Formed in 1992, Martsch, formerly of the band Treepeople, started Built to Spill with the intention of having a rotating cast of musicians on each album instead of opting for a fixed lineup. However, Martsch was so impressed by the work of Nelson and Plouf on "Perfect From Now," these would-be extras became full time cast members in a fully functional band.

The band would go on to record one more album before taking a five year hiatus, while the band members worked on various solo projects, which ended with the release of their latest album "You in Reverse" in 2006.

Now, the band, which had previously vowed to quickly record a follow up, finds itself on an extended tour of the U.S. and Europe that will fill its schedule with tour dates through the end of the year. The tour makes a stop closer to home at the Calvin.

There they will be playing the entirety of their famed third album, "Perfect From Now On" in whose sounds and structures one can find the templates that would later surface in other more commercially successful bands.

Their harsh melodic interplay and slowly interwoven guitar lines can be heard in fellow indie rockers and Northwestern natives, Modest Mouse. And even in such mainstream acts as Death Cab for Cutie, one can hear Martsch's thin vocals reflected and polished in lead singer Ben Gibbard's voice.

Built to Spill won't be alone on the bill. Fellow influential alt-rockers, Meat Puppets, will also be along for the ride. The band is known for their twisting of normal pop conventions and psychedelic pop jams that tread the ground between genres as diverse as punk and country. However the trio is perhaps best known for their guest instrumental duties on Nirvana's famed MTV Unplugged set in which they collaborated on covers of their classic songs "Lake of Fire," "Plateau," and "Oh Me."

The band's founding members will also reunite for the second time in the group's history. Brothers Cris and Curt Kirkwood, who founded Meat Puppets, form the group's central songwriting team and are reforming, albeit without their original drummer, to support of the group's most recent effort, "Rise to Your Knees."

Rounding out the lineup for the evening's events is The Drones, an Australian rock band that is currently attempting to bring its sound to a broader audience after finding critical success at home with a tour of Europe and America.

Tickets for the event are available at the Northampton Box Office in Northampton or online at www.iheg.com.

The price of admission is $25 with doors opening at 8 p.m.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

BUILT TO SPILL

CALVIN THEATER

SEPT. 18

8 P.M.

$25

Built to Spill tried to make its album, "Perfect From Now On," three times before it was finally successful. The band will show off its final product at the Calvin Theater on Thursday night.

Campus attorney answers music downloading questions

BY LISA KENT
LEGAL COLUMNIST

Q: I've heard about students paying a lot of money to the recording industry for music downloading. But there must be some way not to get caught, right?

A: The safest way not to get caught is not to use popular file-sharing applications – such as Limewire, or Bittorrent – for sharing copyrighted songs. These applications are very popular, and they're legal, if used to share non-copyrighted material, or material that you have permission to duplicate and distribute. But if you're caught sharing copyrighted music, you can be sued for infringement and be responsible for thousands of dollars in legal judgment and costs.

The RIAA hires companies to collect data about file-sharing networks. In the process, they download files from your "shared" folders. This information alerts the recording industry that you're a University of Massachusetts student. The RIAA sends an "early settlement letter" to the University, which in turn will forward it to you. If you receive one of these letters, seek legal help immediately.

It may be possible to "turn off" the sharing mode in Limewire or Bittorrent. If you can, theoretically the RIAA's agents can't access your share folder to obtain evidence that you're infringing. However, in my experience, turning off the file sharing tool in these programs is tricky. File sharing can be turned back on if your computer reboots, or someone plays with the settings on your computer. If it does, you may unknowingly be sharing copyrighted material without permission, making yourself a perfect target for the RIAA.

The only legal ways of downloading music is to pay for a music sharing service. The following is a list of legal software that you can use to obtain music:

AMAZON MP3 STORE
http://www.amazon.com/mp3

APPLE ITUNES MUSIC STORE
http://www.itunes.com

RUCKUS
(free to UMass students)
http://www.ruckus.com

IMEEM
http://www.imeem.com

The information contained in this article refers to Massachusetts law and does not constitute legal advice.

Please submit legal questions to askthecattorney@sluaf.umass.edu.

If you need legal advice, seek out an attorney who can give you advice based upon your circumstances and applicable law.

Fee paying UMass Amherst students with questions may call the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 to arrange and appointment, or come to 922 Campus Center to pick up more information.

Poet's work speaks to crowd

ASHBERY from page 5

themselves in a certain way, and "Promenade," which brings to life intimate thoughts in Ashbery's head created by certain things around him, such as a specific voice, and "dry leaves rattled by the wind."

These selections proved to the crowd that despite his age, Ashbery can still be contemporary and connect with any reader or listener. All of the feelings he portrayed in these poems were elements that people feel every day such as happiness and nostalgia.

He concluded with a few more recent poems such as, "The Plywood Years," "The Tower of London," and "They Knew What They Wanted."

Each poem elicited a number of laughs from each person in the crowded room, whether it was from his tone of voice or diction.

When there weren't laughs echoing throughout the hall, each set of eyes were focused on Ashbery, no one could turn away from the passion he with which he read the pieces. With each reading and each expression, he showed a little more of himself and truly captivated everyone in the room. It seemed that every person present connected in some way to at least one poem that he read. Ashbery brought a great understanding and appreciation to his craft.

In the upcoming months, there are more writers scheduled to appear at Memorial Hall as a part of the Visiting Writers Series. All readings will be held on Thursdays at 8 p.m. and will represent various genres. These writers include Heidi Julavits, a fiction writer, on Oct. 2, Gillian Conoley, a poet, on Nov. 13, and Leni Zumas and Pamela Thompson, both fiction writers, on Dec. 4.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

SLU looks dangerous in A-10

BY HOLLY J. GALVIN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The No. 13 Saint Louis men's soccer team has ousted Massachusetts in the latest NSCAA poll after five undefeated non-conference matches, becoming the only Atlantic 10 team currently represented in Top 25 rankings.

Led by A-10 Player of the Week, Kyle Patterson, the Billikens (2-0-3) took No. 7 Connecticut into double overtime and escaped with a 0-0 draw – after failing to capitalize on three shots in the final minutes of play.

Following a heated preseason goalkeeping competition, SLU coach Dan Donigan has entrusted the duties to senior Pat Disbennett thus far, and has received steady results. The veteran Billikens goalkeeper has been clutch, not allowing a single goal in the six overtime periods he's played.

Offensively, the Billikens have failed to finish in extra time, remaining scoreless in all six overtime periods as well. However, SLU showcased its explosive capabilities in 5-1 and 3-0 victories over Portland and UC-Riverside, respectively.

A–10 Soccer

Donigan's squad has what could be a confidence-boosting four-game home stretch before opening A-10 play in October with road games against La Salle and Fordham. The Billikens look to be a tough road game, as over 2,000 fans came out to watch the home opener against UConn. Soccer America has SLU tabbed in its current Top 10, at No. 7.

CHARLOTTE DOMINATING

Last week's A-10 honoree Andres Cuero and the unranked Charlotte 49ers (3-1-0) are building off of a strong performance in the Marriot Classic. Cuero's offense has propelled the 49ers to one of the A-10's best early records after convincing non-conference victories over Charleston, Davidson and tournament host UNC-Wilmington.

After notching 10 goals in two games in the Adidas Classic, the 49ers saw junior forward Chris Salvaggione take home Offensive MVP honors. In the tournament final, Wilmington scored on a penalty kick in the 18th minute, but Charlotte would not be denied, scoring three unanswered goals to secure the win.

A major program milestone occurred on Sept. 2, when the 49ers received their first top 25 NSCAA ranking in a decade. Although coach Jeremy Gunn's team has since fallen from the Top 25, they hope to reclaim the program's 1990's glory – in which the 49ers were a consistent Top 10 team from 1991-1998.

An October matchup with No. 4 Maryland should set the precedent for rankings likelihood. Like Saint Louis, the 49ers hope to capitalize on a plethora of non-conference home games before A-10 play opens for them on the road at Fordham.

YOUNG BLOOD

Fresh off a game-winning goal, a clutch penalty kick conversion and three assists in the past week, Duquesne sophomore Ben Horner joins nine other players nationwide on the College Soccer News Team of the Week.

At 3-0-3, the Dukes sit atop the A-10 non-conference standings along with Saint Louis, Charlotte and Dayton (3-2-1). In a recent bout with Lafayette, DU freshman midfielder Tyler Tomkins scored a tirnely first-ever collegiate goal – about a minute into double overtime.

Tomkins's game-winner had to have been cathartic for the Dukes, who, like their Saint Louis counterparts, have had difficulties clinching in extra time during three previous 0-0 ties this season.

Along with Horner, three other key sophomores have continued to make waves for the Dukes. Goalkeeper Chris Torres is piling up shutouts (three), while midfielder Stefan Lundberg has already manufactured two goals and an assist from his team-leading 20 shots. At No. 15 West Virginia, Stefan Lundberg earned MVP honors of the WVU Classic. The Dukes and their young sophomore talent will open conference play on the road against Temple on Oct. 10.

Holly Galvin can be reached at hjgrath@gmail.com.

Senior midfielder Mike DeSantis battles for the ball in a game against Xavier last season. The Musketeers, along with the Minutemen, hope to contend in the Atlantic 10 this season with the likes of Saint Louis and Charlotte.

UMass hits road for test vs. Albany

SOCCER from page 10

outscored 16-4 during the tough stretch.

"They've had some interesting results so far," Rudy said. "I know a lot of teams don't like to go there and play and I haven't had my team at Albany for many years now."

The last time the two teams met was back in 2006, when the Minutewomen defeated the Great Danes, 1-0, in an overtime match at home.

UMass and Albany were scheduled to play last year at Albany, but severe rain caused the playing conditions to be inadequate and the game was never played. The first two meetings were easy victories for the Minutewomen, as they went on to win 6-0 in 1999 and 9-0 in 2001.

UMass holds a 3-0 all-time record against the Great Danes, but Rudy knows that even with their successful history against them, the Minutewomen cannot come out soft against Albany.

"We can't afford to take anybody lightly," he said. "We have not evolved enough in our newness; you can't [take anyone lightly]."

The Great Danes have a strong offensive game despite the four-game slide. Junior forward Ashley Tirabassi leads the team in points, with nine recording four goals and one assist. Albany also has veteran leadership up front with senior captain Diana Bartera and has some younger players in the midfield lines with freshman Rebecca Lee (two goals, one assist), Teresa Boring (two goals) and Kendra Harrell-Vigil.

"We have to be aware of where they are on the field at all times," Rudy said. "We're going to stay in our zone because we feel like we can defend best that way so we aren't getting stretched all over the field like chasing an individual around."

Last week against Holy Cross, the Minutewomen's defensive unit let up after Vanessa Tuna put UMass up 1-0 early in the game. With a talented offense like Albany's, the Minutewomen will stick to tough defense and making plays on offensive possessions early on in the game.

"What we are going to do is once again work on our finishing because we are still missing these really good chances in tight. We're not putting them in and they can come back to haunt you," Rudy said.

UMass had a number of opportunities to put HC away last week late in the game, but it couldn't convert. The Minutewomen have scored early in many games this year – not allowing an opposing team to score first in their first five games of the season.

Along with the effective offense Rudy has showed some of his bench, as Lindsey DiDrio, Rachel Miranada and Maura Romano each made their collegiate debuts against the Crusaders. The availability of more players will provide depth for the Minutewomen, and also against the Great Danes, but against other teams later on in the season.

"It's all about focus and you're only as good as your next match," Rudy said. "Every game we've got to show up and I think this crew is dedicated to that."

GAME NOTES

UMass assistant head coach Angela Napoli was an assistant coach for Albany during the 2004 season, working with the goalkeepers for the Great Danes.

David Branch can be reached at dbranch@student.umass.edu.

Freshman forward Natalie Miska has played in all five games for UMass this season as a reserve. She is fourth on the team with seven shots.

Team effort for UM

DEFENSE from page 10

what the Minutewomen are used to. Holy Cross drew 19 fouls, compared to 15 from UMass.

Rudy knew before the game that Holy Cross was going to be more physical. Assistant Coach Angela Napoli worked with the defense on bodying up the opponents in preparation for the match.

"Napoli has been stressing the fact that she wanted the defense to be more aggressive in particular," senior Melissa Toulouse said. "When we need to, we can be just as aggressive as other teams."

The lone goal that Luckey gave up to the Crusaders is something that doesn't bother Rudy because forward Shelby Stand placed the ball on the left side on a long-range shot, well out of the goalkeeper's reach.

"I'm not sure who would've stopped that ball," Rudy said. "It's the highest and furthest dive I've seen her make all year."

One component to the two wins this year has been how many goals opponents score. The Minutewomen are 2-0-1 when holding the opposition to no more than a single goal.

This gives the Minutewomen a small margin for error, but they know this is not going to be the team that scored at least three goals four different times last season.

One of the main differences in the defense from last year is their organization and maturity. Toulouse and redshirt senior Tina Rodriguez are providing a stable center for UMass this season.

The captains have used their experience to react mentally rather than emotionally.

"They really identify where the major threats have been and they cover for each other very well," Rudy said. "It's nice having two older heads back there and to get them on the field at the same time, that's a real asset."

Toulouse feels that the real key to the defense's success this year has been communication.

"I think everyone on our defensive line communicates very well so we're able to deal with what teams throw at us," Toulouse said.

As much as Rudy knows he can trust his defense, he subscribes to the belief that his best defense is the offense, which he accomplishes by having as many players forward as possible.

"We felt that we had to attack with some numbers this year if we're going to be successful," Rudy said.

The only downside the Minutewomen have run into is that the openings in the back, allowing opponents to break through the defense. It's a risk they are willing to take as long as that situation happens only once or twice in a game.

Using the offense to keep the ball past midfield is going to be something UMass will hope to do today against Albany. The Great Danes like to shoot from long range with their two potent forwards.

Rudy believes their style of shooting from deep isn't going to bother the Minutewomen because Luckey has the reaction time to stop those shots.

The key for the Maroon and White, however, will be keeping Albany from a distance instead of giving it an open backfield. It's the type of challenge that will make even an intellectual team like the Minutewomen think a little more.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmiller@student.umass.edu.

Senior defender and captain Melissa Toulouse provides a young UMass team with leadership and experience.

Defense has tall task ahead

FOOTBALL from page 10

at linebacker, but the defensive unit has not performed as they were expected to.

After giving up the most points (28) in a first half under Brown to Holy Cross, the Minutemen's defense followed up by allowing 31 points to the Dukes on Saturday in the first 30 minutes.

The defense has come out and played better in the second half of games, but it was too late in Saturday's game. The defense stepped up and gave Coen and the offense just enough time to get back in the game against Holy Cross, but the deficit against JMU was too great to overcome.

With UMass traveling to the Football Bowl Subdivision best offensive team, No. 10 (USA Today's Coaches Poll) Texas Tech, the defense will need to play a full 60 minutes if it wants a chance.

"I just know we can't come out and wait until the second half. We have to come out focused from the beginning of the game," senior cornerback Courtney Robinson said.

The UMass secondary will be up against the NCAA's best statistical quarterback, Graham Harrell, who is averaging 417 yards per game through the air.

CALICCHIO DAY-TO-DAY

During last weekend's loss, the Minutemen offense not only had to overcome the deficit left by the defense, but also with the loss of the captain of the offensive line and All-CAA player Sean Calicchio. The senior center went down with an ankle sprain early in the first quarter last week against JMU.

Brown said that Calicchio suffered a high ankle sprain and is listed as day-to-day. Redshirt sophomore John Ihne filled in for Calicchio for the remainder of the game. Ihne has also been battling a leg injury which has forced him out of the starting lineup the last two weeks. Ihne is expected to fill in for Calicchio if he is not ready to go on Saturday.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Linebacker George Byrd and the Minutemen have struggled on defense this season, allowing a combined 94 points in the last two games. A tougher order is in store, as UMass faces Texas Tech this weekend.

You're more likely to score better on the GRE Test while you're still in school. And, the bonus — your GRE Score is good for 5 years.

Give it a practice shot.
Text GRE18 to 78473. getGREready.com

Standard rates apply. Copyright © 2008 by Educational Testing Service. All rights reserved. ETS, the ETS logo, and GRE are registered trademarks of Educational Testing Service (ETS).

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
* * * * * *
SATURDAY, 9/20/08
KING BEES
LOOKING FOR EXPOSURE?
STUDENT BANDS WELCOME TO PLAY AT SEVEN O'S
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6766
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CUTTINGE APTS.

Jeepers.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | 1 | 5 | | | | | 3 |
| | | 7 | | 6 | 8 | | 9 | 4 |
| | | | | | 2 | | | |
| 5 | | 6 | | | 7 | | 8 | |
| | | | | 5 | | | | |
| | 7 | | 9 | | | 3 | | 6 |
| | | | 2 | | | | | |
| 2 | 5 | | 8 | 4 | | 1 | | |
| 7 | | | | | 9 | 8 | | |

ACROSS
1 Intersect
6 Relatives of raspberries
10 Lead player
14 Major artery
15 Frolic
16 Valuable find
17 "The ___ Witch Project"
18 Sicilian volcano
19 Raw minerals
20 Picks
22 Try
24 Comments
25 Silver services
26 German article
29 Schuss
30 Make a blunder
31 Impassioned
34 Stable units
38 Fasten, as buttons
40 Freon or neon
42 Schon of Journey
43 J.C. and Sammy of golf
46 Space between
49 Unit of resistance
51 Morgue letters
52 Stitch
53 Conductor's title
57 Jug handles
59 Russia's first president
60 Ninepins' pin
64 50/50 test choice
65 College clique, briefly
67 Physically fragile
68 Sweep under the rug
69 Shredded
70 Forgenes
71 Crystal gazer
72 Ooze
73 Edberg or Borg, e.g.

DOWN
1 Taxis
2 Actor's part
3 Type of exam
4 Porkers quarters
5 Bitter irony
6 Good wishes
7 Stallion's tidbit
8 Overly decorated
9 Boitano and Button
10 Gin fruit
11 Crooner Mel
12 Expert
13 Musical pauses
21 Kiddie
23 Lemony
26 Alternatives to VCRs
27 Very long time
28 "Leaving Las Vegas" actress
32 Clean air grp.
33 Wee bit
35 Gasteyer of "SNL"
36 Camera's eye
37 Boot binding
38 Murdered
41 Evade
44 Periods
45 Confessions to a priest
47 Water too well
48 Customs duties
50 Fifth U.S. president
53 Widely held fictions
54 Condor's digs
55 Duck past
56 Control the wheel
58 Kind of poll or hat
61 Make off with
62 Made stuff up
63 Different
66 Exist

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Nothing brings people together more than mutual hatred."

- Henry Rollins

ATKINS FARMS
Country Market
1150 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002
www.atkinsfarms.com
Now Hiring
For The Fall & Holiday Seasons
Part-time Sales Associates and Production Assistants
All positions require evening, weekend and holiday availability.
Customer service and food handling experience preferred.
Come in to apply or contact Kelly at 253-9528 or kelly@atkinsfarms.com
(Employment opportunities are also available on our website.)

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

BROTHERS WATT BY WILL WILSON

BLISS BY HARRY BLISS

"Ninety days, catnip-free. I couldn't have done it without you."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
The beard looks wonderful.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Your wall-size poster of Oprah is really starting to freak people out.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Forbidden pleasures await those who violate restraining orders.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Never send a short man to do a tall man's job, or else they will fall short.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You know it's going to be a long week once the showers start spraying out blood.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You will unveil your counter-theory to intelligent design this week, yet "drunken design" will fail to catch on.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
1. Find the guy who reinvented the wheel.
2. Bang his mother.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
The big nut is the one with all the mystical powers. Take good care of it.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Take a photo of your dog, and then submit it to Hotornot.com.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Refrain from haiku
In situations that are Unnecessary.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Your dreams are boring. Start buying more scratch tickets.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Slinkys were never designed to do that!

ROCK OUT WITH YOUR CLOCK OUT
@daily_collegian

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

EMPLOYMENT
Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Weekends. Apply at D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required: experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

SERVICES
Condom Break? Get EC. Emergency Contraception prevents unintended pregancies up to 5 days after unprotected sex.Taperstry Health 27 Pray Street, Amherst 413-548-9992 Tapestryhealth.org

EMPLOYMENT
COLLEGE PRO- I could spend my summer sitting on the couch playing video games. Or I could take initiative, work hard, run my own business, and plan for my future. Real Life, Right Now. College Pro. 888-277-7962 www.CollegePro.com VISIT our Info. Session: Campus Center-Wed &Thursday 9/17 and 9/18 Room 805-09 -8th Floor 10am,11am,12pm,1pm, 2pm,3pm

EMPLOYMENT
Rent us your ears! $10/hr for participating in listening experiments. English must be your first language. 413-545-6837 Voicemail Phonetics_Lab@linguist.umass.edu

FOR RENT
2 bedroom plus den in duplex house $950. Also 3 bedroom townhouse two floor unit $1215. Both near bus stop. La Donna @ 413-665-2203

ANNOUNCMENT
Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S. Padre, Florida. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

ANNOUNCMENT
Montreal Weekends From $99. Complete RoundTrip, Motorcoach. 3 days, 2 nights. Hotel Downtown. For Details MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

FREE RIDE
Free Ride to Church & Back. Please call Dwight Chapel at 256-8059 to arrange pick-up. www.dwightchapel.org

SUBMIT YOUR
CLASSIFIEDS...
(413) 545 - 3500

verizonwireless
Think outside the dorm.
USB727 Modem
$29.99 after rebate
$79.99 2-yr. price – $50 mail-in rebate debit card. With new 2-yr. activation.
Get on America's Most Reliable Wireless Network.
Click verizonwireless.com to find a store near you.
Activation fee/line: $35.
IMPORTANT CONSUMER INFORMATION: Subject to Customer Agmt, Calling Plan, rebate form & credit approval. Up to $175 early termination fee & other charges. While supplies last. Shipping charges may apply. BroadbandAccess is available to more than 256 million people in 210 major metros in the U.S. Limited time offer. Rebate debit card takes up to 6 wks & expires in 12 months. Offers & coverage not available everywhere. Network details & coverage maps at verizonwireless.com. ©2008 Verizon Wireless. 59880
CNNE-59880-Daily Collegian-11.5x21-4C-9.17

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Grinding it out

Minutewomen look to ride momentum in road matchup

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's soccer team will look to continue a four-game unbeaten streak along with a two-game win streak when it takes on Albany today at 3 p.m.

It is the longest streak without a loss since last season, when the Minutewomen started the year with six victories and one tie.

The game against the Great Danes (2-6-0) will be the first stop on a two-game road trip for the visiting Minutewomen (2-1-2) who will travel to Providence for a game on Sunday.

"We expect to be in every game. I expect this to be another tough one," said UMass Coach Jim Rudy, referring to Albany. "They're definitely a better team at home than they are on the road."

The America East team has faced a tough schedule so far in 2008, defeating Colgate in an away match while defeating Youngstown State at home. The Great Danes have lost four consecutive games, all of which were on the road.

Albany allowed four goals in each of those losses, getting

See SOCCER on page 7

Offense, defense coming together for Rudy and Co.

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's soccer team came into the 2008 season to face the harsh reality that its two top scorers from last year would not be back.

Ahlam Britt Canfield graduated and junior Sydney Stoll's path to being the team's leader has to wait another year as she is sidelined all season with a knee injury.

That news has caused UMass coach Jim Rudy to focus the team's direction to defense. The Minutewomen (2-1-2) play with as many as four defenders in the back and have a midfield that is frequently asked to fall back when necessary.

UMass faced two big tests in the wins over Bryant on Sept. 10 and Holy Cross on Sept. 14. Both teams pushed the ball with aggressive offenses where the defense had to hold the attack from challenging goalkeeper Lauren Luckey too many times.

The Bulldogs played the Minutewomen with a high offsides line and had five players going forward.

Bryant limited opportunities against the Maroon and White on offense and kept the pressure on the defense. UMass responded by holding Bryant to seven shots, helping Luckey to record her second shutout of the season.

The Crusaders played a similar style with five midfielders that impressed Rudy with their ball-handling. Holy Cross differed from Bryant because the Crusaders played more physical than

See DEFENSE on page 7

Senior forward Vanessa Patry and the Minutewomen have played six games this season – all but one of which went into at least one overtime period. UMass is unbeaten in its last four games and ride a two-game winning streak into a road match with Albany today.

UMass senior quarterback Liam Coen makes a rare rushing attempt in a game earlier this season. Coen has been terrific this season, but the team's defense has not been as sharp in 2008.

UMass dips in poll

Team falls to No. 9; Cruz has career game

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After climbing in the polls with two consecutive wins, the Massachusetts football team slipped this time, just as they did to James Madison.

The Minutemen's narrow victory over Holy Cross last week helped them rise one spot to No. 3 in the Sports Network's Football Championship Subdivision Poll – but the loss to JMU dropped them six spots, the largest drop of the week, to No. 9.

The FCS Top 25 now includes six teams from the Colonial Athletic Association, five of which are in the Top 10. Richmond jumped two spots to No. 2 with its victory over Towson, while UNH rose one spot to No. 10 with its win over Rhode Island. JMU rose two spots, to No. 5, with its win over UMass, and jumped No. 6 Delaware who stayed put with its win over West Chester.

'CRUZ' CONTROL

Although UMass lost, it did find that it has another weapon at wide receiver. Victor Cruz. Cruz, who was named one of the UMass/Dunn Bros. Co-Athletes of the Week, exploded in the second half of the Minutemen's loss.

Although Cruz only caught two balls, for 14 yards, in the first half, quarterback Liam Coen locked onto him in the second half for 11 completions, 248 yards and two scores. Prior to Saturday's game the wideout had caught five balls on the year for 89 yards and no touchdowns.

Not only was the game a career day for Cruz, it was also a record-breaking one. The 13 receptions tied a UMass record set by J.J. Moore and Brandon London, while the 262 receiving yards broke Adrian Zullo's previous record of 210 receiving yards in a game set in 1999.

Cruz, a redshirt junior, was someone that the team was looking for to step up and fill the holes left by J.J. Moore and Rasheed Rancher. He proved he can with that performance.

There were questions about who Coen would throw to coming into the season but after Cruz's outburst against JMU and Jeremy Horne's performance against Holy Cross, there are no longer any doubts.

UMass Football

"We've known about their ability. There's no question about that," UMass coach Don Brown said. "The reality is they just needed to do it on Saturday's and now they've had that chance and they're becoming household names like I anticipated them to be."

DEFENSE UNDERPERFORMING

While the wide receiver corps has quieted any critics, the defense has gained some. Coming into the season, the Minutemen's defense – along with Coen – was thought to be the strongest aspect of the team.

Part of that is because they returned seven starters from last year; three CAA All-Preseason players in the secondary, three players on the defensive line and one

See FOOTBALL on page 7

High-scoring affairs abound in CAA

BY SAM GROSSACK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Playing defense appeared to be optional for many teams in the Colonial Athletic Association last weekend.

The 52-38 shootout between Massachusetts and James Madison football teams wasn't even the highest scoring conference game of the week.

That honor belongs to the New Hampshire-Rhode Island battle, resulting in 94 points (a 51-43 win for the Wildcats) and over 1,000 yards of total offense.

Other teams in the CAA lit up the scoreboard too, with Delaware dropping 48 points, William & Mary 52, Richmond 45 and Villanova 33.

For New Hampshire, sophomore quarterback R. J. Toman led the offense completing 29-of-40 passes, and connecting for five touchdowns. Junior running back Chad Kackert paced the ground game, gaining a career-high 164 yards and a touchdown on only 11 carries.

Despite a very well played game by Rhode Island senior quarterback Derek Cassidy, the Rams (1-2, 0-1 CAA) fell behind early and could never recover. The closest they got in the second half was 34-30 with 2 minutes, 56 remaining in the third quarter.

Cassidy completed a career-high 34 passes on 60 attempts, while scoring four touchdowns (one rushing). Cassidy notched 436 yards in the air – the first time a URI signal caller threw for more than 300 yards in over 20 years.

New Hampshire's (2-0, 1-0 CAA) 480 total offensive yards was the fourth highest offensive output in school history.

SPIDERS CRAWLING

Richmond junior quarterback Eric Ward only threw 16 passes – but it was all he needed to register two touchdowns and lead the offense to 45 points vs. Towson.

Senior fullback John Crone only ran the ball four times for a total of 24 yards, but half of those runs turned into touchdowns for the Spiders, who are now ranked No. 4 in the country.

Senior Josh Vaughan did the majority of the running for the Spiders as he racked up 103 yards on 20 carries. It is the sixth time in his career that he has rushed for over 100 yards.

The Spiders' defense during this contest was just as phenomenal as their offense. Sophomore Justin Rogers and junior Derek Hatcher each intercepted the Tiger's quarterback twice, and each returned one of the interceptions for a touchdown.

CAA Football

Aside from the secondary, the defensive linemen and linebackers were able to hold the Tiger's offense to just 55 yards on the ground.

For the Tigers, senior quarterback Sean Schaefer completed 21-of-32 passes for two touchdowns, and threw four of his teams' five interceptions.

The Tigers fell to 1-2 on the season and 0-1 in the CAA, while the Spiders improved to 2-1 overall and 1-0 in the CAA.

WHAT RIVALRY?

No. 6 Delaware extended its win streak to 15 in its rivalry against West Chester – tying the longest streak in the rivalry's history, with a 48-20 victory on Saturday.

The Blue Hens rushed for 308 yards, led by senior first-year starter Jonathan Smith's 101 yards, the first 100-plus yard rushing performance of his career. He also found the end zone three times. Jerry Butler also had a huge night on the ground gaining 92 yards on 12 carries and a touchdown.

Delaware junior quarterback Robby Schoenhoft won his first career game as a Blue Hen in his second start. Schoenhoft, a transfer from Ohio State, completed 14-of-26 pass attempts for 194 yards and two touchdowns while throwing only one interception.

Delaware's defense was equally as strong as its offense allowing only eight first downs on the day, and only 16 yards of rushing offense to the Golden Rams—who fell out of the top 25 in the FCS rankings and dropped to 1-2 on the season.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com

Towson wideout Malcolm Lee breaks a tackle in last year's meeting with the Minutemen. The Tigers look strong again on offense this season.

INSIDE: LIVE HIP-HOP COMES TO MONKEY BAR | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 69 LO: 37 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 2008

Federal prosecutor speaks on terrorism

BY ERIN KESSELI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Andrew McCarthy discussed terrorism at Amherst College Tuesday, trying to answer the question, "Does our criminal justice system work for terrorism?"

As a federal prosecutor, Andrew McCarthy led the prosecution against terrorist Sheikh Omar Abdel Rahman and 11 others in connection with the 1993 bombing of the World Trade Center. In addition, McCarthy was a major contributor to the prosecutions of the terrorist bombers of the American Embassies in Tanzania and Kenya as well as the "Millennium" plot attack on Los Angeles International Airport.

When elaborating on the question of whether or not the justice system is successful in rightfully prosecuting terrorists, McCarthy says that question in particular is usually asked in an academic setting and what the American people really should be asking is, "does are criminal justice system have enough integrity to prosecute terrorists using due process?" His answer, "Yes it does."

McCarthy cites the nine terrorism cases the U.S. tried between 1993 and before September 11, 2001, all nine of the defendants received fair representation and the right to due process, according to him. McCarthy also addressed the idea of public view of terrorism on trial.

"The public wants to make sure, within the bounds of reason that if we can stop an attack, we need to stop it," McCarthy said.

However, asking law enforcement, post-9/11, to stop things from happening before they happen is accompanied by "ramifications" which the American public may not yet have grasped.

McCarthy said the only way to prevent attacks before they happen is, "to break up cells, plots and organizations; maybe even before they're plotting something."

The evidence against these suspected terrorists, as described by McCarthy, is often "dodgy and ambiguous, but we can't afford to be wrong."

McCarthy adds lastly that, "there are going to be some people indicted who are not guilty, but we're trying to convince the public we're acting in good faith."

"The underlying assumption is that people would rather see the guilty go free than see the innocent be wrongfully convicted," McCarthy said. "The criminal justice system doesn't work for terrorism as it works for terrorists."

Erin Kesseli can be contacted at ekesseli@student.umass.edu

UM alum runs for state rep.

Defeated in primary race, plans on a future of public service

BY EMILY REYNOLDS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At a time when most students are graduating college with uncertainty, former University of Massachusetts student Matt Giancola grabbed the opportunity to start his career with a bang by running for a seat as a Massachusetts state representative.

"I saw that there was a need for new leadership," Giancola said. "There were issues that had to be addressed."

Being a life long resident of Marlborough, Giancola ran for office in the Fourth District of Middlesex County. He went to Marlborough public school before going to UMass, graduating just this past spring with a degree in political science.

"I have always been very interested in politics, government and history," Giancola said.

Giancola ran against one opponent in the primary election to be the Democrat on the ticket, Danielle Gregoire. The Marlborough native fell to Gregoire by just over 1,000 votes in Tuesday's election.

"We both worked hard, we were both out there everyday, and in the end she got the votes," Giancola said. "Well, we lost, but it was good to get out there and talk to residents."

While at UMass, Giancola was involved in the political activities at the school. He was the chairman of the Undergraduate University Policy Committee and the president of the UMass Democrats.

Last spring, the incumbent in Giancola's district, Stephen LeDuc, retired, leaving a spot open.

Giancola said he is tired of the deadlocks and delays in the state house, and he wants to run so that he can change the way that things are being done, according to his Web site.

"It is pretty easy to get on the ballot," said Giancola. "You only need to get 150 signatures from residents of the district."

Once Giancola got the signatures, his next step was to start campaigning and fundraising. One of his main goals was to get his name out for people to recognize it and vote for him.

"We held fundraisers, and I went door to door to campaign," Giancola said. "Door-to-door was the most important thing."

Through fundraisers done at local restaurants, Giancola raised about $3,000 for his campaign.

"It was mostly spent on lawn signs, campaign literature, paper mail and the Web site," said Giancola.

Giancola's Web site, mattgiancola.com, is still up and running, and filled with information about what issues are the most important to the candidate and where he stands.

The part of his campaign that seems to be the most out of the ordinary is his want for the people to be directly involved. According to his Web site, Giancola offered to have open office hours to talk to constituents as well as public forums for the people to offer their own ideas and suggestions.

Despite his loss to Gregoire in the primaries on, Giancola said he is not out of politics for the long run. Although he is not sure about whether it will be state or local politics, Giancola is sure that he will take another try at public service.

"I do not know what is going to be in the future," Giancola said, "but I am definitely interested in doing something again."

Emily Reynolds can be reached at ereynold@student.umass.edu

Mike Giancola, who just finished his first state-level campaign.

National recognition for UMass grads

CampusLive founders named to list of top 25 entrepreneurs

BY LISA DIMATTEO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Imagine turning your dorm room hobby into a full-fledged business and then being recognized for it by a national magazine. That is exactly what happened to the team at CampusLIVE.com when they were chosen this summer by "BusinessWeek" magazine as one of America's Top 25 best young entrepreneurs.

Jared Stenquist, who started CampusLIVE.com with his friend Jeff Cassidy from his dorm room in John Adams during sophomore year at UMass, said that the call came as a complete surprise.

"I thought it was a friend playing a joke on me," Stenquist said, explaining that he had no idea he had even been nominated to be in the running at the magazine.

According to the article in "BusinessWeek," readers of the magazine were asked to send in nominations for men and women under the age of 25 who were running their own companies and showed growing potential. They were also asked to evaluate the talent of the founders of these companies. Once all entries were received, "BusinessWeek" had three experts sift through all the nominees and pick the 25 most impressive.

Stenquist – who has come a long way from playing around with Web sites in his dorm room and advertising his site in the Southwest parking lot – now boasts an office in downtown Amherst, a full-time team working with him on the Web site and a CampusLIVE Web site at 27 campuses nationwide.

CampusLIVE.com, which started out as an idea to make links for places on campus and around the area easier to find by placing them all on one page, has evolved into a highly interactive Web site on which companies can actually log in and post information on their products as well as let students know about any coupons or special deals.

"It's like Facebook for business owners" said Brian Strunk, who is in charge of the sales side of CampusLIVE. "We are the middle men."

While it is Strunk's job to reel in the business, it is Sasha Grosman's job to make sure that the information is actually reaching the students. As director of marketing for the site, Grosman needs to constantly think up new ways to market CampusLIVE.

He also makes sure that he establishes and maintains relationships with students at other campuses that have a CampusLIVE Web site. Strunk points out, that being recently removed from college, they can't simply hop on a plane and fly across the country to make sure the information on the Web site is still relevant to the campus, so having teams at other campuses is imperative to the success of the site.

But it's not all work and no play, as Grosman also gets to think of cool and fun ways to get the word out about CampusLIVE.

This coming Saturday, CampusLIVE is hosting a beruit tournament at the local pub The Harp.

"We are graduates of UMass after all," Strunk said.

The tournament, which starts at 2 p.m., costs $20 per team and half the money goes to a local charity while the other half goes to the winning team.

The founders of CampusLive who ""BusinessWeek profiled as some of the best young entrepreneurs in America.

It's important not to lose sight that this is for the students," Stenquist said.

Stenquist, Cassidy, Grosman, Strunk and Boris Revsin, COO and one of the original members of the CampusLIVE team, continue working hard towards the goal that, some day, every campus in the nation will have a CampusLIVE website. That day may not be too far off though as the "BusinessWeek" article resulted in a huge amount of interest from campuses across the country who want CampusLIVE at their schools.

Lisa DiMatteo can be reached at ldimatte@student.umass.edu

Minutemen face nation's top offense

Junior defensive back Jeromy Miles and the Minutemen face Texas Tech Saturday. The UMass secondary will have its hands full against one of the nation's most prolific offenses, which features Heisman Trophy candidate Michael Crabtree at wide out.

Senator preaches political tolerance on campuses

BY CHRIS RUSSELL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Speaking Tuesday night's UMass Republican Club meeting, state senator Scott Brown blamed Massachusetts' poor economic situation on irresponsible spending by the democratically-controlled government. He addressed the group as a part of the group's fall 2008 kickoff meeting.

Brown said that without checks and balances "chaos" results, which he said has manifested itself in a $1.4 billion state deficit.

Brown also spoke extensively on the need for civility and respect in political conversations; he found the "lack of tolerance" of different viewpoints at many colleges "disturbing." Brown called upon the people in the audience to promote "open and free expression of thought" as much as possible, and stressed that as the most important part of his speech.

Brown, who has represented the Norfolk, Bristol and Middlesex districts in the Massachusetts State Senate since March 2004, lays equal blame for the state's economic situation at the governor and the legislature. He repeatedly criticized Governor Patrick for spending money on what he believed were unnecessary things, such as new drapes for his office, a Cadillac and a permanent office in Washington.

Brown also disagreed with the governor's economic policies, such as the governor's budget for 2009 that proposed $213 million in spending increases and hiring 200 new state workers. Brown said that "leadership starts from above" and that Patrick has continually failed to provide this leadership.

"We could cut $2.5 billion out of the state budget. But the governor is not going to do that," Brown said, while adding that bills passed by the legislature have hurt the state, especially in its attempt to close corporate loopholes.

"Democrats have chased businesses away from Massachusetts," he said.

Around 40 people attended the meeting.

"I think he gave a very powerful speech," said Republican Club treasurer Jonathon Tabb. "He spoke well about key issues, especially about working well with other political groups on campus."

Brown addressed this topic after the meeting had started with a video of students protesting a Republican Club sponsored speech by conservative author Mike Adams. Brown said having respect for different viewpoints is "the most important thing that should be taken from my talk."

Club president Greg Collins expanded on this thought in an e-mail, "People can disagree with us, but we have faced rude and disrespectful protesters in the past. We know that people will not always agree with us, but all we want is respect from the UMass community, and frequently it is very hard to do so when people are so closed-minded."

Chris Russell can be reached at crussell@student.umass.edu

New FDA guidelines for genetic engineering

By David Brown
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON – The Food and Drug Administration will release Thursday long-awaited regulatory guidelines governing genetic engineering of animals for food, drugs or medical devices.

While none of the provisions is likely to surprise the biotech industry, their formal appearance after years of discussion is expected to energize a field whose commercial potential is huge but so far unrealized.

The agency's regulatory control of animals will be considerably stronger than its oversight of genetically engineered plants and microorganisms. The latter – or substances derived from them – already are on the market and, in some cases, have proved very controversial.

The guidelines tell companies what the FDA wants to know about their work at virtually every stage of creating an engineered animal.

For example, biotech firms will be asked to provide the molecular identity of snippets of DNA inserted in an animal's genome, as well as where the genetic message lands and whether it descends unaltered through subsequent generations. The FDA also wants to be told how the genetic alterations may change an animal's health, behavior and nutritional value.

The companies also should inform the agency how they will keep track of animals, prevent them from mingling with their non-engineered cousins and dispose of them when they die.

Genetically engineered animals, salmon, pigs, cows and goats are all in development, are expected to have two main uses. Some will be food animals whose new genetic endowment makes them disease-resistant, faster-growing, or more nutritious. Others will be genetically engineered to produce medically useful substances, such as hormones or antibodies, in their organs or body fluids.

Pigs that are able to more easily absorb phosphorus, and therefore need less feed supplementation, are being developed in Ontario. Goats that produce spider silk in their milk are being made in Wyoming.

Food that is produced from genetically engineered animals will not have to be labeled as such. However, if the genetic manipulation changes the nutritional content – for example, by increasing a beneficial form of fat – that must be declared on the label.

The specific requests in the guidelines are not mandatory. However, biotech companies seeking FDA approval to commercialize genetically engineered animals must follow federal drug laws. The guidelines are meant to show how they can do that.

The FDA has been providing the advice on an informal basis for about 10 years, said Eric Flamm, a policy adviser at the agency. The guidelines will be open for public comment for 60 days.

"We are simply clarifying what we've always done, and will continue to do," he said.

There was general agreement that something in writing on the subject has been needed for a while.

"It is past due for the federal government to finally recognize that genetically engineered animals are on the horizon and need regulation and oversight," said Gregory Jaffe of the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a lobbying organization in Washington.

The action "will drive investor confidence," said Barbara Glenn of the Biotechnology Industry Organization. "They know that we will reach commercialization of a product." At the moment, only about a dozen of the organization's 1,200 member companies are developing genetically engineered animals, she said.

But the new guidelines drew criticism from groups worried about possible environmental, ecological and physiological hazards of bioengineered animals. The experience of genetically modified plants is rife with examples of unintentional dissemination of the organisms, and their interbreeding with unmodified members of their species.

"The first time that the public will learn about a genetically engineered animal will be the day it is approved," said Margaret Mellon, of the Union of Concerned Scientists. "This requires that you completely trust the FDA to do this right, and I don't think folks trust FDA that much."

Michael Hansen, a scientist with Consumers Union, publisher of Consumer Reports magazine, said that "there is very little transparency without (the FDA) laying out all the data" for the public to see. He does not think that transparency is assured.

The FDA is laying claim to regulatory authority over what it calls "GE animals" through an unusual legal argument.

The Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act defines a drug as anything that alters the "structure or function" of a person or animal. Adding a gene to an animal through recombinant technology changes at least the animal's structure and probably its function, as well.

In the new guidelines, the FDA argues that "recombinant DNA constructs" inserted into animals are by definition drugs. However, because the DNA constructs are physically inseparable from the whole animals, the latter also fall under the agency's regulatory control.

"You can't regulate the drug without regulating the animal," said Flamm, the FDA policy adviser. "So, effectively, we are putting controls on the animal rather than on the little piece of DNA."

With this strategy, virtually no genetically engineered animal will escape FDA scrutiny during its development and testing. This is not true with plants.

The FDA regulates genetically modified plants whose nutritional content is altered, in which case they become "food additives." The Environmental Protection Agency regulates them when the new genetic endowments provide pesticide-like actions.

While the animal-is-drug strategy will allow the FDA to regulate genetically engineered animals without getting further authority from Congress, the unintended effects of that strategy worry some consumer groups.

While companies will have to provide detailed information about their work starting from the earliest stage, the FDA is forbidden by law from revealing that information to the media or the public. That is because much of the information is proprietary, competitive and extremely valuable. The agency cannot even acknowledge that a company has a "new drug application" on file.

Consequently, discussions that occur during the development of a genetically engineered animal about its safety and effectiveness will not include consumer or watchdog groups.

"CampusEdge® Checking is free of a monthly maintenance fee for five years while you are a student. Student status will be validated upon account opening. After the first five years, your CampusEdge Checking account will be automatically upgraded to MyAccess Checking® The monthly maintenance fee of $5.95 for MyAccess Checking will be waived as long as you have a monthly direct deposit. Fees for overdrafts and other account-related fees still apply. You must open both a new personal checking account and a new Regular Savings account (referred to as Unlimited Market Rate Savings in ID and WA) at the same time, sign up for our Keep the Change service, and use your check card to make a purchase within 90 days of account opening. This offer does not apply to current Bank of America customers or existing accounts. We may change or terminate this offer at any time. The monthly maintenance fee (referred to as "monthly service charge" in CA) waiver on your Regular Savings account begins after your first Keep the Change transfer from your new personal checking account to your new Regular Savings account. Excess transaction fees on Regular Savings still apply. See our Personal Schedule of Fees for information about these accounts and our Keep the Change service. Keep the Change, Patent Pending. Bank of America, N.A. Member FDIC. © 2008 Bank of America Corporation.

Amherst for Obama group mobilizes

Coordinates with national campaign to raise money, ideas

By Kat Manser
Collegian Staff

With less than two months to go before the general election, groups like "Amherst for Obama" are on the move, raising awareness for their candidate. The group is active in raising support for Obama by organizing events, communicating with the National Campaign and orchestrating other fundraising efforts.

One of their events, called, "Politics on the Farm," took place Aug. 23, and raised over $3,000 for Barack Obama's presidential campaign. The event featured food provided by local farms, as well as prominent speakers such as Ellen Story (Mass. state representative), Dr. Stephen Jones (professor of Russian and Georgian studies at Mount Holyoke College) and David Sullivan (Hampshire County register of probate).

A July 31 event raised an additional $7,000 dollars for the Obama campaign.

The Amherst for Obama group also developed a document which helped shape the Democratic Party's political platform. This document was provided to the public on the group's Web site and included its ideas on 12 key topics including health care, the war in Iraq and the economy.

In the document, the group concluded its appeal to the National Campaign by summing up their views on "global connections and world citizenship" as "being the peace we want to see."

In addition to their fundraising efforts and interaction with the National Campaign, Amherst for Obama is participating in mass canvassing efforts in an attempt to convince more voters to get out and vote for Obama.

The group began canvassing this summer and will continue throughout September and October.

Viewing New Hampshire as a "battleground state," in which there will be a "tough fight," the Amherst for Obama group has been canvassing each Saturday. The group has covered areas such as Keene, N.H., in an attempt to measure the general feeling of voters, recruit new volunteers who willing to work for the Obama campaign and convince voters who may be undecided to vote for Obama.

Kat Manser can be reached at kmanser@student.umass.edu

Voter registration explodes

Millions of new voters will swamp polling stations this year

By Mary Pat Flaherty
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON – Faced with a surge in voter registrations leading up to Nov. 4, election officials across the country are bracing for long lines, equipment failures and confusion over polling procedures that could cost thousands the chance to cast a ballot.

The crush of voters will strain a system already in the midst of transformation, with jurisdictions introducing new machines and rules to avoid the catastrophe of the deadlocked 2000 election and the lingering controversy over the 2004 outcome.

Even within the past few months, cities and counties have revamped their processes: Nine million voters, including many in the battleground states of Ohio, Florida and Colorado, will use equipment that has changed since March.

But the widespread changes meant to reassure the public have also increased the potential for trouble.

"You change systems and throw in lots of new voters, and you can plan to be up the proverbial creek," said Kimball Brace, president of Election Data Services, a consulting firm that has tracked the voting changes.

Since Congress passed the Help America Vote Act six years ago, $3 billion in federal funds has been spent to overhaul voting operations, much of it for new equipment. With touch-screen machines falling out of favor, an increasing number of the nation's voters – just over half – will use paper ballots, which will be read by optical scanners. That will produce a paper trail that can serve as a backup if questions arise over tallies.

For more than half of the states, this will be the first presidential election using state wide databases required by the 2002 law to improve the accuracy of voter rolls. When voters arrive at the polls, their information must match the list in order for them to receive a regular ballot. That could trigger contentious questions in places with particularly rigid rules on what constitutes a match.

Both campaigns have lined up teams of lawyers to challenge any irregularities, from registrations to polling place problems to vote counts.

And experts say the problems ahead will be formidable, even if they don't rise to the level of the Supreme Court challenge over the 2000 results.

"The voting process is going to be tested in a way it has not been in recent history," said Tova Wang, vice president for research at Common Cause, a government watchdog group.

Recent local primaries have offered warning signs.

In the District of Columbia last week, initial tallies were inflated by thousands of votes, causing chaos that night, and officials have yet to explain the problem.

In Palm Beach County, Fla., more than 3,500 ballots went missing in an August primary, forcing workers to hunt through bins and leaving a judicial election still undecided.

That same day, equipment problems in two other Florida jurisdictions delayed results for hours.

Premier Election Solutions, the company that makes many of the nation's voting machines, last month acknowledged that software used in 34 states could cause votes to be dropped. The company, formerly called Diebold, said it has no fix for the problem now, but election officials can catch the errors and recover the votes through a routine process of double-checking electronic memory cards.

Any weak spots in the process in November, whether poorly trained poll workers, a confusing ballot design or faulty equipment, will be further stressed by turnout, including many first-time voters.

During this year's presidential primaries, the number of voters hit an eight-year high in 36 states, according to Electionline.org, which monitors electoral reforms as part of the Pew Center on the States.

In the battleground state of Nevada, there are 400,000 more voters registered than four years ago.

More than 500,000 have registered in Indiana since the beginning of the year, prompting Secretary of State Todd Rokita to say this could be "the biggest Election Day in our nation's history in terms of turnout."

Federal officials estimate that 2 million poll workers will be needed to handle the turnout, twice 2004's number and a goal states are scrambling to meet.

After a spate of Election Day problems in Ohio in 2004, when some voters waited in line more than seven hours, officials there have been working to recruit enough workers and to assign the right site to supervisors who must be able to set up and test voting machines.

In Worcester, Mass., local election officials are trying to prepare for the bigger turnout by locating some polling places in four supermarkets, which have plenty of parking and are accessible to disabled voters.

But David Moon, program director for FairVote, a voting advocacy group that is surveying local operations, said that "very few county officials" in swing states "are creating rational plans" to put machines where they are most needed. As a result, he said, frustrated voters stuck in long lines could give up and go home without casting ballots – the same thing that happened four years ago in many states.

As they approach November, some local officials say they have addressed problems that surfaced in this year's presidential primaries.

Touchscreen machines still will be in place in Horry County, S.C., which includes Myrtle Beach, but elections director Sandy Martin said she will avoid the programming error that forced the county to use backup paper ballots – some votes were cast on yellow legal pads – and delayed results for a day.

"Oh my gosh, it was awful," Martin said.

In Contra Costa County, east of San Francisco, registrar Stephen Weir said he too learned from the primary. A fold in the absentee ballots forced him to spend nearly two weeks ironing, by hand, about 16,000 ballots to make them flat enough to feed into vote-counting machines.

"There were two lessons learned," he said. "Dump the fold. And the silk setting worked great."

Global effects felt from U.S. 'meltdown'

By Don Lee and Sebastian Rotella
Los Angeles Times

SHANGHAI, China – Du Xiufeng, a small textile producer in China's industrial belt near Shanghai, is about as far from the drama on Wall Street as you can get. Yet neither he nor countless businesses in China and around the globe can escape the fallout from America's financial meltdown.

"The global market is already bad enough, and because of this our business will probably be even worse next year," said the wiry 34-year-old as he reflected Tuesday on the news of Lehman Brother's liquidation and Merrill Lynch's fire sale to Bank of America.

Du's Christmas exports to the U.S. are down 40 percent this year, and now he figures Valentine's Day is lost too.

"This recession is really global. Everything is connected," Du said.

As U.S. officials engineered a bail-out of insurance giant AIG in New York on Tuesday, Lehman workers in London carted boxes from their offices and worried about joining the unemployment rolls. Bankers and accountants in Asia were tallying their exposure to American assets. South Korean financial firms had more than $700 million in investments each in securities linked to Merrill and Lehman.

And investors in Kuwait watched as oil futures kept falling amid expectations of depressed demand for many commodities, led by the United States. On Tuesday, crude was down more than $4.50 in New York, closing at $91.15 a barrel – the lowest since February.

"We're talking about a global economy that has been driven by extreme excesses created by the housing market in the U.S.," said Kirby Daley, a Hong Kong-based strategist for the brokerage Newedge Group. "It was like a drug. But the drug is now gone, and there will be an adjustment."

One of the biggest adjustments will be the re-pricing of assets. When it filed for bankruptcy, Lehman said it had more than $639 billion in assets and debt of $613 billion. But if those assets are dumped in a liquidation, that could force other firms to mark down their assets imperiling their capital base and financial stability.

"In that case, how many institutions would fail?" asked Andy Xie, a Shanghai-based independent economist.

"The re-pricing means a big reduction in credit to U.S. households," said Xie, former chief Asia economist for Morgan Stanley. "The U.S. economy could go through what happened in Asia one decade ago: 4 percent, 5 percent contraction in GDP."

Most economists don't anticipate such a steep fall, but troubles will ripple across the world. The U.S. subprime crisis and credit crunch already have contributed to slower growth in Europe, Japan and China. Following Monday's 500-point drop in the Dow Jones industrial average, Asian stock markets were hit hard Tuesday. That was in part because trading was closed Monday for a holiday, but it also reflects concerns that Asia has much exposure to the U.S. meltdown.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 13

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Wasserzuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Rose Olmin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Stephanie McPherson
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Melissa Garber
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenwaks
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor Brian Tedder
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager William Mullholland
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kuczwara
Asst. Arts & Living Heather Waxman
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial Leigh Greaves
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Assistant News Stella Cernak
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Sports Melissa Turtinen
Assistant Photo P.J. Stanley

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is printed by Hamilton Printing in Lewiston, Maine. Periodicals postage paid at Amherst, MA 01004. USPS 646-480.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITORS
Michael King

COPY EDITOR
Adam Miller

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michelle Abbasciano

Shaina Jackson

FROM MELT-IN-THE-OVEN TO MELT-IN-YOUR-MOUTH
DOMINO'S® INTRODUCES OVEN BAKED SANDWICHES

3 medium one-topping pizzas
$5.55 each
413-256-8911

"Think Welfare Helps the Poor? Think Again"
UMASS AMHERST REPUBLICAN CLUB
WILL PROUDLY HOST A LECTURE BY STAR PARKER

ON HOW THE POOR GET RICH
SEPTEMBER 18TH AT 7PM
IN HOWKER AUDITORIUM

Promotion, Booking and Management Company seeks:
Detail oriented, solid communicator and computer skilled multitasking individual for fast moving environment.
Savvy with all online media: Facebook, Myspace, Photobucket, ilike etc. wav to mp3 files, invoicing, website updates, solid typist.
$8, 2-3 days a week 10:30-3:30
Send cover letter and resume to artspromo@artspromo.org

ATTENTION ALL RSOs
Advertising with the Daily Collegian is now cheaper than ever!
Get your student organization heard, and advertise with the Collegian.
From print ads to sudoku & horoscope spots we will help find the ad that's best for you.

Study finds e-textbooks may not be economically sound

BY KAT MURTI
DAILY CALIFORNIAN

BERKELEY – Although students may be turning to e-books to avoid rising textbook costs, a recent study co-sponsored by the California Public Interest Research Group found that digital textbooks may be more expensive than their hard copy counterparts.

The report, entitled "Course Correction: How Digital Textbooks are Off Track and How to Set Them Straight," surveyed 509 students from Portland State University and the City Colleges of Chicago, as well as the 50 most commonly assigned titles from college bookstores.

The study, authored by Nicole Allen, textbook advocate for the Student PIRGs, relies upon three criteria – affordability, printability and accessibility – to evaluate digital textbooks.

The evaluation suggests that educational institutions should move away from digital and hard copy textbooks and toward open textbooks. Open textbooks are materials directly uploaded online by professors in lieu of being sold first to the publishing companies.

"We were really concerned that these textbooks are not priced well enough and they're just so heavily restricted that students don't actually want to use them," Allen said.

"We wanted to make sure that those textbooks are in fact the best digital textbooks that there can be, and the report articulated that."

The study is part of a campaign that centers on efforts to make textbooks more affordable for students, said Jenn Engstrom, CalPIRG's chapter chair.

"Publishing companies are doing a lot of sketchy stuff to get prices high and keep them up," Engstrom said. "It doesn't work on simple supply and demand, because students have to purchase the textbook the professor chooses and can't go and buy a cheaper textbook, so publishing companies can really take advantage of that and inflate prices."

According to the report, the average e-textbook costs the same amount as a new hard copy bought and sold back to campus bookstores, and 39 percent more than a used hard copy bought and sold back online.

Open textbook programs allow students better access to material, while lowering costs for the student, according the report.

"What makes open books cheaper is that the professor puts the information online instead of selling it to the publisher to distribute it," Engstrom said.

According to Bryce Johnson, a UC Berkeley Haas School of Business alumnus and CEO of CafeScribe, a digital textbook provider, digital textbooks allow providers to offer textbooks to students at a much cheaper cost than hard copies.

The study, however, asserts that the cost of printing the pages eventually causes the accumulated price of the digital textbook to be more than that of its hard copy counterpart.

Carlo de la Cruz, the ASUC academic affairs vice president, had not reviewed the report but said publishing companies are keeping prices high for textbooks.

"If textbooks are being published year after year, they come out with new editions and many times these changes aren't fundamental changes and they aren't that important," de la Cruz said.

Roughly 75 percent of students also prefer traditional hard copies of textbooks, the study reported.

UC Berkeley Sophomore Thomas Pham had access to an e-book online for his Chemistry 1A course, but preferred hard copies.

"I like the (hard) textbook," Pham said. "It feels like it's actually there. I mean, the e-book's convenient – you don't have to carry around a textbook, but looking at the screen all the time's not comfortable and I guess I'm just not used to it."

Massive AIG bail-out

$85 billion tab keeps comany from going under

BY DAVID S. HILZENRATH AND GLENN KESSLER
THE WASHINGTON POST

Invoking extraordinary powers granted after the 1929 stock market crash, the government seized control of the insurance giant American International Group to preserve a crucial bulwark of the global financial system.

The move to lend the Wall Street giant up to $85 billion in exchange for nearly 80 percent of its stock effectively nationalizes one of the central institutions in the crisis that has swept through markets this month.

The government had sought to avoid federal intervention by lining up private companies to rescue AIG. But the effort failed when companies were unwilling to take on the massive financial risk, forcing the government's hand.

AIG found itself on the verge of bankruptcy because of mounting losses from investments tied to subprime home mortgages and also from the insurance it was providing to others who invested in mortgages.

When credit-rating agencies downgraded the company Monday, AIG suddenly faced a crunch to come up with $14.5 billion to meet its commitments.

If the company failed, it could have set off cascading losses across the global financial system.

"The Board determined that, in current circumstances, a disorderly failure of AIG could add to already significant levels of financial market fragility and lead to substantially higher borrowing costs, reduced household wealth and materially weaker economic performance," the Fed said in a statement.

"It's heavy, heavy, heavy. It's much more than has been done except Fannie and Freddie," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., who heads the Joint Economic Committee, referring to the mortgage finance giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, which were taken over by the government earlier this month. "But when you look at the alternatives, none of them are better."

Since years of loose mortgage lending caught up with the housing markets, spurring a decline in home prices and a wave of foreclosures, a contagion has spread through the financial system, infecting investors who bet on the bad debt. To contain the damage, the government has also intervened to prop up Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and the investment bank Bear Stearns.

Treasury officials appeared to draw a line over the weekend when they allowed the Wall Street investment house Lehman Brothers to fail, sending a signal that other firms could not count on taxpayer help.

Government officials drew two distinctions between AIG's situation and that of Lehman. First, ever since the demise of Bear Stearns in March, the government and private firms had been drawing up contingency plans for easing the collateral damage from a Lehman bankruptcy filing. AIG's failure was a surprise – the company first went to the government for help Friday – and its sheer size and complexity made it impossible to quickly prepare for its collapse.

The other difference is that AIG does business in ways that get to Americans' pocketbooks. Its short-term debt is held by institutions all over the world, including money-market mutual funds, and its overnight collapse could have caused big losses in those funds, perhaps even risking a run on them.

The possibility of a Fed rescue helped lift the Dow Jones industrial average more than 141 points Tuesday, to close at 11,059, recovering part of Monday's dizzying 504-point drop.

The Fed, meanwhile, decided at a regularly scheduled policy meeting against cutting interest rates further, concluding that it was too soon to tell what effect the recent turmoil on Wall Street was having on the broader economy. The refusal to reduce rates was consistent with the Fed's belief that measures to improve the functioning of the financial system – such as emergency loans to investment banks – should remain separate from actions that affect the overall economy.

AIG's stock, which fell 61 percent Monday, plunged 75 percent more in early trading Tuesday but ended the day down 21 percent, or $1.01 a share, to close at $3.75 on trading volume of more than 1.1 billion shares.

On Monday, Treasury Secretary Henry M. Paulson Jr. – who had backed publicly funded bailouts of Bear Stearns, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac – said he was reluctant to continue to use public funds to prop up individual firms. He left open the possibility that taxpayer funds could still be used broadly to "maintain the stability and orderliness of our financial system."

But the cloak ran out. At one point Tuesday, J.P. Morgan Chase and Goldman Sachs agreed to consider arranging a $75 billion loan to AIG that would be syndicated, or sold in pieces to other parties, to help spread the risk. But the firms walked away from that proposal after it became clear they would not be able to raise such a large amount in time, especially in such a troubled market, according to a person.

A distraught investor on the Wall Street floor at closing time Tuesday. The Dow dropped over 400 points for two days in a row, after one of the countries largest banks declared bankruptcy.

invention to Venture
workshops in technology entrepreneurship

learn how to turn your technology idea into a commercial opportunity.

When: Saturday Sept. 27 8am-4:15pm
Where: UMass E. Lab II Auditorium
Cost: $10 students, $25 higher ed faculty & staff, $25 alumni, $75 all others
Contact: Heather Demers demers@ecs.umass.edu

A fast-paced workshop for science and technology students and faculty, as well as members of the university and business communities.

www.invention2venture.org/umass08

ISENBERG PROGRAM Wolf Greenfield SAINT-GOBAIN

ONCIIA National Collegiate Inventors & Innovators Alliance

STUDENT DISCOUNT!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.org
413-256-4071
Best 9 Hole Course In Western Mass
Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63
Free Hotdog when you mention this ad!
Walk on anytime! No Tee Times Necessary!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
Grand Prize $1000 Spring Break 2009 Travel Voucher
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female Weekly Prizes
Show your College ID for Cover Charge Discount

Hurricane Ike falls on Texas

Tens of thousands are still in shelters and over a million still have no electricty after hurricane Ike swept the coast of texas over this weekend.

Fifth most expensive disaster in U.S. history

BY P.J. HUFFSTUTTER AND DAVID ZUCCHINO
LOS ANGELES TIMES

HOUSTON – As recovery efforts along the Gulf Coast slowly expanded Wednesday, local leaders and federal officials resolved their escalating spat over logistical tie-ups that kept thousands of residents from getting food and supplies from government aid stations.

But in hard-hit Galveston Island, Hurricane Ike's widespread devastation had frazzled city officials sniping at one another about the crush of residents who want to return to a place that medical experts say is a health hazard.

More than a million people in the region are still living without electricity, and tens of thousands of people are still in shelters across Texas. But Houston residents got good news when authorities said the city's water was safe to drink.

On Bolivar Peninsula northeast of Galveston, where most homes and businesses were swept away by a powerful tidal surge, between 200 and 250 holdouts are still refusing to leave. The peninsula has essentially become an island, cut off by flooded roads and mountains of sand and debris.

State officials fear it will take weeks to restore basic utilities in towns such as Galveston and communities near the Texas-Louisiana border because power substations have been demolished and key infrastructure systems are down.

In Houston, Homeland Security chief Michael Chertoff met with local officials and promised to deal with the problems with supply distribution.

Earlier in the week, a federal employee sent away a supply truck that arrived late in the day at one Harris County distribution center, citing concerns about leaving the goods unguarded overnight. At other centers, crowds stood in line for hours only to find that there were no supplies.

Clearly frustrated, Houston Mayor Bill White and Harris County Judge Ed Emmett took over the logistics operations on Tuesday. They opened extra centers and ordered supply trucks to drive through the night so supplies were available at daybreak to the region's hardest-hit areas.

By Wednesday, some of the problems were easing.

At a distribution site on Navigation Boulevard in southwest Houston, a line of cars stretched for several blocks. But the traffic flow moved quickly and smoothly.

Tiffany Warren and her 9-month-old son had fled her flooded apartment for her mother's place, where the electricity and plumbing returned Wednesday.

"This is the first real help we've gotten," Warren said of the relief site. The food, water and ice were "a real blessing after some rough days." She said she had been living off supplies bought at a pharmacy Sunday after a three-hour wait.

In the 29 Texas counties that President Bush declared disaster areas, 63 centers handed out supplies, Chertoff said.

"For people who are hot, hungry and thirsty, any delay is too much delay," Chertoff said. "I'm not going to promise you that we won't have problems. But I can tell you that when we have a hitch, we're going to jump on it."

Early estimates put the storm's destruction at more than $11 billion in insured losses, making it the fifth most expensive catastrophe in U.S. history, according to the Insurance Information Institute.

The Texas Attorney General's office said it has received more than 1,000 complaints about price-gouging for gasoline, food and other supplies on the Gulf Coast – and at hotels and motels elsewhere in the state.

The only highway onto Galveston Island was jammed for miles Wednesday with residents trying to return to check on their homes – only to be turned away.

City officials, who had instituted a "look and leave" program Tuesday only to abort it late in the day, said they were working on a plan to allow residents to return in shifts.

Untilthen, Galveston City Manager Steve LeBlanc said the residents who remain on the island should leave.

Conditions on the island are "a set-up for food-borne illnesses," said Dr. David Lakey, the state health commissioner. The University of Texas Medical Branch at Galveston, with the island's only hospital, is not capable of treating serious illnesses or major trauma – yet it has seen an upsurge in respiratory ailments and injuries from falls or burns, Lakey said.

Anthrax investigation under new scrutiny

Panel says case not yet closed

BY DAVID WILLMAN
LOS ANGELES TIMES

WASHINGTON – Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Wednesday vigorously challenged FBI Director Robert S. Mueller III on the bureau's handling of the anthrax-mailings investigation, signaling they are not convinced the case has been solved.

Both the panel's Democratic chairman and its most senior Republican said that, based on what evidence they have seen, the FBI has not proved that the mailings were perpetrated solely by Bruce E. Ivins, the now-deceased Army scientist who law-enforcement officials allege committed the crimes.

The anthrax-laced letters were mailed in September 2001 and October 2001 and killed five people. Two of the letters were addressed to members of Congress, including Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Leahy, who shouted with emotion at times during the three-hour hearing, said that, if Ivins "is the one who sent the letter, I do not believe in any way, shape or manner that he is the only person involved in this attack on Congress and the American people."

Leahy added, "I believe there are others involved, either as accessories before or accessories after the fact. I believe that there are others out there. I believe there are others who can be charged with murder."

Leahy did not provide the basis for his assertions. Afterward, an aide said the senator would not elaborate. "Based on the complexity of this case and the anthrax that was used, Senator Leahy still has lingering questions," the aide said.

Leahy's Republican counterpart on the committee, Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, blasted Mueller for not opening more investigative details for review – and he chided the FBI director about the case rolled out so far against Ivins.

"I've looked over a good bit of the evidence on the anthrax case, just to contrast prosecutors' opinions," Specter said, apparently referring to his and Mueller's former jobs as prosecutors. "And I have grave doubts about sufficiency of evidence for proof beyond a reasonable doubt."

The hearing was held in a room of the Hart Senate Office Building, which was closed from October 2001 to January 2002 after spores from one of the letters, addressed to then-Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., contaminated the structure.

For his part, Mueller did not waver, testifying that, based on his personal review of the evidence, he believed prosecutors could have proved beyond a jury's reasonable doubt that Ivins, alone, perpetrated the deadly mailings. Mueller offered to privately provide the senators with additional technical details about the anthrax used in the mailings.

Ivins, 62, died of suicide July 29 this year. His former lawyers have said they would have won acquittal at trial.

Another committee member, Sen. Charles E. Grassley, R-Iowa, pressed Mueller on three fronts: the FBI's delay in examining access records showing Ivins' late nights and weekends spent in a special biocontainment lab, where he worked with anthrax; the FBI's misplaced focus from 2002 to 2006 on a former Army virologist, Steven J. Hatfill; and an outside review Mueller announced this week, which is to focus on the scientific analyses that traced anthrax from the mailings to Ivins.

Ivins worked as a biodefense scientist at the U.S. Army Medical Research Institute of Infectious Diseases in Frederick, Md.

"There are many unanswered questions the FBI must address before the public can have confidence in the outcome of the case," Grassley said. He called for a "complete accounting of the FBI's evidence," including unveiling of interview summaries, internal investigative memos and grand jury testimony.

As for Hatfill, Grassley said, "Please explain how chasing an innocent man for four years was not a mistake." While Grassley spoke, Hatfill watched silently, with his attorney, from the visitors' section.

In response, Mueller said that although the FBI obtained the access records reflecting the movements of Ivins and other potential suspects early in the investigation, investigators did not analyze the data until years later, after genetic analyses of the anthrax spotlighted Ivins.

The $5.8 million settlement the FBI and Justice Department agreed in June to pay Hatfill was an acknowledgment, Mueller said, that investigative leaks "did harm his reputation. I abhor those leaks."

Write for News
news@dailycollegian.com

If You See News Happen:
413-545-1764
News@dailycollegian.com

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION
Want Fun? Join us, enter by:
Tennis Singles.....9/8
Weekend Softball (M/C)...9/8
Ultimate Frisbee (M/C).....9/9
Volleyball (M/W/C).....9/9
Officials Needed:
Volleyball - Clinic Dates: Sept. 30, Oct 1,2
Call for requirements, times and locations.
www.umass.edu/campusrec

I love fashion.
Frye
Ugg®
Steve Madden
Free People
Citizens of Humanity
7 for all Mankind
ZANNA
...n's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst www.zanna.com

STOP & SHOP
Stop&Shop
Head back to class with Stop & Shop!
Stop & Shop welcomes you back with special bonus coupon savings!
Exclusive Bonus Coupon
Valid Monday 9/15 - Friday 10/31/08
$5 OFF a purchase of $25 or more.
Plus! At Stop & Shop you'll find...
• A delicious variety of fresh prepared foods
• Natural and organic foods
• A Staples® aisle for school supplies
• Personal care needs
• Redbox™ DVD rentals
And so much more! All priced to fit a student's budget!
Hadley
stop&shop.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 2008

"It were best that we not all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces."
- Mark Twain

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Text injustice

The University of Massachusetts holds its students to a stringent academic honesty policy. Before students can step foot onto this campus they are held to high standards.

The University assumes you come to this school with a certain amount of intelligence and you can be reprimanded for acts of academic dishonesty such as we have seen with the UMass Academic Honesty Policy.

Our policy states: "Students are expected to be familiar with . . . the commonly accepted standards of academic integrity; ignorance of such standards is not normally sufficient evidence of lack of intent."

So why has Ken Kahler, director of the UMass bookstore, gotten away with blatant academic dishonesty with just a slap on the wrist? Kahler, as first reported in the Sept. 3 issue of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, was busted posing as the parent of a UMass student in order to obtain the book list for Professor Suzanna Daly's English class.

Essentially, Kahler tricked a professor who ordered their books from a store other than the Textbook Annex. When the Textbook Annex sells the same books as Food For Thought, Amherst Books and Jeffrey Amherst Books, the smaller, local stores suffer.

Professors choose to order their books from these bookstores. Their text selection should not be scooped so that big private businesses can profit.

The tactics Kahler used to get Professor Daly's reading list are inexcusable. UMass employees should be held to the same standards as its students. A stern warning from the vice-president of Follett (which runs the Textbook Annex and UMass Bookstore) is not enough.

According to Nat Herold, the co-owner of Amherst Books, every time the Textbook Annex acquires the textbook list of a professor who ordered from them, Amherst Books loses about 70 percent of the sales they would have made.

Kahler's actions are crippling local businesses that depend on textbook sales. Kahler is a UMass employee, therefore his behavior is representative of this university. Deception and manipulation are not characteristics UMass should want to be known by.

As UMass students we are always hounded by our bad image in the press. Hazing and binge drink, so now there's a greater police presence on campus and stricter alcohol policies in dorms.

What about Kahler? He essentially lied to faculty and cheated local businesses. How come UMass won't remedy that situation?

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

You're killing me Smalls

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Competitve education

John Glaser

Perhaps most damaging to the prospect of a successful future for Americans is the abysmal and declining quality of education that public schools are providing our youth. Yet public discourse on the issue is one of trite and tired rhetoric; more of the same.

Part of why America became such an economic titan was because it offered quality education to its youth, and it was always improving with each generation. Between 1870 and 1950 the average level of education rose by 0.8 years per decade.

In 1890, the average adult had completed about eight years of schooling. By 1900, the average American had 8.8 years and by 1960, it was nearly 14 years. This rising standard of education helped facilitate a rising standard of living and a more even distribution of wealth.

Until, that is, about 1970 when educational attainment and quality began to stagnate. Graduation rates peaked in the late '60s, but have since been declining.

When American students reach the age of 15 and are tested against students from 40 different countries, they place 25th, lagging behind less developed countries like Poland and South Korea, where they spend a fraction of what we do for education.

So what changed? Why the drop off? The educational sluggishness through which we are still suffering took place in tandem with the sweeping monopolization of the school system.

The curriculum at most public schools has been decided upon by bureaus and is churned through teachers largely without variation. This has created educational structures that are resistant to modification and the kind of adjustment that is often needed in order to find ways to effectively communicate with students in a changing environment.

Also, students attend school based on districts, a system which invites mediocrity. Since parents can't choose to send their children to a better school outside their district, there's no incentive for schools to push for improved performance. School administrators and teachers will remain employed there with full rosters every year regardless of performance.

The truth is, if you can afford to live in white, upper–middle class suburbia, then your children's education won't be catastrophic.

Hence the decline and stagnation of education in America is an institutional reality.

Many lament simply that there hasn't been enough allocation of resources and direct funding from local, state and federal governments. Utter nonsense. Per pupil spending has gone up 100 percent in inflation adjusted dollars since 1971.

Every year people complain about a lack of funds, and every year it goes up a bit more and every year predictably results in underperformance. Besides, inner-city schools get vastly overfunded compared with more rural schools and still underperform their underfunded counterparts.

One reason increased funding has been shown to have no effect, if not negative effects, on performance is because school administrators squander the money. They buy new football fields instead of books, state of the art gymnasiums instead of merit-based pay for teachers.

In countries like Belgium, where students consistently outperform American students, school attendance is not based on the district and parents are free to choose to send their kids to better public schools wherever they're located.

The government still funds the education, that is, it is still public education, but the difference is that when schools underperform, parents send their kids elsewhere and the incompetent schools and teachers are consequently out of a job. This creates an incentive to find innovative methods of teaching and to please parents with productive results, i.e. smart kids.

Similar systems, called voucher programs, have been proposed here in the States. Tax payer money is attached to the student – instead of the school – to go to any school they choose.

In 2001, Harvard economist Caroline Hoxby found that Milwaukee's private school vouchers facilitated improvements. "[Public] school principals were allowed to have a lot more autonomy," she said.

Test results at those public schools went up by 7.1 percent in math, 8.4 percent in science and three percent in language. Similar success stories are evident in cities and towns of Florida, California, among the approximate two dozen areas that have tried it, not to mention many other developed nations.

These proposals have often been met with vitriolic resistance, however. Opponents, mostly school administrators and teachers unions, say that competition should not be for children or for education.

A heartfelt plea, but unsupported by the facts given that the uncompetitive nature of our schools today is exactly what has produced such unsatisfactory results.

While the system is monopolized, there is some variation in results when considered nationwide. The truth is, if you can afford to live in white, upper-middle class suburbia, then your children's education won't be catastrophic.

Poorer families, however, who would benefit most from a quality education, are forced to endure 12 years in the worst schools in the country and are thus robbed of any opportunity for upward social mobility that proper schooling would potentiate.

We are literally creating an underclass, bogging them down by government mandate in the name of free and universal education. What irony. The bigger shame is that it's an issue that is practically non-existent on the national political scene and will be ignored at our own peril.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jwglaser@student.umass.edu

UMass missing diversity

Yasmine Farah

In this country, education holds rule to every aspect of living. It is the gateway to a better financial lifestyle. One must be college educated to obtain a decent job.

Education is the ladder of life. The lack of diversity in schools is astonishing. Every school across America is packed with young white boys and girls. One must wonder who created this rule of injustice.

It all goes back to the politics of slavery and oppression. The days when blacks were not allowed to speak or stand because of some white people's fear and insecurity, better called "racism."

But these are different times. It is illegal to discriminate against anyone, unlike in those so called "good old days," when insecure racist people did their business of discrimination in public.

In those days minorities knew who was racist or not unlike today's era where everything is done behind an office desk. How far has the revolution of justice come or are people just being bamboozled?

According to Jonathon Kozol's book, "Shame of the Nation," the education in the urban public schools would make a third world country shine like stars.

The rat infested bamburgers, debilitating buildings, classrooms with no heat and overly packed with countless children are among the endless problems he addressed in the book.

The desire to keep minorities ignorant is very strong among the hearts of conservatives. How does one fight against leaders who traded their sheets for formal wear?

How far has the revolution of justice come or are people just being bamboozled?

It is not uncommon for old political thinkers to find ways to keep minorities limited to just living without the sense of evolving financially. Only 30 percent of UMass students are a minority – Asian, Latino and Black.

It is a very sad notion that a school as big as UMass would have such a small percentage. Nevertheless, UMass is not an exception to politics. Students should not expect leaders of UMass to change this lack of diversity because perhaps this is how they planned it. It does not require an intelligent soul to notice the epidemic at UMass.

A great man by the name of Tupac Amaru Shakur once said, "the power is in the people and politics we address." These words are very powerful in the sense that leaders are nothing without followers.

One can not follow a blind man without his loyal stick just like one can not follow a racist leader without a massive cloud of committing injustice to the community.

The lack of diversity at UMass is a colossal injustice to the minority communities, and it is an injustice to the white students who are being restricted from learning about other cultures for the sake of tolerance.

If education equals decent living, then there should be a balance of equality. Many people are interested in saving people in third world countries; all the while politicians have created third world communities within this country.

This is due to the lack of minorities admitted to colleges such as UMass. Only a fool continually repeats the mistakes of its father. So why do citizens elect these fools of deception?

It is easy for people, especially the elderly, to be conservatives rather than changing any injustice. They often enforce the discrimination. In other words they choose to not know better.

The modern heroes are the rap artist, and for decades their cries were and are dismissed as being gangsters. Rap artists are the product of political mistreatment. They are mostly from a place they call "the hood" in which they sing about in endless songs.

The hoods are communities the black minorities live. It is a place filled with crime and endless poverty. Places like the hood would eventually lose existence if schools like UMass recruited students from those areas.

A sensible man by the name of Thomas Paine once wrote, "Time makes more converts than reason." As time goes by people have stopped questioning things that just don't look right.

One can't expect president of UMass, Dr. Jack Wilson to understand the effect the lack of diversity has on the student body. President Wilson is not a student, therefore he is not living with this epidemic of injustice. UMass is nothing without students. Therefore the voice of the youth is more powerful than the administration.

The student unity of UMass is massively apparent especially in the trial and tribulation of Jason Vassal an African American student who was hatefully targeted by non-UMass members.

Diversity creates tolerance and understanding. The lack of diversity creates incidents like the Vassal case. It is up to the youth to rise and speak against flaws within the administration.

Yasmine Farah is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at yfarah@student.umass.edu.

Anyone who wants to be a can't-hack-it pantywaist who wears their mama's bra, raise your hand . . .

. . . or write for ED/OP

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Everybody get… Most … either … or th…

Say no to new Facebook

Seyi Obasa

Ever since the rolling out of Facebook's new layout, the site has seen a substantial amount of backlash from its users. Mark Zuckerberg, Facebook's creator, has faced many challenges since the foundation of the Web site. He now faces his most difficult challenge yet in appeasing over 100 million users.

Before Facebook officially converted it's over 100 million users to the new layout, users had the option and choice of trying out and sampling the new Facebook. They could revert back to the old, standard layout if they were not satisfied.

During this trial period, over 40 million users experimented with the new format, while 30 million decided to actually embrace and adopt it. As of the beginning of this month, the new Facebook has now become the only Facebook that users have access to.

This has launched a massive amount of backlash among its many users. Various groups like, "1,000,000 Against the new Facebook layout," "How to get old Facebook back," and "We have to save Facebook" have formed.

Facebook's Zuckerburg should learn from the mistakes of old and not force an unpopular and disliked layout on its users

These groups protest and voice discontent regarding the forced adoption of the new layout for its users. Users – through their personal status tickers – have negatively vented about the new format.

Some have even gone as far as threatening to leave the Web site if they are not given the option of returning to the old format. Some groups have even been created that instruct users on browser hacks and modifications to revert back to the older and coveted Facebook.

The new Facebook was intended to streamline many aspects of the site by separating user profiles into various sections and creating tools to make it easier to share information and photos.

Applications that users have the option of adding to their personal profiles are now located at the bottom of a persons home page. This is meant to clear up the Webpage and create more space.

This latest infamous revision is very reminiscent of the new Coke fiasco of the 1980's. The Coca-Cola Corporation intended to revitalize sales for the soft drink because during that time its popularity among consumers started to slip.

Coke decided that it wanted to make a newer rendition of its recipe, similar to the new format of Facebook. The corporation implemented many tests on the new recipe and found that over 200,000 of its testers approved of the recipe.

The problem with these tests is that they were not drawn from a very representative sample of customers; only the most loyal fans of the brand.

The new changes were rolled out in the spring of 1985. Many consumers during this time backlashed against the new formula. It was similar to the opposition that is currently going on with the new Facebook.

Many individuals decided to call the company and some even went as far as resorting to finding the original Coke recipe.

In July of 1985, the old Coke was remanufactured under the alias Coca-Cola Classic. This did not fully allay the problems of the company as they continued without much success to market the new Coke recipe over many years. Eventually the new and failed recipe was phased out leaving us with the original recipe we all know and love today.

Facebook's Zuckerburg should learn from the mistakes of old and not force an unpopular and disliked layout on its users. Facebook's users have made Zuckerburg's brand a household name.

The Facebook users who have popularized online social networking deserve much better than they are getting right now. When the masses gather in numbers, they are very strong and capable of making their voices heard, especially when they are all commonly opposed to a single cause.

Another example of successfully rallying for a common cause is the anti – Vietnam protests of the 1960's, when students were very vocal and successfully drew attention to the draft and the nation's opposition the war.

As Facebook's numerous groups that are opposed to the new format continue to grow almost exponentially, the leaders of the site should hopefully get the message.

In conclusion, although the designers of Facebook had good intentions of improving and streamlining their Web site for their users, they have started to alienate their base by forcing an unpopular and profoundly flawed design on their users.

In order to avoid past blunders made by other corporations such as Coca-Cola, they should halt the transition, and either give their users a choice between the new and old layout or completely do away with its new rendition.

Seyi Obasa is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at lithium19@gmail.com

wins

S.P. Sullivan

…political change would come … does.

…on the ballot. At the state … convention in June, O'Reilly … the vote, well beyond the 15 … for a spot on the primary ballot. … endorsement, but O'Reilly got on …

…earlier this month – a victory in … Kerry refused for months to take … seriously as an opponent – O'Reilly … people's pit bull. He gave the business … established Democratic senator seeking … one of the bluest states in the coun…

…O'Reilly is Massachusetts' Ralph Nader: … unelectable but entirely necessary. … even the Ed O'Reilly for Senate campaign knew John Kerry was going to win. But … despite the play-by-play sports coverage and games for political journalism in this … Kerry's … are not just about winners and losers. … about effecting positive change.

O'Reilly was never about winning elections, though he had to put on a good show. His … focused on grassroots organizing. His … – bolstered by $583,422 O'Reilly lent to his own campaign – is probably what the Kerry … paid for envelopes and paperclips. The O'Reilly campaign couldn't possibly raise … money to unseat John Kerry, but its … organizing efforts and demand for … debates put a fire under Kerry's feet. It … campaign for accountability.

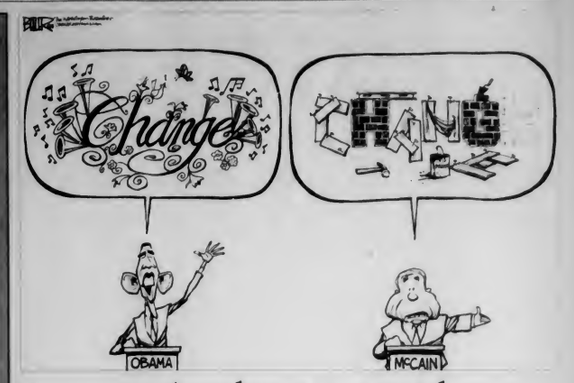
In short, O'Reilly was destined to lose, but … wasn't destined to fail.

O'Reilly sent an email out to all of his supporters shortly after his concession speech. It had a photo taken from his home in Gloucester. "I took this picture outside of my home a while back and, as the moon was setting, the sun was coming up behind me," he wrote. "I was sending this photo along as a symbol of where I feel I am at right now."

Like O'Reilly said, in the picture the moon is setting, early morning, and the sun is coming up, much brighter than the goofy yellow sun that topped the gable of the Amherst office of his underdog campaign.

O'Reilly – waxing poetic in the cheesy, sentimental way that average people often do – was not conceding defeat.

Senator Kerry told his supporters after the primary that he was taking the challenge of Republican Jeffrey K. Beatty of Harwich seriously; that he recognized voter discontent with the status quo.



Kerry didn't even expect O'Reilly to get on the ballot and he ended up taking almost a third of the vote. He forced Kerry to campaign for a job that otherwise would've been his by default. He made Kerry sweat, and he made Kerry listen to the voters of Massachusetts."

By my count, Ed O'Reilly won.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian columnist. He … reached at spsullivn@dailycollegian.com

REMEMBER KID, THERE'S HEREOS AND THERE'S LEGENDS. HEREO'S GET REMEMBERED BUT LEGENDS NEVER DIE.

Thanks for reading ED/OP

Academic steroids

Tina Ortiz

As much as I hate mentioning Facebook in the real world, a recent bumper sticker shed light on the potentially volatile issue of Adderal use on campus.

"Adderal: You Can't Pass Without It!" The words are playful yet the somewhat sour afterthought that lingers in the back of our minds begs to be addressed: is the prescribed medical drug doing more harm than good?

First, it's important to understand how the medical world defines ADD/ADHD. It's essentially a disorder that makes it hard to concentrate, stay organized, focus on tasks and sometimes sit still.

Although the exact causes aren't entirely clear, it has been reported to run in families, suggesting that its cause might be genetic in origin. ADD is diagnosed through behavior analysis and screening tests.

Are all of the things I accomplish when on medication a result of me, or my meds?

But it's hard to say just how many people are affected because of the varying methods in diagnosis and the distinctive symptoms that differ between, males, females, children and adults.

According to the American Psychiatric Association, boys are diagnosed far more than girls and one third of children affected have symptoms that persist into adulthood.

As someone who is affected by the disorder I can attest to the magnitude of the obstacles that come with adult ADD. The medications prescribed to alleviate some of the symptoms, the most popular being Adderall, Concerta and Dexedrine, are considered to be amphetamines or methylphenidates – which have similar side effects.

Those who have ADD report feeling slowed down, focused, calmed and less overwhelmed by tasks at hand after taking the medication. College students today most likely weren't diagnosed as children.

They have had to develop elaborate means of academic survival. The most common I see is compulsive list making and a devout worship of the post-it note. But these tactics can only get you so far.

Two days after transferring all my appointments and assignments into an electronic organizer, I left it in a cab on my way to the doctor's office. It's clear that people with the disorder are at a sizeable disadvantage to others who are naturally organized and focused.

So when people who aren't affected with it take medication, are they creating another uneven playing field that the medication was meant to level? The consensus I get from friends is that we will never know.

I only know what it feels like when I take Adderall. I know that it works, and that people with ADD generally benefit from its usage. As the frequency of diagnosis rises, my friends Neal Williams and Eric McMaster claim that it's one of the easiest drugs obtained on a college campus.

When I spoke to my fellow ADD afflicted kindred, we were mostly in agreement that taking medication isn't something that we saw ourselves doing in our later professional lives.

Eventually we all planned on "growing out of it" and relying on behavioral changes we'd found to be useful to get us through our adult lives. Most seem to view their medications as a leg up that allows them to compete academically with our more organized peers.

Some people just don't need that extra help, and it was no doubt mind boggling to talk with those who don't have ADD, about the issue. I asked them if they had ever taken an introspective gaze inward and asked, "Why is it this hard for me to stay organized?" They confidently replied no.

Many of the people I spoke to postulate that those who don't need medication and take it anyway are merely experiencing a placebo effect. This sparks another scary question where I have mixed opinions.

Are all of the things I accomplish when on medication a result of me, or my meds?

I, among others, was quick to claim that of course it's a result of my hard work. It's not like I take my pills and someone tells me what I need to get done. I do it all on my own.

Unfortunately, not long after, a shameful sentiment of Canseco-like-proportions fell heavy on my conscience. I can't honestly say that I don't owe a portion, how significant I can't say, of my academic success here at UMass to Adderall.

And seeing as it's just so recently becoming a topic of medical interest, it would be ignorant not to assume that people have been living their lives for generations with ADD, but without the need for prescription drugs.

Is the recent rise in diagnosis indicative of something else in our society that finds it morally sound to prescribe speed to children as young as eight?

I mean how organized can an eight-year-old be? And how is the border between having ADHD and just being a normal rambunctious eight-year-old being defined?

One thing is for certain. Amphetamines are drugs not be taken recklessly. And I challenge the government that allows a boy at age eight to be prescribed with medical speed and then brands him with a scarlet letter A, when he is a full blown addict by age 18.

Tina Ortiz is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kortiz@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

TALE OF TWO BOTTLES

Dear Editor

(Re: "Wrong Approach" Letter to the Editor, September 11)

There needs to be some clarification regarding UMass' campaign to fight its party image. I am a certified peer health educator, therefore I have become very familiar with the efforts that various groups on campus have made to reduce high-risk drinking.

First, I would like to point out that just because you and your closest friends didn't participate in the survey that produced these statistics does not mean that these figures are invalid.

If you know anything about statistical analysis and how it works, you would know that for a valid sample size, the entire student population does not need to be surveyed.

These so called "absurd" numbers are based on actual survey data that was gathered from a random sample of students. An e-mail survey is conducted each spring and since there are thousands of undergraduates at this university, it's not likely that you and each of your friends would've been surveyed.

One of the main points of this campaign is to reinforce the positive behaviors of the majority. It is not to say that the minority doesn't exist, but rather to make people aware of the fact that not every student on this campus drinks themselves to oblivion every time they party.

In fact, the majority of students here do not do that. In other words, it may be true that there are some students who drink excessively, but most individuals who were surveyed do not.

Finally, these messages are sponsored by the Campus & Community Coalition to reduce high-risk drinking, not drinking altogether. These posters aren't telling anyone to drink or not to drink, (that would be pointless and a waste of time) but rather they are trying to spread the word that the majority of the students at this university make responsible decisions regarding alcohol.

It's true that this is a different approach than what is usually seen to try to discourage people from using drugs and alcohol, but that doesn't mean that the administration has lied to anyone or that only certain demographic groups on campus had been surveyed.

Before accusing the University of lying, you should do some research on the program that you are critiquing. Had you done that, you would've realized that this is a legitimate campaign.

You should have made a phone call to gather some facts before jumping to the conclusion that the University has made up these numbers out of thin air.

Natasha Rossi
UMass student

GET THE FACTS RIGHT

Dear Editor:

(Re: "A Candidate for 'Change'," Ted Rogers, Editorial, September 16)

If the tone of this letter seems a little biting, it is only because the columnist in question is a repeat offender. I wrote a letter to correct factual errors in a column Mr. Rogers wrote about Ronald Reagan last winter (see "Letters to the Editor" February 14, 2008) but it seems he hasn't learned his lesson.

I have no issue with people expressing their opinions. I have stated many times that I support any person's right to say what they think, no matter whether I agree or not.

However, no matter what standards one uses to judge, there is no excuse for a columnist – even a writer of opinion – using blatant falsehoods as the basis for their work, especially if they do it repeatedly.

A loose connection to the truth is one thing, and artistic license is certainly allowed, but Rogers has gone far beyond these limits on more than one occasion.

Let's get the easy one out of the way. We are not in a recession. Whatever we are going through right now, with the credit crunch, weak dollar and sub-prime mortgage mess, it is not a recession.

Recession is a technical term economists use to describe two or more quarters of negative economic growth, and that is not what is occurring. In fact, while GDP growth was -0.2 percent in the fourth quarter of 2007, it has since rebounded to reach +0.9 percent in the first quarter of 2008, and reached +3.3 percent in the 2nd quarter. Our financial woes certainly make it tough for a lot of people, but that does not mean the economy is in a recession.

However, the real problem with Rogers' factual record this time is his contention that "the bills [McCain] supported are not tough bills to agree with." I might forgive this as a bit of hyperbole except for the fact that Rogers has displayed a pattern of resorting to falsehoods in his writing.

Does he seriously claim that McCain's sponsorship of comprehensive immigration reform did not cost him anything politically? Wasn't McCain's presidential campaign declared "DOA" by all the pundits on both sides after it went down in flames just last summer?

And it wasn't as though he was going against his compatriots, as most Republicans in the Senate were in favor of the bill. No, what McCain did was even crazier than that. He incurred the wrath of the 70 percent or so of the American people who believed that the first priority was to secure the border, and that the McCain/Kennedy approach was not the right course of action.

Look, I understand that Rogers has a column to write, and that research is not high on his list of priorities, but it takes only a few minutes to find this information, and I strongly suggest that he try it sometime. I promise one thing, if he keeps playing fast and loose with the facts I will keep writing these letters to correct him.

Look at it this way, Ted, if you do a bit of research and keep your columns somewhere in the neighborhood of the factual, then you won't have to worry about this historian rhetorically smacking you down every time you print something false.

Ben Rudnick
UMass student

FIX FAMILY HOUSING

Dear Editor:

(Re: "Family housing trouble at UMass," Alyssa Creamer, News, September 11)

After reading the lead article titled "Family housing trouble at UMass" in Thursday's paper (9/11) and noting that UMass cited utility cost increases as the main reason for raising family housing rent, I feel that I have to write this letter.

I am a new resident in the Lincoln Apartments. Soon after I moved in, I discovered a big source of energy waste.

For window covering, Lincoln apartments uses roller shades. These are opaque and made of cheap plastic materials. When pulled down, these shades block out almost all outside light.

When pulled down, these shades cause at least two serious problems:

1) Since they block out outside light, they have to be turned on for illumination, night or day.

2) Outside air can't get through, so even in not so hot days, some residents are forced to turn on air-conditioners.

For privacy, residents pull down those shades. But I hate it when the shades are down. I feel like I am hiding in a bunker, deprived of sunlight and fresh air. And I guess many residents may share my feelings.

Imagine the cost savings we may realize if UMass replaces those roller shades with real blinds. Currently, I have at least two lights on in my living room alone.

One for general lighting and one for studying. I also have an airconditioner which on a hot day runs at least 10 hours nonstop. How much electricity do I consume on a daily basis? In what way am I contributing to global warming? And I am paying for it?

Damn.

Real blinds filter in sunlight and fresh air as well as provide privacy. With real blinds, my electricity use need not be as much as without. And every party will come out a winner, even UMass. I hope the authorities at UMass will give my suggestion serious consideration.

Haijiang Shi
UMass student

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A taste of diversity downtown

New hip-hop event debuts Friday night at Monkey Bar

By Sophia Pastore
Collegian Staff

The town of Amherst seems an unlikely place to attend a hip-hop show, but, this Friday at 11 p.m., The Monkey Bar will host just that.

Accompanying the live music will be DJ Manipulator of Worcester, who will be spinning classic hip-hop, funk, soul and R&B music. The entire event, which is the first in what organizers hope will be a series of similar performances, is 21 plus and requires a five dollar cover charge.

The Problemaddicts, a local group that has been performing in various Northampton venues for two years as well as touring all over the northeast, will be the first to perform this Friday.

According to Jason Vorheez, a member of the Problemaddicts and an organizer of the new live-music series, the event was created to cater to an audience that wishes to experience more genuine music that is homegrown and exists outside of the typical "Top 40" played at most bars. He also hopes to have two or three acts in each show if the event is a popular one.

The Problemaddicts have experienced good turnouts for their shows in the area and have a sizeable local fan-base. Vorheez says that they have seen almost 200 people at past shows, and that he hopes that the numbers for Friday's show will follow that pattern.

They released their most recent album, "The Dark Side of Oz," this past June and have been a success for the group. Numbers have reached 20,000 for record sales and 200,000 for online downloads.

"The Dark Side of Oz" is an album that remixes clips from the film version of "The Wizard of Oz" and Pink Floyd's "The Dark Side of the Moon." The lyricism of the album reflects these sources, making reference to "jam bands," drugs and the "Yellow Brick Road"

Although Vorheez does not see the Problemaddicts as a political group, their recent album seems to contest that statement in some ways. Their song, "If I Only Had Brain Damage," features an imitation George W. Bush speech on the prescription drug industry and its "destructive cycle of addiction."

This song is a direct assault on the business of pharmaceutical companies and their control over the health care industry. The song is a clear political statement, and a good one at that.

Aside from their more serious tracks, the Problemaddicts also show that they have a sense of humor about the hip-hop industry as a whole. Their song, "Rappers are Repetitive" off the album "The First Step," pokes fun at the tendency of big-name rappers and hip-hop artists to write songs that deal only with the degradation of women, money and being excessively drunk or high.

Overall, the group is a collection of talented, passionate people who's main wish appears to be bringing the true soul of hip-hop to an area that does not see much of the genre outside of MTV.

Vorheez hopes to make these shows a regular occurrence and if all goes well with the first few, the event will take place every other Friday.

On Friday, Sept. 26, the Alchemystics, another local hip-hop group will perform as the second installment of this hopeful live music series. This group has a different sound than that of the Problemaddicts and traces its roots to reggae hip-hop and soul.

Both groups and the proposed event series represent a change for downtown Amherst, an area generally lacking in live music and the genre-diversity that this event brings.

The Monkey Bar will host it's first hip-hop night on Friday, September 19th at 11 PM. Cover charge is five dollars and all attendees must be 21 years or older.

Sophia Pastore can be reached at spastore@umass.student.edu.

Local act The Problemaddicts will be performing at the first of a bi-weekly live hip-hop event this Friday at The Monkey Bar in downtown Amherst.

Bloomfield brings 'Laced' to UMass

By Jennifer Cullinane
Collegian Correspondent

There rests a fine line between an absorbing piece of art and a canvas splattered with paint. Common sense dictates that there are standards that separate true artistry from the product of a third-grader's experiment with finger painting.

However, in an artistic era where many artists challenge the conservative conventions that once marked a true talent, these standards are easily clouded.

"Laced," the most-recent collection from New England artist Petula Bloomfield, avoids any such confusion.

Although her work is challenging, thought provoking and boldly in defiance to convention, Bloomfield boasts a developed style that in no way impairs her impact on her audience.

The Sunday opening of Petula Bloomfield's "Laced" at Southwest's Hampden Gallery struck an arresting sight upon first glance. With quasi-Pollack flair and an obvious appreciation for a full palette, Bloomfield's work bleeds with color and life. Her work is invigorated by a blend of the stiff figuring of a still-life and the playfulness of a modern artist's eye.

Setting her work in a self-described "primordial soup," Bloomfield returns the human experience to its original state: total chaos. In her art, Bloomfield challenges the human condition, envisioning the potential wonder of more natural world where man exists in its purest form.

Bloomfield based her most recent collection on the delicate interaction between the physical and emotional identity, expressing this existential dilemma in the form of a mysterious and amorphous figure featured consistently throughout her work.

"I destabilize individual likeness in favor of presence," Bloomfield said on her Web site. "The presence of the undefined figure may stimulate a psychological interplay between the inner and outer environments."

"Laced" is so drawing that it proves a near interactive experience, allowing for her audience to truly consume the colorful and absorbing world she exhibits throughout the collection. The unspecific figure featured consistently throughout "Laced" allows for an easily relatable center for her viewer.

Her work, a suite of contrasts, juxtaposes color, line and shape, producing a haven of entropy where man both relishes in and rebels against the ties that bind.

"The technique of using multiple overlaying layers of paint attempts to reveal both the transparent and opaque nature of the physical, emotional and spiritual experience of being human," said Bloomfield on her Web site.

With aim to reach beyond mere sensory expression, Bloomfield depicts the provoking nature of human emotion. Expressing the sheer stimulation of existence, Bloomfield describes her collection as one where "shadowy, faceless, androgynous forms emerge from densely layered surfaces upon which the kinetic energy of emotions is superimposed."

Inspired by the disconnect that is rampant in our Internet age, Bloomfield's work serves to illustrate the contrast between our private emotions and our public selves.

"The paintings can be adversarial, violent and vulnerable at the same time," said Bloomfield on her website. Refusing to limit the expression in her work to any singular emotion, Bloomfield gauges the entirety of the human emotional spectrum.

An alumna of the University of Massachusetts, Bloomfield's exhibit will be displayed until Oct. 19. Admittance to the exhibit is free and many of her pieces are currently available for purchase. The Hampden Gallery is open Monday through Thursday from noon to 6 p.m. and Sunday from 3 to 5 p.m.

Jennifer Cullinane can be reached at jcullina@student.umass.edu

Celebrity sex tapes stirring interest, legal battles

By Harriet Ryan
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — The callers are usually nervous, cagey about their identities and vague when it comes to facts, but to the pornography companies on the other end of the telephone, their message is easy to decipher. I know of a celebrity sex tape and I want money.

"Not a week goes by that we don't get at least five calls," said Steven Hirsch, co-chairman of Vivid Entertainment Group, the country's leading adult film producer.

Actor Verne Troyer's summer-long legal battle over a sex tape put a spotlight on the market. The result has been a surge of inquiries to people such as Kevin Blatt, a Web publicist who got the title "celebrity sex-tape broker" for his involvement in a Paris Hilton video.

"I've had four tapes shopped to me in the past two weeks. B-list, C-list stuff," Blatt said.

Those feeling out the market are most often former lovers or friends, relatives or roommates. With video camera prices falling and the definition of "celebrity" expanding to accommodate each new reality TV show, there seems to be no shortage of explicit tapes of recognizable people.

In the end, however, only a small fraction of the videos touted in phone calls or described in e-mails will ever be screened by distributors. A smaller percentage still will be boxed and sold to the public.

Vivid is the established leader in celebrity sex tapes, having marketed videos of Pam Anderson and Tommy Lee, Kim Kardashian and, most recently, one purporting to show Jimi Hendrix with two groupies. But in the company's 24-year history, it has put out just nine celebrity sex tapes, Hirsch said.

SugarDVD, the distribution company sued by Troyer, has yet to buy a celebrity sex tape despite dalliances with several sellers.

The low yield is the result of a number of factors. Callers often drop off the radar once a company suggests a screening. Sometimes sellers exaggerate what they have. In other cases, companies decide the person in the tape is not famous enough.

"We're very picky. We definitely pass on a lot," Hirsch said.

But nothing limits what tapes end up for sale more than the law. Federal and state statutes are virtually ironclad when it comes to the commercial distribution of tapes of private sexual encounters. Without the express permission of all participants, the sales violate rights of privacy and publicity and, in some cases, infringe on copyrights.

"If you don't have full model releases and documents on the movie, you just don't market it," said Allan Gelbard, a Los Angeles attorney who has a client roster of adult companies.

He said the likelihood of a big civil judgment discourages distributors from moving forward without consent, no matter how famous the subject.

"It might end up costing you more than you earn on the movie. So what's the point?"

See TAPES on page 9

YouTube redfines drug abuse policy

By David Sarno
Los Angeles Times

YouTube has changed its "community guidelines," and among the changes handed down is a prohibition on videos containing "drug abuse." The phrase, like other parts of YouTube's rule set, came with no context, elucidation, examples or anything else that would help users figure out what "abuse" might actually mean in practice.

Of course, the subjectivity of YouTube's language is deliberate. If you've ever moderated a busy Internet site, a task that can require you to make hundreds of judgment calls an hour, you know there's no time to ponder every yea or nay – you just gotta go with your gut.

YouTube, now home to tens of millions of videos, calls its enforcement approach a matter of common sense and partly relies on its users to flag material they consider questionable.

"It's a combination of users policing the site and (the working of) our proprietary tools and technology that review videos 24 hours a day," Chris Dale, a YouTube spokesman, said in an interview. "If we come across content that does violate those guidelines as we clearly laid them out, we'll take them down."

"Clearly" is a bit of an overstatement. YouTube keeps the details of its policy vague so it has the wide latitude it needs to police its site without the need to explain every decision. The trouble is, when enforcement decisions are not transparent, they start to look unfair and inconsistent. Users may have little sense of the reasoning (or lack thereof) that led to their video being yanked.

Take the recently popular videos about the drug salvia, which The New York Times reported on last week – and which the tech-gossip bling Valleywag suggested might be purged under the new rule. They're a good example of an enforcement gray area.

The hallucinogenic herb is still legal in most of the United States, and its effects have not yet been thoroughly studied, let alone proved harmful. As such, it's not clear who decides whether smoking this mint-family plant counts as "drug abuse" or just use. And YouTube won't say.

The case with booze is fuzzy too. The prohibition of "underage drinking" suggests that of-age drinking is acceptable, no matter how abuse-like that drinking looks. OK. But alcohol is a drug, so that means YouTube does not necessarily consider drinking "drug abuse." Slippery slope?

YouTube will also have to decide how to approach the sticky wicket of marijuana videos, in which it can be impossible to tell if the smoker has a state-sanctioned prescription, lives in a country where the activity is legal or is even smoking pot rather than, say, banana peel.

Not until drug videos do begin disappearing will we be able to tell if there's any rhyme or reason to the application of the rule announced last week. But as far as a drug purge goes, count me as a skeptic.

I doubt if YouTube tries to smoke out every last pot, salvia and alcohol video from its giant database. It'd be too much work, and with all that stuff already in its system, I doubt YouTube would have the motivation anyway.

Rouse takes listeners on seasonal tour

By Michelle Fredette
Collegian Correspondent

Groups of people chattered leisurely at the Iron Horse Music Hall Tuesday night, casually sipping drinks as singer-songwriter Josh Rouse took the stage. Titled "An Evening with Josh Rouse," the show took a barebones approach to live music, stripping it of the overproduction so common today.

The venue was sparsely filled. While Rouse has achieved moderate success, he is more concerned with the music than celebrity. His crooked tie and mismatched rolled up shirtsleeves attest to this. He wasn't trying to impress anyone, just trying to make great music.

The moment the 35-year-old approached the microphone, show-goers hushed and turned their chairs to the stage so they could sit back and absorb the music. Drinks lay forgotten and food was left untouched while all focused their complete attention on the quiet melodies of the performer.

With Rouse on the guitar and only a pianist to accompany him, the music was stripped to its barest form. There were a few sour notes in the first portion of the concert, but they didn't detract from the show. Rather, they emphasized the raw naturalness of Rouse's approach.

A few flubbed lyrics in "Summertime" early on in the show further added to the unedited, straightforward tone of the evening. Both Rouse and audience laughed, breaking down the walls between performer and spectators.

The song choice throughout the evening led listeners on a journey through the passing seasons of the year.

The performance was a smattering of old and new, drawing primarily from four albums: "1972," "Nashville," "Subtitulo," and his latest, "Country Mouse, City House." The seamlessness in which he mixed past works into one performance illustrates Rouse's ability to rework himself without straying from his particular sound.

Rouse opened the night by launching into the upbeat and summery "Comeback Tight Therapy I." Toes tapped and heads nodded ever so slightly as he strummed. He passed quickly through "It Looks Like Love," "Summertime," and "Lemon Tree," leaving a feeling of longing hovering in the air.

The songs were ephemeral in their briefness. They seemed to conclude just as they were starting, similar to the summer inevitably passing by too quickly. Yet the songs blended in such a way as to almost seem like one song broken into different movements.

"Sweetie" continued the languorous summer feeling of lounging by pools and dozing in sunshine, but Rouse moved into a subtler autumn feeling with the smooth and leisurely "1972." He kept the mood of the room from getting too wintry with the energetic "Feeling No Pain" and the quick rhythm of "Quiet Town."

After performing "Streetlights," Rouse left the stage for a brief intermission, as he described it, he was "like a hotel band." It was an apt description because the moment he left, people went back to their earlier conversations.

See ROUSE on page 9

Josh Rouse went back to the basics during Tuesday's performance at Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton.

Simplified set wins over sparse crowd

ROUSE from page 8

and drinks, not discussing the show.

Josh Rouse is not one to draw your typical college crowd of impatient youths. Even after Rouse returned to the stage, the side conversations did not subside until he had tuned and begun the first chords of "Michigan."

The song continued the descent from upbeat songs about summer living to more tender subjects, befitting of a brisk autumn day.

Issues of loneliness, wanderlust and teenage angst filled the next few choices, such as "Hollywood Bass Player," "Nice to Fit In" and "God, Please Let Me Go Back."

The absence of the song's usual banjo twang made its lyrics all the more earnest. Rouse's choice of a simplified set truly set the tone of the night. The gentle acoustic guitar was especially haunting in the second half's more pensive songs.

Selecting three songs from his 2005 album "Nashville" to close the set, Rouse showed a great understanding of how to play a concert with the proper movement. When he opened the floor for requests, the three ending songs were shouted out, to which Rouse replied with a smile, "Those are coming later. I shouldn't have asked for requests."

The wintry "My Love Has Gone," "It's the Nighttime" and "Sad Eyes" that he finally played brought a tone of finality that would have been missing if they had been played earlier.

The encore choices of "Winter in the Hampions" and "Love Vibration" uplifted and brought a sense of hope back after the melancholy "Sad Eyes."

It is only fitting that "An Evening with Josh Rouse" would take one on a journey of sorts. So much of his life was spent being uprooted and traveling that he now uses his music to uproot the listener as well.

Michelle Fredette can be reached at mfredett@student.umass.edu.

Josh Rouse played a mixture of old and new during a diverse and barebones performance Tuesday.

'Mini-Me' latest celebrity caught on tape

Fast, out-of-court settlements common trend in recent cases

TAPES from page 8

Troyer, best known for his role as Mini-Me in the Austin Powers movies, shut down his ex-girlfriend's attempts to sell their video within a few days by filing a $20-million federal lawsuit that made clear he did not want it made public. His attorney alleged that the woman, Ranae Shrider, continued hawking the tape, but the suit and a restraining order made it untouchable in the industry.

"You can't really do anything with it other than use it for your own private use. That's the extent of its value if you do not have consent," said Paul Berra, one of the attorneys who represented Colin Farrell in his suit against a former girlfriend trying to find a buyer for their sex tape. The actor got an injunction blocking sale of the tape.

The legal need for permissions is frequently news to sellers who often believe they own the video because they owned the camera or the residence where it was shot. Many have dollar signs in their eyes, having heard about big profits in sex tapes. (Vivid says the Anderson-Lee tape, its most successful, brought in "several million" dollars.)

"They are just very excited about the prospect of money, but they learn very quickly that they need consent," said Angie Hoover, a SugarDVD employee who speaks to people trying to find out how much they can get for tapes.

The public's confusion may be based on the legal twists and turns in the most infamous and bestselling sex tapes. Hilton, Kardashian and Anderson each filed suits to stop release of tapes. Later, they reached confidential settlements with distributors that allowed the sales.

Attorneys who have worked on sex-tape cases say some people settle because they have run out of money for legal fees. Others see their video already widely available on free sites or file-sharing networks online and decide fighting is pointless.

But many say it is an open secret in the industry that some celebrities leak their own sex tapes to help their careers.

"There's a lot of semi-covert permissions that are given with a wink, wink, nudge, nudge," Gelbard said.

Troyer's attorney, Edwin McPherson, who has also represented rockers Perry Farrell, Bret Michaels and Fred Durst in sex-tape suits, said that in two or three of the cases, a distributor approached him with a proposal for "fake litigation."

The celebrity would sue for invasion of privacy and then settle a short time later, the lawyer said.

"They say, 'Everybody gets paid, but your client doesn't look like they're exploiting themselves,'" McPherson recalled.

He turned down the offers.

Even when a celebrity objects and the tape is doomed commercially, it still has some worth as a publicity vehicle. After Hilton sued to stop distribution of a sex tape in 2003, Blatt appeared on "The Howard Stern Show" on behalf of an adult Web site involved in the case.

The site's owners were legally barred from selling the tape and, in fact, had returned the tape to Hilton, but they offered to pay Blatt for every time the site's name went out over the air, he recalled.

He managed to mention the URL 12 times and get Stern to repeat it nine times in an eight-minute radio appearance, boosting Web traffic.

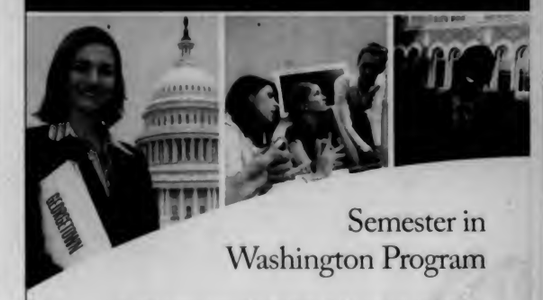
At smaller distributors, like SugarDVD, the video is almost beside the point.

"We can get 80 to 85 percent [of the publicity] without the tape," said Chief Executive Jax Smith.

After TMZ.com reported that SugarDVD had screened the Troyer tape and was preparing an offer, the company put a statement on its web site describing the tape and asking the actor to grant permission.

When Troyer filed suit, the company's name made it into newspapers from Missouri to Australia and got 15,000 mentions online, according to a Google search.

"Many of the places would never carry adult banner ads or other advertising, but they'll use us in a story," Smith said.



Troyer's attorney said it was frustrating to see an invasion of his client's privacy become a public-relations vehicle.

"It's unfortunate. We really don't want to help them," he said.

Vern Troyer is currently engaged in a legal battle over the unauthorized release of his sex tape. Troyer is the latest in a long line of celebrities to press charges over similar allegations.

GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY

Semester in Washington Program

Get Washington internship experience and study at Georgetown.

Spend an exciting semester as an intern in the nation's capital while living and studying with achievers from around the world at Georgetown University. Make invaluable connections and get internship experience in a Washington, DC, area corporation, firm, government agency, nonprofit organization, or congressional office. You can earn up to 15 academic credits in the spring program, or 6 credits in the summer program.

Study and intern in one of six academic programs:

- American Politics and Public Affairs
- Community Development and Social Change
- Health Care Administration and Policy
- International Affairs
- Law and Society
- Religion and Politics

Immerse yourself in Washington, learn from expert Georgetown faculty, and empower yourself for academic and professional success.

Spring Dates: January 6 - May 9, 2009 | Summer Dates: June 1 - August 7, 2009

APPLY TODAY

Visit scs.georgetown.edu/washington or call 202.687.8200

Go big this year with a College Season Pass at Killington Resort.

COLLEGE SEASON PASS only $329*

*When you purchase by 10/31/2008.

With more than 100 après ski and restaurant options, the famous Killington Road nightlife, and a mountain known for its pipe and parks, including the new Burton Stash, Killington is "IT" for college students this winter. The College Pass is valid for all full-time undergraduate and graduate students all season with no blackout dates (certain requirements apply).

Does not include applicable taxes. Restrictions apply. Go to www.killington.com for complete details.

BUY NOW! 800.621.MTNS WWW.KILLINGTON.COM Killington VERMONT

UM looks to rebound from tough road trip

M. SOCCER from page 14

execute their strategy. He is the veteran of the defense, and it will be his job to insure that less experienced players like Stuart Thomson and Tony Bassett don't get caught making mistakes against what he feels is a big, physical team.

"They like to play long and we have to be aware that we don't give up silly fouls around the box," Brown said.

It has been a tough season for UMass defensively. The Minutemen are close to their opponents in nearly every major statistical category including goals (6), shots (71-70), shot percentage (.085-.086) and shots on goal (35-32). For a team that wants to dominate defensively and prevent opponents from getting chances, UMass needs to see those numbers become more lopsided in its favor.

Should the Minutemen defense give up a chance, it will be up to goalkeeper Zack Simmons to keep the ball out of the net and his team in the game. He has gotten off to shaky start, managing one shutout this season, but Simmons is regarded as one of the top goalkeepers in the nation and should continue providing a stable presence in the net.

Simmons feels this game will be important because the team needs a win against a good team to bounce back after last week's struggles in Virginia. He mentioned that the team was starting to get its legs back in practice and will be ready for the challenge.

The Wildcats have been stingy, recording four shutouts while allowing two goals in the six games they have played. UNH takes 14.5 shots per game while allowing only 8.5 against, although it has allowed more corners kicks (27) than it has taken (20).

Koch feels that his team will have a good chance to win, but only if the Minutemen play well and don't make any errors around their own goal.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

Junior Mark DeSantis and the Minutemen have struggled early in the season on the road, but they hope it will help them in their road games in conference play later in the season.

Early season road games prepare UMass for A-10 play

Minutemen struggle early in road contests

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Being on the road is never an advantage for a team, but for the Massachusetts men's soccer team that is especially true.

The Minutemen (2-2-1) are heading to New Hampshire on Saturday to take on the Wildcats (4-0-2). This will be their fifth road game of the season that began on Aug. 29. Last weekend they traveled to Virginia, and lost, 1-0, to Old Dominion on Friday, but tied William & Mary, 2-2, on Sunday.

"Fans aren't rooting for you. You are in unfamiliar territory. The atmosphere is not in your favor," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "Playing on the road is hard to do, but sometimes it can also be good to get in a different atmosphere."

Travel time is a central concern with away games. The Minutemen will leave Saturday morning to play their 7 p.m. game that night.

"You've got to travel two and a half hours to get there," Koch said. "It can get you a little extra fatigued that you wouldn't normally have. It's very tough to go on the road and play on the same day you travel – it's a lot easier if you go the night before.

"If you stay over night, it's a lot easier to focus, to be well rested, but [traveling is] what you have to do – you can't worry about it, you can't change it."

On the season, UMass has won two games. The first was away against Boston University (Aug. 31), the second vs. Siena (Sept. 6) at Rudd Field. Last season the Minutemen were 9-1 at home and have a 38-16-5 record since Rudd Field opened in 2002, racking up 20 shutouts and outscoring their opponents 113-72.

Since last season, the Minutemen are 9-9-1 on the road, and they are once again this weekend, hoping to improve their play before Atlantic 10 Conference games begin on Oct. 12.

"We learned a lot on this last trip [to Virginia] from some of the mistakes that were made," Koch said. "Now when we get on the road for the conference, the only thing we'll be focusing on is the game because we'll have everything else taken care of."

The stretch of away games will prepare the Minutemen for the second half of the season, which Koch acknowledges is the most important part. The Minutemen play nine games against conference opponents and they have need to win six of them to advance to the A-10 Tournament. Qualifying for the A-10 Tournament is the team's goal for the season.

"We are playing so many [games] on the road because we know we have more conference games on the road," Koch said. "We want to feel comfortable and iron out the little kinks in our travel organization [before the A-10s begin]."

Once conference games begin, UMass will play five of nine games away from 'Fort Rudd.' Having an early schedule that lacks home games will help the Minutemen once October games begin, with Saturday being another test to see if they can improve their road record.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com

Midfielder Ben Arikian has been a big contributor on the Minutemen's offense. The sophomore is tied for second on the team in points (3), first in shots taken (13) and tied for second in goals (1) including one game winner.

Check out the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Sports Blog at www.blog.masslive.com/dailycollegiansports/

STUDENT DISCOUNT!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.org
413-256-4071
Best 9 Hole Course In Western Mass
Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63
Free Hotdog when you mention this ad!
Walk on anytime! No Tee Times Necessary!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst

Boston University International Programs
Argentina
Australia
China
Ecuador
England
France
Germany
Guatemala
Ireland
Israel
Italy
Mexico
Morocco
New Zealand
Niger
Peru
Senegal
Spain
Switzerland
USA
This is BU. This could be you.
Meet with Theresa Leary and find out how you can study abroad with Boston University International Programs.
Education Abroad Fair
Monday, September 22nd
4 p.m. - 6 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
Internships
Liberal Arts
Language
Science Engineering
www.bu.edu/abroad
BOSTON UNIVERSITY

Cruz, Horne fill holes left by graduation

OFFENSE from page 14

junior Victor Cruz not only set career highs, but also set UMass records.

Cruz, who only had one career reception prior to this season, tied J.J. Moore and Brandon London for the most receptions in a game (13), broke Adrian Zullo's record for most receiving yards in a game with 262 (Zullo had 210 in 1999) and Cruz demolished the mark for most receiving yards in a half with 248. Eleven of Cruz's 13 receptions came in the second half, including two for touchdowns.

But possibly the most impressive player on offense, as expected, has been Coen. The quarterback is off to his best three-game start to a season in his career. Despite throwing for 92 yards in Week 1, he has thrown for 826 yards and nine touchdowns, both highs for his career through three games. The signal caller also has a 166.4 quarterback rating, more than eight points higher than his career record.

In addition to moving the ball, he is also protecting it. The Walter Payton Award Candidate has thrown three interceptions through as many games for the past two years, but has only thrown one through three games this year. Coen has had four fumbles, but has lost just one of them.

More importantly Coen has led the team to success in critical points of the game. The Minutemen's offense is 16-of-36 on third-down conversions, and even better at 3-of-4 in fourth-down conversions.

Two of UMass' fourth-down conversions, including a perfectly executed option play by Coen, came on its last drive against Holy Cross and led to Armando Cuko's game-winning field goal.

The offense will be counted on this coming week when the Minutemen travel to Lubbock, Texas to face the Football Bowl Subdivisions top offensive team and the USA Today's Coaches Poll No. 10 team, Texas Tech. UMass may find itself looking to the offense to dig it out of a hole if the defense fails to perform.

With players such as Cruz and Nelson filling holes on offense to go with Coen's great play, there should be no doubts of whether they can do it or not anymore.

Jeffrey R. Larrard can be reached at jlarrard@student.umass.edu

Quarterback Liam Coen has had plenty of help on offense in the first three weeks of the season. Wide outs Jeremy Horne and Victor Cruz have both had 150-yard receiving games in the past two weeks, becoming two of Coen's favorite targets.

Maroon and White set to face NCAA's No. 1 offense in Harrell and Crabtree

FOOTBALL from page 14

The Red Raiders threw for over 500 yards as a team (which included five touchdowns) and ran for almost 180.

Texas Tech isn't just a one-sided team, its defense is anything but a pushover. In the Red Raiders' first three games, they have forced nine interceptions while only allowing 501 points.

Brown is sticking to his game plan, despite the strength of the Texas Tech defense. They plan to mix up some of the play calling depending on what style of defense the Red Raiders employ.

UMass will have its hands full.

The Minutemen still sports some of the best defensive backs in the Football Championship Subdivision despite their poor showing the last two games.

Brown knows that pressure on Harrell and adjusting the defensive packages occasionally throughout the game is important.

"Execution against these guys is going to be paramount," Brown said. "We need to make sure that [Harrell] doesn't get comfortable with a couple different looks or [he'll] just start picking us apart.

"We have to mix pressure with coverage and just try to keep them guessing a little bit, kind of like we did with [former Boston College quarterback] Matt Ryan a year ago."

On offense the Minutemen have to deal with the uncertainty that starting center Sean Calicchio might not start. Calicchio left last week's game against James Madison with a sprained ankle. UMass will turn the job over to John Ilhe, if Calicchio can't play.

If UMass hopes to stay in the game, they are going to have to limit the amount of damage quarterback Brett Arnold games onto the field. That will be running back Tony Nelson and quarterback Liam Coen's job. In the Minutemen's last two games, the UMass offense started slowly.

UMass cornerback Courtney Robinson stresses how important it is to shy away from that pattern and to come out strong immediately at kickoff.

"We have to come out focused from the start and just play as a group and just come out with no missed tackles, know our fundamentals and get our techniques down," Robinson said.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com

Want to write for sports?
Contact Eli Rosenswaike at
sports@dailycollegian.com

Chili Champion for Rent?
Just in case the "I'm starting an online company" idea doesn't pan out.
Now is a perfect time to take the GRE Test for grad school. Your scores are good for 5 years—giving you plenty of time to try a few things first. Think of it as having an insurance policy for your future.
Text GRE17 to 78473 for a sneak peek at the practice questions.
gradtestGRE.com
ETS. GRE.
Standard rates apply. Copyright © 2008 by Educational Testing Service. All rights reserved. ETS, the ETS logo, and GRE are registered trademarks of Educational Testing Service (ETS).

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

START COMMANDING ATTENTION.
START OUT ON TOP.
START RAISING THE BAR.
START HIGHER
START ONE STEP AHEAD.
START LEADING FROM DAY ONE.
START STRONG.
There's strong. Then there's Army Strong. If you want to be a leader in life, joining Army ROTC in college is the strongest way to start. Army ROTC provides hands-on leadership development to round out your college studies. Plus you can earn a full-tuition, merit-based scholarship. After graduation, you'll begin your career as an Army Officer. With a start like that, there's no limit to what you can achieve.
ARMY ROTC
U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.
Start Strong with UMASS Army ROTC. Visit us in Bldg 79, next to Boyden Gym, or contact Captain Jim Laudato at 978-399-3696 or jlaudato@acad.umass.edu for more information.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Eric the Red.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | | 8 | | | | |
| 9 | | | | | 4 | | 7 | 6 |
| | 6 | 2 | 5 | | | 9 | | 3 |
| 2 | 4 | | | | | | | |
| | | 7 | 1 | | 2 | 6 | | |
| | | | | | | | 4 | 7 |
| 7 | | 9 | | | 5 | 8 | 6 | |
| 3 | 1 | | 8 | | | | | 5 |
| | | | | 7 | | | | |

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"As long as you derive inner help and comfort from anything, keep it."

- Mahatma Gandhi

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

BROTHERS WATT BY WILL WILSON

BLISS BY HARRY BLISS

| ACROSS | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | Had the nerve | 56 | Powerful sphere |
| 6 | Planted, as grass | 58 | Del Rio of films |
| 10 | Brewery supply | 59 | Hairdressers |
| 14 | Last of Scarlett | 64 | Shootout signal |
| 15 | Hatcher or Garr | 65 | For certain |
| 16 | Surface size | 67 | Westerns actor Murphy |
| 17 | God of thunder | 68 | James __ Jones |
| 18 | __ the Red | 69 | Busboy's tote |
| 19 | Fictioneer | 70 | Bacon unit |
| 20 | Former NY Met Len | 71 | Hair colorings |
| 22 | Most chivalrous | 72 | Gets the point |
| 24 | Actor Mineo | 73 | Glossy |
| 25 | Spectacles | | |
| 26 | Fill too tightly | | DOWN |
| 30 | Practices recycling | 1 | Jimmie of "The Mickey Mouse Club" |
| 32 | Top-drawer | 2 | Crow's-nest cry |
| 33 | Sea eagle | 3 | Relative status |
| 34 | Diamond and Lagerlof | 4 | Historic periods |
| 39 | Melodies | 5 | Pub pastime |
| 41 | Zany Caesar | 6 | Thieves |
| 43 | Handed out cards | 7 | "__ the land of the free..." |
| 44 | __ of Liberty | 8 | Twists forcibly |
| 46 | Alien or Curry | 9 | Kidman and Bobek |
| 48 | Columnist Bombeck | 10 | Shopping centers |
| 49 | Covered with lawn | 11 | Zodiac sign |
| 51 | Nolan or Meg | 12 | Tenant's contract |
| 52 | Crocheted coverlets | 13 | Topless little pies |
| | | 21 | Very unusual |
| | | 23 | Stationed |
| | | 26 | Andrew Lloyd Webber play |
| | | 27 | Embarrassing defeat |
| | | 28 | __ May Wong |
| | | 29 | Track gathering |
| | | 31 | Military groups |
| | | 35 | Malicious look |
| | | 36 | Lamb owner |
| | | 37 | __ mater |
| | | 38 | Comic Laurel |
| | | 40 | Sweetener |
| | | 42 | Breaks rules |
| | | 45 | Borgnine and Truex |
| | | 47 | Gore Vidal's Breckinridge |
| | | 50 | Guarantee |
| | | 52 | Tallied |
| | | 53 | Raid |
| | | 54 | Angry gaze |
| | | 55 | Laughs heartily |
| | | 57 | Blatant self-assurance |
| | | 60 | Bushwa! |
| | | 61 | Actress Falco |
| | | 62 | Chop into tiny pieces |
| | | 63 | Look for |
| | | 66 | "Norma __" |

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

amherst cinema
Fri Sep 12 - Thu Sep 18
TELL NO ONE 2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30
Elegy 2 15 4 45 7 15 9 45
Vicky Cristina Barcelona 2:45 6:00 7:30 10:00
28 Amity St Downtown Amherst 413 253 2547 www.amherstcinema.org

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Sep 5 - Thu Sep 11
American Teen 2:30 4:45 + 12pm Sat & Sun
MAN ON WIRE 7:15 9:30
Vicky Cristina Barcelona 3:00 5:15 7:45 9:45 + 12:30pm Sat & Sun & 10:15am Wed
27 Pleasant St Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

ATKINS FARMS
Country Market
1149 West Street, Amherst, MA 01002
www.atkinsfarms.com

Now Hiring

For The Fall & Holiday Seasons
Part-time Sales Associates and Production Assistants

All positions require evening, weekend and holiday availability.

Customer service and food handling experience preferred.

Come in to apply or contact Kelly at 253-9528 or kely@atkinsfarms.com

(Employment opportunities are also available on our website.)

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
If you can't take the music, get the hell out of the disco.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Today will teach you to never procrastinate going to the bathroom.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Daughtry? Really?

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You'll never get a job illustrating for Disney if you keep spending your time drawing filth in men's room stalls.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Today you will meet someone who is truly beautiful on the inside, who possesses wonderful, rainbow-like organs.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
I'll admit nothing is more American than killing your own dinner, but squirrel meat is a bit stringy.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Q: Life is best when you are _____.

A) Naive B) Normal C) Numb D) Naked

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Stop standing around and just ask already: "Where do you keep the grizzly bear?"

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Imagine a day without corn syrup. Is this the future you want for your children and your children's children?

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
If the person who lives next door keeps interrupting you with his loud music, be sure to interrupt them with your loud crying.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Why doesn't the Chancellor return my e-mails?

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Your pants are on fire again...But this time you're not caught lying, its just a urinary tract infection.

Yee-Haw

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Weekends. Apply at D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required: experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

SERVICES

Condom Break? Get EC, Emergency Contraception prevents unintended pregancies up to 5 days after unprotected sex. Tapestry Health 27 Pray Street, Amherst 413-548-9992 Tapestryhealth.org

EMPLOYMENT

COLLEGE PRO- I could spend my summer sitting on the couch playing video games. Or I could take initiative, work hard, run my own business, and plan for my future. Real Life. Right Now. College Pro. 888-277-7962 www.CollegePro.com VISIT our Info. Session: Campus Center-Wed &Thursday 9/17 and 9/18 Room 805-09 -8th Floor 10am,11am,12pm,1pm, 2pm,3pm

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! $10/hr for participating in listening experiments. English must be your first language. 413-545-6837 Voicemail Phonetics_Lab@linguist.umass.edu

FOR RENT

2 bedroom plus den in duplex house $950. Also 3 bedroom townhouse two floor unit $1215. Both near bus stop. LaDonna @ 413-665-2203

ANNOUNCEMENT

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S. Padre, Florida. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Montreal Weekends From $99. Complete RoundTrip, Motorcoach. 3 days, 2 nights. Hotel Downtown. For Details MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIEDS...

(413) 545 - 3500

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Defense to be tested

Minutemen face FBS No. 10 Texas Tech

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When the No. 9 Massachusetts football team travels to Lubbock, Texas this Saturday to play Texas Tech, it's going to have to start playing as a team from the beginning and not waiting to try and pull off a come-from-behind win.

The Red Raiders, who are No. 10 (in the nation, currently boast one of the nation's most potent offenses, putting up scores of 49, 35 and 43 points in their first three games.

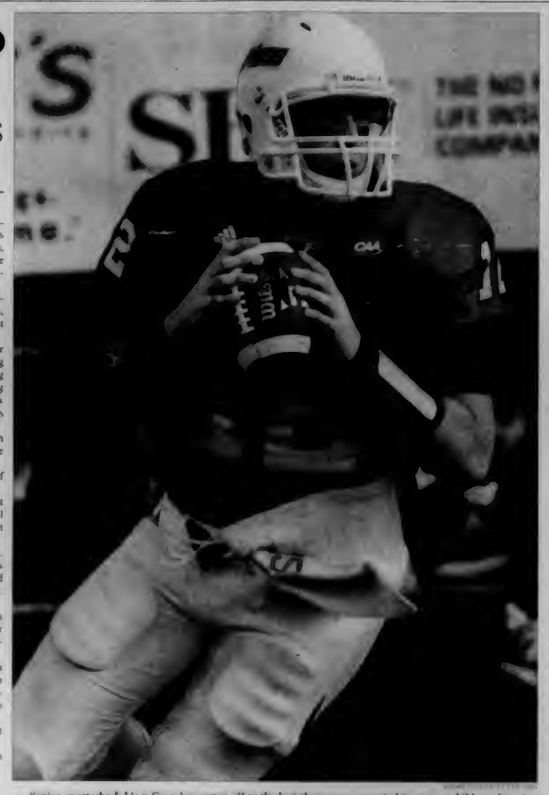
The man behind center for the Red Raiders is senior Graham Harrell. The quarterback had an outstanding 2007 campaign, throwing for over 5,500 yards along with 48 touchdowns. Texas Tech has an overwhelming tendency to throw the ball, but when your quarterback throws that many times with only 14 interceptions, it's justifiable.

He was also the recipient of the Sammy Baugh Trophy, which is awarded to the nation's top collegiate passer.

Fortunately for Harrell, he is also throwing to one of the nation's top wide receivers.

Being a redshirt sophomore, you would think that the player is just getting the feel for the collegiate level and not making a huge impact on the field. It's the exact opposite when you're talking about Michael Crabtree.

The wide out has already gained national attention. One of collegiate football's most prolific receivers, was a unanimous first-team All-American and was awarded both the Paul Warfield and Biletnikoff awards last year. Both of are given to the nation's best wide out.



In 2007, Crabtree gained 1,962 yards on 134 catches and scored 22 touchdowns. This year, the Red Raider already has almost 400 yards receiving and five touchdowns.

"I think [going up against Harrell and Crabtree] is a great challenge for our secondary," UMass coach Don Brown said. "This is a challenge they have been looking forward to, and as a group we're going to have to step up and defend him.

"[Texas Tech] likes to put [Crabtree] in different positions, we just have to be ready for that."

The Red Raiders are coming off an impressive win on both sides of the ball, routing Southern Methodist, 43-7.

See FOOTBALL on page 11

Senior quarterback Liam Coen has gotten off to the best three-game start in his career at UMass, throwing for 826 yards and nine touchdowns while only throwing one interception.

Questions no longer exist about offense

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts football team may have its issues on defense, but things are going well for the offense.

The offense has been putting up numbers for the first three weeks, despite being questioned before the season started. The only aspect of the offense that did not have doubts was quarterback, where senior Liam Coen holds the reigns.

The questions started with the offensive line that returned only two starters from last year and filled with youth. For the second year in a row, the Minutemen had to replace a 1,500 yard tailback. But the biggest hole seemed to be at wide receiver where UMass had to fill the whole left by two 1,000 yard receivers in J.J. Moore and Rasheed Rancher.

After three weeks of averaging 37 points per game, there are few areas of concern for the offense.

The offensive line has allowed just two sacks, both coming late in the game last week against James Madison. Senior captain Sean Callicchio, the leader of the offensive line, left that game early in the first quarter with an ankle injury and was replaced by John Ihne, who has been battling a leg injury.

Tailback Tony Nelson, who was projected to be the starter last year over Matt Lawrence until he ran for 1,585 yards and 16 scores instead, has filled in just fine. The redshirt junior has averaged 120.7 yards per game on the ground, scoring five rushing touchdowns and caught one as well.

Nelson had a great Week 1 against Albany, where he rushed for 171 yards and a touchdown. He has flown under the radar despite strong play in the past two weeks, rushing for 89 yards and two touchdowns against Holy Cross along with 109 yards with two scores against JMU.

One of the biggest surprises comes from the wide receivers. Coming into the season, the UMass wideouts had a total of 18 career collegiate receptions, 12 of which belonged to Jeremy Horne.

Horne exploded in Week 2 against Holy Cross when he set career highs for receptions (10), yards in a game (172), touchdowns in a game (two) and longest reception (47 yards). That performance was surpassed the following week when redshirt

See OFFENSE on page 11

Smith nets pair in win

UMass wins third straight, unbeaten in previous 5 games

BY DAVID BIRSCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's soccer team remained unbeaten for the fifth straight game with help from midfielder Therese Smith.

The sophomore had two goals yesterday, as the visiting Minutewomen defeated Albany, 2-1.

The Maroon and White are now riding a three-game winning streak, while the Great Danes dropped their fifth in a row.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 2 |
| Albany | 1 |

UMass got off to a slow start, looking sluggish at some points during the first half, but picked up momentum heading into the second half.

"It was a little inconvenient for us because we were so flat," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "We didn't look like our usual selves and didn't look like our usual effort. You know we can get into a rhythm of very dynamic play combinations."

Even with the sloppy play in the first half, the Minutewomen kept their stretch alive of striking first in games and getting on the board early.

Smith got a ball from about 25 yards outside of the Albany box. She took a long shot that Rudy thought just went over the net, but the ball dropped into the goal just under the bar into the corner, giving UMass an early one-goal lead.

The second half faired better for the Minutewomen, who felt more acclimated to the game, according to Rudy.

Midway through the second half, the Great Danes caught a break on a penalty shot against the Minutewomen.

UMass' defenders, Alyssa Visconti and Tina Rodriguez, went up for a challenge, and there was shoulder contact with Albany's midfielder Rebecca Lee. The referee granted a penalty kick to Lee, who neutralized the game at one.

The Minutewomen played strong defense, not allowing a potent Great Dane attack to score.

"Everyone had to work really hard," Rudy said. "They were coming at us from all sorts of angles and it was like organized mayhem. There were so many people running through and dribbling on their own."

Albany had some long shots despite not getting anything going on the flanks of the field.

"It was sort of tough, they had enough players to be creative, so we had to work hard at closing down the middle of the field," Rudy said.

It looked as if UMass would play its record fifth overtime game late in the second half. The offense was around the goal when Smith hit a shot that looked identical to her first goal, but missed wide right.

With eight minutes left in regulation, Patry fed a ball to Smith on the left side of the field. Smith took a left footed shot from about 25 yards out and buried it into the right corner of the net.

"She's been dynamic and that's despite the fact that we're making her play both ways," Rudy said of Smith. "We want her to play defense and track people and play simple balls off, and she's doing all of that. The second half was sort of a breakthrough for her and was a nice reward for making those improvements."

Even with the outcome, Rudy knows that his team cannot come out the same way it did against Albany when the Minutewomen travel to Providence on Sunday.

"We don't want to take this type of momentum with us and the players know it wasn't to their standard and the level that they want to play," Rudy said.

"Against a team like Providence, our level of play has to go up if we're going to be successful in a game like that."

David Birsch can be reached at dbirsch@student.umass.edu

Sophomore Therese Smith helped extend the Minutewomen's unbeaten streak to five games with her two goals against Albany. The win was UMass' third in a row.

Senior Chris Brown (right) is the veteran of the Minutemen's defense and will be a key player against an undefeated New Hampshire squad.

Maroon and White to face undefeated New Hampshire

Brown and Simmons will be key on defense vs. Wildcats

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Being on an undefeated team is a great feeling, the players are confident, the coach is pleased and the media has nothing but good things to say. The Massachusetts men's soccer team was not fortunate enough to recently experience that emotion, but sometimes giving a team its first loss can be equally satisfying.

This Saturday the Minutemen will have the chance to do just that when they travel to New Hampshire to take on the unbeaten Wildcats (4-0-2).

The Maroon and White (2-2-1) are coming off a difficult two-game road trip to Virginia. Playing in oppressive heat and in an unfamiliar environment took its toll on the Minutemen as they lost to Old Dominion, 1-0, and tied William & Mary, 2-2.

It doesn't get any easier for the Minutemen this weekend. They will face an unbeaten team on its home field that is motivated to prove they are worthy of its record.

UNH plays a direct style of offense in which the defensemen try to start a fast break by kicking it over the forwards' heads and getting it deep into opposition territory as fast as possible.

"We know they're going to go over the top, we know they're going to go into the corners and we're working on making sure that we are prepared to handle those kinds of passes," UMass coach Sam Koch said.

Top offensive threats Kyle Urso and Chris Banks have scored five of the six goals for the Wildcats this season.

UMass senior Chris Brown will be one of the key players in making sure the Wildcats can't

See M. SOCCER on page 10

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI ○ H:66 | SAT ○ H:73 | SUN ○ H:76 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2008

Students rebuild after Gustav

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIII
ISSUE 14

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Waszczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COMICS EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Garber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenswaike
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mulholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallach
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Koczwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Waxman
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cernak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
KIRSTEN SWENSON
COPY EDITOR
Lucas Correia
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes Brandon Sylvia

Student EMTs help out

A car in New Orleans, LA, was crushed by a brick wall during Hurricane Gustav. Gustav made landfall as a Category 2 hurricane with sustained winds of 110 miles per hour.

BY ELYSE HOROWITZ
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

During the thousands of evacuations that occurred before Hurricane Gustav collided with the coast of New Orleans, many members of the Louisiana community banded together in a time of crisis.

Members of the Tulane University Emergency Medical Service, who were stationed in Baton Rouge during the storm in order to work with patients who had been evacuated from New Orleans hospitals, worked as some of these good Samaritans.

Benjamin Aronson, a junior, is studying neuroscience at Tulane. Although he wasn't in New Orleans when Hurricane Katrina hit, he felt the full force of the situation when he was told he could not return to his Sharon, MA, home during this year's storm.

As a registered EMT with the Tulane University Emergency Medical System, Aronson, along with 16 other EMS members, were asked to stay on site to assist the U.S. Coast Guard and area police forces.

Aronson said his EMS director pulled everyone together and told us "you have a skill that people need."

"We knew that this is what we signed up for, so everyone stayed. We were told to bring whatever we could, and to sit around and wait for people to need us," said Aronson.

The EMS workers were evacuated on Sunday, August 31, when the rest of Tulane had already been shut down. The dorms were locked, and all services were no longer running. However, Aronson believed that it could have been worse.

"I love what I do," said Aronson, "and it wasn't bad because I was with all my friends. I would have been more upset if I had to go home not knowing what was going on."

Over 3,000 graduate and undergraduate students were evacuated from Tulane University on Friday, August 29 in light of the incoming storm, which hit New Orleans on Monday, September 1.

For the 287 students, administrators and school officials who were unable to fly home, busses were provided to transport them to temporary shelter at Jackson University in Jackson, MS. The EMS workers were there to make sure that everything was stable and to act as mediators for the students.

Two EMS members, including the squad's director, were also present during Hurricane Katrina, and acted as "big brothers" in preparing everyone for what they were about to experience.

After 23 hours in Jackson, the EMS workers were bussed to Baton Rouge, where they mediated and assisted patients who had been evacuated out of area hospitals, working on triage. Aronson said that working in Baton Rouge was the most difficult part of the experience.

"There were only 200 beds, so it was hard. Most of the patients were critically ill, and had been receiving medical care. The actual medical work was insane, because we were

See HURRICANE on page 3

with relief efforts after hurricane hits

HURRICANE from page 2

supervising patients when there were only three or four doctors," said Aronson. "The conditions were not what you would want, we just didn't have enough supplies, it was a lot of having to say no to people that were already in an uncomfortable position."

When the students had breaks from their relief work, they would bond with each other, spending most of their time talking about what they were most afraid of happening during the storm, and providing friendship and support to one another.

Aronson said that most students were not scared of the work they were doing, but more of having to go back to New Orleans, and having no school to go to.

During Hurricane Katrina, in which the entire city of New Orleans was shut down for months, students at Tulane were urged to find other universities to host them for the fall semester.

"It was very generous of other institutions to allow our students to enroll there and continue their studies even though they were gone from their home university," said Director of Tulane Public Relations, Mike Strecker, speaking of the devastating aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

Since there was no way of knowing how serious the damage from the 2005 storm would be, there were no pre-determined universities to open their doors to Tulane students.

"It was extraordinary that the higher education system stepped up, and students could go to whatever university they wanted," said Strecker. "We pray to God this never happens again."

According to University of Massachusetts officials, no students were transferred here during Hurricane Gustav, since Tulane was only closed for less than two weeks.

"When Hurricane Katrina happened, people went to other colleges because the city was wrecked, but now the city was repaired in a few days," said UMass Associate News Editor, Patrick Callahan.

Since Hurricane Katrina shut down New Orleans for almost a year, there were students who transferred to UMass in order to fulfill their credit requirements and continue to take classes.

"As far as I know, no students came here because of Hurricane Gustav," Callahan said.

After the evacuation, Tulane University was able to invite students back onto campus on September 7, and classes began the following morning. Strecker said the move back onto campus went smoothly and that the campus is bustling and full of students, happy to only miss a week of classes.

"It's busy now," said Aronson. "We have to make up for the week that we missed, but it will definitely get better soon. Everyone is just really glad to be back and all together again."

Elyse Horowitz can be reached at ehhorowi@student.umass.edu.

Electrical poles were ripped from the ground, blocking traffic and damaging houses. Insurers estimate that insurance claims for Gustav will reach between $4 and $10 billion.

Promotion, Booking and Management Company seeks:

Detail oriented, solid communicator and computer skilled multitasking individual for fast moving environment.
Savvy with all online media: Facebook, Myspace, Photobucket, like etc. wav to mp3 files, invoicing, website updates, solid typist.

$8, 2-3 days a week 10:30-3:30
Send cover letter and resume to artspromo@artspromo.org

Students at Worcester Dining Commons talk with a guest chef during Dining Services' Local Guest Chef day held on Thursday, September 18.

Blue Wall offers healthy new sandwich options

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students hungry for quick cuisine that won't clog their arteries need to look no further than the Blue Wall, which began offering a new spread of organic sandwiches this fall.

The sandwiches, located within the Blue Wall's deli section, are produced by French Meadow Bakery, the country's oldest certified organic bakery. The bakery is run by entrepreneur Lynn Gordon, who started the business over 20 years ago by selling organic Ciabatta bread rolls out of her small Minnesota kitchen.

Gordon's company made its debut at UMass thanks to a two-hour layover that Dining Services Director Ken Toong, spent in a Minneapolis airport in January, where the bakery's goods caught his eye. In the airport, French Meadow Restaurant offers organic breads, soups and a collection of all-natural meats in Ciabatta bread.

"I could not resist and went inside to look further. I was most impressed with the organic 'this and that' everywhere. I thought to myself, this is what we need at UMass – a restaurant that provides all-natural organic ingredients, promotes sustainability and serves healthy and tasty food," Toong said.

This summer, Toong invited Gordon to visit UMass to discuss whether the University would be ready for French Meadow Bakery goods. Following this meeting, three of UMass' Blue Wall employees trained in one of Gordon's bakeries in Minneapolis.

"I think UMass students are ready for this. The cost may be a bit more but it will be worth it," Toong said.

Blue Wall customers can buy the sandwiches for $5.75 each, or they can pay $7.50 for a "combo meal" which includes a personal size bag of chips and a soda.

"We put the fresh sandwiches in the turbo oven. 45 seconds later, they're perfectly toasted and ready to be eaten," said Blue Wall Chef Manager Curtis Gregoire, one of the employees who attended the summer training.

Students currently have their choice between five signature sandwiches – turkey and Swiss, chicken and goat cheese, ham and white cheddar, roast beef and Havarti and three-cheese vegetarian. In addition to having all-natural and nitrate-free meat, the sandwiches come with spinach, roasted red peppers or roasted plum tomatoes and homemade sauce.

"The sandwiches are really good. I love the fact that it's all organic, because I'm a big health nut," said UMass junior and chemical engineering major Roxy Guarin.

Even senior environmental design major Matthew Martin, who maintains that taste is always a higher priority than health when it comes to his dining choices, enjoys the healthy sandwiches.

"The ham and cheese is really good. It's a different alternative to the same stuff people always get at the Blue Wall. It's a lot better tasting than a lot of the things in there, too. Honestly, it doesn't matter to me that it's organic, but taste is definitely my biggest thing," he said.

According to Toong, a French Meadow kiosk is set to open on the concourse of the Campus Center later this fall featuring a full line of French Meadow's organic breads, soups, salads and bakery items.

"I have learned to keep watch during my travels and at airport stops, as you never know what innovative concepts are out there that would be great for UMass," Toong concluded.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

Students Teach for America

By Frank Gorshko
Collegian Staff

Seniors graduating this year who are interested in applying to work for Teach for America have a limited timeframe to do so, as today is the final day that the national program will accept considerations for its 2009 corps.

The program, which recruits at universities and colleges across the U.S. once a year, matches recent graduates up with two-year teaching jobs in the country's lowest income schools. Applicants can be of any academic concentration and do not need prior teaching experience.

University of Massachusetts Teach For America Recruitment Director Tim Visser reflected on what inspired him to join the program when he graduated from Amherst College.

"I was thrilled that someone was finally standing up to solve the problems of equal access we have in our society. Our education system is deeply flawed and Teach For America is on the front lines changing this," he said.

Since the foundation's inception 18 years ago, 98 UMass graduates have joined Teach for America, according to Visser.

"We hope to get UMass students to apply because we need our generation to be the one that finally addresses the needs of our country's most at-risk youth," Visser said.

According to Visser, 13 million American children are growing up in poverty. Only half of these children will graduate from high school, many of whom will still be reading at an eighth grade reading level.

"These are just some of the realities that limit the life prospects of millions of children in this country today," he said.

Teach For America applicants are notified of their acceptance starting Nov. 17. After their acceptance, they can submit a preference for where, what subject, and what age

See TEACH on page 5

Mount Holyoke brings wireless to dormitories

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

Recognizing the increasing demand for faster and more convenient technology in today's world, Mount Holyoke College has brought wireless Internet access to all of its residence halls.

According to Scott Coopee, the director of infrastructure at Mount Holyoke's Library, Information and Technology Services, the process began because of a rising demand amongst students for greater Internet availability. Mount Holyoke, like the University of Massachusetts, has scattered wireless Internet access throughout different buildings on campus.

"Wireless Internet has become expected and most students have it at home. As we looked at the growing preference for wireless network capabilities, the residential halls quickly became our priority," Coopee said.

Library, Information and Technology Services chose Aruba Networks, a California-based wireless networking company, to help them through the installation process. The groups worked on setting up the network throughout the school year, finally finishing the project in time for this fall.

Setting up a wireless network is a complex process, especially for a college campus. One of the biggest challenges involves setting up access points wired to the network throughout the intended wireless area. Wiring the 400 access points needed to bring wireless capabilities to the residential halls proved to be a difficult task for those working on the project, especially in some of the college's older buildings.

The hard work, however, has paid off, as the response from students has been very positive.

"It is nice to know I can do work outside or in a common room. The [wireless] option certainly makes things convenient," freshman Emily McGranachan said.

Having a college so close to home that offers wireless for its residential halls has led some students at the University of Massachusetts to question whether similar technology could be a possibility for their residence halls in the future.

UMass' Office of Information Technologies (OIT) has recognized this demand and has decided to meet it by piloting wireless Internet access in the North apartments beginning sometime this semester. They will examine how reliable the Internet is and measure student responses to determine whether they'll expand the network to other residential areas next year.

"Right now, UMass is piloting a ubiquitous wireless connectivity in the North Residential Area for the fall semester. It will most likely extend through the spring semester. OIT is not sure if we'll extend it beyond to the rest of the residential areas, let alone the rest of the campus," said OIT help desk manager Andrew Vernon.

Some UMass students, like freshman Brigitte Morency, would be ready to embrace wireless in the residence halls if it was available to them.

"It'd be a lot more convenient to have. I bought an Ethernet cable that wasn't long enough and had to go out and buy another one. If there was wireless, I wouldn't have to worry about it," she said.

Freshman Scott O'Connell, however, disagreed.

"A lot of people would use it for downloading. It'd be great to use for studying purposes, but a wired connection would be more secure," he said.

According to Vernon, UMass' current wireless network, which includes a number of access points set up around campus, requires a significant amount of money and effort to maintain.

Regardless of a possible wireless future for residential areas, OIT suggests all students use wired wall-jack connections, as he said that Ethernet cables are faster, more reliable and more secure than a wireless connection.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@student.umass.edu

Financial shock

begins to ripple around the world

By Tim Johnson
Shashank Bengali and Tom Lasseter McClatchy Newspapers

BEIJING — Signs of crisis rippled around the globe Thursday as fears that the ailing U.S. financial system would drag down the rest of the world ricocheted from trading floors in Singapore, to the streets of Hong Kong and energy markets in Europe.

While markets gyrated, Russia's president made an unusual appeal for the United States to calm the global financial turmoil it has unleashed while oil-producing countries scrambled to cope with lower prices, plus indications that the crisis has the potential to reshape politics as well as finance.

Around the world, fear pervaded trading floors, leaving many traders dazed.

"People are shell-shocked," Tim Condon, the chief Asia economist for ING Bank, said.

"No one is doing very much. They're just sitting on the sidelines trying to preserve their cash. The only question on people's lips is which institution will be next to fail."

The U.S. Federal Reserve and five other major central banks took unprecedented joint action to prop up world markets, injecting $180 billion in credit that stopped a wild fall in stocks in East Asia and stabilized markets in Europe.

Hong Kong's main Hang Seng Index fell 7.7 percent in the morning before closing virtually flat. Tokyo's Nikkei 225 Index ended down 2.2 percent, a three-year low. South Korea's Kospi lost 2.1 percent and China's Shanghai index dipped 1.7 percent.

In Russia, the two major stock exchanges, Micex and the Russian Trading System (RTS), were closed or kept at limited operation for three days starting Tuesday, when trading was suspended after shares had their biggest single-day loss in a decade. Since May, the RTS has dropped by more than 50 percent. The markets will reopen Friday, according to state news wires.

Polina Lazich, an analyst at a leading Russian investment firm, Alfa Bank Finance, was succinct in describing the situation.

"Right now, Russia does not have a stock market to speak of. It simply doesn't exist," she said.

For a third straight day, lines of panicked people formed outside the offices of global insurance giant American International Group (AIG) and its subsidiaries in Hong Kong, Taipei and Singapore. Services

Liang An Lin runs a souvenir shop in Beijing after the company he worked for went bankrupt.

policyholders weren't swayed by Washington's decision to lend $85 billion to AIG to forestall a global financial calamity, and demanded to terminate their policies.

In China, the steady slide of the Shanghai stock market brought forecasts of political risk and fears that global demand for the country's manufactured goods may ebb, slowing China's growth.

"The crisis in the U.S. is a big red flag for China," Guo Min, a finance expert at the University of International Business and Economics in Beijing, said.

A slowdown of consumer spending in the United States and other major markets is already affecting China's manufacturers, putting a cramp on the world's third biggest economy and giving senior policymakers sonic jitters.

"The possibility of world exports coming down and hurting China a lot is keeping them awake at night," Michael Pettis, a finance professor at Peking University's Guanghua School of Management, said.

Also unsettled are tens of millions of Chinese who've watched their stock portfolios wither. A steady slide this week capped by Thursday's decline to 1,902.33 left Shanghai's composite index an astounding 70.5 percent off its record high of 6,124 from Oct. 16, 2007.

Grads encouraged to teach

TEACH from page 4

group they would like to teach.

The benefits of the program, which was mentioned in Business Week magazine's "2008 Best Places to Launch a Career," include the full benefits of a teacher's salary and health care.

Teach For America corps members also receive annual awards from AmeriCorps. The awards can be used to pay off loans or put towards graduate school. With these loans, graduates can also apply for interest-free loans and grants to support their transition from college life to the working world.

Applications must be submitted by 11:59 p.m. tonight and can be found online at www.teachforamerica.org. In addition to having a minimum GPA of 2.5, applicants must submit a 500-word letter of intent, a 500-word essay and a one-page resume. On Sept. 25, applicants will receive notification of whether or not they've been accepted for consideration.

Visser offered interested students words of encouragement.

"If graduates want to be part of a movement that is literally changing the landscape of American education, then they should apply to Teach For America. This is exceptionally hard work, but what we have seen come out of these efforts is quite profound."

Frank Gorshko can be reached at fgorshko@student.umass.edu

EDITORIAL OPINION

A new look at 'Justice for Jason'

Alana Goodman

The Jason Vassell case had all the right ingredients for a bonafide hate crime. [illegible] tempted coming from [illegible] the violent and bigoted white kids and the jaded [illegible]. Unfortunately the police report details [illegible] contrary [illegible].

The case has been followed by campus news since last February, when an African American UMass student named Jason Vassell reportedly stabbed two white, non-students – John Bowes, 20, and Jonathan Bosse, 19 – around 4 a.m. in the lobby of Vassell's dorm, MacKimmie. According to the Committee for Justice for Jason Vassell, also known as CJJV, Vassell stabbed the men in self-defense, after being accosted with racial slurs and punched in the face. Now, Vassell is being charged with aggravated assault and Bowes is being charged with a civil rights violation.

The incident captivated UMass for months. Furious activists see Vassell as the victim of a hate crime and created the CJJV, which is calling for the legal system to drop charges against Vassell and bring more serious charges against Bosse and Bowes.

But that's only part of the story. The local media and the CJJV – made up of some Student Government Association leaders, including President Malcolm Chu – have neglected to report numerous important details about the case. Additionally, the CJJV has been using a fragmented and seemingly skewed recap of the events to collect donations and support from sympathetic students and community members.

Though the CJJV Web site has pages of information on the case, it implies a scenario that does not appear to be entirely supported by the police report. It implies that Vassell was blindsided by Bosse and Bowes, and was then forced to use his pocket knife to defend himself against their two-on-one attack.

The police report indicates a slightly different story. It says that the 5'10, 200 lb. Vassell armed himself with two weapons before leaving his dorm room to meet up with a male friend, who he had specifically called to help him in the event of a fight. The police report read, "[Bowes' and Bosse's use of racial slurs] enraged Vassell. He called a friend to help him. Vassell armed himself with an iron and a pocket knife and went to the ground floor of MacKimmie."

The CJJV also purposefully avoids mentioning Bowes' and Bosse's injuries, leading us to believe that they were not seriously hurt by Vassell. But according to the security camera footage, Vassell stabbed Bowes and Bosse nine times, causing them significant blood loss, which resulted in emergency surgery at Bay State trauma center. The CJJV calls Vassell's actions "self defense."

While everyone loves a good self-defense story, according to

The CJJV finds itself in the awkward position of calling for "an end to hate crimes," even though their own poster boy reportedly used racial slurs against others – and then stabbed them.

Massachusetts law, this argument only works if the force used is equal to the force received. Stabbing someone who has punched you certainly goes far beyond what most consider excessive. "After the first fight broke out," the police report states, "Vassell drew a knife and an iron, repeatedly stabbed both Bosse and Bowes… [who received] numerous stab wounds and were seriously injured."

Besides calling for the legal system to drop the "undeserved" assault charges against "victimized" and "law-abiding" Vassell, the CJJV also demands harsher charges for Bowes and Bosse even though surveillance tape footage shows Bosse trying to break up the fight. "Based on the body positions of the four in the lobby, it appears Bosse and [Vassell's friend] are trying to keep Bowes and Vassell apart," states the report.

Perhaps the most ironic part of the police report alleges, "When Vassell attacked [Bowes and Bosse] … they state he was wearing a ski mask [and that] previously [Bowes and Bosse] were outside where they encountered Vassell and an unknown Latino male that was yelling racial slurs at them."

Whether or not these claims are true, the CJJV finds itself in the awkward position of calling for "an end to hate crimes," even though their own poster boy reportedly used racial slurs against others – and then stabbed them.

What is most shameful is that the CJJV has used the Vassell case to prey on the emotions of community members – hundreds of whom have taken time off of work and school to attend Vassell's court hearings and even donated their own money to the group.

However, the real victim of the CJJV crowd is the Civil Rights movement. Horrible racist attacks do occur in America, but attempting to turn ordinary people into Rodney Kings or Amadou Diallos dilutes the gravity of those few serious incidents.

If the CJJV truly believes in Vassell's innocence like they claim, then why the distortion and omission of relevant facts? Even the CJJV Web site, which was updated only last week, has never been changed to reflect the police report that was available as early as seven months ago. These group members should be the first ones clamoring for the school to release the security tapes and posting the police report on their Web site.

Perhaps after seeing all of the evidence, we'll all discover that Vassell's "undeserved" assault charges actually are just the product of the supremely racist Amherst legal system.

Alana Goodman is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at agoodman@student.umass.edu.

UMass according to Holub

Nicholas O'Malley

Chancellor Robert Holub made one of his first major public appearances of the year last week with his speech at Bowker Auditorium concerning the state of the school and his plans for the future.

While on stage with a faculty dressed in "full regalia" – a cryola box of graduation gowns – Holub discussed topics ranging from the students to school construction. All the while he acknowledged what came with the position as chancellor – a bull's eye.

Holub has acknowledged that the student body does not have the highest opinion of their administrators, saying that the students may "see an intimate connection between university administration and fertilizer."

With last year's student strike still fresh in our minds, the administration should be able to at least appease some students and find out what exactly they were angry about.

His speech, however, was focused upon how to help establish the school as one of the nation's top public universities. Such methods included the school's intense renovations, pushing student research and adding to the school's faculty with the Amherst 250 Plan, which would add 250 professors to the school.

Holub's plan, however, was one of two choices for the school's administration – to advance the school or please the students.

Remember, UMass is a school currently in it for the long term. The higher ups – and most students – don't want to hear "ZooMass" anymore.

Pleasing the students is not overly difficult. We're constantly complaining about what's wrong with the school and how we want it. Lower fees, stop building things, and give us back the papers cups in the dining commons so we can steal stuff. It's these sorts of things that the students care about.

The school, however, would be hard pressed to improve its status nationwide while focusing on student affairs. College rankings don't care if students pay a little less. However, they do care about the sort of research being done and the type of faculty the school is hiring.

Therefore, it behooves the school to utilize a financial aid system that benefits accomplished students coming in rather than the campus as a whole. While a portion of the student body may complain, it attracts more top students that are looking for affordable schools. Let's not kid ourselves: UMass' affordability is its most attractive aspect.

While finances are an important issue, it usually takes a backseat to some of the more glaring issues on campus, like New Dirt.

While it may be an obstruction, stagnant, and an eyesore, the project will most likely be one of the better long-term decisions the school will make. The school's desperate need for renovations was one of the issues addressed in Holub's speech and, unlike most issues, is actually being addressed by the school.

Remember, UMass is a school currently in it for the long term. The higher ups – and most students – don't want to hear "ZooMass" anymore. They are looking for an attractive university for the nation's top students.

While Holub's main goal is to advance UMass as a whole, he still cares about the students and what's best for them. The chancellor described the administration's role as one that merely facilitates the students and faculty.

The decision to sign on to the Amethyst Initiative was Holub's first high-profile action in the students' favor. Whether or not he truly supports lowering the drinking age, the decision is at least one thing that will get him on the students' side.

In addition to supporting younger boozing efforts, Holub has spoken up on the topic of the disgruntled graduate students that attend UMass. He has suggested increasing the stipends in order to attract higher quality students.

So while many students immediately view any member of the administration with contempt, Holub deserves a chance to implement his plan for the school.

Well, at least no strikes in his first semester.

Nicholas O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

A surplus of UMass police

Ben Sullivan

There are many prominent features on the University of Massachusetts campus that do not go unnoticed. Some of these features include the beautiful campus pond, or the 297-foot-tall W.E.B. Du Bois Library. Although there are many great aspects of our campus, nothing seems to stand out more at UMass than the amount of police officers. They're aggressive, they're everywhere and they're targeting students.

The UMass Police Department has been viewed as a big problem for quite awhile. While UMass might be trying to maintain a safe environment by having a large police presence on campus, it has actually created an unwelcoming and uncomfortable atmosphere for everyone.

The campus looks really bad right now with the amount of police around. It looks as if there's a serious crime problem that's out of control and can't be handled. But this is a university – not a prison, and this is a campus of students – not criminals.

Some students feel that while making the campus look bad, the police are also targeting them as if they're criminals.

"I feel that they are attempting to pressure you into committing a crime when you've done nothing illegal," said Ben Goldberg, a junior at UMass.

It seems that now not only will students have a degree by the end of their college career, but also have a criminal record.

This isn't hard to understand, considering the UMass Police Department has undercover officers patrolling the campus disguised as students, trying to catch people red handed.

I always thought that undercover police work dealt with organized crime and gang activities – not college students. Many students have also expressed that they feel they're being treated as though they have committed a crime even when they've done nothing wrong. Jon Burgess, a junior and current resident on campus, said, "It makes me feel unsafe knowing that there are plain clothes on undercover officers… I feel like a criminal when I'm guilty of nothing."

It's pretty sad that UMass and the police feel that they cannot trust the students on campus. Walking around campus as a student, I do not feel any sense of community when I constantly see police pulling people over and investigating them inside residence halls.

The weekends are even worse on campus. It's reached a point where I fear walking around because of police. The way it is right now, if I'm a college student walking around campus on a Friday night, I fit the profile of a suspect.

Even if you've done nothing wrong just dealing with the UMass police is anything but a pleasant experience. Last year, my cousin and I were unfortunate enough to be pulled over on campus while driving back to my dorm. Before we could ask what the problem was, there were two officers shining their flash lights in the front and back of the vehicle as if they were trying to find something illegal. When nothing was found, they ended up towing his car and giving him a fine for not having paid his car insurance.

Two days later, we found out that they made a mistake and that the insurance had been paid. It just didn't show up on the police department's computer. However, they still towed his car that night, even though he did not live in the area and was stuck on campus without any way of getting home.

These police are people that we have trusted to keep our community safe, and they can't show any respect for the people that live and work here.

In addition to the high number of police officers on campus, there's also a high number of students being arrested. According to the UMass Annual Security Report for 2007, there were 416 on-campus arrests just this past year. There were also 360 arrests in 2006, and in 2005 there were 378 arrests. The number of on-campus arrests has increased with each year since 2005. It seems that now not only will students have a degree by the end of their college career, but also a criminal record.

The situation with the police has been going on for quite a while. One of the heated subjects last year during the student strike was the issue of the heavy police presence. The problems with the police are still occurring and there has yet to be any sort of resolution to this problem. Maybe this is something that could be changed through a decision of the administration or the actions of the students.

Ben Sullivan is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bjsullivan@student.umass.edu.

Destroying the roots of terrorism

Nathan Gelson

Only two days ago, at least five people were killed in a suspected attack by a U.S. operated drone in Pakistan, according to the BBC. This is merely the latest in a series of attacks by the U.S. military against targets located in Pakistan that has outraged the Pakistani people who view such intrusions as an affront to their sovereignty. According to the BBC, in one of the latest incidents, Pakistani soldiers fired shots above the heads of U.S. troops, who had landed on the Afghanistan side of the border, stopping them from crossing into southern Pakistan.

Previous attacks by the U.S. have seen the deaths of civilians, enraging the Pakistani people. According to the BBC, President Bush authorized incursions into Pakistan without approval from the Pakistani government. In response, the BBC reported, Pakistan has condemned an alleged raid by foreign troops, based in Afghanistan.

Pakistan's army spokesman has made it clear that its forces will not tolerate incursions into Pakistan territory."

Even the two presidential candidates have weighed in on the issue. Obama supports the cross-border raids, saying in an August 1, 2007 speech, "There are terrorists holed up in those mountains who murdered 3,000 Americans. They are plotting to strike again. It was a terrible mistake to fail to act when we had a chance to take out an al-Qaeda leadership meeting in 2005. If we have actionable intelligence about high-value terrorist targets and President Musharraf won't act, we will."

However, according to CBS News, McCain not only disagrees, he's repeatedly criticized Obama's policy, accusing him of wanting to "bomb our ally." Indeed, McCain recently suggested to CNN's Larry King that he, as president, wouldn't even pursue Osama bin Laden if he slipped past the border because Pakistan is a sovereign nation."

It's easy to see the case for crossing the Pakistani border to deal with militants hiding there, particularly when it appears that the Pakistani government is making little headway in their fight against al-Qaeda and the Taliban in their own country. In addition, coalition troops in Afghanistan are being forced to fight militants that cross the Pakistani border with impunity. They're able to seek refuge there from coalition troops crossing again when they wish to attack.

It makes military sense that the only way to defeat these terrorists is by destroying their safe havens and their bases of operations. However, I believe that in doing so, one would be ignoring the overall strategy in the U.S. War on Terror, the only one that is capable of truly weakening the terrorist movement. It's nearly impossible to destroy all of the terrorists, as we discovered in Afghanistan.

The only way to have any hope of defeating them is through the support of the population. The U.S. soldiers might, though they may be, should not forget that with a hostile population, their job would be nearly impossible. When viewed in this light, the cross-border raids are clearly counterproductive. While we may destroy the majority of the terrorist havens, the cost is too high. We would lose Pakistan as an ally, as well as the support of the Pakistani people, who live in a country where anti-American sentiment is already high, due largely to actions such as these.

Even if a U.S. attack took place without civilian casualties, the complete violation of Pakistan's sovereignty would be enough to help create the next generation of terrorists.

Having seen their country humiliated by a supposed ally, and their countrymen killed.

Certain actions have caused the United States to be perceived as a world bully and have generated anti-American sentiments worldwide. It is also naive to think that the repercussions of such a decision would be limited to just Pakistan. In this day and age of the modern media, the whole world is watching, and every move and therefore the increase in anti-American sentiments would be global.

Although it's tempting to attack the militants in Pakistan, it would clearly be a mistake from the perspective of any overarching strategy. Surely the terrorists want us to react in this manner. They don't have the ability to defeat us in any other way, so their cause and court from the U.S. withdraw. Pakistan's [illegible] or risk a civil war, then cause it would herald [illegible].

The War on Terror is one that cannot be won with brute force. Instead, when we're using [illegible] we must always [illegible] the root cause of the problem. The negative perception that the U.S. is an [illegible] empire not [illegible] perception [illegible] terrorism will be a persistent problem for the U.S. in the years and generations to come.

Nathan Gelson is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ngelson@student.umass.edu.

Certain actions have caused the United States to be perceived as a world bully and have generated anti-American sentiments worldwide.

Show me some sass.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

ARTS & LIVING

Concerts galore at UMass and IHEG

Death Set and Dan Friel freakout at UMass for WMUA's first concert

By Brittany Dalphond
Collegian Correspondent

Monday is officially fall, and WMUA is kicking off the season early with the Free Fall Freakout, the first performance of their 2008-2009 concert series.

The Death Set, "noise-punk thrashers" from Baltimore, and Dan Friel will perform tonight with local opener, Eric Hnatow. The show will start at 8:00 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the UMass Student Union.

Dan Friel's latest album, "Ghost Town," along with The Death Set's debut LP "Worldwide," topped WMUA's charts during most of the spring and summer sessions. Along with the popularity among their DJs, the performers were chosen by WMUA in "the interest of sharing their passion for new exciting independent music."

"In an effort to present the campus and community with independent music that pioneers new aesthetic boundaries, the staff at WMUA chose The Death Set and Dan Friel, who they believe succeed in that respect," according to Gabriel Chicoine of WMUA.

The Death Set hails from Baltimore, MD, by way of the Gold Coast of Australia, where Johnny Siera met co-founding member Beau Velasco in 2005. The Death Set chose to reside in Baltimore after first moving to Sydney.

In the past two years, they've recorded and released two LP albums and honed in on their ability to combine numerous styles and sounds to release their debut full-length album, which includes 18 tracks, and is a cumulative 28 minutes long.

Their minute-long songs are combinations of electronic pop-punk that makes their audience want to dance.

"Sound on the Sound," a popular music blog-site recently lauded the group with doing the impossible when they turned their concert in Seattle into an impromptu dance party that no one was "too cool for."

Dan Friel, a former Pioneer Valley resident but now a Brooklyn native, composes his solo work primarily on keyboards manipulated to create sounds that are authentically his.

Mark Richardson of Pitchfork Media described the first track off Friel's "Ghost Town" as "a music-box melody shoved through the speaker cone of a subwoofer salvaged from the trunk of a totaled Jeep." The other tracks on the album are equally as experimental, but each grab the listener's attention within seconds and his ability to transition and transcend that space between noise and music keeps his songs on repeat.

"Though Ghost Town" is Friel's first full-length solo album, he's also released multiple albums as keyboardist and vocalist of the band, Parts & Labor. He is heading out on tour with them in late October.

Local opener Eric Hnatow's MySpace.com touts WMUA as one of his many influences along with a myriad of others that includes Neil Young, The Talking Heads and Hampshire College. Like The Death Set and Friel, Hnatow also experiments with an electro-punk dance vibe that is a bit trance-like.

The show is taking place in the Student Union Commonwealth Room. It will start at at 8 p.m. and admission is free. WMUA is the Student and community run radio station and this is the first installment in their 2008-2009 concert series.

Brittany Dalphond can be reached at bdalphon@student.umass.edu.

Phil Elverum (left) with friends Julie Doiron (center), and Fred Squire (right) come to Northampton to display Elverum's songwriting talents.

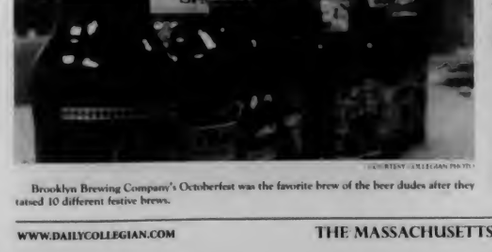
Mt. Eerie brings creativity to Iron Horse

By Brian Wood
Collegian Staff

Despite a staggering geographical divide, recording artist Phil Elverum of the group Mount Eerie is no stranger to the Pioneer Valley.

While not quite a Massachusetts regular, the Anacortes, WA, native is very open with his admiration for the forgotten half of the state. Over the years, he has made multiple stops here as both Mount Eerie and his long-since-disbanded persona, The Microphones. "Western Massachusetts is beautiful, it's still pretty wild, it's almost like time travel," says Elverum, "you can actually hear distinctive sounds and there are villages and you really don't see that everywhere."

Elverum's latest stop in Northampton comes in anticipation of the release of multiple new collections of work, the latest being "Lost Wisdom," an impromptu 10-song collection recorded in his living room in Washington. While Elverum's music has changed in name and style with relative frequency, the addition of other contributing musicians and the collaborative nature of the work make his latest offering a unique addition to his already extensive catalog.



"The album was recorded rather spontaneously and unexpectedly, but that's how I often operate," says Elverum. "I'm not a meticulous writer who spends weeks crossing things out ... we basically just recorded a show in my living room."

A lifelong fan of Eric's Trip, the latest Mount Eerie album finds Elverum collaborating with Julie Doiron, the influential band's former guitarist and bassist-turned-solo artist, who possesses what Elverum calls "the world's greatest and saddest voice."

"It's exciting," says Elverum of working with Doiron, "it's a great feeling meeting someone who's your hero and them becoming a real person."

Also featured on the release is the subtle accompaniment of guitarist Fred Squire, who performs under the moniker Calm Down. It's Monday, has been affec-

See EERIE on page 11

Celebrate Oktober

Beer Dudes try festive fall brews

By Tim McCall and Brian Wood
Collegian Staff

The official Oktoberfest kicks off this Saturday in Munich, Germany and in honor of this glorious festival, this week's beer column is dedicated to the crafting of Oktoberfest beer and a smidge of history.

An event with the history and magnitude of Oktoberfest is far too great for just one beer columnist to topple alone, so for this week's installment some additional support was required. Brian Wood is an assistant arts editor for the Daily Collegian and has never been known to pass up a pint, making him the perfect companion for this exploration of all things Oktober.

Oktoberfest originates back to 1810 with the original celebration of the wedding between Prince Ludwig (later King Ludwig I of Bavaria) and Princess Therese von Sachsen-Hildburghausen. The celebration was open to all citizens of every social class, creating one of the largest parties of its time.

Nearly 200 years later Oktoberfest is now the world's largest fair full of carnival rides, live music and keg tosses. But best of all, Oktoberfest is home of beer tents. These tents are full of thousands of people with one goal in mind, to drink beer. But, they do not just drink any beer.

The beer of choice, and the one commonly referred to in the states as Oktoberfest, is Märzen, a 17th century lager that is brewed throughout the summer months beginning in late March. Their weapon of choice, the stein. Americans think the 22-ounce mugs at Applebee's are big. Try drinking a liter of beer out of a stein.

We didn't drink steins of beer, but instead we each made our own six-pack at the Spirit Haus with nothing but Oktoberfest beers. Here are some of our favorites from our night of "research" and some you should avoid.

Spaten Oktoberfestbier Ur-Marzen

If you really want to try something Oktober, Spaten is a must have. Unlike most Oktoberfest beers, Spaten is one of the more smooth sample beers of the season.

Nevertheless, this beer is the real deal. Each year 10,000 people crowd their tent at the festival. Spaten knows their beer; in one way or another, this company has been brewing beer since 1397. For you mathematicians out there, that is 325 years before Samuel Adams was even born.

Left Hand Oktoberfest Lager Ur- Marzen

This lager is one of the more carbonated beers we chose. It was also one of the heaviest to swallow. The taste starts off chock full of malt, but ends with a slight taste of fruit. Definitely not for the Keystone Light drinkers, but those who like taste and can handle a dark beer when it's still 60 degrees outside.

Wachusett Oktoberfest Ale

Wachusett Brewing Company shook things up with their recipe for an Oktoberfest beer. Instead of a lager like most breweries, they went the ale route. Instead of hops and malt, they went the fruit way. WBC is known for their blueberry beer, so fruity Oktoberfest ale should have been expected. Instead it was shocking. It tasted more like stale apple juice.

Brooklyn Oktoberfest

Brooklyn Brewing Company's Oktoberfest offered one of the most unique and ultimately satisfying flavor profiles of the bunch. This rich, full-flavored lager that possesses the perfect blend of spice with sweet, fruity malts is sure to satisfy even the most skeptical of palettes. While it is a tad thicker than your average lager, Brooklyn's Oktoberfest sits surprisingly well, making a six-pack an ideal weekend purchase.

Saranac Octoberfest

Despite the Americanized spelling, Saranac proved to be another of our favorite seasonal selections. A medium bodied, easy-pouring lager with hints of fruitiness, mild malt flavors and clean finish, Saranac was easily one of the most drinkable selections of the evening. In addition to their Oktoberfest, Saranac also offers a seasonal Pumpkin Ale for those who choose to go that route during the beer-filled autumn months that lie ahead.

Otter Creek Oktoberfest

Otter Creek Brewery, located in Middlebury, VT, has only been brewing since 1991. If this "Autumn Ale" is any indicator, they may need a few more decades of seasoning before joining the Oktoberfest bandwagon. This offering was quite possibly the worst beer of the evening. Sour in both aroma and flavor, Otter Creek Oktoberfest is hardly fit for any day, let alone a "brisk autumn" one.

The Beer Dudes can be reached at tmccall@student.umass.edu.

Brooklyn Brewing Company's Octoberfest was the favorite brew of the beer dudes after they tatsed 10 different festive brews.

Thurston Moore brought his unique guitar sounds to the Pearl Street Ballroom Wednesday night while playing songs from his first solo album.

Moore energizes NoHo

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

When Thurston Moore stepped to the microphone at the Pearl Street Nightclub on Wednesday night, he didn't exactly exude confidence with his first few words.

"We practiced a little bit for this," he said. "Let's see what happens."

After introducing "The Psychic Hearts Band" (including Steve Shelley and a bassist simply referred to as "Mutilation"), Moore dove into his first number, "Elegy" for All the Dead Rock Stars." The meandering drones of the two guitars swam with the slowly building drums, eventually cleaning up before riffing into full-on chaos.

Though "Elegy" is actually the final track on Moore's 1995 solo album "Psychic Hearts," Moore chose to jumble the track order, opting to save the title track for last.

The overall tone of the night was one of remembrance, with Moore seeming to get a real kick out of playing songs from his 13-year-old record. "In 1995, I was living in New York City," he explained. "I was deeply in love with my wife, I had a one-year-old kid." Presumably these factors were large influences on the album, which comes across as a deeply affecting romp through Moore's slightly restrained side.

Moore's second piece was the fan favorite "Queen Bee and Her Pals," an angular bounce of sludgy guitars. Moore wasn't trying to fool anyone with his large, hand-written lyric sheets, constantly referring to them throughout the night while he leaned into the microphone.

Next came "Ono Soul" originally the album's second track. He continued chronologically for nearly the rest of the night, following up with "Pretty Bad," but not before mentioning Northampton's loud sound curfew.

"The cops are kinda cool here, in a way," he mused after someone cited the plug-pulling hour as 12:30 a.m. "I like cops actually. I've always had a thing for a man in blue."

"Pretty Bad" might be one of Moore's more metal moments, employing some heavy riffing over a funereal percussion stomp. Moore continued with his comedy, hitting the audience with the sarcastic query "you guys psyched about that Urban Outfitters?"

"Patti Smith Math Scratch" followed, certainly one of the most upbeat tracks of the bunch. Moore really let it out at times, "Patti Smith" included, jumping around while mangling his stickered guitar.

Next up was "Blues From Beyond the Grave," which ended with an all-out cataclysm of cymbals and feedback. This was a shining example of the album's great dynamics, from cluttered, noisy squalls to light, chiming chords.

Again on the noisy side, "See-Through Play-Mate" followed, crunching and clanging along to an eventual grinding halt. Before the next piece, Moore addressed

See MOORE on page 11

Worship and Praise
10 a.m.
Every Sunday
Morning

North Congregational Church
United Church of Christ

Corner of Pine & N. Pleasant Streets at the traffic light in North Amherst
549-0500
north-church.org

A Safe Place for all God's People
Unconditionally Welcoming
Decidedly Christian Open and Affirming

WHAT DO THESE MEN HAVE IN COMMON?

THEY'RE ALL PART OF THE DELTA CHI TRADITION. HOW ABOUT YOU?

FRIENDSHIP · CHARACTHER · JUSTICE · EDUCATION

Adam Jones today through email at AdamJ@DeltaChi.org or by phone

Attend an info session in the Campus Center, room

Monday, September 22nd at 11pm and Tuesday, September 23rd at 7pm

DON'T MISS YOUR OPPORTUNITY TO BUILD A LASTING TRADITION AT UMASS!

www.DeltaChi.org

Thurston Moore excites crowd at Pearl Street

MOORE from page 9

the crowd, going on a bit of a motivational spiel about fathers.

"Your Dad will always be the coolest person in your life," he said. After a pause, he added the warning, "whether you like it or not." Sentimental advice from a 50-year-old, who's still cooler than you? Priceless.

The next number continued with the chaos, as "Hang Out" featured Moore battering his guitar strings as he thrashed about. By this time, he was becoming noticeably sweaty and inebriated cradling a "cheap drink."

"Once you turn 50, you can't drink anything brown," he explained before admitting "I'm dyin' for a Tanqueray and tonic."

Once a good Samaritan filled his request, Moore jumped into the meat of "Psychic Hearts." After "Feathers," and some banter about the upcoming election ("this one's for the Dems"), the band played the tenth track, "Tranquilizer." Both were supplemented by fervent lyric reference.

Moore had a look of understanding on his face while he interpreted the 13-year-old songs, like looking back on a lost childhood diary. Moore, a decade-and-a-half older, seemed to giggle at his own words self-consciously.

Moore's past self may have seemed funny (or even embarrassing) to him, but it was a hugely appreciated gesture for him to bring the record to life.

Moore introduced the next piece, "Staring Statues," with a story about the title's origin. Apparently it was among a list of band names found in a notebook published by Richard Hell of the Voidoids and Moore agreed. "It's a good band name."

"What song's this?" Moore asked the band moments before the opening guitar part came to him, like remembering a secret handshake. His voice again displayed his own piercing intensity of the songs, though some of the words were unknown to us.

Further and further down the list of songs, it became apparent that "Psychic Hearts" was truly a means by which Moore could simply rock out. The abstract noise of Sonic Youth was far the most part cast the window and replaced with calculated loud-soft dynamics and portions set aside to absolutely tear it up.

The only true single from the record followed in the form of "Cindy (Rotten Tanx)." "When Geffen put this record out, they were looking for a single," he said. "There wasn't one."

"Cindy" preceded the subdued "Cherry's Blues," which Moore dedicated to the band Slant 6, whom Moore shared the stage with when "Psychic Hearts" was initially released. "Female Cop" came next, a strange composition of shimmering cymbal rushes, sustained guitar sounds, and other various trembles, murmurs, and clatters.

The last song left from the record was the title track, saved for the end instead of its initial third track position. Lone extraterrestrial chimes emitted from Moore's guitar before being joined by the rest of the band.

The Psychic Hearts [illegible] were the bridge from the [illegible] "Tom-tom Buddhist Deathmetal," which consisted of about 4 minutes [illegible] the [illegible] repeated three times.

Moore succeeded in holding his status as a rare down-to-Earth guitar deity, even going so far as to trade Psychic Hearts vinyl reissues for dollar bills. Nearly classics like this are far from a dime a dozen, and it's a vastly cherished trend to perform entire records at shows. Get alone, give them away for so cheap!

Moore is set to perform the record again at New York's version of the ATP festival this weekend, using Northampton to provide a solid taste of what he'll offer in Monticello.

It sure pays to have legends in your backyard.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

Moore had to read off a brick sheet as he played his old material.

Elverum returns to NoHo

EERIE from page 8

tionately labeled by Elverum as the "hidden guitarist of the floating riff." The three will combine on stage to perform as Mount Eerie at Saturday's show, giving the audience a firsthand glimpse of "Lost Wisdom."

This fall, in addition to the more collaboratively-oriented "Lost Wisdom," Elverum also is releasing "Dawn." In stark contrast, "Dawn" features only Elverum playing a selection of re-worked and re-recorded older material with no accompaniment. "Dawn" is in many ways the definitive recording from a definitive point in Elverum's career, the winter he spent in arctic Norway some six years ago.

Both records will be available from Elverum's own independent record and distribution company, P.W. Elverum, a trend he started shortly after shifting from the stage name The Microphones to Mount Eerie.

Elverum releases his work almost exclusively on white vinyl, a format that according to him is worth holding on to. "A lot of things today are disposable... not important... I like to produce well-made things," says Elverum of his decision to release his records on vinyl. "I'll run out of material, well maybe not, but as we move into the future, I like paying close attention to the details. Since I've chosen to be a 'thing maker,' I like to make things that I personally want to hold on to, and when I see a CD, I throw it in the garbage."

In addition to his use of vinyl, Elverum has more recently shifted into using multiple artistic mediums to accompany his releases. "Pts. 6 & 7," one of the latest releases in the Mount Eerie catalogue, consists of a 10-inch picture disc enclosed within a 132-page hardcover book that features photographs taken from Elverum's travels over the past decade.

"Dawn" will be released in two separate forms. One release will see the songs spread across his signature white vinyl, while another more elaborate combination will feature a 19-song compact disc accompanied by a 144-page hardcover book that Elverum describes as "journal writings chronicling a winter spent alone in a cabin, wrestling with ghosts, gathering wood, acting out the myths, three months of unfiltered brain torrents interspersed with drawings."

Producing a quality product is not the sole reason behind Elverum releasing his own music; it's also a way of ensuring he never gets left in the dark.

"I like the challenge it offers, and I have some really impulsive behaviors," says Elverum on the task of both recording and releasing his own music. "I like to know what's going on, and I'm not comfortable with other people making aesthetic decisions about my work, so I guess you could say this soothes my impulses."

Mount Eerie will play on Saturday, September 20 at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton with Julie Doiron and Calm Down It's Monday. Doors open at 10 p.m. and tickets are $8 in advance; $10 at the door.

Brian Wood can be reached at bwood@dailycollegian.com.

UMASS BURSAR GOES GREEN

BEGINNING IN SEPTEMBER 2008 EMAIL NOTIFICATIONS OF BILLS WILL BE SENT TO STUDENTS' UMASS EMAIL ACCOUNTS

The UMass Bursar's Office will be emailing all students when their September 2008 bills will be available to be viewed online in SPIRE. To view the bill students will need to go to their Student Service Center in SPIRE. To view the bill students will need to go to their Student Service Center in SPIRE, scroll down to Finances and click on View/Pay Bill to enter QuikPAY. Students can view and print their bill as well as make a payment online. There is no charge for payments made by check, however processing fees will apply for credit card payments. (VISA is not accepted).

If another party is paying the bill they must be set up as an Authorized Payer in QuikPAY so they will receive an email notification that a bill is available to be viewed. The text of the message will have a link which will bring them to QuikPAY where the Authorized payer can view and pay the bill. Payers will have their own login and password to access QuikPAY.

Students need to be sure that their UMass mailbox is not over quota in order to receive billing notifications.

You can contact the Bursar's Office at 413-545-2368 or you can contact us by email at bursar@admin.umass.edu.

YOU CAN'T MAKE UP YOUR INTERVIEW

After-grad careers, part-time jobs, and internships.

START BUILDING

☆cbcAmpus.com☆

Kelly leads forwards

FIELD HOCKEY from page 16

[with the lineup] defensively but our focus is on the Atlantic 10 Conference games, so we're trying to give as many people experience as possible."

Junior forward Cher King, one of the team's leading scorers last season, is having a slow start this season but is coming along to Sowry's liking and had a strong week of practice. King has one goal on the season out of nine shots while starting every game for the Maroon and White this season.

In last season's matchup against the Catamounts, King led the team in shots, so she knows the defense well this season. She brings consistent pressure on opposing defenses because of her agility and ball-handling skills. King is expected to have a breakout game this weekend.

"Vermont is traditionally an aggressive team and they usually get to the ball first," Sowry said of her experience against UVM. "That's something that we're really going to have to work hard at [repressing]."

Another aspect of the game that Sowry dissected in this week's practice is set plays, specifically, free hits around the circle. Thus far in the season, Sowry has let the team run on opposing defenses and uses its shear athleticism to win games, unlike her usual coaching style.

Sowry is notorious for using the entire field to play the ball. She likes to start in the backfield to gauge what type of defense her team is up against and then play from there. The speed is in the forward line, with King, sophomore Katie Kelly and forward Katelyn Orlando.

Kelly is having a career year, already surpassing her previous season highs in goals, assists and total points. Her strength and awareness on the ball gives the forward line for the Minutewomen a fluidity that is needed to finish plays in Sowry's system of play.

Another thing to watch for this weekend is the extended playing time of junior goalkeeper Sarah Williams.

Sowry started the season with freshman Alesha Widdall in goal, but Williams is proving her worth in practice and is slowly lobbying for more playing time. With Williams' experience in the system and Widdall's leadership skills, either goalkeeper is difficult for opponents to contend with.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

UM hosts first home meet

Minutemen hope to repeat success

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Staff

After a strong weekend, the Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams return home on Saturday to compete against Maine, Vermont and Colgate. The men will also take on Connecticut.

Last weekend, the Minutemen took third and the Minutewomen placed seventh, respectively, at the Dartmouth Invitational.

A home meet can improve a team's score by several points. This will be an advantage for the Minutemen, who missed out on second place by only two points last weekend. The Minutemen won this meet last year and they look forward to having the opportunity to repeat their success this weekend.

"Everyone is looking forward to the first home meet," UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien said.

The Minutemen competed well at the Dartmouth Invitational, led by junior Andrew Mulvaney, who will be a large contributor this weekend. Last weekend, Mulvaney finished running the 8,000 meters in 26 minutes, 18.50 seconds, just 18 seconds away from first, but fast enough for third place points.

In order to continue to compete at high levels, the Minutemen will need to repeat strong performances from sophomores Robert Deegan and Sean Duncan, who finished 10th and 11th in the 8K run, finishing .6 seconds behind each other.

"We have several runners capable of competing at high levels. The opponents this weekend are all strong up front and it will take at least five of our runners finishing within 20 or 30 seconds of each other [to finish where we would like]," O'Brien said.

The Minutemen are a balanced team and by using this to their advantage they will be able to have an extremely strong season.

The Minutewomen's competition this weekend will be equally as strong as they look to continue to improve and gain vital experience for seasons to come. UMass, made up primarily of sophomores, has a lot to look forward to and high goals to reach.

The top performer of this past weekend for the Minutewomen was sophomore Shiyi Zan. She finished eighth overall in the 5,000 meters with a time of 20:51.00.

Karen Roa and Jennifer Harkey are two promising freshmen that competed well last weekend. Roa finished 37th and Harkey took 54th overall in a field of 81 runners. These two will continue to grow and be leaders for the team.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.

Be sure to check out the Daily Collegian sports podcast on Friday previewing the big football game between UMass and Texas Tech.

Check it out online at www.dailycollegian.com.

Sisterhood rivalry for Collins

Defender versatile for Minutewomen

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

When freshman Meghan Collins takes the field with the Massachusetts women's soccer team against Providence on Sunday, she should be very familiar with the assignment of shutting down one of the Friars' top scorers.

That's because her twin sister, Courtney, will be playing off the bench for Providence (4-1).

Throughout their careers, they have played on the same team, in high school and club, FC Delco Pennsylvania. The sisters are used to playing midfield together and could've done the same for UMass (3-1-2) if Courtney chose to commit.

"It would've been fun because we play together pretty well," Meghan said. "It would've been just like high school."

She ultimately decided against continuing the tradition of playing on the same team as Meghan and committed to Providence. But Courtney's decision against playing for the Minutewomen didn't bother her.

"It really didn't matter to me if she was going to be [at UMass] or not because I was looking for the best fit and I think the same thing is true with her," Meghan said.

Although they grew up playing the same position, they are very different players and have opposite roles on their respective teams. Meghan is the lone freshman on defense for the Minutewomen in place of junior Katie Ruggles, who is currently out with an injury.

Coach Jim Rudy describes Meghan as an intelligent and versatile player who plays well beside seniors Tina Rodriguez and Melissa Toulouse.

"She has experience playing in the back, but we feel she's very flexible and she's filled in [for Ruggles] quite capably," Rudy said.

In her place, Meghan has done more than become a stopper for UMass. She also plays a role in the offense, recording two assists on long passes this season.

Meghan's skills so far have earned her a spot in the starting lineup where Rudy has given her the nod for three games.

Courtney has been an offensive spark for the Friars behind a veteran group of midfielders. Despite being in a limited role, she is tied with Tara Ricciardi, who has a team-high of three goals.

"[Courtney] is a very technical and skillful player," UMass coach Jim Rudy said.

She also played a key role in one of the wins for Providence, scoring the game-winner against Hartford in the Friars' 2-1 victory. Courtney scored the goal with 17 seconds left to put Providence over the top.

"I hear she's doing really well so I'm happy for her," Meghan said. "I know she's a good player."

Since the Collins sisters have packed their bags, they haven't had time to see each other and haven't talked much since leaving for school. Their separation is a big reason why Meghan looks at Sunday as more than just another game.

She is excited to be reunited with Courtney, even if she's playing for the other side.

"I've never played against her in my whole life so this is a first," Meghan said. "We're just excited."

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmiller@student.umass.edu.

Jack and Jill play vital role for UMass

Transfers have big impact on team

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

Last year, Jill Powers was left without a field hockey program at Rhode Island, while Jackie Tait left out of place in the program at Delaware. Now, the two have found a home with the Minutewomen after transferring to Massachusetts during the offseason.

Powers, now a junior, brings a new dimension of offense and energy to UMass while Tait, a sophomore, brings intelligence and leadership to the defense. Both are playing an enormous role for coach Justine Sowry in their first season with the Maroon and White.

"Certainly they know what college athletics are all about, having already experienced it," Sowry said. "Jackie in particular came from a solid program and her timing was really important for us because she was a defender and we lost a majority of our defense to graduation."

Sowry had equal praise for Powers.

"She's really added so much depth to the forward line," Sowry said. "Every game she really provides a punch for us. Her energy is fabulous and she adds another point of attack for us."

Tait and Powers were the right additions at the right time to a team that was devastated by graduation last year, particularly on defense. They provide a direct infusion of experience into a team that is young and still growing. With only Jaime Bourazeris returning to the back line and an offense that was less than outstanding a year ago, UMass was a great fit for the transfers.

"This team is awesome," Powers said. "It's just a totally different level. They hustle, they play everything full out and that's how I want to play."

While searching for other schools, both players immediately fell in love with UMass' coaching staff and players during their search for a new team.

"When I started the recruiting process again, I was looking at UMass and Michigan State," Tait said. "I just loved the coaching staff and the girls were awesome."

When Powers came to UMass from Rhode Island, she was forced to transition from an offensive centerpiece to more of a role player, starting only two of the six games thus far. Her new role has not limited her production, however, as Powers is currently second on the team with three goals.

The 5-foot-2 forward came in with high expectations. She was one of the premier scoring threats in the Atlantic 10 Conference before coming to UMass. At Rhode Island, she was named to the A-10 All-Rookie Team as a freshman and the A-10 Second Team All Conference as a sophomore.

"[Concerning] my expectations of her, she's fulfilling them and then some," Sowry said. "I thought she might have a difficult adjustment, but she's a fabulous team player and all the girls love her."

Tait, on the other hand, was a less-heralded addition, coming in during the spring and only after her freshman year at Delaware. That does not mean she receives any less praise than now, though. Tait has started every game for UMass and is currently tied for second on the team for shots on goal. More importantly, though, is her role on the team's back line.

"Jackie is certainly one of the leaders back there," Sowry said. "She is one of the most knowledgeable players on our team. So to have that in terms of outletting and starting the attack from the back is really important to our success."

Coming in, the players didn't know what to expect from their new team and had no idea what would be expected of them.

"I was so scared," Powers said. "But I didn't care. I just wanted to get better and I've already gotten so much better just being here."

"I didn't expect anything," Tait said. "I wanted to earn everything that I did coming in. I just wanted to work as hard as I could to just earn a spot and contribute to the team."

Tait and Powers have already become vital members of the Maroon and White and will help lead the Minutewomen in their weekend slate of games against Vermont and Brown.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Providence experienced

SOCCER from page 16

match on Sunday.

Providence's only loss came against Manhattan on Sept. 7, when the Friars lost, 2-1, in double overtime.

Providence held the Jaspers to a 1-0 lead going into the second half when Courtney McMahon nailed a shot from the top of the box. Aside from her tally, everything appeared to be going the Friars' way, restricting Manhattan to four shots the entire second half.

The Jaspers took one shot in both overtime periods, but that was all they needed as Christina Reina recovered the ball and put it in the back of the net.

Rudy believes that the Friars are a physical team, but aren't going to commit as many fouls as Holy Cross did in the Sept. 14 game (19). Providence did, however, finish its previous 2-1 win over Hartford with 15 fouls.

The Friars are a team that likes to be the first to every ball and will make hard tackles if they can get a desired outcome.

"From everything I've seen of [Providence], they are a very good group," Rudy said. "They are very well organized."

Historically, UMass seems to have the Friars number. The Minutewomen are 6-1-1 against Providence, but tied their previous game on Sept. 2 at 1-1 in double overtime.

That record does not mean anything to Rudy as the Friars have an experienced team. Their team consists mostly of returning players with the exception of five freshmen.

The team of seasoned veterans explains why they've had so much success on the offensive end, outscoring opponents, 11-4.

Providence's last game gave Hartford all sorts of problems getting to the end-line, allowing five shots and three corner kicks the entire game.

Injuries are going to be a concern once again for the Minutewomen as midfielder Vanessa Lima is currently dealing with a strained hamstring that she has had since at least Sept. 14 against the Crusaders.

One of the more versatile players on the team, freshman Meghan Collins is also battling a knee injury that she suffered during the Albany game. Rudy has not yet figured out what their status will be for Sunday's game, but any additional injuries are the last thing UMass needs right now.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmiller@student.umass.edu.

Eating Disorder Treatment

Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Comixxx

JORNALISM AT ITS FINEST

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers and kitchen help wanted. Weekends. Apply at D.P. Dough, downtown Amherst.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required: experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

Rent us your ears! $10/hr for participating in listening experiments. English must be your first language. 413-545-6837 Voicemail Phonetics_Lab@linguist.umass.edu

SERVICES

Condom Break? Get EC, Emergency Contraception prevents unintended pregancies up to 5 days after unprotected sex. Taperstry Health 27 Pray Street, Amherst 413-548-9992 Tapestryhealth.org

FOR RENT

2 bedroom plus den in duplex house $950. Also 3 bedroom townhouse two floor unit $1215. Both near bus stop. LaDonna @ 413-665-2203

ANNOUNCMENT

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S. Padre, Florida. Information/

ANNOUNCMENT

Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

Montreal Weekends From $99. Complete RoundTrip, Motorcoach. 3 days, 2 nights. Hotel Downtown. For Details MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

FREE RIDE

Free Ride to Church & Back. Please call Dwight Chapel at 256-8059 to arrange pick-up www.dwightchapel.org

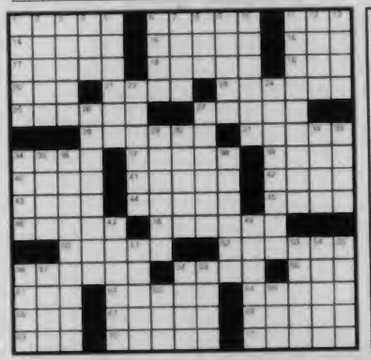
SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIEDS...

(413) 545 - 3500

ACROSS
1 Part of NYSE
6 Rock overhang
11 Mr. Shmoe
14 Paroxysm
15 Hi there!
16 Extremity
17 Inert gaseous element
18 Edmonton pro
19 Inc. abroad
20 Vote of support
21 Taking a siesta
23 Put to work
25 Ricks up vibes
27 Country on the Adriatic
28 Permits
31 Put on hold
34 By mouth
37 Wipe out
39 Wine vintage
40 Editor's mark
41 Come afterward
42 Dip chip
43 Adult elvers
44 Lenin father
45 Calligrapher's supply
46 Plein pennies
48 Boredom
50 Measure precisely
52 Get up and go
56 Poem section
58 Lougran of "Full House"
60 Time to remember
61 Kool
62 "Velcro Fly" group
64 Muscle
66 Blood type syst.
67 Military vacation
68 Bounding main
69 Apiece
70 City on the Ruhr
71 Colorful salamanders

DOWN
1 Sticks around
2 Crowd maker?
3 Bach's instrument
4 Talk sweetly
5 Rover's stopover
6 Rib nut
7 Hawaiian souvenirs
8 Aging
9 Naval force
10 Data structure
11 Colorful sugar coated candy
12 Not looked by
13 Bit of a whirl
22 Dead to the world
24 Recess, for example
26 Traveling rep
27 Put out
29 Elaborately decorated
30 Squander
32 Disarm
33 Greek Cupid
34 Dedicated poems
35 Cause a stench
36 Swamp thing
38 More macabre
47 Conundrum
49 One voice
51 Stares transfixed
53 Freshen up
54 Large in number
55 Sleepy signals
56 Crack
57 London underground
58 Tennis zero
59 Begin the bidding
63 Prof.'s aides
65 Cool cubes

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!



WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

peer pressure

all the cool kids are doing it

comics @ dailycollegian.com

ATKINS FARMS Country Market

Now Hiring

For The Fall & Holiday Seasons
Part-time Sales Associates and Production Assistants

All positions require evening, weekend and holiday availability

Customer service and food handling experience preferred

Come in to apply or contact Kelly at 253-9528 or kelly@atkinsfarms.com

Employment opportunities are also available on our website!

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

This is the doodle box.

No you idiot, it's for drawing pictures not...well it's not for what you tried to put in here. Sicko.

Old meat.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 3 | | | | 8 | 4 | | |
| 9 | | | | 2 | | | | 7 |
| 4 | | 2 | 9 | | | | 6 | |
| | 4 | | 1 | | | | | |
| | 5 | | 6 | | 7 | | 9 | |
| | | | | | 2 | | 8 | |
| | 8 | | | | 4 | 1 | | 3 |
| 3 | | | | 7 | | | | 2 |
| | | 1 | 3 | | | | 4 | |

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Your new iPod may be touch-sensitive and play video, but my new phonogram machine can play "Mary Had a Little Lamb."

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
When Domino's starts delivering delicious tacos to my door, all things will be right with the world. Take note, Domino.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
I think Forest Gump was an Aries. Make what you will of that.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Today at the mall you will buy jeans that are pre-torn, and a Cinnabon that is pre-consumed.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Behind your smiling, candy shell of a face is an inner core of disturbing peanut.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
No matter how many times they tell you that you'll never make it in the world of professional field hockey, you still want to prove them wrong.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Bring your enemies in to the fold this weekend with a lovely BBQ, and then tell them all to screw off.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You will cease being a fugitive today, and embrace the warm, cozy embrace of the criminal justice system.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't worry, people won't notice the stain, since it is cleverly camoflaged in food particles.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Let your boss know that you hate smell of the office since they hired Larry.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Today someone will rattle your cage. When they do, respond like any good primate would: Throwing fecal matter.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
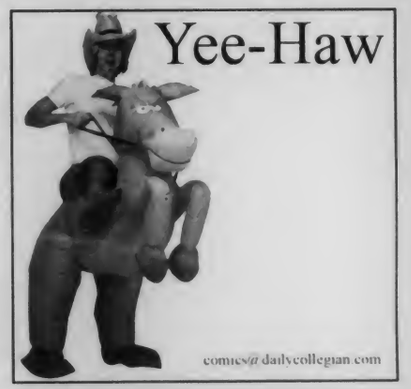
Another weekend, another chance to not shower for 48 hours.



THE ODYSSEY!
FOOD, FUN
CAMERA OBSCURA!
WEEKENDS & HOLIDAYS
10AM-5PM THRU NOV 2
S. MAIN STREET
RT. 47 SUNDERLAND
WWW.MIKESMAZE.COM
413-665-8331

QUOTE OF THE WEEKEND

"One person with a belief is equal to a force of 99 who have only interests."

— John Stuart Mill

BLISS BY HARRY BLISS

"Did I ever tell you how irresistible you are when you ignore me?"

INSIDE: MINUTEMEN LOSE BIG IN TEXAS | PAGE 14

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 66 LO: 42 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 2008

Noho org. recognized

By Rachel Dougherty
Collegian Staff

The Freedom Center, an organization in Northampton that offers alternative treatment programs for people diagnosed with psychiatric disorders, was recognized by Forbes magazine as its charity of the month.

The international business magazine is featuring Freedom Center's work on its Web site, http://www.forbes.com, until the end of Sept. This work includes a five minute video called "Freedom to Heal" by local filmmaker PJ Moynihan, which discusses problems with the mental health system in America. The Web site also features a link to "Healing Voices," an article written by Will Hall, who co-founded The Freedom Center with University of Massachusetts Alumnus Oryx Cohen.

"Healing Voices" documents Hall's experiences with schizoaffective schizophrenia and treatments ranging from psychiatric drugs to stays in mental institutions that helped lead him to create Freedom Center. The article gained attention when it was featured as the top-rated story on Forbes' Web site for the first four days after it was posted, giving the organization an opportunity to try to receive more funding.

"Right now we're working with a budget of about $20,000 a year, which isn't a lot, but I believe that the Freedom Center has unlimited potential for expansion. I'd like to see it used as a model for helping psychiatric illness around the world," Cohen said.

The center, which is supported by the nonprofit organization CHOICES and run by volunteers who are living with psychiatric disorders themselves, celebrated the Forbes recognition and its seven-year anniversary with an open party titled "the Lucky 7 Psychosocial" at the World War II Club in Northampton this Saturday. The party featured a screening of Moynihan's film, performances by the "Noho Hooperstars," "Bucket Benny" and local DJ Black Angus and food provided by the Alternative Food Company. Although the event was free to the public, $10 donations

See FREEDOM on page 3

Writers rally for Obama

By William McGuinness
Collegian Staff

William Taubman signs his book "Khrushchev: the Man and His Era," to benefit for the Obama campaign. Authors provided their own books to be autographed and sold.

NORTHAMPTON – Presidential candidate Barack Obama has been told he talks too much.

Critics across the United States say the country needs action rather than the ability to dazzle Americans with rhetoric on hope and change to make both come about. So area writers came together yesterday at the Hotel Northampton for an event titled, "Writers for Obama," to take the microphone and make Obama's case for him.

Around 11 speakers presented on topics ranging from William Taubman's "A Biographer's Take on Obama's Autobiography" to Anita Shreve's "Startled. Thrilled. Beyond Thrilled. Anxious. Exhilarated. Crying. Waiting. Still Waiting. Furious. Aghast. Worried. Deeply Worried," which chronicled her personal reactions to aspects of the race so far.

The night was organized by a host of Pioneer Valley residents, most notably Lisa and Gordon Tripp and Pulitzer Prize winner and University of Massachusetts journalism professor Madeleine Blais. The event raised around $26,000, according to Gordon Tripp and has gone "viral" according to Blais, as similar events are expected in other locations throughout the country.

Blais said the past eight years have been a "particular affliction" for writers.

"It's as if we've been trapped in a bad, bad book," she said.

Many of the writers had no inclination to become politically active before, but several communicated a desire to do something more – to participate in finishing the plot of a Republican-controlled White House.

As a poet and a professor in the English Department, Martin Espada has made a career out of finding the perfect words. Quoting Herbert Hill, who taught him at the University of Wisconsin, he said, "Ideas have consequences."

Hill was the national labor director for the NAACP and saw the effects of his own words in the Civil Rights Movement. Espada said these ideas are composed of words and believes them to be the catalyst of something greater.

As he stood before a crowd of around 170 people, he said, "No change for the good ever happens without being imagined first."

He later expanded saying, "One of the things I admire about Obama is his lyricism, his capacity to inspire other people and to bring out the best from them."

Espada said poets come into the political climate when change for the better is needed.

"This is where we can come in and articulate that vision of a better place, a better world," he said.

Writers for Obama is a small swatch of a broader state campaign. The addition of a field office in the Thornes market in Northampton is testament to the area's membership to something larger.

Tom Lesser, a member of the New England Steering Committee of Obama for America, commented on the

See OBAMA on page 3

Fraternity hosts charity event

Students participated in a basketball tournament to raise money for the Youth AIDS campaign at the basketball court in Southwest Residential Area over the weekend.

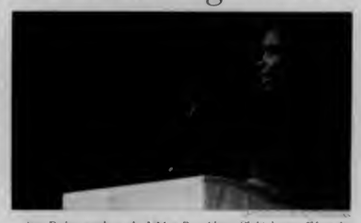
Members of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity raised around $900 for the Youth AIDS campaign through a basketball tournament this weekend.

Organizers and fraternity brothers Mike Fox and Jeremy Rumeld hosted 18 teams on Saturday afternoon that each paid between $15 and $25 to participate. The teams vied for the top prize that included $100 in cash, a pair of sneakers for each player from G-Force Athletics and two cases of Rockstar energy drinks.

G-Force, Rockstar and Campuslive.com were top sponsors.

Each team could match three players against another team's three. Two substitutes were permitted per team.

The difference in funds raised and those from entry fees came from spectators who wandered towards the Southwest Residence Area basketball courts, drawn in by DJ Adam Gabel's sirenic spinning.



Participants and spectators alike enjoyed characteristically superb late summer weather.

In the end, the "Goons" won the top prize, but Fox said, "We were just happy to organize a philanthropic event that so much of the student body was able to enjoy."

– William McGuinness

Star Parker speaks at UMass, shares tips for achieving success

By Shadie Amosun
Collegian Staff

Star Parker speaks at the UMass Republican Club's lecture "How the Poor Get Rich" at Bowker Auditorium Thursday night.

Founder and President of the Coalition on Urban Renewal and Education Star Parker spoke against the American welfare system and offered tips that Americans should follow to become wealthy at the University of Massachusetts' Stockbridge Hall Thursday evening.

Around 80 people attended the talk, which was hosted by the UMass Republican Club.

"I've given speeches to smaller crowds and over the years I've learned it's not about the number of people who attend, but about the message," Parker responded when asked about the small number of people in attendance.

Parker founded the non-profit think tank, more commonly known as CURE in 1995 to jumpstart the discussion of issues regarding race and poverty in the media, inner city neighborhoods and public policy. Parker provides regular testimony for the U.S. Congress and has been featured as a commentator on Fox News, CNN and MSNBC. She has also appeared as a guest on a number of shows such as 20/20, the Oprah Winfrey Show and The View.

Parker, once a single welfare mother living in Los Angeles before returning to college get her bachelor's degree in marketing, is now widely recognized for her

See PARKER on page 3

Food options for students on their own for the first time

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

A plate of buffalo wings, though not the most nutricious of meals, is a staple of the average college student's diet.

For many fellow upperclassmen, the fall semester marks the first time we've lived on our own. The dorms don't count. Apartments are conducive to independent living in a manner to which the dorms can only vaguely aspire. With apartments come landlords, multiple roommates and above else – the end of meal plans.

As we wean ourselves off the latter, plenty of scary thoughts ensue. It's a big, tough, expensive world out there. Now we have to cook, too? Some don't see cooking as a problem. Others see cooking as a disaster in the making. Luckily for both groups, there are meals out there which don't demand much in the way of money or skill.

Ramen
Health Scale: 1.5 (with vegetables)

A college staple as old as the university itself, ramen noodles. Even back in 1863, the students of Mass. Agricultural College were probably partaking in creamy chicken and oriental packets of this stuff. The good thing about a bowl of college's national dish is that it's easy to prepare. Buying in bulk can also guarantee that you'll never

See FOOD on page 7

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2008 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM hopes to extend streak

Last match before A-10 play begins

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team will finish its final game before the Atlantic 10 schedule on Sunday against Providence. UMass will meet the Friars after completing a three-game winning streak, with their latest win against Albany.

Sophomore Therese Smith scored two goals to put the Minutewomen (3-1-2) over the top in regulation. It wasn't the overall effort that UMass coach Jim Rudy would've liked, but he'll take all the wins he can get at this point – especially if it means a chance to earn a wildcard berth in the NCAA tournament down the road.

Although winning the A-10 tournament is the most direct way of getting into the NCAA tournament, Rudy said it is possible to make a case for playing past Nov. 9 if UMass can beat teams with winning records.

That possibility is not something the Minutewomen are going to worry about anytime soon, but it does give them a reason to work equally as hard at beating Providence (4-1) as they did in their previous three wins.

"I think [playing Providence] is going to be our toughest game of the year," Rudy said of the Sophomore Kelsey Anderson and the Minutewomen hope to continue their five-game unbeaten streak when they play Providence on Sunday. This will be UMass' last game before Atlantic 10 play begins.

See SOCCER on page 13

Junior forward Cher King has one goal this season. The Minutewomen's offense has been working this season to make up for the lack of experience at defense.

Defense still undetermined

UMass takes on Vermont Saturday

By Mike Gilmeister
Collegian Staff

This one-game weekend will be a welcome change from last weekend's weather-torn games for the Massachusetts field hockey team. The conditions for this weekend's game in Amherst, against the Catamounts (3-2) should be less hectic than that of last weekend.

Last season, the upstart Catamounts defeated the Minutewomen (4-2) when UVM was 5-0 to start the season. However, a leading factor in that contest was the midgame departure of starting goalkeeper Becky Letourneau.

As has been the story all season, UMass brings a new team that has relied on its offense to make up for the holes on the back line made by graduating seniors. As of right now, that line is still not set in stone.

UMass coach Justine Sowry spent most of the week alternating practices between skills and team flaws, enhancing continuity. Sowry is still tinkering with the back line, with the only constants being sophomores Jaime Bourazeris and Jackie Tait. Tait rolled her ankle toward the end of last Sunday's double-overtime thriller against Harvard (1-3) but ran fine in practice all week long.

"We're still fairly young [in the season] having only played six games," Sowry said of the experience of her defense. "I think the midfield line is pretty solid and our forward line [is as well.] We're still playing around

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 12

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 15

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Ales Waszczuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Stephanie McPherson
Copy Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Melissa Garber
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenwaike
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor Brian Tedder
Web Editor Victor Jaeck
Asst. Business Manager William Mullholland
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kuczwara
Asst. Arts & Living Heather Weitzman
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial Leigh Greaney
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Assistant News Stella Cernak
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Sports Melissa Tuttiven
Assistant photo P.J. Stanley

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1902, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and in the 1930's Collegian in name. Publication daily since 1967. For subscription information, see Classified section. Rates and information, call Manager between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITORS
Michael King

COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michael Sarkes, Paula LaValle

Community Clips

Education Abroad Fair (International Programs Office)

Have you been dreaming about studying abroad, traveling the world and meeting people from other countries? Well, wake up and make it happen!
Mon Sept. 22, 2008, 4:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

Talk: David Maraniss "Playing for Keeps: Race, Sports, and Politics"

Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist David Maraniss' most recent book is Rome 1960: The Olympics That Changed the World.
Mon Sept. 22, 2008, 4:30 p.m.
Flavin Auditorium - Isenberg 137

Dinner on Us: Dinnertime Workshops for Families with Infants and Young Children

This week's speaker is Dr. Ilana Schmitt, M.D., from University Health Services.
Mon Sept. 22, 2008, 5:30 p.m.
Student Union

Live Music at the DCs

Meet award winning singer-songwriter Jason LeVasseur Monday at Berkshire DC or Tuesday at Worcester DC from 6-8 p.m.
Mon Sept. 22 to Tue Sept. 23, 2008
Berkshire Dining Commons

Autumnal Equinox at the Sunwheel

Witness the sunrise and sunset over the tall standing stones at the University of Massachusetts Sunwheel for the Autumnal Equinox.
Mon Sept. 22 to Tue. Sept. 23, 2008
Sunwheel

Australia Study Abroad Information Session

Interested in studying abroad in Australia? Come to this info session to find out how.
Tue Sep 23, 2008, 4:00 p.m.
Hills (South) 455

Meditation
Free seminar, Rising Above Body Consciousness
Sept. 23, 7-9 p.m., Bangs Community Center, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst.
413-587-9670.
Winter Break Trip to India Information Session

Come learn about the Five College Tibetan Studies in India Program.
Tue Sep 23, 2008, 4:30 p.m.
Campus Center 903

Racquetball Lessons

Participate in a 6-week Racquetball course with Jennifer Lynch.
Tue Sept. 23, 2008, 7:00 p.m.
Mullins Center

Lecture: Jonathan Safran Foer

Jonathan Safran Foer, author of the best-selling novel Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close, will speak.
Tue Sept. 23, 2008, 7:00 p.m.
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall

A Mind of Her Own:
Fathers and Daughters in Jewish Literature
Book discussion series
Sept. 23, 7 p.m.
Jones Library, 43 Amity Street, Amherst.
Free; preregistration required
Beth Girshman, 259-3168 or girshman@joneslibrary.org.

Faculty Recital: Elizabeth Chang, Violin

A faculty recital featuring violinist Elizabeth Chang, with guest pianist Judith Gordon.
Tue Sept. 23, 2008, 8:00 p.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall

Weekly Satsang
Hadley Yoga Studio hosts free session. Meditation, moving into song, readings.
Tuesdays, 7:30-8:30 p.m.
Hadley Health Center, 234 Russell St., Hadley.
323-5183.

Welcome Back Pancake Breakfast & Coffee Bar

Start your year off with flapjacks and funnies!
Wed Sept. 24, 2008, 8:30 a.m.
Memorial Hall

Farmers' Market at the DCs

Sample local roast turkey, wild sustainable salmon, portobello mushrooms, mixed grill summer vegetables (local) and fresh, local corn on the cob.
Wed Sept. 24, 2008, 5:00 p.m.
All Dining Commons

Corporate Internship Information Session

Learn about a great internship opportunity at TJX Inc.
Wed. Sept. 24, 2008, 6:00 p.m.
Malcolm X Cultural Center

Environmental Lecture Series: Building Green Communities

"Five Houses: Sustainability Redefined" with Stephen Kieran and "Adventures in Prefabrication" with Tedd Benson.
Thur Sept. 25, 2008, 4:00 p.m.
Campus Center Room 163

Lecture: The Physics of Blackness: Reconsidering the African Diaspora in the Postwar Era

The first of six lectures in the W.E.B. DuBois Lecture Series entitled "Race and the New Europe: Black Europeans."
Thurs Sept. 25, 2008, 4:00 pm
Campus Center 101

Pa Kua Chang & Tai Chi Chuan: Internal Kung Fu at UMass

The UMass Inner Arts Club offers comprehensive training in Pa Kua, Tai Chi, and related practices for health and self-defense year round.
Thurs Sept. 25, 2008, 6:00 p.m.
Outdoors, UMass Amherst Campus

Peace Corps Information Session

Learn more about opportunities with the Peace Corps.
Thurs Sept. 25, 2008, 7:00 p.m.
Library, W.E.B. Du Bois 1320

Willa Cather Speaks: The Making of My Antonia
Pocumtuck Valley Memorial Association presents one-woman show by Betty Jean Steinhouer
Sept. 26, 8 p.m.,
Academy of Music, 274 Main St., Northampton.
$10 general; $5 seniors; students and children fee.

America in Decline? Conference
Sept. 26-27
Amherst College Alumni House, Churchill St., Amherst. Free and open to the public. 542-8417.

UMass Amherst Invention to Venture 2008

A fast-paced day of practical information and networking opportunities that can help take your ideas to commercialization.
Sat Sept. 27, 2008, 8:00 a.m.
Engineering Lab II Auditorium

22nd Annual Apple Harvest & Crafts Festival

A vast array of juried crafters will be in attendance.
Sat Sept. 27, 2008, 10:00 a.m.
Amherst Town Common

A Night of Hip Hop on Stage

Featuring two of the most inspirational spoken word women, Queen Godis and Vanessa Hidary.
Sat. Sept. 27, 2008, 7:00 p.m.
Bowker Auditorium

Publication praises Northampton center

FREEDOM from page 1

were suggested.

"The Freedom Center is unique in model; there aren't a lot of organizations like it. And it's one of the top alternative treatment centers, not just in the area, but in the world, according to the International Network Toward Treatment Alternatives for Recovery," Cohen said.

Cohen and Hall, whose own experiences with mental illness had left them disillusioned with the American mental health system, wanted to create a program that would offer an alternative to the traditional approach of treating diseases like schizophrenia, bipolar and obsessive-compulsive disorders, which are often treated in the U.S. with powerful anti-psychotic drugs. The Freedom Center, which began in 2001 as a monthly support group at a local church, has expanded to include an acupuncture clinic, two yoga classes, a writing group, a meditation group and two peer support groups.

"What the Freedom Center offers are role models. People come to us with mental illnesses that they have been told they will never recover from and we give them a model of what recovery can look like," Cohen said.

When asked whether the center can help patients to lead normal, stable lives, Cohen responded, "what we're doing is questioning the whole idea of what is a stable, normal life. What does it mean to be crazy in a crazy world? People suffer, people hear voices, but a lot of us see that as normal in a world afflicted with war, extreme poverty, domestic abuse."

Rachel Dougherty can be reached at rdougher@student.umass.edu

Accupuncture is one of many services offered at the Freedom Center.

'How the poor get rich,' according to Parker's speech

PARKER from page 1

conservative beliefs. She has also written three books, "Pimps, Whores and Welfare Brats," "Uncle Sam's Plantation" and "White Ghetto."

During Thursday's presentation, Parker exuded a mixture of passion and a sense of humor when discussing the five steps she felt people should take to become wealthy. Although she admits that these steps will not guarantee a person wealth, they will "lead people in the right direction."

The first step of the Parker's five-step plan is "Personal Responsibility." According to Parker, people rely too much on others and in order to help themselves progress in life, they must understand what they need and go after it themselves. Parker spoke in favor of the abolishment of Women, Infants and Children (WIC) program which provides federal aid for food, health care and nutritional education for low-income women and their children, as well as other welfare programs. She also said that nutrition health education classes should become mainstreamed to enforce the notion of personal responsibility.

Parker's second step is that people should create or join a healthy work environment. Her third step is to get an education, not necessarily through college, but one where a person can pick up traits that can lead them to success. Her fourth step is for people to take ownership of their society, meaning that work in America should stay in America and businesses should no longer be indirectly run by the government but by the people who open and manage small businesses.

Finally, Parker's fifth step is that people give to charity. Parker said that it's good for people of higher income levels to give to people of lower income because it is "through giving that people receive good karma."

Afterwards, Parker answered questions from the audience and some people in attendance expressed disagreement with her speech, particularly her dislike for welfare. Parker responded by saying that the poverty rate would not increase if welfare was abolished, but that it would make people less lazy and more eager to work.

Shade Amasian can be reached at tamasian@student.umass.edu

A renowned conservative, Star Parker, spoke against welfare and assistance programs at UMass last week.

Plane crash under investigation

Ex-Blink 182 drummer Barker and DJ AM in critical condition

By Kristy Eppley Rupon and Rick Brundrett
McClatchy Newspapers (MCT)

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Federal investigators will continue collecting evidence Sunday from a fiery Learjet crash at Columbia Metropolitan Airport in South Carolina that killed four and critically injured performers Travis Barker and DJ AM late Friday night.

The plane was headed to California after the duo had performed a free concert for thousands of area residents in Five Points, S.C.

Airport traffic controllers reported seeing sparks coming from the plane as it taxied down the approximately 8,600-foot-long runway at about midnight Friday, National Transportation Safety Board spokeswoman Debbie Hersman said, though she couldn't provide specifics.

"Parts of the plane and rubber were found on the runway," she said.

Investigators recovered the plane's cockpit voice recorder, which will be sent to Washington, D.C. for analysis to determine whether there were any conversations between the pilot and co-pilot prior to the crash, who died along with two of the plane's passengers, Hersman said late Saturday.

"I have every confidence that we will be able to determine the probable cause of this accident regardless of whether or not the cockpit voice recorder data is good," Hersman said.

Investigators likely won't know for weeks what caused the crash at the end of runway 11.

The private charter plane flew into Columbia, S.C., at about 11:10 p.m. Friday from Teterboro, N.J., to pick up the passengers and take them to Van Nuys, Calif., according to authorities and flight records. The plane refueled before it left New Jersey, Hersman said. It was at the Columbia airport for about 45 minutes before the attempted takeoff.

The jet never got off the ground, crashing at 11:53 p.m. into lights and through the fence at the end of the runway. It traveled across S.C. 302 and crashed into an embankment on the other side, bursting into flames, authorities said.

Hersman described the crash as a "high-speed overrun," though investigators have not yet determined the actual speed. She said the plane traveled "pretty much" in a straight line down the runway.

Killed in the crash were two members of Barker's entourage - personal assistant Chris Baker, 29, of Studio City, Calif. and bodyguard Charles Still, 25, of Los Angeles. Pilot Sarah Lemmon, 31, of Anaheim Hills, Calif. and co-pilot James Bland, 52, of Carlsbad, Calif. also died, Lexington County Coroner Harry Harman said.

Eyewitness William Owens told WIS-TV that he was driving on S.C. 302 Friday night when he saw a fireball go across the road about 800 feet in front of him.

Owens said he stopped his car and saw DJ AM, 35, whose real name is Adam Goldstein, and Barker, 32, standing in the middle of the road. He said Barker's pants were on fire and he was trying to extinguish the flames.

"We turned to the jet to try and see if there was anything we could do, but immediately, there was nothing anyone could do," Owens said. "I felt ill or sick to think that these lives were snuffed out at that point."

The only other known witnesses were in the control tower, NTSB spokesman Peter Knudson said. But he said sometimes it takes a while for witnesses to come forward in crashes.

The partially burned jet sat on the embankment Saturday at the end of a long, black streak of burned jet fuel across S.C. 302. Federal investigators, who arrived on the scene around 11 a.m., surveyed the crash site and collected evidence to help determine the cause of the crash.

Hersman said the weather was clear with a slight breeze Friday night.

The Learjet 60 was manufactured in 2006 and certified to fly in 2007. It was owned by Inter Travel and Services Inc., based in Irvine, Calif. and was operated by Global Executive Aviation in Long Beach, Calif., Hersman said.

Maintenance records were sealed and on their way to Columbia Saturday from California, Knudson said, adding it could take a couple of days for the records to reach investigators here.

"We have not yet found anything, but we are looking at everything. Nothing has been ruled out at this point. We will be looking

See PLANE CRASH on page 4

Officials wait to investigate a private jet crash carrying six people near the Columbia Airport in West Columbia, South Carolina, on Saturday.

Writers back Obama

OBAMA from page 1

Obama's appeal beyond the Valley.

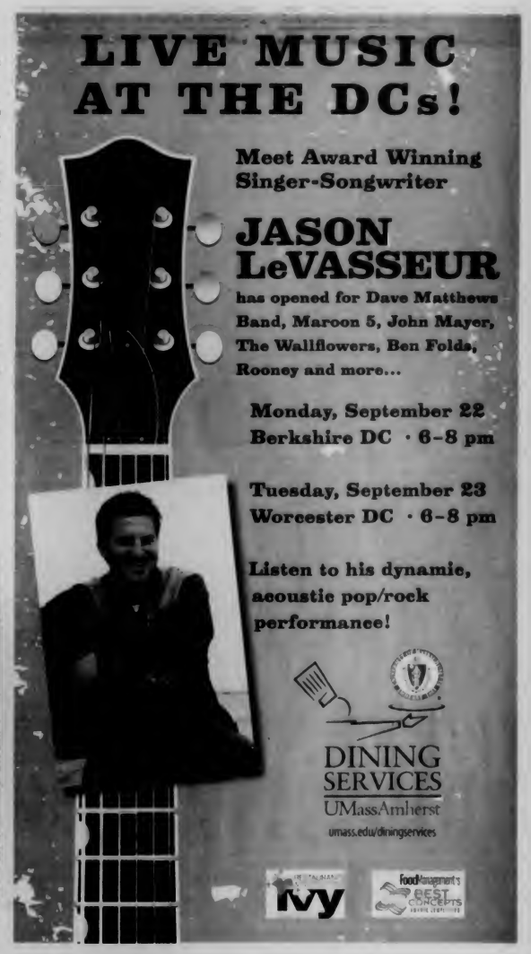
Sen. John Kerry (D-Mass.) registered 700,000 new democratic voters in his 2004 run, Obama, Lesser said, has signed up around 10 million.

Students, many of whom are participating in their first election, make up a large chunk of this demographic and the Obama campaign is pushing to make sure they are on his side.

Roger Fisk, the chair of the Massachusetts branch of Obama's presidential campaign, noted the strong student support from students attending local colleges.

"Youth energy caught on so early," Fisk said. Yet, he added that energy needs to manifest itself in votes.

Noting that students come to Massachusetts' schools from all over the United States, Fisk said events like Writers for Obama do much to address universal concerns that affect the entire nation. Home state be damned, Fisk said, student loans, tuition and the economy are universal problems that should be talked about especially if someone in the conversation is from a swing state.



(Left to right) Authors Jonathan Harr, John Katzenbach and Elinor Lipman watch speakers present at "Writers for Obama."

Though he said campaigns should be run as if they were losing, Massachusetts historically votes blue. He said a network of supporters that include not only Writers for Obama but also Sportsmen for Obama, Lawyers for Obama and other groups help to prevent the color from reddening.

"To assume anything is folly," Fisk said.

William McGuinness can be reached at news@dailycollegian.com

Barker and DJ AM in crash

PLANE CRASH from page 4

at the man, the machine and the environment to help us explain this accident," Hersman said.

The agency will investigate the pilots' records and what they had been doing 72 hours before the crash, a routine part of such investigations, Hersman said. The agency also will review paperwork, physical evidence and eyewitness accounts to help determine what caused the crash, she said, adding the S.C. Highway Patrol and the FBI are assisting in the investigation.

The two survivors, Barker and Goldstein, were taken by ambulance to Palmetto Health Richland and then to the Joseph M. Still Burn Center in Augusta, Ga., where they were listed in critical condition Saturday.

The crash shut down air traffic to and from Columbia Metropolitan all day Saturday, leaving hundreds of passengers scrambling for another way to their destinations. The airport's other runway is under construction through the end of November and could not be opened to accommodate airplanes.

The investigation also closed down a portion of S.C. 302 Saturday; Hersman said that stretch would remain closed until Monday night.

Fire and police units from the airport, Lexington County and the city of Cayce responded to the crash site Friday night to extinguish the flames and help the victims.

The fatal crash was the second at the airport in less than two years.

On Jan. 4, 2007, three Columbia-area men were killed when their single-engine Cessna crashed in woods on airport property while trying to land in foggy weather.

Former Blink 182 drummer Travis Barker performs with DJ-AM, as part of the TRVS DJ-AM collaboration, during the T-Mobile Block Party, in Columbia, South Carolina over the weekend.

California gay marriage question heads to vote

BY STEVEN HARMON
CONTRA COSTA TIMES (MCT)

SACRAMENTO, Calif. – The stakes of the ballot drive to forbid same-sex marriage reach far beyond California's geographic and political borders in what has emerged as another chapter in America's culture wars.

Christian groups, wealthy benefactors and self-styled pro-family groups from all over the nation are watching closely – and weighing in with money. Gay-rights groups and wealthy individuals are countering with their own cash from across the country.

In the past eight weeks, combatants in the Proposition 8 battle have poured in more than $20 million to gear up for an all-out confrontation about whether the nation will begin to move toward tolerance of same-sex marriages - or to preserve traditional views of marriage.

"It's a defining issue for this state and the country," said Brian Brown, executive director for the National Organization for Marriage, a New Jersey-based Mormon group with a branch in California that has contributed nearly $1 million to the Yes on 8 campaign. The outcome of the battle, he said, "will affect what our children will be taught about marriage and it will affect our religious liberties."

Opponents say the campaign to defeat the ballot measure is a fight for gay rights around the country.

"I really think this is our Gettysburg," Kathy Levinson, a Silicon Valley philanthropist and gay-rights activist who pledged this month to match $100,000 in donations to the No on 8 campaign, said.

"If Proposition 8 passes, we'd lose a generation of time. If we as a perceived liberal and tolerant state lose this battle, many smaller states will feel permission to say 'not yet.' If it fails, it's a statement that says the country has changed, that full acceptance of gay and lesbian citizens has come and it would be perceived as a watershed moment."

Thousands of Californians have contributed to the Yes on 8 campaign, according to campaign finance statements on the secretary of state's web Site. But the big money has come from out-of-state groups such as Connecticut-based Knights of Columbus ($1.275 million), a Catholic men's organization, the National Organization for Marriage ($921,000), Mississippi-based American Family Association ($500,000) and Colorado-based Focus on the Family ($414,000), whose chairman is James Dobson, the evangelical Christian whose syndicated radio show is heard by millions.

Wealthy and well-connected individuals have pitched in. Elsa Prince, the matriarch of a powerful Michigan Republican family, donated $250,000 to the Yes on 8 campaign. She's the mother of Eric Prince, the co-founder of Blackwater Worldwide – the controversial private military and security contractor.

Betsy DeVos, the Republican activist whose family has contributed millions to conservative causes, also contributed.

Opponents have their heavy hitters too, including Republican Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, who hasn't contributed to the campaign but has voiced his opposition to the initiative. The top contributor to the No on 8 campaign, Equality California ($3.6 million), is its sponsor. Others include Washington, D.C.-based Human Rights Campaign ($2.3 million), Robert Wilson, a New York philanthropist ($1.2 million) and Bruce Bastian, a gay Mormon from Utah and co-founder of WordPerfect ($1 million).

Pacific Gas & Electric, the California Teachers Association and the California State Council of Service Employees each donated $250,000 to the No on 8 cause. Steve Westly, the former state controller and Democratic gubernatorial candidate, has donated $5,000.

Twenty-seven states have constitutional amendments outlawing same-sex marriages – 11 approved by voters in 2004, when the issue became a central part of President Bush's re-election, and seven more in 2006.

Three more states – California, Arizona and Florida – have the issue on November's ballot. Massachusetts and California are the only states that recognize same-sex marriages.

"If it passes, it will send the message that activist judges can't change the law," Sherman Doll, a financial adviser from Concord, Massachusetts said.

He and his wife, Linda, have contributed $10,000 to the 'Yes on 8' campaign.

"If it fails, it says that California has chosen to change the definition of marriage to the point that it's meaningless. Marriage will be any type of relationship that any person or group of persons choose," he said.

that the state should not be licensing immoral behavior," Hout said. "In their interpretation of the Bible, they see a prohibition on homosexual activity. Gay marriage condones a lifestyle that's ruled out by their reading of the Scripture."

ADVERTISEMENT

AN HONEST LOOK AT JUSTICE FOR JASON

Author's Note: After publishing what I feel was an inaccurate and misleading column, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, according to policy, did not find it possible to publish this clarification in its present form, without editorial intervention. They were however, kind enough to allow us to purchase space so that the community can have accurate information on this case.

That The Collegian would publish, apparently without question or reservation Alana Goodman's column, "A New Look at Justice for Jason," last Friday is, I feel, unfortunate, irresponsible, misleading and deeply troubling.

Full disclosure: I do have an interest in this case – simple justice.

I am a UMass undergraduate, an Asian-American, an acquaintance of Jason Vassell, President of the SGA, and I am active in the coalition of valley citizens, students and faculty whom Ms. Goodman characterizes dismissively as "furious activists." That's nonsense. I fail to recognize myself, or any of the people involved – some of them very senior and distinguished faculty – in that description.

Ms. Goodman then alleges the Justice for Jason (JFJ) committee has "neglected to report numerous important details" and that we "have been issuing a fragmented and skewered recap of events" by suggesting that we are trying to "collect donations and support from sympathetic students" and "to prey on the emotions of the community." According to Ms. Goodman, we are predatory liars and you, the community, are gullible idiots.

These are very serious charges, going to the decency and integrity of all of us. But even worse, not content with slandering the group, Ms. Goodman subjects Jason Vassell, whom I know to be a decent, sensitive and truthful young man, and the only true victim in this whole mess to a most unconscionable character assassination. I find that indecent and unforgivable.

Ms. Goodman attempts to cover her reckless and irresponsible slanders with a veneer of truth by using carefully selected "quotes" from "The Police Report" as well as references to the surveillance tapes of the incident. This is very authoritative sounding except for one thing, there is not one single "Police Report." In fact, there are a number of them and, as I am told, each gives vastly differing accounts. I wonder which of these "reports" she is using to base these assertions and accusations. None of us from the committee for Justice for Jason have seen any of these accounts from the various police reports because the UMass police will not release them since they are potential evidence in the continuing criminal cases. So, if Ms. Goodman did see a report, who gave it to her? How did she come by it? And lastly, by what authority does she publicize what she alleges to be it's content?

The same questions ring true regarding the surveillance tapes that are also evidence in these cases. In fact, the only copies of these tapes are with the UMass police, the prosecution, and the defense lawyers, and as such, public viewing of these tapes is strictly prohibited by law. Thus, we can safely assume that Ms. Goodman has not seen them either; that is, unless there has been a serious breach of the law governing evidence by one of the parties to the case. Besides which—so we are informed—the quality of these tapes is exceedingly poor. So, what Ms. Goodman presents so glibly as "fact", is at best an interpretation and at worst a calculatedly biased account based upon tapes which she has not even seen.

I want to be very clear that we, the JFJ committee, have always been extremely careful to report only those unchallenged facts which have been confirmed by eyewitness reports or which have come out in open court, and are therefore in the public domain. Anything that was in dispute, allegations contradicted by disinterested eyewitnesses, rumors or hearsay, or evidence proscribed by law – to which in any case we would not have access – we have not put out. Consequently, Ms. Goodman's expectation that the surveillance tapes be put on our Web site is so transparently ignorant as to be laughable. This has been done out of respect for you, for ourselves, for the truth, and from a desire to not do something that might negatively affect Jason's defense and his future. Our intention has always been to tell you the truth as far as it is humanly possible to ascertain at this point.

What, then, are Ms. Goodman's motives and methods? Well, let us see.

Her version has Jason, masked and armed with a knife and clothes iron out on campus with "an unknown Latino male" accomplice "yelling racial slurs" at his victims, Bowes and Bosse, before "Vassell attacked" them. In fact, those are flat out lies told by the intruders (Bowes and Bosse) to the police. What Ms. Goodman neglects to tell you is that Bowes' attorneys are now desperately trying to suppress those very statements, which he first gave the police in order to keep them out of evidence at his trial. Why is this? We shall no doubt see. But, more to the point, why is Ms. Goodman now so irresponsibly circulating them to you?

What are the known facts, as asserted by the defense in open court at the first hearing and conceded to by the prosecution? Jason Vassell did not leave his dormitory that night. He was in his room when Bowes and Bosse appeared at his window. Both men uttered racial insults and threats of violence. One of the men kicked Jason's window in. In fact, the next day the smashed window was marked by yellow, crime-scene tape and guarded by a UMass police officer. (None of these facts are disputed by the state).

Later when Jason opened the door to admit his friend, said the attorney referring to the surveillance tapes, the two intruders rushed into the lobby and attacked him, striking him to the head. They continued to circle "like animals," striking at Jason until he managed to escape behind the locked door. (Also not contested by the state). According to eyewitnesses, the two intruders were screaming for Jason to come back out to finish the fight, and were pounding on the locked door. (The state did not dispute this either, saying they did not contest these facts.)

Many of us sitting in court that day who witnessed this exchange felt that the prosecution was in effect conceding the truth of Jason's account to us. It also seemed clear that had Jason not swung the knife he would have been far more seriously injured. As it was, he suffered a broken nose and a serious concussion, and actually lost consciousness in the police car on the way to the hospital. His assailants, however, who Ms. Goodman states were "stabbed nine times" and "seriously injured by Vassell," were still pounding on the door and seeking to continue the fight when the police arrived. I am confident that when the medical evidence is introduced at the trial, the nature and placement of these wounds will reveal much about what actually happened through denouncing the false information that Jason pursued his fleeing victims, and gratuitously stabbed them nine times as Ms. Goodman clearly wishes us to believe.

It should be clear from her methods that Ms. Goodman is not interested in seeking the truth here, as there is a clear pattern to what she omits, what she presents as "fact," and how she presents what she does in her article. Her many disclaimers, the "apparently" the "seems tos", and the "if this is trues" do not insulate her from the false or questionable information she is cynically recycling. She must have devoted a significant amount of time and energy to attempt to spread confusion and to discredit our committee's work and honesty. I am interested to know just what she is attempting to accomplish, and why.

In one of the statements Bowes' attorneys are now trying to suppress, he claims to have been on our campus "visiting friends" and admitted to having consumed 11 beers. (I wonder if he admitted to 11, who knows what the true number might be.) But, if Ms. Goodman is among the friends he visited on campus, she should tell us. Then we could at least understand her zeal in defending him even at risk of dividing this community along racial lines even more so than it already is.

She sneers at our characterization of Jason Vassell as "law-abiding." Yet, that is exactly what he is. Until the moment two drunken, non-UMass, young, white men kicked in his window after making racial and violent threats, Jason had not a single violent incident in his past nor did he have any involvement whatsoever with the criminal justice system, not even a misdemeanor. I would call that law-abiding.

Ms. Goodman's opening sentence in her article charges us with manufacturing a "hate crime" and imposing the stereotype of "violent and bigoted white kids" on the innocent victims of a violent 200 lb black thug in order to mislead and divide this community. But, remember, we did not evoke that image. In fact, it was the language and actions as described by a number of eyewitnesses perpetrated by Jason's attackers themselves, which may be why the first UMass police on the scene preferred no charges against Jason. What Ms. Goodman doesn't tell you, or perhaps she didn't know, is that in at least one prior occasion, Bowes was charged with precisely such a crime in his hometown. I do not know what the disposition of the case was, but he was charged with using racially abusive language and violently assaulting a black man. From the description of the charges we heard in open court, the similarity between his behavior then and on our campus was almost eerie. We did not invent that, Ms. Goodman.

One cannot help wonder what you would be writing had the racial situation last February been reversed: had two young black men from Roxbury kicked in the window of an inoffensive white UMass student minding his own business in his room who then cut them when they charged into the lobby and assaulted him; and, had one of them turned out to have a prior record of attacking and verbally abusing a white person. I'd pay big money to read that column, Ms. Goodman, and I don't have money to spare.

Malcolm Chu
SGA President
Committee for Justice for Jason

Paid for by a member of the community.

Studio Arts Building dedication

Chancellor Robert C. Holub (center) is joined by College of Humanities and Fine Arts Dean Joel W. Martin (right) and several politicians in the ribbon-cutting ceremony at the Studio Arts Building's grand opening.

Political money battle

BY DAN MORAIN
LOS ANGELES TIMES

Barack Obama received a minor fundraising bump after he named Joe Biden as his running mate but raked in huge sums after Republican rival John McCain named Sarah Palin as his vice presidential nominee.

Obama raised $66 million in August, to McCain's $47 million. Obama's receipts included $22 million in contributions of $200 or less, virtually all of it sent via the Internet, Obama's latest report to the Federal Election Commission shows.

Obama also outspent his Republican rival in August, shelling out $53.5 million on everything from television advertising and mass mailings to polling, food and lodging. McCain spent $40 million but also benefited from $20 million spent by the Republican National Committee.

One of the most striking differences between McCain and Obama's August disclosures was donors' reaction to the candidates' vice presidential selections.

McCain received $8.8 million in the two days after he announced that Palin would be his running mate. Obama received what for him is a modest sum – $1.7 million – on the day he announced his choice of Biden and $694,000 the following day.

Obama's campaign aides said he received additional donations in increments of $200 or less, although dates for such contributions do not show up on publicly filed disclosures.

McCain spokesman Tucker Bounds seized on the difference, saying Democrat contributors were disappointed that Obama "passed over Hillary Clinton, perhaps the most popular Democrat in America."

Obama spokesman Ben LaBolt said donations had nothing to do with Biden's selection. "His choice was an investment in a governing partner who can help get our economy working again, end the war in Iraq and bring the change we need," LaBolt said.

Obama's fundraising took off once the Democratic convention started. He raised nearly $17 million between the Aug. 25 start of the convention and the end of the month. Obama's campaign has attributed at least some of the month-end activity to Democratic reaction against Palin's selection.

Obama's fundraising has set records for a presidential campaign. He has pulled in $454.8 million since entering the race early in 2007, compared with McCain's $224.3 million.

In addition to the $66 million he raised in August that went directly into his campaign account, Obama worked with the Democratic National Committee to raise $22 million for a joint fundraising account called the Obama Victory Fund. The DNC will use that money to pay for many costs in the remaining weeks.

Obama significantly outspent McCain on television advertising last month, $32.3 million to $18.1 million. The Republican National Committee spent another $4.7 million on broadcast ads.

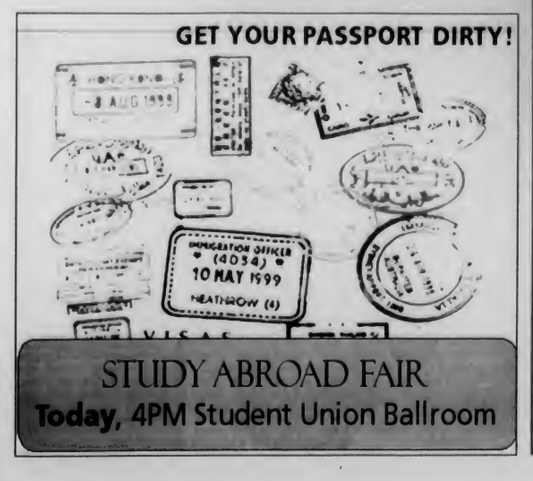
McCain is outspending Obama on mail-related costs: $8 million to Obama's $4 million. The RNC spent another $6.5 million on postage and mail production, its report shows.

Experts say Republicans tend to be older than Democrats and prefer mail over Internet communications.

Obama is spending far more on the Internet, $651,000 on Internet advertising, and $884,000 on Web sites. McCain and the RNC disclosed no spending specifically on on-line ads, and $422,000 on Web-related costs.

Like McCain, Obama received heavy support from attorneys last month – $3 million to McCain's $1.7 million.

Obama outraised McCain in the nation's banking center, New York, $2.7 million to $1.3 million.



Throughout the campaign, Obama has said he rejects the ways of Washington insiders but he continues to out-raise McCain in the Washington, D.C.-Maryland-Virginia area, $2.08 million to $2.4 million last month and $26.8 million to McCain's $10.5 million since the campaign began.

California remains the candidates' largest source of money – $52.2 million for Obama and $17 million for McCain.

Obama's second largest source is New York, $11.3 million, compared with the $8.8 McCain has raised there. McCain's second largest source of money is Texas, at $13 million. Obama has raised $12 million there, according to the FEC.

Republican vice presidential nominee Gov. Sarah Palin of Alaska speaks during a rally at The Villages in Florida over the weekend.

Study finds pay gap

BY SHANKAR VEDANTAM
THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON – Men with egalitarian attitudes about the role of women in society earn significantly less on average than men who hold more traditional views about women's place in the world, according to a study reported today.

It is the first time social scientists have produced evidence that large numbers of men may be victims of gender-related income disparities. The study raises the provocative possibility that a substantial part of the widely discussed gap in income between men and women who do the same work is really a gap between men with a traditional outlook and everyone else – rather than a gap between men and women per se.

The differences found in the study were substantial. Men with traditional attitudes about gender roles earned $11,930 more a year than men with egalitarian views and $14,404 more than women with traditional attitudes. The comparisons were based on men and women working in the same kinds of jobs with the same levels of education and putting in the same number of hours per week.

While men with a traditional outlook earned the most, women with a traditional outlook earned the least. The wage gap between working men and women with a traditional attitude was more than 10 times larger than the wage gap between men and women with egalitarian views.

If you divide workers into four groups – men with traditional attitudes, men with egalitarian attitudes, women with traditional attitudes and women with egalitarian attitudes – men with traditional attitudes earn far more for the same work than those in any of the other groups. There are small disparities among the three disadvantaged groups, but the bulk of the income disparity is between the first group and the rest.

"When we think of the gender wage gap, most of our focus goes to the women side of things. This article says a lot of the difference may be in men's salaries," Beth Livingston, a co-author of the new study, said.

Livingston said she was taken aback by the result.

"We actually thought maybe men with traditional attitudes work in more complex jobs that pay more or select into higher paying occupations," she said. "Regardless of the jobs people chose, or how long they worked at them, there was still a significant effect of gender role attitudes on income."

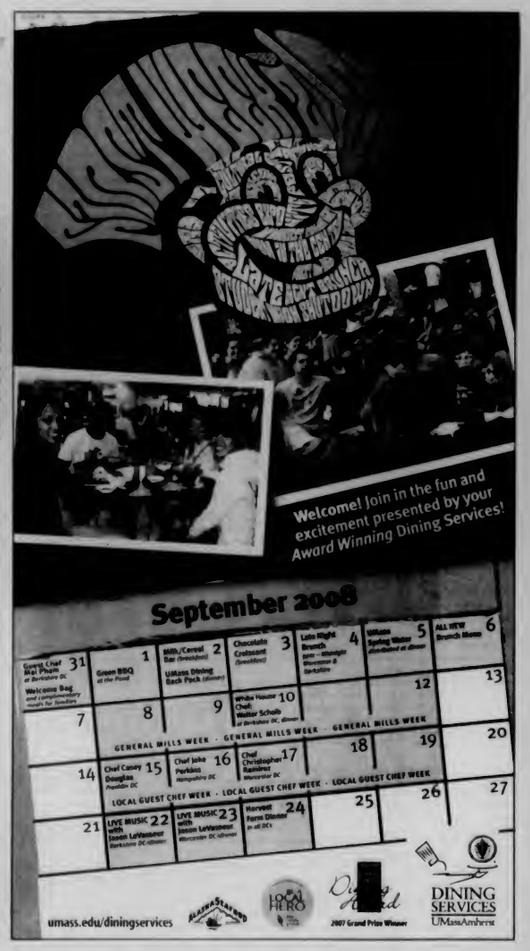
The study, published in the September issue of the Journal of Applied Psychology, is based on longitudinal information collected by a federal government survey administered every two years to more than 12,000 people over a quarter century. The U.S. Department of Labor's National Longitudinal Survey of Youth began tracking people in 1979 when they were between 14 and 22 years old. The group is now between 43 and 51 years old.

Since many participants in the survey were children when it started, incomes for both men and women changed dramatically over the 25 years that Livingston and co-author Timothy Judge studied. Averaged over the quarter century, salaries ranged from $34,725 for working men with traditional attitudes to $20,321 for working women with traditional attitudes. Working men with egalitarian attitudes made $22,795 on average, while working women with egalitarian attitudes made $21,373.

Livingston and Judge, who are both organizational psychologists at the University of Florida at Gainesville, compared people's incomes over time to their evolving views on whether a woman's place is in the home and whether it is better for men to be the only breadwinners. People who endorsed distinct roles in society for men and women were considered to have traditional views, while those who advocated equal roles for men and women at home and in the workplace were classified as having egalitarian views.

The study offers an unusual window into the persistent gender disparities in income that have been observed for decades. Critics of the gender-gap theory regularly suggest that the gap between men and women is an artifact of the career choices that men and women make, or the different hours that men and women work – arguing that more men choose higher paying professions such as law and business and more women choose lower-paying professions such as education and social work and that men tend to work longer hours than women.

Researchers said all the conclusions in the new study were based on comparisons between people in similar jobs, working similar hours, with similar qualifications.



"Some would say, 'Of course traditional men earn more than traditional women – they are both fulfilling their desires to play different roles in the home and workplace'," Judge said, emphasizing that the researchers compared working men with working women, not working men with women who stay home.

"Our results do not support that view. If you were a traditional-minded woman, would you say, 'I am fine working the same hours as a traditional-minded man in the same industry with the same education, but earning substantially less?' I don't think traditional-minded women would say that."

The empirical evidence in the study showed that there is a connection between people's attitudes about gender roles and their salaries. It was not designed to explain why those disparities come about, or how people's attitudes – supposedly a private matter – affect how much money they make.

Livingston and Judge said there are two possible explanations: Traditional-minded men may negotiate much harder for better salaries, especially when compared to traditional-minded women. Alternatively, it could also be that employers discriminate against both women and men who do not subscribe to traditional gender roles.

"It could be that traditional men are hyper-competitive salary negotiators – the Donald Trump prototype perhaps," Judge said. "It could be on the employer side that, subconsciously, the men who are egalitarian are seen as effete."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"FREEDOM OF SPEECH IS OF NO USE TO A MAN WHO HAS NOTHING TO SAY"
~ FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 2008 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DC coffee cups MIA

Nick O'Malley

With all the political talk concerning what's going to happen in Washington, it's time to switch the subject to the other type of DC; those of the Franklin, Berkshire, Worcester and Hampshire varieties.

At first glance, the Dining Commons seem to have made improvements in many areas this semester. There are renowned guest chefs coming to our school. There were minor renovations to the Franklin DC, which added tables. But underneath such trifling gifts lies a treachery so foul that the student body should rise in anger.

They took the damn paper coffee cups.

There could be several explanations for this new policy. It could be that Dining Services is concerned with the paper waste it produces. Perhaps it was too costly to put out disposable cups and lids, which is much more likely. The most likely scenario however, is that Dining Services is tired of students smuggling DC food out with the cups and convenient lids.

We are a people of habitual indifference. Less substance in the omelets is not a big deal. Long waits in line just to enter is tolerable. But taking away our papers cups is an infringement on our rights as members of this nation. Somehow, I think.

How are we to survive without being able to take cups of cereal, milk, cream or the occasional desert topping back to our dorms?

It has been long acknowledged that students steal from the Dining Commons. We've all seen the shattered remnants of makeshift purple tray sleds strewn across the hill, along with mattresses and god knows what else. The drink dispensers have filled everything from cups to water bottles to thermoses to half gallon milk bottles. Plus, many dorms house some sort of plate, utensil or bowl that was taken, intentionally or not. Once, last year, I came back to my dorm with a pepper shaker in my pocket.

So why is Dining Services suddenly tightening up their security in terms of food? In the past, there were staff members stationed at the doors at times only to prevent egregious acts of stealing from the DCs, such as walking out with a loaf of bread or a bag of bagels slung over your shoulder.

Taking away our paper cups is an infringement on our rights as members of this nation. Somehow, I think.

The University of Massachusetts is a university which, like all other universities, hates losing money. But if they're so concerned about money lost from stolen food, why are they bringing in former White House guest chefs to make things like Peruvian avocado scallops, filet mignon stuffed with caviar and unicorn steaks?

It could be that the dining services believes that by withholding cups, it will prevent losing more money than necessary through one-time use cups and having food taken from the DC's through them, which makes sense.

This view, however, is reminiscent of the ever popular "zero tolerance" policy. From drugs and sex to cheating and, in this case – stealing – zero-tolerance policies never work.

Statistics have proven that "abstinence-only" sex education is less effective than more comprehensive education, which could be another column. The growing presence of the Amethyst Initiative is showing that the zero-tolerance stance on underage drinking is ineffective as well.

It's just a matter of time before Dining Services realizes this.

Short of checking bags and receiving a pat down at the door, students are going to continue taking things out of the dining commons. But with the cups gone, students will have to resort to bringing their own containers. Milk jugs, Tupperware, two liter bottles – anything is possible now that we're forced to be creative.

Before, students were content with what they were given. The cups were right there. Students are lazy. They used the cups.

Now things are different. Dining Services has forced students to become creative and put in an effort towards sneaking things out, which is the worst case scenario.

When students don't have an easy way out and become interested in a project, they are infinitely successful. We live at a school where a student-created game of zombie tag with Nerf guns happens every semester and brings out military-like organization and missions.

Students are dangerous when they're bored and desperate. If a kid is forced to bring in a bottle to get some drinks in his dorm, why not just bring a two liter bottle and a gallon milk jug? If we aren't sneaking out cups of cereal, why not bring in some Tupperware and sneak out platefuls of mozzarella sticks?

Kids drink, steal, smoke, have pre-marital sex, do drugs, listen to the devil's music, break stuff, take the Lord's name in vain and walk on the grass even when there's a sign telling them not to. And you know what? No one can stop them. They can only make them do it less.

Dining Services should just appease the masses in the way our current culture does. Give the people an ineffective, free and convenient option rather than force them to create their own method.

Creative people are dangerous. Keep us lazy.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Bay state bio majors and the job market

Hannah Nelson

Worried about the job market with the state of the economy? Still haven't declared a major? Even before the stock market started to yo-yo, college students were used to the warnings about career prospects and job opportunities. "The Boston Business Journal" is reporting that the best career bet for current college students who plan to pursue their professional lives in Massachusetts is to go into the life sciences.

The results of the $250,000 study's report, "Growing Talent: Meeting the Evolving Needs of the Massachusetts Life Sciences Industry," would obviously benefit the entities that were involved in paying for it, the Massachusetts Biotechnology Council and the Massachusetts Life Sciences Center. But that's to be expected from any study these days. The MLSC, which has control over the disbursement of the Governor's $1 billion investment in the life sciences, and MBC, the state's primary biotech group, are entities that obviously hold large stakes in Massachusetts life sciences careers. The report was conducted by the University of Massachusetts Donahue Institute.

The field is growing at a much faster rate than other employment options within the state, with 100,000 residents currently working in the life sciences and benefiting from higher salaries. In the state, somewhere in the range of 10,000 jobs are expected to open by 2014, from clinical research to biotechnology to pharmaceuticals. This adds up to 90 percent of life science related employers in the state feeling an employee pinch. Given the nature of the study, perhaps it will be more incentive to the speculated Springfield-based addition to the University of Massachusetts locations.

The study was critical of the state as well as the country, relying heavily on the comparisons between science and technology training at young ages in countries such as China and India. With growing competition abroad, it is suspected that the United States is falling too far behind, a fear that has been verified by this study. Part of the blame has naturally been put on high school science curriculums, deemed inadequate preparation for the required courses within the college system.

The need for remedial courses early on in students' college years has been often criticized, especially of late for what this necessity may be costing the schools to provide. The suggested problem-solving schemes are predictable, including a proposed overhauling of the science curriculums up to the high school level.

This adds up to ninety percent of life science related employers in the state feeling an employee pinch.

The need for more professionals in the life sciences field has been partially blamed on undergraduate high education institutes lacking in promotion of such majors. At UMass however, the School of Nursing has one of the highest enrollment rates of all the colleges, an option that scarcely needs any promotion. School of Management students, given the sudden toss-up in their field of choice, are being advised to have secondary knowledge in sciences. And vice versa for students majoring in the sciences, business experience is recommended as that extra boost needed on a resume. Apparently, science or information technology matched with business training is a rare combination for undergrads that holds promising opportunities, even into the graduate end.

Regardless of UMass students having the adequate education, training and actual interest in pursuing the life sciences, the statewide preparation is ailing. The School of Nursing is highly reputable, so it's no wonder the enrollment is competitive, and the college could very well turn into a leader in the life sciences progress in the state. It has a history of being at the forefront of undergraduate health-care education. UMass is already seemingly on target with its options and given this new study, it could be an opportunity for the University to take advantage of adding this fact to its latest round of brochures and advertisements.

Another of the proposed solutions may come as a surprise to UMass students. It would seem that our general education requirements are not sufficient enough undergraduate interdisciplinary experience. I hate the interdisciplinary speech as much as the next student. I've taken gen-eds that made 50 minutes in a snake pit look more attractive. It's hardly a new revelation to mix studies such as business and science, as the report suggests. After all, UMass's Bachelor's Degree with Independent Concentration program (BDIC) didn't just appear overnight. But it must be a message that merits repeating if it'll help us in the closet of a job market.

Is the right message for college students to take away from the report that we should all go pick up change of major forms and start brushing up on basic high school biology and chemistry? Not necessarily. A better message, or at least a more reasonable one, would be to diversify our education, something UMass already seems to have well under control.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

How do you feel about the recent discovery of West Nile Virus in Amherst?

☐ I don't go out without bugspray.
☐ I ain't afraid of mosquitoes.
☐ I don't care at all.

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

Finance and the few

Eric Magazu

In the first book of his treatise "On Politics," Aristotle teaches, "For money was intended to be used in exchange, but not to increase at interest. And this term interest, which means the birth of money from money, is applied to the breeding of money because the offspring resembles the parent. Wherefore of all modes of getting wealth this is the most unnatural."

These words serve as an insightful starting point in seeking to make sense of the financial troubles that we have been witnessing in the past weeks. The recent failure and instability of prominent investment banks, added to the collapse of Bear Stearns last March, have produced tremors throughout financial markets. American politicians have taken notice, as these failures have been especially acute in examining the role of regulatory agencies in the federal government which are responsible for protecting our national economic integrity.

The only tried and true way to create wealth is through the production of goods and the provision of services.

It is important to look into the claims of those that are calling for new economic regulations on markets. Additional regulations were the response of the government during the events that lead up to the Great Depression in the 1930s, and even though many of those New Deal regulations are now on the federal register, we see that we have again arrived at a similar point.

There is something to be said for moderate regulation of private economic activity by the government. There are dangers in concentrations of economic power, just as there are dangers in the concentration of political power. In today's world, it appears that neither of these potential sources of tyranny alarms a large number of people. Perhaps we have become so used to the idea of a "modern, administrative state," as Justice Anthony Kennedy once penned in a Supreme Court opinion, that we look to centralized power as a source of stability.

We can observe from human nature that people will innately seek to advance themselves and their own interests over those of their neighbors. Therefore, our American forefathers wisely instituted a system of government that, rather than relying on pious leaders rising up to rule with justice and mercy, would instead rely on dividing power and dispersing it among many individual players. Our system was specifically designed to play the vices of men off of one another, in order to safeguard a true virtue, an ordered liberty rooted in justice.

If we examine the reactions of politicians in Washington over this recent economic news, we see that political leaders of all philosophical approaches simply don't get it. Even conservative officials in the current administration seem to be calling for the same solutions. The source of this trouble is that we believe that we can, in the words of influential economist Nouriel Roubini, "privatize profits and socialize risks." The error arising in this current situation is that investment banks were not stringent enough in qualifying debtors. The banks were interested in a large profit from high-risk loans and were not factoring in the risks involved.

Investment banks have come to rely upon the safeguards of government, the bailouts and other guarantees, that they have been able to avoid the natural, free market check on risky economic behavior: bankruptcy. In a Reuters news analysis from last Wednesday, Emily Kaiser writes, "By providing a massive loan to American International Group on Tuesday, just two days after refusing to use public funds to save Lehman Brothers from bankruptcy, the [Federal Reserve] invited tough questions on how exactly it determined whether a company was too big to fail."

The preferences of consumers, not the whims of government officials, are a much better system for ensuring prosperity. Officials appear to be looking at solutions that delegate broad new powers to the government to interfere in free markets, including what seems like the nationalization of certain sectors. These actions place tremendous power within the hands of a small group of people and the result will only be a source of further insecurity for the American people.

We cannot secure sustained increases in wealth from, as Aristotle teaches, "the birth of money from money," but only through increases in productivity and advancements in technology. Many have tried this "something for nothing" approach throughout history and all have produced the same disastrous results. The only tried and true way to create wealth is through the production of goods and the provision of services. It is only when two parties come together and want to buy and sell from each other that we see overall wealth increase. People seek to purchase what they themselves cannot produce.

Some may argue that government must involve itself in the economy in our modern state, but we know intrinsically that liberty and justice are not safeguarded by the concentration of power, but by the dispersal of power. Instead, this is a question of our priorities as a people. Our forefathers concluded and reality bears witness to this fact, that if we seek wrongly, the way of our pleasures and profits, we will surely end with misfortune, but if we seek the way of justice and mercy, everything in the world will be given to us.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@gmail.com.

The corps, the war

Paul Payer

Given the headlines of global market instability and a suffering economy at home, many college seniors have begun to feel some concern regarding their future career plans. Although news headlines are rife with stories of nationwide unemployment, analysts expect college students to fare as well as they did in recent years, if not better. Although those reassurances are comforting, they are not absolute or all-encompassing of the various directions graduates will take after graduation.

One segment of the graduating population which will certainly feel the repercussions of the struggling economy will be the thousands of Americans who apply and are accepted to serve in the United States Peace Corps.

Since it was established in 1961 by President John F. Kennedy to provide humanitarian services across the globe and improve the image of the U.S. abroad, nearly 200,000 Americans have served in the Peace Corps in 139 countries across the world in various humanitarian efforts. Corps members volunteer in efforts ranging from assisting with education in small villages to ensuring that local water supplies meet adequate health standards.

The Peace Corps declined in priority in the face of funding more direct and traditional means of foreign policy.

Recognizing the immense value of improving America's image abroad during an era in which anti-Americanism has become increasingly apparent, President Bush pledged to double the size of the Peace Corps in terms of funding and the number of volunteers.

That promise came in the wake of Sept. 11, before the president decided to sink nearly half a billion dollars into the invasion and occupation of Iraq. Accordingly, the goal has not been met as the need to expand the Peace Corps declined in priority in the face of funding more direct and traditional means of foreign policy.

As such, when adjusted for inflation, funding for the organization has remained stagnant since inception over 45 years ago. As economic conditions continue to worsen, the Peace Corps has begun to struggle with meeting program costs which have been severely affected by the rising cost of fuel and the declining value of the U.S. dollar.

An article published in last week's Los Angeles Times reported that the Peace Corps plans to cut 400 volunteer positions and has been forced to delay the deployment of many college graduates.

Many students facing a delayed deployment have invested heavily in the Peace Corps by passing potential jobs and internships in favor of dedicating themselves to a Peace Corps mission.

The Peace Corps attracts and accepts only the best and brightest of college graduates and the revelation that students may not necessarily have a guaranteed spot even after acceptance into the program may deter potential applicants.

On the domestic front, programs like Teach For America (TFA) and other teaching fellowships will have to compete for college graduates who are facing an uncertain economy after graduation. Qualified students interested in programs such as TFA (and certainly in the case of the Peace Corps) often take a significant pay cut to work through a service program rather than directly entering the market.

But the value of these jobs far exceeds their monetary benefits. College graduates overwhelmingly reflect upon their experience with service programs as a rewarding and valuable experience. Furthermore, when candidates seek employment after their service has concluded, they will find that employers tend to place considerable value on experience in programs like the Peace Corps and TFA.

Service programs and those who put forth their efforts to work in them contribute a great deal to the communities in which they operate, whether they are halfway across the globe or in the decaying inner cities across America. Studies have proven the positive effect that service programs have in their communities, from increasing high school graduation rates in schools participating in TFA to reducing teen crime through AmeriCorps programs like Big Brothers Big Sisters.

Concern over the future of these programs is valid, given the combination of indifference from the government in terms of funding and an economy which is forcing college graduates to concern themselves with how they will shoulder their student debt following graduation in a receding economy.

As college students in the United States, we are a population which has generally benefited from numerous opportunities presented to us. In contrast, many people throughout the world and even in our own nation have not been granted the same advantages and opportunity to receive a college education. The decision of how to utilize our education should expand farther than considering which accounting firm will offer the highest salary or which business school has produced the most CEOs.

Paul Payer is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ppayer@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

WMUA starts semester with eclectic mix

By Brittainy Bell Dalphond
Collegian Correspondent

The floor was set; there were two machines on a folding table, huge speakers and lighting rigs. It was the first of WMUA's 2008-2009 concert series featuring Dan Friel, the Death Set and local opener Eric Hnatow.

It was close to 8:30, a half hour after the concert was scheduled to begin, and people littered the hallway outside the Commonwealth Room at the Student Union Center, amusing themselves while waiting to be ushered inside.

Laughter was ever present in the air. The concert-goers weren't complaining about the wait, a few were pacing the hallway and many had their hands full with popcorn and sodas they snagged from the "Sex and The City" screening going on down the hall.

"I'm gonna dance so much!" exclaimed one girl in attendance to a friend, a sentiment that went unchallenged as she was already dancing down the hallway before concert had even begun.

Eric Hnatow took the floor around 9 o'clock. The local opener immediately asked the crowd to move in closer, welcoming them to be a part of the music.

Once the music started, so did the dancing. Hnatow bumped his head along to the beats he provided and took any opportunity to dance along in the crowd.

At one point he was writhing on the floor, his dance move looking like a combination of "the worm" and an interpretive move of birth or growing up.

He played a series of beats and samples, which he mixed, overlapped and played off each other.

A blonde-haired man in a red plaid shirt took a seat next and placed on his lap what was once a keyboard, before he manipulated it to create unique sounds. It wasn't until he started playing that it became apparent it was Dan Friel, the next artist on the playlist.

The atmosphere that Friel created was close to indescribable. Every beat was sent through the bodies in the crowd instead of the speaker.

The effect was so intense that some audience members stepped out to give their bodies a break.

Others in attendance didn't seem to mind as much, as they danced and moved along in a trance-like-state to the sounds Friel was creating with his once-keyboard.

By the time Death Set was up, the fuses were not cooperating. WMUA staff was doing all they could to fix the problem. To alleviate restlessness during the downtime, the group gave their fans an opportunity to play the drums.

Eventually the show was back in order and much like Hnatow had earlier, Death Set demanded that the audience come in as close as possible. At first glance it seemed like a mosh pit had developed, but in time it was clear that onlookers were just jumping up and down, beaming as they danced along. Two songs in, power went out again.

The drummer began to "faux-preach" to the crowd while they waited for the technical difficulties to be fixed. Soon enough they were back on and the happy mosh-pit started up again. The guitarist danced along and with his back facing the crowd he would back into everyone that was bouncing around while he played.

Each act made it a point to have the audience be a part of the music. Eric Hnatow said he was making music for others and that the concerts are supposed to be like collaboration with the audience.

What WMUA brought to the table this Friday night was pioneering a new definition of music as we know it. Death Set, Dan Friel and Eric Hnatow are original, unique and entertaining artists and since this was only the first in WMUA's 2008-2009 concert series, it should be interesting to see what else they choose to share with the campus community.

Brittainy Bell Dalphond can be reached at bdalphon@student.umass.edu.

Local musician Eric Hnatow was one of three acts to perform at the first event in this year's WMUA Concert Series.

IPO offers winter studying alternatives

Crisp air and foliage are staples of autumn in Amherst, but the bitter winter is just around the corner.

By Alex Butler
Collegian Staff

Today marks the first day of autumn and as the semester settles in and colder air slowly creeps in, it's easy to find beauty around Amherst. The plush hills around Hadley seem to almost light up with foliage, while the smell of autumn invokes feelings of comfort and a bright, fresh start. It's a beautiful transformation around the valley, but it's one which is a pretty loud reminder of what's in store for the winter. Little by little, the more despairing memories come back.

Grey slush on the side of the street, leaking through your socks.

Heavy tufts of snow on seemingly endless driveways, the frozen car idling to warm up.

Brisk winds, who's piercing cold temperatures force you to contemplate weeping on the side of the street.

Despite its faults, winter in Amherst marks a beautiful time of year, one which reflects the magnificence of the earth around us. But it is also a perfect opportunity to consider studying in another (warmer, dryer) part of the world. How fitting, then, for the UMass Amherst International Programs Office to remind us how easy it can be to study abroad.

The IPO will hold its annual Study Abroad Fair today from 4:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m in the Student Union Ballroom and while the first day of autumn may bring some incredible weather, it's important never to forget the eight months of winter which lurk behind it.

"There will be dozens of study abroad programs represented on Monday, both through UMass and UMass partners," senior peer advisor Lauren Murphy explained. "There's almost no limit to where you can study."

"Students can expect to learn plenty about the many different programs offered," Education Abroad Advising Center Coordinator Carol Rogers said. "Advisors will be there to answer specific questions about academics, living arrangements and application requirements. Some of our programs even feature winter or summer sessions. But the deadline for most spring programs is coming up on Oct. 10, so time is running out."

Anyone who has ever been interested in learning a new language, wants to experience a different culture, or simply has entertained the idea of studying on foreign soil is encouraged to attend the fair.

Alex Butler can be reached at ajbutler@student.umass.edu.

Easy eating for any student

FOOD from page 1

go hungry. You may get chubby, though. High in sodium and cholesterol, ramen is certainly one of the worst things you can put in your body. To combat the dangers latent in a ramen-heavy diet, try throwing a few vegetables, such as fresh peas or broccoli, into the mix. The veggies won't change much, especially if you decide to stick with the pre-packaged seasoning, but at least it feels like a healthier alternative.

Wings
Health Scale: 2.5

Technically this is cheating, but college is all about bad food and take-out. What take-out place is better ingrained in the University of Massachusetts consciousness than "Wings Over Amherst?" The food of choice for many impromptu, post-drinking dinners in the dorms, "Wings" is an addiction likely to carry over to new dwellings. Flavors vary (West Texas Mesquite, anyone?) and spice levels for wings range in severity from Wimpy to Afterburner. If wings are a weakness yet your wallet balks at the thought of another binge, try chipping in for a B-17 Bomber with your roommates. Split several ways, the 60 wing platter is still enough to feed all your junk food needs. But Coke purists beware: "Wings," in case you didn't already know, is a Pepsi shop.

Chili
Health Scale: 3.5

Sadly, crock-pots (or their distant cousin, the Dutch oven) come mandatory for this meal. Without access to one, chili can be a laborious deed, forcing students to linger over a smoldering stove for hours in expectation. A crock-pot requires no babysitting. While you tread across campus, the crock-pot slowly cooks meals to completion. For chili, the most basic of recipes requires kidney beans, ground beef, a smattering of green peppers and copious amounts of tomato sauce. And what's the best thing about a chili recipe done correctly? Leftovers keep well when stored in Tupperware and can continue to nourish during those long intervals between university pay cycles.

Pasta
Health Scale: 3

Yes, pasta is bad for you. Yes, pasta is full of starch and carbohydrates and other horrors likely to make your hips and thighs jiggle in dread. Regardless, pasta is the cornerstone of any non-nutritious college diet. Fast and filling, such dishes can be a godsend to those with no culinary abilities to speak of. Food mavericks may apply as well, with some students opting to make pasta sauce from scratch. Basil, oregano and thyme are among the fresh herbs most frequently cited in sauce recipes and without them most any sauce lacks zest. Health-conscious consumers may be swayed toward bowls of wheat pasta, which contain greater quantities of fiber. From homemade sauce to wheat or non-wheat pasta, whichever side you fall on in the pasta debate proves that pasta works, but only if you work with it.

Pizza Bagels
Health Scale: 2

A practical use for day-old bagels has finally been found. Why buy fresh when a perfectly edible stack of Thomas' Bagels lies unclaimed on the half-off shelf of your local supermarket? To mask the taste of bread gone stale, try covering the bagels with shredded cheese and tomato sauce (or your homemade pasta sauce). The result pizza bagels! Such pizzas make for a competent dinner or quality snack and are assuredly cheaper than a visit from your local Dominos delivery man. If the bagels seem lacking, pepperoni slices scattered over a thin layer of cheese can help lend to the illusion of pizza goodness. Just watch out that you don't purchase a bag of cinnamon raisin bagels by mistake. That's nothing except a recipe for catastrophe.

Casseroles
Health Scale: 3.5

Insert beans. Insert tuna. Insert Frito chips, or anything else to your heart's infinite liking and desire. The contents of your kitchen pantry may be ransacked dry to create the most lavish of casseroles. The recipes offer flexibility and are very forgiving, made for long storage and containment. Yet casseroles can also be perfectly forgettable, the kind of meal stuffed casually to the rear of your refrigerator, never to be seen or munched on again. So long as you make a point of remembering them, casseroles can be a great way to silence the demands of a rumbling stomach.

Stir Fry
Health Scale: 4

College students can eat some questionable things. Stir fry isn't one of them. For a meal rich in vital nutrients, try one some time. The best stir fry contains a bit of everything – bean sprouts to mesh with pieces of chicken or fish and perhaps a few slices of fruit (e.g. pineapple or mango) to attach an element of surprise. Be sure not to skimp on the veggies. Zucchini, eggplant and mushrooms may not stand alone well, but combined, they can plump up a stir fry nicely. Before cooking, remember to coat the skillet with either canola or peanut oil and be sure to cut all your ingredients down to the same size. Once the burner has been set to high, throw your meat on first. Although you run the risk of seriously overcooking them, vegetables come second and should be kept over the stove for roughly 15 minutes. To maximize the individual flavors of each ingredient, combine the contents together on your own plate. If your vegetables turn up crunchy, consider yours a job well done.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at shmurphy@student.umass.edu

While it is not the healthiest of dining options, Ramen noodles are the epitome of cheap and easy college dining.

Nobody knows what 'everybody' is watching

Outdated technologies, over-packaged shows cause change

By Hank Stuever
The Washington Post

We grow more and more wistful about the idea of an "everybody," a very large group of people that apparently no longer exists. The end of everybody is a cultural umbrella theory that explains all things now: the extinction of local radio, the last days of newspapers, the demise of the rock album.

And certainly it works as a way to talk about the death of fall TV.

Who wouldn't want it to die, come September, when the networks (what are networks?) unleash their wallop of slickly packaged hopefulness, with relentless and outdated demands: Hey, it's us, your old friend, the network! Howareya? Watch these 100 shows! All of them! In September and October! Watch until it's canceled! Watch what we used to show you on Wednesday nights, only now watch it on Mondays — got that? Watch it all! On a television set! On Tuesdays, on Wednesdays, on Thursdays, on Sundays! In your living room, at the appointed Eastern Pacific (Central Mountain) hour! With the commercials!

It's sort of sweet, like Christmas. The way we used to do it.

Fall TV campaigns transport us back into television's not-so-distant past. You almost want to dance around to that saccharine cover of Orleans' "Still the One," sticking your thumb up, Fonzie-like, in an ode to the inviolate 1970s-ratings juggernaut that used to be Tuesday nights. "We're still having fun — on ABC — and you're still the one!"

The season arrives now with an increasing chorus of naysaying futurists, who pause to look up out of the bitstream and claim that this fall will be the

See TV on page 8

THE SOURCE
(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

MondaySeptember22

Does the topic of racial diversity within sports and politics get you hyped up? Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist David Maraniss will be leading a talk entitled "Playing for Keeps: Race, Sports, and Politics" from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. in Isenberg's Flavin Auditorium. An associate editor at The Washington Post, Maraniss' most recent book, "Rome 1960: The Olympics that Changed the World," was published this summer. Contact Madeleine Blais at 413-545-5924 or mhblais@journ.umass.edu for more information.

TuesdaySeptember23

Violinist Elizabeth Chang will be performing tonight in Bezanson Recital Hall at 8:00 p.m., accompanied by guest pianist Judith Gordon. The concert is expected to include works by French composer Gabriel Fauré and Hungarian composer Bela Bartók. Call the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 413-545-2511 for ticket information.

WednesdaySeptember24

The New World Theater will be presenting Sash & Trim, which combines music, theater and dance in its biographical journey of a man's life, created by Djola Branner's, co-founder of the critically acclaimed Pomo Afro Homos. The performance will be held in The Fine Arts Center's Curtain Theater at 8 p.m. Contact Anna-Maria Goossens at amgossens@verizon.net or 413-545-6808 for ticket information.

ThursdaySeptember25

The Dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts will be sponsoring a W.E.B. DuBois Lecture Series this week entitled "The Physics of Blackness: Reconsidering the African Diaspora in the Postwar Era." Author and Professor Michelle Wright of the University of Minnesota will conduct the forum, which will take place at 4 p.m. in the Campus Center room 101. The series is organized by Professor Sara Lennox and Professor Jonathan Skolnik from the Department of Languages, Literatures, and Cultures. Contact lennox@german.umass.edu or 413-545-2350 for more information on this innovative event.

This list was compiled by:
Elyse Horowitz

Check out the arts blog!
allaccessarts.blogspot.com
"Because it's AWESOME"

Newest network television schedule offers few answers

TV from page 7

last fall of the antiquated notion of a "Fall TV" preview guide. A new, independently acting "everybody" knows the many ways that "nobody" watches fall TV anymore.

The word "nobody" has replaced the word "everybody". Nobody watches television on an actual television. Nobody watches actual broadcasts in real time, because nobody sits through ads. Nobody watches entire TV shows, just the best clips. Nobody watches prime time. Nobody watches anything until January when the good stuff starts, or better yet, summer. Nobody watches a season until cult status is achieved (you got your "Heroes" people, you got your "Lost" people, you got people going on and on about "How I Met Your Mother"). Nobody goes all in until they can watch the entire Seasons 1 and 2 in a weekend DVD binge, with the extras and commentaries and hidden gems that explain the stuff that everybody but you has figured out.

Nobody watches any one thing, and nobody watches what I watch, the way I watch it, because I am far too special to belong to an everybody, because I am a niche, and so are you. (No wonder advertisers want to shoot themselves.) Once in a while, when actual people talk to one another (instead of type to one another) about what's on television, you get a sense of a sham-everybody — a group of people who prod you into feeling bad about not watching the shows nobody watches.

Example: You haven't been watching "Mad Men"?

Example: You haven't checked out "Gossip Girl"?

Example: You don't do "30 Rock"?

Screw what everybody watches, and screw what nobody watches, too: We're just trying to watch some TV here, do you mind? (How wonderful to live in a world where nobody has time to watch all the television that has been assigned to them, like homework from some imaginary Mrs. Crabapple.)

In such a delusional, fragmented world, it's probably safe to go on believing that the people who made millions making television shows will still somehow find a way to make millions making television shows.

This started out being a loose essay about mass audiences for television and the idea of loss (all the TV writing is about loss now, or "Lost").

What would a world look like after a couple of decades of people watching a million things in a million directions on a million different devices? Would we ache for the same nostalgic moments? (Probably not.) Would we speak the same references to the same reruns? (We already don't.) Are there too many new shows on this season, operating on the same false hope that enough people will amass into an audience for them? (Assuredly yes.)

Still, there is that irresistible pull of tradition: Now is the time of the year all the new shows come on, sure as the leaves turning, sure as the Halloween candy.

In a personal nadir of wasting time, I blew an entire afternoon watching fuzzy clips of fall TV campaigns from the 1970s and '80s. Some of them reminded me of how seriously I took the fall season as if I were some uncounted Nielsen child, circling in TV Guide shows I intended to watch. At my most susceptible age, the networks had convinced me (and millions of others) that we were all in this together, a family that did nothing but revel in the existence of television. Still the One. We're the One.

You Can Feel It on CBS.

Proud as a Peacock. NB See Us! Catch the Brightest Stars on CBS.

You and Me and ABC. Come Home to NBC.

And further back it went, into the 1960s: The Stars' Address is CBS.

If It's Really Special, It's on NBC.

And this most curious and weirdly prescient slogan, from ABC... exactly 40 fall seasons ago: "Find Your Own Thing."

Well, we did.

The new fall season is here! The new fall season is here! Clip it, TiVo it, YouTube it, cultify it, analyze it, blog about it, save it up or spit it out, but whatever you do, don't just watch it. And don't nobody watch it together and don't nobody talk about it nostalgically 20 years from now.

According to Steuver, NBC's "Lost" is one of the few established shows that has achieved "cult status," the only one that really makes a series worth investing in anymore.

WHAT DO THESE MEN HAVE IN COMMON?

THEY'RE ALL PART OF THE DELTA CHI TRADITION. HOW ABOUT YOU?

FRIENDSHIP CHARACTHER
JUSTICE EDUCATION

DON'T MISS YOUR OPPORTUNITY TO BUILD A LASTING TRADITION AT UMASS!
www.DeltaChi.org

University life a difficult switch

New research shows transition to campus living harder for young men

By Kathleen Megan
The Hartford Courant

When Aman Kidwai arrived at the University of Connecticut, he was scared, nervous and anxious like most young men. And, like most young men, he didn't talk about it.

He had played football and run track in high school and while he might have played sports at a Division 3 school, he wasn't going to play at UConn. He was used to the highly structured life of high school, with every moment spoken for, ever-vigilant parents and teachers and a team full of friends.

The University felt cold and impersonal and he had a hard time connecting with people, much less discussing his uncomfortable feelings.

"Those are tough feelings to emote," said Kidwai, now a senior, "tough feelings to tell anyone about." He found himself skipping classes just because he could.

While most kids – young men and young women – have a mix of anxiety and excitement when they head off for college, experts on men and masculinity say that young men handle those feelings differently from young women and therefore often experience different problems and sometimes greater difficulties in the transition.

James M. O'Neil, a University of Connecticut professor who has been studying gender issues and masculinity for the past 30 years, said the college transition issues are a reflection of the crisis in the development of boys and young men in America. O'Neil said that he now addresses these issues in his classes on gender and masculinity, but that he wants, eventually, to explore whether students would find it helpful to have a men's center or discussion programs in residence halls.

While girls are raised to feel relatively comfortable expressing emotions, to seek help by talking to friends, family or professionals, O'Neil said, young men learn early on that it isn't considered strong or masculine to express fear, anxiety or other vulnerable feelings.

"If you haven't been taught to label your feelings, to express them and use them constructively, if you don't have that skill," O'Neil said. Those feelings may be expressed in "negative ways."

Troubled young men are more likely than women to drink, to act out aggressively, to fight or vandalize, O'Neil said, while troubled young women are more likely to talk out their issues with a friend or to seek help at a counseling center.

Professionals at other universities and colleges say they see the same patterns. Susan Birge, director of counseling and psychological services at Fairfield University, said young men "just don't have societal permission to speak up and ask for help," and college is a place where asking for help can be crucial for success.

Jason Zelesky, wellness outreach coordinator at Clark University in Worcester, Mass., said that "the whole formation or the social construction of masculinity sends young men these lofty and unfair messages about what it means to be a young man," and that it's "a narrative of violence, confrontation, fierce independence, of a sort of emotional apathy or non-communication of emotion with the exception of anger."

"Our dashboard indicators are pretty convincing that for the most part it is men who are the predominant judicial load (at the university); men acting out in residence halls, men transported to the hospital for drinking too much," Zelesky said. "The numbers bear that out."

Zelesky said he does a plenty of outreach with students and is starting men's discussion groups to help men learn to talk about their emotions and how to seek help when they need it.

At the University of Connecticut, the numbers show that young men are more likely to wind up with disciplinary issues. Catherine Cocks, the director of community standards, said that of the 2,489 students referred to the office during the last academic year, 65 percent were men.

For Aman Kidwai, finding a fraternity to belong to during the spring semester of his freshman year changed his life at UConn.

"It kept me involved, it gave me a community and an identity, a place where I felt comfortable," said Kidwai, who belongs to Kappa Sigma. "It's where I met my best friends."

On a recent hot, sunny afternoon at UConn, several young men throwing a football outside Delta Chi concurred that freshmen guys aren't likely to express the fear, anxiety, loneliness or confusion they might be feeling.

One student quipped that they weren't going to sit in their room and cry "like a girl."

"And what would be wrong with that if you did?" Eric Archambault, a junior from Weston, Mass., jokingly challenged, and everyone laughed knowing exactly what might be "wrong." Archambault said the transition to college wasn't easy, particularly for many of the students, like him, who had played high school sports.

"It felt like identity theft," said Archambault, who played baseball and basketball in high school. "I thought about being a walk-on, but the guys were like 7-feet tall."

There are experts who believe that any crisis affecting boys in general is overblown, but O'Neil feels the signs are clear. He notes the trends he finds troubling: a higher percentage of boys in special education than girls, more male high school dropouts, more males in prison, fewer young men enrolling in colleges, more males dropping out of colleges and a higher suicide rate among young men.

These trends make it crucial, he said, that parents, educators and professionals take steps to intervene in much the same ways that were done for girls in the past 20 or 30 years when they were not achieving as much as boys.

O'Neil believes that just as women's centers at colleges were established, there should be men's centers that offer safe places for them to discuss their feelings. Birge said that at Fairfield they have tried to destigmatize counseling for boys and have a male therapist on staff.

"We put (him) out in front to showcase that here is a guy who is smart, a skilled professional, but has emotional availability," he said.

There are also other ways to make it easier for a guy to seek therapy. Chris Kilmartin, professor of psychology at the University of Mary Washington in Virginia, said young men aren't very comfortable talking directly about their feelings but can be encouraged to tell stories about what's been happening.

"What I try to listen for are the emotional themes of the story. It's the Columbo routine," he said.

Mark Stevens, director of the counseling center at the California State University, Northridge said he uses "guy-to-guy" language and is careful not to have an overly feminine waiting room.

"If you've got scented candles out there and Zen stuff all over," he said, "the guys aren't going to relate to that stuff."

The start of a new school year brings a host of new students to campus for the first time. Recent studies have found that guys may find the transition harder than their female counterparts.

Personal viewer offers new twist on video

By Kevin Hunt
The Hartford Courant

The impregnated-safety-goggle design just won't fly. It doesn't matter what decade, or what century.

Why not just call these iPod goggles an "eyepod" and trim enough fat so they look like otherworldly, rechargeable sunglasses? Then maybe more people will start watching downloads of "The Secret Life of the American Teenager" flash before their eyes.

Myvu Corp. of Westwood, Mass., is halfway there. It still calls its products video eyewear, but the Crystal 701 for iPod is almost sexy enough to wear in public.

Aside from wearable, it's also watchable. Its DVD-quality (640 x 480) resolution is better than the 320 x 240 resolution of an iPod and other video eyewear.

So for the price of a pair of real Oakley shades, you get a miniature, on-your-face movie theater with surprisingly good attached earphones by Ultimate Ears, a control/battery pendant and enough wires so that anyone within a city block knows these are not mere sunglasses.

MyVu makes a Crystal 701 with a cable specifically for the iPod – that's the later Nanos, iTouch, Classic and fifth-generation video players – and a standard version for the non-iPod population.

The standard also works with just about any video-spewing device, whether a Zune, a mobile phone, portable DVD player, game console or a cable-television box.

Two wires run from the headset to the control pendant, then another from the pendant to the iPod. You could probably lasso a steer with all the wires, but once the headset is in place, you're in another world.

For those who haven't tried video eyewear – and I know there must be hundreds of millions of you – it really is like peering into a mini movie theater, with a black void in front of a white screen against a black background.

Doom on Xbox? Wait, that was only a moment.

For iPod viewing, the Crystal 701 produces a picture that looks quite good on the supersize screen. Although the resolution is better than an iPod, I still couldn't read the on-screen graphics while watching the Olympics or a football game with the headset connected to my cable box.

The earphones are about as good as it gets in video eyewear, and the headset lasts four hours per charge.

The Crystal 701, thanks to an adjustable nose pad, felt comfortable despite weighing almost three ounces.

I still don't see a future where everyone's walking around with a personal media viewer. But maybe the Crystal 701 is a start. I was wrong about tattoos, too.

Myvu, a Westwood, Mass. based company, has released the Crystal 701. The new device is designed to be a miniature on-your-face movie theatre.

New WORLD Theater Fall 2008
FINE ARTS CENTER

sash & trim
By Djola Branner. Directed by Laurie Carlos
Wednesday - Friday, September 24-26, 2008
8 PM, Curtain Theater
Co-presented with UMass Department of Theater

With sash & trim, Djola Branner blends music and memory to piece together the story of troubled relationship with a father he hardly knew. sash & trim is in development with creative collaboration and support from seminal theater artist Laurie Carlos, an innovator of the American avant garde scene.

Shekadii Walaalo!
Saturday, November 22, 2008
at 7 pm, Bowker Auditorium, UMass

Shekadii Walaalo Sister-Story is the culminating performance of a multi-year community-based project featuring the Pioneer Valley's own Somali community in a vibrant evening of live music, dance, video, poetry and storytelling.

Crisis in Somalia - A special series of FREE public forums will provide background and perspective on Somali history, current events, and the political roots of the ongoing refugee crisis. OCT 15, NOV. 18, NOV. 22 Visit our website for venues and updates.

Tickets are $15-general public; $8-low income patrons/seniors; $5 students with valid I.D. Call FAC Box Office at 413-545-2511. For more info about the shows call NWT at 413-545-1972
www.newworldtheater.org

The University of Massachusetts Amherst Journalism Program presents Pulitzer-Prize Winner and Washington Post Reporter

DAVID MARANISS
Playing for Keeps: Race, Sports, & Politics

Monday, Sept. 22, 2008
4:30-6:30 p.m.

Flavin Auditorium, Isenberg School of Management

UMass Amherst

Free raffle to feature autographed copies of Maaraniss's books.
Ask your professor about an extra credit assignment!
See you there!

Coen, defense not up to task vs. Tech

FOOTBALL from page 16

said. "[It was] just calf strains, hip flexors; those kinds of things."

Despite a third quarter interception that Texas Tech (4-0) safety Darcel McBath returned for a touchdown, UMass quarterback Liam Coen did have some success throwing the ball, going 13-for-20 with 145 yards. However, abandoning the run game was not in the game plan for Brown.

Regardless, yards on the ground were hard to come by for UMass running backs Korrey Davis and Tony Nelson, who combined for 92 yards and a touchdown on 27 carries.

Tech running back Shannon Woods scored three touchdowns and finished with 108 yards rushing and 53 yards receiving — marking the first 100-yard game by a Red Raider since 2006 when Woods ran for 109 against Minnesota in the Insight Bowl.

For Tech on the other hand, running the ball was not a problem.

After the game, Brown and Coen both said TTU is the best FBS team they have ever faced. In 2007, UMass played then-ranked No. 12 Boston College but the game was much closer, as the Minutemen lost 24-14.

"Boston College was a good team last year," Coen said. "They were up there in the rankings, but this is a different breed down here, and we knew that coming into the game. We expected that."

Brown said he was proud of his team for playing hard for the full 60 minutes, but sometimes a coach has to do what a coach has to do.

"It was crazy. Sometimes those things happen," he said. "That's not an excuse. I'm not making any excuses but sometimes you just gotta do the best you can."

Alex Ybarra is a Texas Tech football beat writer for the Daily Toreador. Check out their coverage at www.dailytoreador.com.

COURTESY JOEL ANDRESEN/ANTARI IMAGING

UMass senior quarterback Liam Coen was 13-of-20 and threw for 145 yards and an interception Saturday against Texas Tech. The Red Raiders limited the UMass offense to its worst performance this season, as Coen was held without a touchdown pass for the first time.

Senior forward Vanessa Patry and the Minutewomen were held scoreless on Saturday in a 1-0 loss to Providence. Patry currently leads the team with three goals.

UM blanked in loss

W SOCCER from page 16

goal during the game for the Friars (5-2, 0-1 Big East).

The junior gained possession about 30 yards away from the goal and made a run for the goal. Luckey broke up the play, but accidently deflected the ball behind her. Camburn was right near the net and tapped the ball in for the lead.

"There were one or two breakdowns in there. Providence has a system that we haven't seen too much of," UMass assistant coach Angela Napoli said. "They [the defense] did better in the second half in pushing the ball up to the midfielders."

Despite giving up the one goal, Luckey recorded seven saves, while Providence goalkeeper Jill Schott tallied four.

This was only the second game of the 2008 season in which UMass trailed in a game, the other one coming in a season-opening overtime loss at Binghamton.

The Maroon and White stepped up in the second half by getting the ball into the Friars defensives zone, but were a few passes short of putting any goals away. They held the advantage in corner kicks (7-2), but were not able to find any forwards in and around the box.

Providence's offense made some things happen in UMass' defensive zone, registering 17 shots to the Minutewomen's seven.

UMass was without one of its key players, as redshirt senior midfielder Vanessa Lima missed the game with a hamstring injury.

"We held her out because she had a minor hamstring pull, so we didn't want to push it with [the Atlantic 10 conference schedule] coming up," Napoli said.

Freshmen defenders Rachel Miranda and Lindsey DiOrio saw some valuable minutes throughout the game, along with forward Natalie Muka due to the Lima injury.

"I think we came out of this game really positive," Napoli said. "I think we all wanted to win but no one felt like we should've won. It was a great effort and everyone worked hard."

The Maroon and White will open its A-10 schedule when it hosts St. Bonaventure at home on Sept. 26th.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

UMass can't hold early lead

M SOCCER from page 16

just inside the left post.

"We did things well, but we gave up a deflection goal, and [New Hampshire's] second goal was a great shot to the inside netting," Koch said.

In the last 10 minutes of play, UMass had numerous chances to tie up the game, the most promising coming off of senior Prince Ofosu's corner kick with 10 seconds left on the clock. Ofosu sent the ball to the back post where DeSantis was stationed. With one second left in regulation, DeSantis headed the ball towards the goal, but it was blocked by Hilton on the goal line.

The Minutemen were outshot, 13-7, but took the advantage on corner kicks, 4-3, and had opportunities on kicks after 14 New Hampshire fouls –UMass had eight. The opportunities that can come off set plays are very beneficial for a team, but the Minutemen were only successful on one – DeSantis' goal.

UMass used this road match to improve on its game before Atlantic 10 play that begins on Oct. 12. The Minutemen did improve on some aspects of play throughout the game, but still struggled in key areas. They still need to work on moving the ball on the outside of the field, an area that the Minutemen enjoyed success in their win against Siena, and making better off-ball runs to support their teammates.

"We have to play simple, do a lot better job at controlling the ball and not force plays," Koch said. "Last year we were 2-4 at this point. It was frustrating today because if we did things better we would have had a different outcome."

The Minutemen return home next weekend when they host the UMass Classic. Friday afternoon UMass takes on Hartford and on Sunday they play Vermont.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com.

in Vention

to

workshops in technology entrepreneurship

learn how to turn your technology idea into a commercial opportunity.

When: Saturday Sept. 27 8am-4:15pm
Where: UMass E. Lab II Auditorium
Cost: $10 students, $25 higher ed faculty & staff, $25 alumni, $75 all others
Contact: Heather Demers demers@ecs.umass.edu

A fast-paced workshop for science and technology students and faculty, as well as members of the university and business communities.

www.invention2venture.org/umass08

ISENBERG PROGRAM Wolf Greenfield

ONCIIA National Collegiate Inventors & Innovators Alliance

Not sure what you're doing next?

Keep your options open. Take the GRE® Test for grad school.

You're more likely to do better while you're still in school — and your GRE Scores are good for 5 years.

Practice for free now. Text GRE16 to 78473.

startGRE.com

ETS GRE

HOW CAN YOU PUT YOUR PHENOMENONAL SPORTS INTEREST TO GOOD USE?

WRITE FOR THE DAILY COLLEGIAN!

PUT IT ON YOUR RESUME!

SPORTS @ DAILY-COLLEGIAN.COM

Widdall's net play stellar in win

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Second half goals by sophomore Makaela Potts and senior Katie Orlando helped revive an ice-cold Massachusetts offense from a scoreless first half to a 2-0 win over visiting Vermont.

Freshman Alesha Widdall earned her third shutout of the season as the defense stopped a Catamounts (3-4) offense that has only scored 10 goals this season.

Both teams struggled to take advantage of their scoring chances in the first half as the offenses failed to get on the scoreboard.

"In the first half, we weren't doing very well in the circle," Orlando said. "I think we underestimated their defense a little bit and their goalie and how high she pulls out."

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 2 |
| Vermont | 0 |

The Minutewomen (5-2) were able to put the ball in the back of the net, though, as sophomore Jaime Bourazeris' shot slipped by Vermont goalkeeper Kristen Heavens with under a minute remaining in the half. The goal, however, did not count as the shot sailed high of the board and was not deflected.

Vermont also failed to capitalize in the first half despite a 4-to-2 advantage in corners.

The offensive quagmire of the first half was frustrating for the Minutewomen as well as the Catamounts.

"I was not happy with our forwards in the first half," University of Massachusetts coach Justine Sowry said. "I don't think we got the production out of them and I think our circle work was poor."

UMass was able to turn it around in the second half, however, as Orlando put the Minutewomen on the board 13 minutes into the second half. Makeala Potts' shot off of a corner was blocked then picked up by Orlando who put it in the back of the goal.

The Maroon and White continued their assault on the Catamounts as Makaela Potts scored a goal of her own off of another corner play. The goal was the first of the defensive captain's career.

The Minutewomen out-cornered the Catamounts 4-to-2 in the second half and outshot them 15-to-6 for the game as the offense controlled the second half.

Sowry, however, did not think the team played to its full potential.

"Penalty corners were definitely better" Sowry said. "But in terms of what we were trying to run, yes we got on the scoreboard, but we failed to execute what we wanted to do."

While the offense flourished in the second half, the defense took an enormous hit as sophomore defender Jackie Tait left the game with an apparent injury and did not return.

With one of their fullbacks suddenly removed from the game, the Minutewomen were forced to adjust defensively.

"Makeala Potts dropped back to one of the fullback spots and then Cher King dropped back to one of the midfield roles," Sowry said. "I feel very comfortable with [Potts] back there as a fullback, though we lose a little in the midfield because we have to shift around."

The defense, which has already been described by Sowry as the youngest and most vulnerable unit on the team, played strong for the entire game, surviving some early Vermont pressure.

UMass was able to transition successfully, however, as the defense was able to keep Vermont scoreless to preserve the shutout and come out with the win.

"We played with a lot of heart, and we ran them," Orlando said. "We've got to play together. So against Brown on Tuesday we've really got to pick it up."

The Minutewomen will be travelling to Providence to play the Bears Tuesday at 4:00.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Cher King and the Minutewomen blanked Vermont Saturday at Garber Field, 2-0. King was forced to switch positions after defender Jackie Tait left the game in the second half.

Katelyn Orlando scored the first goal of the game for the Minutewomen Saturday, which proved to be the game-winner against Vermont in a 2-0 shutout. The senior is tied for fourth on the team with two goals.

Versatility aids Minutewomen

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The versatility of the Massachusetts field hockey team enabled it to beat Vermont, 2-0, Saturday night.

Midfielder Makaela Potts played an important role in the game. The sophomore scored her first career goal on a trick play, in which three other players faked the corner shot before Potts deposited it into the top-half of the net.

Sophomore Jackie Tait played much of the first half on the back line until she left with an injury. She was shaken up after a collision with a Catamount player and almost immediately raised her hand to be taken out.

With Tait out, Potts shifted from midfielder to the back and junior forward Cher King moved into Potts' spot. Senior Mary Shea picked up slack at the forward position. UMass coach Justine Sowry used both King and Potts in this scenario because she views them as players who have exceptional vision and knowledge of the game.

"She's a very, very good fullback," Sowry said of Potts. "She sees the field very well so she can hit the seams very quickly. She has great vision but she can also set up the play. So I feel very comfortable with her back there as a fullback."

Potts started playing field hockey at a young age and because of this, she's seen time at various positions on the field. Her strength is at forward, a position that she's played since the age of 14.

One reason for the versatility of Potts and King is that the international rules of field hockey differ from that of the NCAA. Within American collegiate athletics, an athlete can only spend so many hours a week participating in team activities.

However, in international field hockey, activities go year-round. There are international clubs that have games in some capacity throughout the course of any season and they also start younger, as well.

In doing this, players learn more about the game than a typical collegiate athlete in the United States. With learning so much about the game, certain concepts taught at collegiate programs here are simpler to international athletes and they don't necessarily have to take the time to watch tape, review plays on a white board or have certain things shown to them step-by-step on the field.

The Minutewomen (5-2) have depth at every position, especially the fullback position. The position was left weak by graduating seniors, but Sowry has been strengthening the spot with freshmen this season.

The forward line enjoys strong depth, with three or four reserve players on the bench, especially with junior transfer Jill Powers adding an extra scoring threat off the bench.

The middle line, anchored by Potts and captains Erin Parker and Mary Shea, has one or two players. But there is no worry since so many players normally on the forward line switch back to the midline anyway.

Every recruiting class has a certain quality that Sowry needs for that season alone and if they have other qualities, that's an added bonus that she has to work with. However, experience at multiple positions can only help a player succeed at the college level.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

SPORTS FAN?? WRITE FOR US!! sports@dailycollegian.com

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Promotion, Booking and Management Company seeks:
Detail oriented, solid communicator and computer skilled multitasking individual for fast moving environment. Savvy with all online media: Facebook, Myspace, Photobucket, like etc. wav to mp3 files, invoicing, website updates, solid typist.
$8, 2-3 days a week 10:30-3:30
Send cover letter and resume to artspromo@artspromo.org

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - go bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

STOP & SHOP

Stop&Shop

Head back to class with Stop & Shop!

Stop & Shop welcomes you back with special bonus coupon savings!

Exclusive Bonus Coupon
Valid Monday 9/22 - Friday 10/31/08
$5 OFF a purchase of $25 or more.
Stop&Shop
Offer excludes gift cards, money orders, Western Union, postage stamps, lottery, bulk, gasoline, prior purchases, tobacco products, groceries, items and any other purchases prohibited by law. Coupon redeemable at Peapod by Stop & Shop. Limit one coupon per customer per order. Coupon cannot be doubled or tripled or combined with any other offer.
21000010114578

Plus! At Stop & Shop you'll find...
• A delicious variety of fresh prepared foods
• Natural and organic foods
• A Staples® aisle for school supplies
• Personal care needs
• Redbox™ DVD rentals
And so much more! All priced to fit a student's budget!

stop&shop.com

BOOM

You can count to ten!

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 4 | | | | 8 | | | 1 |
| | | 3 | | 2 | | 6 | 9 |
| | 5 | | | | | | |
| | 6 | | | 3 | 5 | | |
| | 4 | 1 | 7 | | 9 | 3 | 5 |
| | | | 1 | 8 | | | 6 |
| | | | | | | | 9 |
| 8 | | 6 | 4 | | | 7 | |
| 9 | | | 8 | | | | 3 |

Quote of the Day

"Don't worry about the world coming to an end today. It's already tomorrow in Australia."

– Charles Schultz

ACROSS
1 Motts
6 House on campus
10 Like hen's teeth
14 Ceiling
15 Prom transport
16 Tel ___-Jaffa
17 Light on one's feet
18 Jumble
19 Moral weakness
20 Triple
22 Offense and defense
23 Classic TV equine
24 "Xanadu" band
25 Appeared
28 "___ in the Mist"
33 Argue a case
34 Pompous
35 Ventilate
36 Pool table material
37 United
38 Din
41 Cheapskate
43 Stabilizes
44 Colliers
45 Tennis do-over
46 Kid around
47 Madonna title role
50 Encouraged
55 Lucy's love
56 Tailor's connection
57 Open-mouthed
58 No pain, no
59 Mata ___
60 Coetner or Bacon
61 Otherwise
62 Highland Gaelic
63 Put up

DOWN
1 Venetian blind part
2 Lofty
3 Abu Dhabi leader
4 No-win situation
5 Took the tiller
6 Deluge
7 Moon valley
8 In the center of
9 Besides
10 Pasta with pockets
11 Eager
12 Wedding day throw away
13 Holiday forerunners
21 Nourished
22 Lost traction
24 Sea eagle
25 Stretches across
26 T.S. or George
27 Too weird
28 Lawn makeup
29 Horse food
30 Unrestrained
31 Ed who played Lou Grant
32 Those with foresight?
34 Happiness
36 State of irritation
39 Crisp cracker
40 Start of an invention
41 Addition error, e.g.
42 Whole number
44 Sea of France
46 ___ Lee Curtis
47 Boundary
48 Calf meat
49 Goddess of fertility
50 Pay heed to
51 Corn units
52 Central part of a church
53 Larger-than-life
54 Pockmark
56 That ship

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Submit Your Comics

COMICS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DOODLE BOX
HAVE A BLAST!

Wondermark By David Malki

Scratch n' Sniff By Derek Cuneo

Labrat By Richard Martelly

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You are never too mature to play with legos.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
This is a great day to procrastinate all the things you need to do. Yesterday was a good day too...Tomorrow as well...

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Please hold. We appreciate your service.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Taking apart the car into its basic components was a bad idea, especially considering that it is not yours.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Even though that it is a "public" restroom, you are invading my private space. Step away.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Go suck on an egg...you old trout!

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
How can you be unhappy? You have everything inside of you that you need!

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Tell your significant other that, while you appreciate their concern, there is nothing they can do for your bedsores.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
After this past weekend, your dream of being a nun is history, Sister.

Scorpio
You will eventually regeret inviting Fran Dresser to your party, once your fine crystal begins to crack.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Just tell it like it is. When that fails, scream at the top of your lungs. When that fails, run away.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
It is never to early to think about retirement. Start looking for hearing aids, while you can still have a conversation.

Yee-Haw

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Instructors/performers needed for PT to conduct fun science after-school programs, parties, etc. Required: experience with groups of children, enthusiasm, car. 413-584-7243

Rent us your ears! $10/hr for participating in listening experiments. English must be your first language. 413-545-6837 Voicemail Phonetics_Lab@linguist.umass.edu

HELP WANTED

Spring Break 09 Work for Sun Splash -Travel Free www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

SERVICES

Condom Break? Get EC. Emergency Contraception prevents unintended pregancies up to 5 days after unprotected sex.Taperstry Health 27 Pray Street, Amherst 413-548-9992 Tapestryhealth.org

ANNOUNCMENTS

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S. Padre, Florida. Information/ Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

Montreal Weekends From $99. Complete RoundTrip, Motorcoach. 3 days, 2 nights. Hotel Downtown. For Details MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

TRAVEL

Spring Break Discounts Free Travel/ Meals Before Nov. 1st www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

FOR RENT

2 bedroom plus den in duplex house $950. Also 3 bedroom townhouse two floor unit $1215. Both near bus stop. LaDonna @ 413-665-2203

SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIEDS...

(413) 545 - 3500

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Texas Tech Football Massacre

UMass coach Don Brown (right) looks on during the Minutemen's 56–14 trouncing by the hands of No. 10 Texas Tech Saturday at Jones AT&T Stadium in Lubbock, Texas. Red Raiders quarterback Graham Harrell threw for 322 yards and four touchdowns, leading the offense to 538 total yards in the victory. Liam Coen threw for no touchdowns and was intercepted once.

UMass loses laugher, players in mismatch

BY ALEX YBARRA
DAILY TOREADOR (TEXAS TECH)

LUBBOCK, Texas – Massachusetts football coach Don Brown witnessed the injuries beginning to pile up for his Minutemen, so he decided to make the team's second-ever trip to Texas a little bit shorter.

In No. 10 Texas Tech's 56-14 win over the Massachusetts football team (2-2, 0-1 Colonial Athletic Association) Saturday at Jones AT&T Stadium, Brown's team could have lost a lot more than just a non-conference game. It could have lost its season.

"We've gotta do what we're gonna do, and that's really what it comes down to," Brown said. "Obviously, there's some [injuries] in this game. We've got to go ahead and set ourselves up for the rest of the year. That's basically what we did."

Playing a Football Bowl Subdivision team that was larger and more talented, Brown said senior cornerback Sean Smalls left the game with an injury, as did right guard Rob Getek and tackle Ben Coblyn. He also said middle linebacker Josh Jennings – who led the Minutemen with 11 tackles – and strong side linebacker Anthony Rouzier kept coming in and out with injuries.

With the game out of hand, Brown said he did not want to see anymore players go down with an injury and potentially miss the rest of the season.

"Obviously, it's 42-7," he said. "They have a style they're trying to play too, and we had several guys go down, so you're trying to shorten the game to some degree and find some solace in the thing."

Brown said the injury to Smalls – a pre-season All-American – ended up limiting his defensive packages.

"We lost Sean Smalls at halftime, an outstanding corner, which really hurt us," said Brown, who also said he lost a starting safety. "With Sean, it really impacts us because we can't go in our nickel package."

Brown did acknowledge none of the injuries were too serious.

"I don't think, knock on wood, nothing major," he

See FOOTBALL on page 10

| | TTU | UMass |
|---|---|---|
| | 56 | 14 |

| UMass | Texas Tech |
|---|---|
| Passing | Passing |
| Liam Coen: 13-of-20, 145 Yards, 0 TD, 1 INT | Graham Harrell: 27-of-34, 322 Yards, 4 TD, 0 INT |
| Rushing | Rushing |
| Korrey Davis: 15 Att, 54 Yards, 1 TD, AVG 3.4 | Shannon Woods: 10 Att, 108 Yards, 3 TD, AVG 10.8 |
| Tony Nelson: 12 Att, 42 Yards, 0 TD, AVG 3.4 | Baron Batch: 10 Att, 55 Yards, 0 TD, AVG 5.0 |
| Receiving | Receiving |
| Jeremy Horne: 2 Rec, 58 Yards | Baron Batch: 5 Rec, 68 Yards, 0 TD |
| Victor Cruz: 5 Rec, 54 Yards | Michael Crabtree: 5 Rec, 62 Yards, TD |
| Ian Jorgenson: 4 Rec, 29 Yards | Tramain Swindall: 3 Rec, 36 Yards, TD |
| Julian Talley: 3 Rec, 14 Yards | Eric Morris: 3 Rec, 32 Yards, 2 TD |

UM drops another

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's soccer team struggled once again on the road, losing its third-straight game to undefeated New Hampshire, 2-1, on Saturday evening.

The University of Massachusetts moved the ball more efficiently than it had in past games and had many players playing better than earlier in the season. Senior Mike DeSantis, sophomore Ben Arikian and junior Bryan Hogan were some of those players, but the team was still unable to come out with a win.

"We had the effort," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "But we didn't do some things to avoid the outcome."

The Minutemen, now 2-3-1, were the first to get on the board when DeSantis scored his first goal of the season. He redirected a direct kick from Arikian past Wildcat goalkeeper sophomore Colin O'Donnell into the lower right corner of the net, 26 minutes into the game. This was UMass' second time this season scoring first in a game, the other was Sept. 6 in the 1-0 win against Siena.

New Hampshire, now 5-0-2, answered back 15 minutes later with a free kick by offensive threat Kyle Urso. The ball was shot from 25-yards out and deflected off a UMass player to the left post, tying the match at one.

The Wildcats Sean Coleman scored the game-winning goal at the beginning of the second half. Coleman got the rebound off teammate Brad Hilton's blocked shot and sent the ball slow in the first half for the second game in a row and for the first time this season, allowed an opponent to score first in a contest.

Usually a very physical team, the Minutewomen only recorded one foul, while Providence was aggressive throughout the game, recording 11 fouls.

Providence capitalized on some miscommunication between goalkeeper Lauren Luckey and a defensive unit featuring two young players, which provided an opportunity for the Friars to strike first.

Forward Jill Camburn tallied the lone goal in the first half, as well as three shots on

See W. SOCCER on page 10

Sophomore midfielder Therese Smith scored both goals in UMass' victory over Albany on Sept. 17. Smith and the Minutewomen had little success offensively this weekend, though, losing to Providence 1–0.

Prince Oforu and the Minutemen fell to New Hampshire Saturday night in a road contest. UMass had the lead but could not hold on.

See M. SOCCER on page 10

| | UNH | UMass |
|---|---|---|
| | 2 | 1 |

| | Prov. | UMass |
|---|---|---|
| | 1 | 0 |

Rudy and Co. fall to Friars

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a three-game winning streak, the Massachusetts women's soccer team was defeated for the first time in six games.

The Minutewomen lost their final non-conference game of the 2008 season, falling to Providence yesterday, 1-0, at Gilay Field.

The University of Massachusetts (2-3-2) came out

INSIDE: BUILT TO SPILL PERFORMS IN NOHO | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 72 LO: 43 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 2008

RSO focuses on retainment

BY GISEL SAILLANT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

You want to be F.A.M.U.S?

The Registered Student Organization (RSO), Freshman Achieving More for Undergraduate Success (F.A.M.U.S.), has a mission to create community among underrepresented students and retain those students at the University of Massachusetts.

Tony Gentles, president of F.A.M.U.S., explained that before it had its name, it was called the BBB (Brown, Black and Beautiful). This group stemmed from the lack of minorities a group of students interacted with during their summer orientation at UMass.

According to Gentles, the BBB started as a Facebook group for students to meet and chat with one another.

"A lot of people found their roommates through BBB," said Gentles.

After the students moved into UMass, the members of the BBB had their first dinner and movie nights together.

Dalvis Perez, treasurer of F.A.M.U.S., thought of the Facebook group as a joke at first.

"We never really thought it would turn out to be something so much bigger. We ended up having so much fun, chatting on AIM and Facebook over the summer. We just randomly hit up the minority kids and added them on Facebook. Once we got onto campus, we already knew at least 50 other people and we always tried to do stuff together," Perez explained.

In the middle of Fall '07, the members of BBB wanted to

See FAMUS on page 2

Members of F.A.M.U.S. at one of the group's first meetings. They work with freshmen minority students on campus to create a welcoming community that encourages retention throughout their academic careers.

UMass to host Foer

BY WILLIAM MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Acclaimed author Jonathan Safran Foer will speak in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall today in a 7 p.m. talk sponsored by Commonwealth College.

Foer may be best known for his book "Everything is Illuminated," which won the Los Angeles Times' best book award, but the talk will center on his latest novel, "Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close."

The book was chosen by a group of Commonwealth College students for study in its Dean's Book course, a research and communication seminar that focuses on a single contemporary book in an examination of the issues it raises.

Currently, around 1,400 University of Massachusetts students are reading the book chosen for its cultural relevance and the creative characteristics of the story's delivery.

"Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close" is the story of a young boy following his father's death during the Sept. 11 World Trade Center terrorist attacks. In the time afterward, he becomes obsessed with finding the lock that matches a mysterious key he finds in his father's closet.

Following the book's release, Foer was alternately skewered and praised for it, which features elements of mixed media and closes with a 12-page flip-book.

According to Alex Phillips, director of the Dean's Book Course, Foer's appearance "will give students a unique opportunity to hear in person an author whose book provides a window into examining the most influential historical event that has happened during their generation."

Foer, 31, was born in Washington, D.C., and attended Princeton University, where he was awarded the Senior Creative Writing Thesis Prize.

A prolific writer, Foer's short stories have been printed in such publications as The New Yorker, The New York Times, The Guardian and The Atlantic Monthly, among others. In the spring of 2008, Foer taught as a visiting professor of intermediate fiction at Yale University.

Foer's work is known to incite polar reviews from the literary world, but they have not stopped filmmakers from jumping at the film rights to his books.

William McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

Sports, race, politics talk

BY ADAM COULTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

David Maraniss, Pulitzer Prize winning journalist, Washington Post associate editor and the author of five books delivered an evocative narrative yesterday at the University of Massachusetts in the Flavin Auditorium, weaving together the impassioned topics of race, sports and politics after bringing each to life through their own illustrative examples.

The title of the talk was "Playing for Keeps: Race, Sports and Politics." Maraniss opened the night with an inspirational story that occurred 48 years ago this month, a story that helped to plant the seeds for civil rights in this country and also gave the world its "great, first women's sports celebrity of that era."

Maraniss continued throughout the talk to touch on emotionally charged, but vital issues to the world and nation.

Wilma Randolph, an African American athlete, was only 20 years old when she became the first American women to win three gold medals at the 1960 Rome Olympics, Maraniss said.

Randolph was then able to turn her fame into something truly positive by denying requests for a parade and banquet in her honor from her hometown of Clarksville Tennessee until the events could be racially integrated.

From here Maraniss succinctly proceeded to the interconnected events of the brutal summer of 1961, and Barack Obama.

The summer of 1961 was scorching and violence and racial tension were high as a new movement took hold, Maraniss explained to the packed audience.

"The Freedom Riders would sit on busses and ride through the South, ultimately arrested by the hundreds because they dared to sit together," he said.

In August of that same year Sen. Barack Obama was born to an 18-year-old mother and a 24-year-old black father.

"He was born in an era when in half a dozen states it was illegal for whites and blacks to mingle," continued Maraniss.

At this point in the talk, the audience was led to the hub of David Maraniss' life and work as a writer and reporter for 35 years, and his thesis concerning the 1960's Olympics, the Civil Rights Freedom Riders and Barack Obama's birth in 1961 became clear.

"There is no obvious connection between those things, but they are deeply connected and the loves of my life, the obsessions of my career as a journalist weave through those three things," explained Maraniss.

"You can't really deal with politics without understanding the racial history of this country and you certainly can't

See MARANISS on page 3

Goodbye to summer

Will Fischer, a University of Massachusetts graduate and researcher for the Astronomy department, holds a globe during a demonstration on the Earth's rotation during the autumn equinox at the UMass Sunwheel.

Fall began at exactly 11:44:18 a.m. yesterday and University of Massachusetts students and staff joined members of the community at the Sunwheel to witness summer's departure.

The stone calendar is 408 ft. in diameter, and Astronomer Judith Young estimates it has hosted around 50,000 school children since its completion. Young and fellow astronomer Will Fischer hosted talks at 6:45 a.m. and 6 p.m. on the historical significance of the spring and fall equinoxes.

"It lets me do something that people have been doing since the beginning of time, and that is to look at the solar system and see our place in it," said Andi Morris-Friedman, a volunteer at the UMass Sunwheel.

William McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

Hampshire restructures public safety

BY DANIEL SCHEER
HAMPSHIRE COLLEGE CORRESPONDENT

Hampshire College restructured its Department of Public Safety this summer, incorporating administrators and staff from Mount Holyoke College.

Hampshire's expanded public safety staff was put into place in order to bring more legitimacy and consistency to the department, according to Ray LaBarre, assistant director of Hampshire College's Department of Public Safety.

Mount Holyoke College's Department of Public Safety, he said, is one of the few accredited college public safety departments in the state. It is this level of consistency that LaBarre hopes to bring to Hampshire College by merging the departments.

"We have this huge book of policy and procedures for officers to use, which makes us less apt to run into problems and legalities," he said. "These standards we use allow officers to respond to situations the same way. We have consistency that prevents officers from being singled out."

These changes also included the hiring of a new director, associate director and community outreach coordinator for the department.

Paul Ominsky, the director of public safety at Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges, now heads the restructured Department of Public Safety at Hampshire. While Ominsky acts as a coordinator between the three colleges, LaBarre oversees public safety officers and staff on the Hampshire campus.

Hampshire's Dean of Student Services Dawn Ellinwood worked with Ominsky at Elms College. She said she looks forward to working with him within the new public safety department.

"When I heard that Paul was heading it I did a jig," Ellinwood said. "He is a master of what he does, totally student-centered, which is totally unheard of when you have this level of police force."

Already, LaBarre and Ominsky have been busy at their new posts.

"The old director asked officers to cut the locks on the bikes and store them," said LaBarre. "I come in and see 150 bikes stored in the basement [of Franklin Patterson Hall]."

He insisted that the public safety department will not remove bikes again, but will instead offer a service that allows students to register their bikes with the campus.

LaBarre appreciated the help of Hampshire students in moving the stored bikes.

"I had some help with the bikes with some student volunteers," he said. "They're an asset to Hampshire's community and I think they're fantastic."

Excited to work with Hampshire students, LaBarre wants open communication.

"Public safety here is very open," he said. "I encourage students to come and talk to me."

LaBarre predicts that in addition to these changes, the department will become more professional. He assures, however, that the core of Hampshire College's Department of Public Safety will still be the same.

"It was very important for us to keep Hampshire's identity," he said. "The [police] cruisers are still marked up as Hampshire vehicles, staff wears Hampshire uniforms and Hampshire badges."

These assertions lie in direct contradiction with rumors that have surfaced concerning the changes.

"One of the rumors I'm privy to is that our officers are carrying guns. That's absolutely untrue," Ellinwood said.

Hampshire College, a member of the Five College system, has expanded its public safety staff, including the hiring of a new director.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 16

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Wasserzuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Stephanie McPherson
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Melissa Garber
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenwaike
Features Editor Andrea Huerta
Photo Editor Brian Tedder
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager William Mullholland
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kozowara
Asst. Arts & Living Heather Waisman
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial Leigh Greaves
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Assistant News Stella Cernak
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffres R. Larnard
Assistant Sports Melissa Turtunen
Assistant photo P.J. Stanles

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year, except during vacations and examination periods. The Collegian is entered as periodical matter at the Amherst Post Office under the Act of March 3, 1879. The paper is owned and published by the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Publishing Association, Inc., a non-profit organization. The Collegian is a member of the Associated Collegiate Press. Printed on recycled paper.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Olesin

COPY EDITOR
Dominic Poli

PRODUCTION TEAM
Shaina Jackson Paula Lavelle

F.A.M.U.S. to aid minority students

FAMUS from page 2

replicate their experience with the incoming freshmen and to be officially part of UMass, so F.A.M.U.S. was created.

The mission statement found in the F.A.M.U.S. resource packet handed out this year states, "Our mission is to help incoming underrepresented students meet, interact and adjust to college life both socially and academically, through a system of encouragement and guidance from older, more experienced students from similar backgrounds."

Gentles explains that F.A.M.U.S. is different from other mentoring agencies such as the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEMBS) and the Office of Programs and Services for ALANA Students (OPSAS) because F.A.M.U.S is about students helping students and adding the "you aspect" in mentoring.

The student-to-student mentoring is one of their primary tools used in attempting to retain the underrepresented students on campus.

"We plan to retain the minority population on campus by creating such a great atmosphere for them. We want them to feel like they have their close friends and family here. People, they can come to for any sort of help, or just to hang out and have fun," Perez said.

The aim of F.A.M.U.S, according to Perez, is to empower freshmen to participate in UMass activities, thus connecting them to the campus and helping them remain at UMass.

"The main focus, however, will be on their participation. It's easy for us to just come up with some sort of event, plan it, and execute it, and then invite the freshmen, but that would get us nowhere. We want them to be there at every part of the process, so our coming meeting should help a bit with that," Perez said.

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu

From left, the vice president of F.A.M.U.S., Quinn Brown, stands with SGA senator Melicia Morris, and secretary Jusna Perrin.

All fun and 'Games'

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

Gamers in the Pioneer Valley looking for a laid-back community to play games, meet new people, or just get work done, need to look no further than Worlds Apart Games in Amherst.

Worlds Apart is a non-profit game store offering a variety of card, board and role-playing games (RPGs) as well as used books and comics to anyone interested. The store was founded by University of Massachusetts graduate and entrepreneur Michael Whitehouse.

Whitehouse started his entrepreneurship into the gaming world in January of 2002, when he opened his first store, Phoenix Games, in Sunderland. The concept of the original store was a place where gamers could just hang out and play games. The only difference was that Phoenix Games was aimed toward making a profit.

"After about two years it was pretty clear that it wasn't going to make money," said Whitehouse. "But it developed this great community, so I decided to stick with it."

The store became a place where many gamers would come in frequently, in some cases even daily. The community carries a nonchalance that makes all gamers feel welcome to be themselves and stay as long as they want.

"If you [walk in] here, you know you're going to find people you know, or people you would like to know," Whitehouse said.

"This community is a safe place to go to where people won't judge you," said UMass senior Nikki Gamache, a frequent patron of Worlds Apart.

She commented that the store's community is "a lot more open-minded and caters to a larger variety of people," than most game stores.

"All my friends are here," said Worlds Apart volunteer Zach Danehew. He also noted the sense of community he gets from working at the store.

"It's less of your stereotypical game store," said Alex Bernsten, also a member of the store's volunteer staff.

In December of 2007, it became clear that Phoenix Games wasn't worth keeping open. Whitehouse decided that instead of declaring bankruptcy, he should put his resources to use to serve the Pioneer Valley Gaming Collective.

"I realized I had an entire game store's worth of equipment and merchandise, it was just in the wrong place with the wrong organizational structure," he said.

Shortly after Christmas, Whitehouse announced his plans of changing the angle of the gaming establishment. In the five weeks following, the staff wrote new by-laws for a cooperative and started gathering and selling membership for Worlds Apart Games. The money raised from selling memberships, plus some negotiating with a generous landlord, got the business off the ground.

The store is run by an executive board made up of General Manager Whitehouse, Quartermaster Dan Stubbs, Treasurer Lee Steventon, and Membership Coordinator Kiernan Gulick-Sherrill. The board is also advised by a council of five additional co-op members.

The co-op began to make a profit as early as July, just five months after the store opened. Treasurer Lee Steventon attributes the business boom to the support of the community established by Phoenix Games.

"A lot of the people that used to go to Phoenix Games completely jumped on board with us from day one," she said.

Whitehouse said the two key factors that helped the growth of business were location and word of mouth from a "collective structure."

"Just [the difference between]

See GAMES on page 3

Worlds Apart Games, located on North Pleasant Street in Amherst, is a non-profit game store and hangout for students and locals.

Site sells crabs to the vengeful

By Victoria Touts
The Daily Collegian

People often say revenge is a dish best served cold. But when it comes to getting back at an ex, revenge could be a dish best served alive.

Sure, things started out great. Everyone saw the happy couple all over campus, holding hands as they skipped to class together, without a care in the world. A few months have gone by, and she can't handle one more day of him playing video games with the "boys," and he can't take one more day of her constant nagging, bickering and PMS.

After the relationship goes downhill and the happily-ever-after couple isn't so happy any more, revenge is oh so sweet.

Girls will hack into boys' facebook accounts and change their favorite movie to "The Babysitter's Club." And boys will go to Bopie's to try to bring home as many late-night specials they can find.

But for people who aren't messing around and want to take revenge to a whole new level, consider RevengeCrabs.com.

Revenge Crabs is a Web site offering packages of "crabs" to infest anyone you deem deserving.

Packages range from a single colony for $99 to a shampoo-resistant colony for $298.

Each package comes with the colony of crabs, a detailed instruction sheet on the best way to pass the crabs on and bottle of anti-crab shampoo in case of accidental "self-crabbifying."

The creators of revengecrabs.com prefer to remain anonymous, but on the Web site they describe themselves as a "collection of professional guys who all attend a well-known university in the northeast."

One of the creators was seeing a girl that kept him itching for less, not more, because she infected him with crabs.

Before he could get a dollop of ointment onto his "pubis of greatest inflammatoirarius" two of his brothers found themselves "in the same final throes of prickly screaming chigger nibbling," according to the Web site.

The boys vowed two things that day: "bros before hoes," and if they had to have the crabs, then all them "biznatches" should have a couple of waves of crabs, too.

The creators claim that giving someone crabs is both morally and legally acceptable and Byron Dwight, vice president of sales for revengecrabs.com, said that in the two years they have been in business no one has attempted to sue them.

On the Q & A portion of the Web site, they jokingly answer the question of whether someone can get in trouble for giving the crabs to another.

"Depends how big she is, whether or not she owns a gun, or if she's the type to sneak into your bed at night and slice you up," the creators said.

To justify the legality of this service, Dwight said, "Do you sue the maker of the whoopee cushion?"

Cheney Joseph, professor of law and vice chancellor for academic affairs at Paul M. Hebert Law Center, said he isn't sure whether there is a law against purposefully infesting someone with crabs.

"The AIDS statute in the criminal code does not include all sexually transmitted diseases ... but there may be some provisions of which I am unaware," Joseph said.

Emily Tavrot, anthropology senior, said she wouldn't use this method to exact revenge on anyone.

"I just don't find that amusing," Tavrot said.

But many people do find it amusing, as the testimonials reveal.

As the tagline of the Web site says, "You've got an ex, a grudge and a valid credit card with matching billing and shipping addresses, and we've got crabs."

So boys and girls beware, because revenge is always sweet — especially when the victim is left "itching" with regret for whatever bad decision they made.

Funeral services for University of Massachusetts student Randall Graham will be held Wednesday, Sept. 24. The service begins at 10 a.m. at the Shiloh Baptist Church, located between Holten and Bower streets, in West Medford, Mass.

Following the service will be a luncheon at Valora Washington House, located at 11 Viking Road, in Winchester, Mass.

2 X Tuesday
Domino's Pizza
Buy any large pizza, get second one FREE

New WORLD Theater Fall 2008
FINE ARTS CENTER

sash & trim
By Djola Branner. Directed by Laurie Carlos
Wednesday - Friday, September 24-26, 2008
8 PM, Curtain Theater
Co-presented with UMass Department of Theater
With sash & trim, Djola Branner blends music and memory to piece together the story of troubled relationship with a father he hardly knew. sash & trim is in development with creative collaboration and support from seminal theater artist Laurie Carlos, an innovator of the American avant garde scene.

Shekadii Walaalo!
Saturday, November 22, 2008
at 7 pm, Bowker Auditorium, UMass
Shekadii Walaalo Sister-Story is the culminating performance of a multi-year community-based project featuring the Pioneer Valley's own Somali community in a vibrant evening of live music, dance, video, poetry and storytelling.
Crisis In Somalia - A special series of FREE public forums will provide background and perspective on Somali history, current events, and the political roots of the ongoing refugee crisis. OCT 15, NOV 18, NOV 22 Visit our website for venues and updates.
Tickets are $15-general public; $8-low income patrons/seniors; $5 students with valid I.D. Call FAC Box Office at 413-545-2511. For more info about the shows call NWT at 413-545-1972
www.newworldtheater.org

Community created through game store

GAMES from page 2

moving from Sunderland to Amherst, we have three or four new people a day come in," Whitehouse added.

There are now more than 20 members involved with Worlds Apart Games, most of them volunteers. Even more community members are regulars at the store, or as Whitehouse puts it, "invested" in the establishment.

The approach of the business is strikingly different from that of an average store. Rather than the typical process of walking in, buying what you need and walking out, the staff tries to make customers feel they are a part of the community created by the store. Patrons are encouraged to stay as long as they want.

"One thing we try to do when people come in is not just try to sell them something, but also try to invite them to play a game, or tell them about the events we do," said Whitehouse.

Whitehouse also emphasized that Worlds Apart is not geared toward people who strongly consider themselves "gamers."

"We've had some people that just like the community and atmosphere and don't game at all," he said. He went on to talk about one particular visitor who simply came in to do her homework and chat with the other regulars.

The types of games carried at the store go beyond the norm of typical board games, from varying themes on classic board games to German Eurogames, which experienced gamers find more interesting and exhilarating.

There is also a wide variety of lesser known card games and RPGs. All of these games are available for play at any time the store is open.

In the past, Phoenix Games has helped put on many events for the Pioneer Valley Gamer Collective, such as Renaissance fairs and movie screenings.

Whitehouse hopes at some point to continue putting on such events in the area. In October, Worlds Apart plans to host the "Incredibly Amazing Overhyped Event," a gaming party open to the public.

The cooperative also hosts weekly events, including a board game night on Sundays from 5 to 10 p.m, Eurogames night on Mondays from 6 to 10 p.m., and a Magic Booster Draft on Thursday nights.

Anyone interested in becoming a part of this community is encouraged by the staff to come to Worlds Apart's first general membership meeting of the semester. The meeting will be held at 6 p.m today at the store, located in the basement of 48 North Pleasant Street.

Lucas Correia can be reached at lcorrei@student.umass.edu

From left, Zach Danehew, Michael Whitehouse, Dan Stubbs, Ana Steiner, and Jonathan Eckard enjoy a card game at World Apart Games.

Maraniss shares stories

David Maraniss, acclaimed journalist and author, visited campus yesterday to speak to students about his career and his experiences.

MARANISS from page 1

deal with sports in this country without understanding race in this country," he said.

"Sports, more than anything has been the impetus for change."

Parker Knox, a graduate student studying for his masters in Sports Management found the talk and the topic of race an interesting one that he could personally relate to.

"I'm from the South and I identify with him [Maraniss] and with his ideals, I have friends in the South that are black and some made it a big deal," said Knox.

Mike Lacrosse, a junior journalism major said he enjoyed the talk and more specifically, the work and life of Maraniss.

"It's good to have someone to aspire and look up to," Lacrosse said.

The profession and freedom of journalism excited Lacrosse as well, especially after hearing Maraniss talk about the interesting people he'd met while writing his books, such as Cassius Clay and Bill Clinton.

"I liked to see how journalism can enrich your life; it's a profession that lets you get into new things," added Lacrosse.

David Maraniss is the author of five books and his most recent book came out this summer, entitled "Rome 1960."

Kylie Martin, sophomore journalism major, has read all of his books and enjoyed a concurrent theme in them that also was rooted in the Monday night talk.

"I liked that all of his works go back to loss and self redemption, it's a central theme," said Martin.

Adam P Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu

From iPhones to uPhones

By Meghan Pesch
Tufts Daily

As brand new college freshmen flooded university campuses earlier this month, some were greeted with more than just a Nalgene bottle and a class of 2012 shirt. In an effort to bring the latest technology into the classroom, several universities decided to give every student a new iPhone or iPod touch.

The University of Maryland, Abilene Christian University, Oklahoma Christian University and Freed-Hardeman University are among the schools that gave out the devices to some or all of their students this year.

By doing so, the schools hope that students will take advantage of the technology to connect to academia in the same way that they would connect with friends.

George Saltsman, director of educational technology at Abilene Christian, hopes that now students will be able to more easily immerse themselves in their academics.

"Students take their cell phones everywhere; it's the way they interact with the world," Saltsman said. "We want them to be that way in their academics. We want students to have the same opportunity to engage in academics as they do socially."

The iPhones and iPods the students receive from their schools are the same as those available to the public, but include special applications that are specific to the students' schools. The Abilene Christian University iPhones have an interactive map feature that can track the phone and give directions to the student's next class. The phones can also be used to poll the class, giving the professor instant feedback from the students.

"They are a way to interact with students," Saltsman said. "Instead of everyone having a clicker, [the] phone is the clicker. It becomes a way to have a response system. It gives the professor a formative way of taking the pulse of the class."

The phones also have a mobile form of a program similar to Blackboard, where professors can share documents with students.

"Teachers can also put documents and pretty much all other forms of media up on the server for students to access from their iPhones," Saltsman said, "so the system is paperless and, for the most part, green."

Although advanced technology in the classroom is by no means a new phenomenon, the introduction of the iPhone to the classroom meant that many teachers were forced into new ways of teaching. The faculty at Abilene Christian was required to attend several training sessions to familiarize themselves with the technologies. The school has introduced the program slowly, so teachers can adjust their syllabi and teaching style.

"We started with just the incoming freshmen this year, and since not all of our classes are ubiquitous ... we don't have any all-freshman classes ... it gives the faculty time to get used to the technology," Saltsman said.

"The inaugural faculty agreed to two training courses, the first of which was basic iPhone use, like syncing it with your computer, and the second session was more about how to use it in a classroom setting."

While Abilene Christian has decided to integrate the technology slowly, starting with only the incoming freshmen and roughly half the faculty. At the University of Maryland, 133 scholarship students are participating in a pilot program. Stanford University offers the iPhone to all students, but they must be willing to pay the costs of the phone.

In the past, schools like Duke University have given out phones to students who don't already own them as a tool to use in case of campus emergencies. While Tufts has not given out phones, the university has taken action against emergency events.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24
ALL DCs FROM 5-9 PM
Farmers' Market at the DCs
LOCAL HONEY PRODUCTS AVAILABLE FOR SALE
Cash only.

Carved Roast Turkey (local)
Braised Pork Chops with (local) Apples
Broiled Wild Sustainable Salmon with Herb Butter
Portobello Mushrooms
Boiled New Potatoes with Fine Herbs (local)
Mixed Grill Summer Vegetables (local)
Corn on the Cob (local)
FROM THE UMASS BAKE SHOP:
Spice Cake with Maple Frosting
Pumpkin Bread Pudding

DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst
LOCAL HERO
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy
umass.edu/diningservices

LIVE MUSIC AT THE DC
Meet Award [illegible] Singer-Songwriter
JASON LeVASSEUR
has opened for Dave Matthews Band, Maroon 5, John Mayer, The Wallflowers, Ben Folds, Rooney and more...
Monday, September 22 Berkshire DC · 8-9 pm
Tuesday, September 23 Worcester DC · 8-9 pm
Listen to his dynamic, acoustic pop/rock performance!
DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst
umass.edu/diningservices
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy
FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The sciences' fiction

Eli Gotlieb

Has anyone else noticed how over the past several years an endless number of industry representatives and Thomas Friedman wannabes have told our country that we have a supposed crisis of too few people in the business of mathematics, science, and engineering?

Every couple of months I see another newspaper story telling me that my friends and I are too few and that the American public school system simply can't produce enough like us. The stories say that Americans as a whole just don't have the intelligence for these fields and that industry and academia therefore have to import scientists and engineers via H1-B visa programs and graduate student visas. Sometimes they mask their true meaning by kvetching that too few women or racial minorities enter these fields, but they always really mean the same thing.

Now, I'll agree that the American public school system just outright blows. While American popular culture denigrates scientists, mathematicians, and engineers as "nerds," that never stopped anyone from becoming a scientist in previous decades. I think we can also rule out the supposed stupidity of the American people, as well.

While Americans have a notorious tendency to eschew complex thought, education, and reasoning in favor of gut emotion, this does not mean they actually lack intelligence. The genetically-endowed intelligence of a population can't decrease within so little a time as 20 or 30 years. If we can't even identify the cause of the problem, how can we solve it?

This problem has no solution, because there is no problem. After all, if the country really needed more people in science and engineering, wouldn't they just raise the salaries in those fields?

It seems like a simple application of the most basic economics to me. The increasing proportion of science and engineering students who are not native-born Americans is a symptom of a diseased industry. Shortages do not happen to fungible products, such as labor, in a free market.

The clearest statement of the issue comes from the esteemed Dr. Philip Greenspun of MIT who said, "Adjusted for IQ, quantitative skills, and working hours, jobs in science are the lowest paid in the United States."

The average engineer or computer programmer who spent four to six years in college makes a per-hour salary similar to that of an electrician in that area. The engineer or programmer may seem to make more money, but they also work 50 or 60 hour workweeks on a routine basis.

They also get to enjoy the privilege of mostly working for large, soulless corporations. They even get to work for morally nasty ones such as defense contractors because it appears the American government would rather let bridges collapse than pay for competent engineers to bring our infrastructure into the 21st century. Those corporations use loopholes in immigration law to flood the market with cheap Indian and East Asian workers. Did you know that the majority of H-1B work visas go to Indian outsourcing firms?

Student debt on such a low salary leaves a new engineer or scientist a modern-day indentured servant, shackled to their job by chains that bind no less for being made of paper.

Researchers have it even worse. They have to spend four years in undergraduate studies, followed by as many as seven years in graduate school, and then spend two to four more years in "postdocs" that pay as much as high school teaching positions for both teaching and research work. Even if a researcher manages to land an academic or industrial research job, they can still get fired arbitrarily in their 30s – just in time to have a starving family and no other career prospects. The few who remain after this 30-year-long weeding-out process then receive tenure and an adequate upper middle class salary for the rest of their careers. Lovely.

Let's not forget that undergrad education means student loans. Student debt on such a low salary leaves a new engineer or scientist a modern-day indentured servant, shackled to their job by chains that bind no less for being made of paper.

It should come as no wonder that most intelligent young Americans currently choose to go into business, medicine, the fine arts, or law rather than science, mathematics, and engineering. The free market has spoken and it only demands a comparatively small number of scientists and engineers at this time.

In fact, a reader with a particularly penetrating mind might wonder what I think I'm doing in this field if I hate the career so much. My answer is that I'm skipping town after graduation for a place where computer scientists make as much as stockbrokers. I love my field, but unless the next government deliberately pours massive funding into it or closes the loopholes in immigration law that let corporations flood the high-tech market with immigrants, I don't think I can practice it here.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu

Revamping the SGA

Tina Ortiz

First, I must assert that I am fully aware that politics is a communal necessity; but also just as essential to the proper functioning of a truly democratic society, are those who challenge, confront and question the brave few who hold political office.

I can admit to being the type of person who often curses, criticizes, and when the need arises, undermines the institution of politics. It is a habit I can't seem to shake, especially at the campus level.

The University of Massachusetts is a small enough community where my dissenting views seem to garner a significant amount of attention, but large enough for me to have confidence that there will be others who share my views. The elected officials and their public share a peculiar dynamic. The selected minority attempt to please an ever-insatiable majority who will always include people with conflicting views. It's just the nature of a very savage, yet democratic, beast.

Student Senate campaigning has begun, and the valiant candidates are enthusiastically vying for student votes.

This is my third year on campus and I'm eagerly waiting for the year that the Student Government Association (SGA) actually makes my life as a student on campus as great as they claim. It seems like these young candidates are taking good notes on national political protocol – lure the public in with promises of a better tomorrow, then once you make office, relax and enjoy the view from above.

SGA board members are like the captain of the football team in high school.

They only want one thing and after a steamy romp in the voting booth you never hear from them again. Well, at the risk of being labeled a political prude, I want to say that I refuse to be objectified. There's more to me than just my SPIRE ID. I'm not giving it up until I see legitimacy and a solid campaign not rooted in a Facebook group.

Voting starts on the 24th of this month and there has been little to no information about the election – let alone the nomination process on campus. If the student body isn't voting these people into office then who is? The SGA is a student organization on campus that aims "to ensure that student representation is at the forefront of decision makers agenda and [is] devoted to putting Students First," according to its Web site.

Well, seeing as voting starts tomorrow I can't help but feel like a student put last.

I'm eagerly waiting for the year that the SGA actually makes my life as a student on campus as great as they claim.

Why was something as important as election not made known to the student body as whole? I find even the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition largely surpasses the SGA's ability to get in touch with the people they claim to represent, and those guys would have ample reason to forget to send out an e-mail.

The only students represented in the voting pool for the nomination process were those who already held office in the organization, members of the ALANA Caucus – another RSO that dominates the executive branch – and friends of those running for office.

I don't feel adequately at the forefront of the any decision maker's agenda. The SGA voted nearly unanimously – the one dissenting vote belonging to Derek Khanna, Commuter Senate Candidate – to raise student activities fees for the second time in a row last year – an opinion clearly not representative of this student and I'm positive not of many others either.

But I'm sure Malcolm Chu, president of the SGA, would vote with the well-being of the student body in mind, right?

I'm not one to pass judgment quickly. However, once his bio blurb on the SGA Web site reads more than just "President of SGA: Malcolm Chu. More information coming soon," I'll be sure to read it. Then maybe afterward I'll decide whether or not he's just another smarmy politician in the making. If holding an executive seat in the SGA is something that UMass officials find important enough to make a paid position, then I think the people appointed to those occupations should make an effort to communicate well with the students.

It's not that they don't know how to communicate, because I remember seeing Chu's name everywhere last year when he was looking for votes. I had hoped that his dedication to collecting votes would match his passion for attacking student issues, but I never heard from him after he was elected.

This campus is the site of a scholastic renaissance. With construction happening everywhere, the new chancellor has high expectations for the University and is taking strides toward changing how the academic world views UMass students and faculty.

Its time this battle cry for change be heard by the SGA.

The ALANA Caucus has occupied the executive branch of the SGA for years and their lukewarm commitment to the campus community might have been sufficient at one time, but has no place on our evolving campus.

So, I surrender to my politically rebellious nature and propose a challenge to those running for office. You can either take a step back into obsolete governmental tactics or take a progressive step forward into change.

Tina Ortiz is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kortiz@student.umass.edu.

Congress and the economic crisis

Scott Harris

If you think that what is going on in the financial markets does not affect you because you are not invested in anything "just a college student" or whatever, you are wrong.

You should be paying very close attention to this situation because, if the Bush Administration and Wall Street have their way, you are going to be on the hook for at least $700 billion to add to the nearly $11 trillion worth of national debt being left to our generation.

As a quick overview, earlier this decade, then-Sen. Phil Gramm led the Republican-controlled Congress to massively deregulate the financial markets and, more specifically, tear down the boundaries between investment and commercial banks that had been in place since the Great Depression. Commercial banks began to issue home loans to people who could not possibly pay them back on terms they could not possibly understand.

That increased demand for housing which increased prices. This led investment banks to buy up these "sub-prime" mortgages from commercial banks eager to shed the bad debt, further speculating prices upward. Often, when a sector of the stock market has highly inflated value ("inflated" in that the value was derived from bad debt), it is called a "bubble."

In 2007, the bubble burst and all those people who could have never handled their mortgages in the first place, in combination with other declining economic conditions, started to default on their loans. Because of Republican-led reshaping of U.S. bankruptcy laws in 2005, there suddenly was no arbiter between the banks and the consumers.

Families lost their homes and the investment banks suddenly found themselves in possession of billions of dollars in bad debt. With nowhere to turn and all their capital tied up in burnable IOUs, Wall Street titans like the Lehman Brothers, AIG and Bear Stearns crumbled overnight. In terms of the historical significance of these events, it is on par with a Tuesday in 1929.

The CEOs that helped craft the corporate culture that created this mess should not be allowed to safely parachute into Malibu with millions in taxpayer dollars.

Thankfully and unsettlingly, the Federal Reserve and the Bush Administration wield nearly dictator-like power in ensuring that the economy can fall only as far as they will allow it to. When the Dow dropped over 800 points in 48 hours last week, it was clear that something needed to be done. As I mentioned above, the federal government has asked for $700 billion to bailout the entire financial sector by buying all the bad debt, allowing these banks to continue on living on a charitable grant from the U.S. taxpayer.

I say, "No."

I agree that something needs to be done, but the plan presented by Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson and the Bush Administration is an affront to intelligent people anywhere. Let's be clear. These banks are acting incredibly irresponsibly. They knew of the tremendous risk in buying this bad debt and did it anyway. In any other sector of the economy where the CEOs have less political connections, the idea of an industry-wide bailout would be ludicrous.

Moreover, further bankrupting our already bankrupt federal government is not likely to be a better solution than letting these companies wallow in their bad decisions. The government plans to essentially give away $700 billion in taxpayer funds, allowing these banks to carry on as though they did nothing wrong with no requirement to ever pay us back. By the way, the CEOs of these companies are going to receive millions of dollars in severance while their employees lose their pensions and livelihoods.

In the 1980s, during the Savings and Loan crisis, the federal government came up with a plan which involved taking over the failing banks and selling off their assets to satisfy the bad debt they incurred through gambling people's deposits in the stock market. While the taxpayers still had to foot a pretty healthy portion of the bailout, the banks were not allowed to continue existing and there were no golden parachutes. In the United States and around the world, financial sector bailouts often look like this and are primarily in the stock market causing bailouts of the financial sector happen quite frequently.

Additionally, Congress should use this opportunity to restore the regulations separating commercial and investment banks to prevent something like this from happening again – if for no other reason than we don't have the money to bail out any more Wall Street titans with lots of political connections.

The CEOs that helped craft the corporate culture that created this mess should not be allowed to safely parachute into Malibu with millions in taxpayer dollars. Congress must restrict severance packages to no more than their standard yearly salary.

Congress must also address the thousands of families currently being tossed out on the street. The rescue package must include the ability for bankruptcy judges to lower the principle left on the mortgages and modify the interest rates.

Congress cannot possibly shoulder the load of the employee pensions of the various companies that have crumbled in the wake of this crisis, but they should require the banks to first pay into a fund that will eventually provide for their retirements.

No matter the political connections, these companies had a moral responsibility to the American people to act prudently, and they did not do that. Raise your hands if you believe a "free market" economy means getting a bailout whenever things get too tough.

Scott Harris is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at sharris@student.umass.edu.

Market failure or government failure?

Greg Collins

The current financial crisis is just the latest example of market failure.

The government takeover of mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac shows that markets may have their merits, but they need to be regulated heavily. We need the government to intervene to make the playing field more fair so that everyone has an equal shot at obtaining loans and buying houses. Only when the government provides loans at lower prices will we have social justice.

Or so goes the typical narrative describing current financial instability in America. It is easy to look at the contemporary disruption of our free market system and come to this conclusion in a vacuum.

It is much harder to take a broader perspective of the policies and conditions that lead to the instability. This is crucial to understanding why mortgage companies bankrupted in the first place.

For example, Congress' creation of Fannie Mae in 1938 was intended to provide government-backed mortgages to people who could otherwise not afford them. It would buy billions of dollars of mortgages each year and then promise to pay back them back at a later time.

Of course, this security meant that Fannie Mae was not confronted with the potential consequences of making irresponsible financial decisions such as risky investments. However, this is what it has done for years.

Former Federal Reserve chairman Alan Greenspan knew full well about these practices and had repeatedly warned against the long-term negative effects of such unrestrained behavior. Other federal legislation in the 1970s also forced the government to provide loans to people who otherwise would not have received them because of shaky credit histories.

There is one underlying principle connected with these programs. There was an implicit incentive to use money irresponsibly because there were no explicit repercussions for using it irresponsibly.

Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac may have certainly provided mortgages to people earning small incomes. The question is, how were families able to pay for mortgages before any federal loan guarantees?

The answer is that they earned money, saved money, and invested in homes individually and responsibly. They knew that using their money on the whim, without any standards of accountability or frugality, would lead inevitably to foreclosures and evictions.

In the interest of maintaining financial stability for yourself in the long run, you would not ask the federal government to assume all your debts.

Think about how you earn and use your own money. What would you do if you suddenly realized that you would not have enough money to pay for essentials like food and clothing?

The obvious answer is that you cut costs. You don't take on extra loans that you can't afford. You don't promise to pay back loans after a short amount of time when you know you can't.

In the interest of maintaining financial stability for yourself in the long run, you would not ask the federal government to assume all your debts.

Let's take a look at FDR's New Deal, as it is one of the famous examples of the supposed successes of government intervention jumpstarting the economy. Franklin Roosevelt's federally-mandated programs provision of farm subsidies and public employment opportunities are widely considered to have provided the stimulus for America's financial recovery.

Just like in the case of Fannie Mae, it was government intervention, not lack thereof, which was largely to blame for creating the conditions which led to furthering the Depression. For instance, the 1930 Smoot-Hawley Tariff raised import taxes of over 20,000 products to record rates, which led foreign countries, including major trading partners of the United States, to raise their import tariff rates to high levels. Most economists believe this cat-and-mouse game had a detrimental effect on the American economy, as it caused a large reduction in international trade.

There are many more examples of the long-term counterproductive effects of the New Deal. Farm subsidies given through the Agricultural Adjustment Act encouraged overproduction and inefficiency. Most farm subsidies were ended in 1995 by Congress. The Works Progress Administration did not halt unemployment rates but rather contributed to the second recession in 1937. Coupled with the failure of the Federal Reserve to expand the money supply at a sufficient rate to stabilize the economy, empirical results show that many New Deal programs did not stimulate the economy substantially – if at all.

Which leads us back to the current financial instability, which is not confined to just federal mortgage lenders. Social Security, Medicaid, and Medicare are going through very similar problems. Fundamentally, all of these programs have the commonality that they were short-sighted plans aimed to help people at the time, but in the long-run they hurt Americans who were powerless at the time to oppose their implementation. Until people start to realize that this is what commonly happens as a result of federal welfare programs, they will continue to be fooled by illusory narratives.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Built to Spill pleases crowd at Pearl Street

Indie-rock band's high energy set outweighs their casual dress

By Peter Rizzo
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – Sporting a bill that included The Drones, an Australian punk band, and Meat Puppets, 1980s alternative-rock icons, headliner Built to Spill took their fall tour to Northampton on Thursday night.

Though the show was supposed to be held at the Calvin Theater, the night's events were moved last minute to the upstairs stage at Pearl Street Night Club due to a lack of ticket sales.

Despite the weak selling, all three bands played to a full house of enthusiastic fans, mostly college-aged kids, who were packed like sardines up against the stage, pushing to get a better glimpse of the main acts.

The event started off slowly at 8 p.m. as The Drones kicked off the concert with admirable intensity.

The drummer, resembling an extra in a '70s cop film, sported a thick moustache accompanied by an appropriate display of chest hair behind his drum set.

He played with enough intensity to enhance his simple drum lines, while the group's bassist, also the girlfriend of frontman Gareth Liddiard, steadily kept her back to the audience at all times.

Liddiard later explained that her actions were not an act of protest to the crowd but a regular occurrence.

"That's what she does," he said. "No matter what show – she's shy."

The simplicity of the rhythm section anchored the off-kilter riffs and ambient atmospheric effects of the group's lead guitarists who, contrary to the immobile bassist and drummer, were busy writhing and dancing onstage.

Liddiard aimed for style over finesse, throwing his guitar back and forth as it hung below his waist, howling into the microphone with an unintelligible yelp.

The band's punk style eventually gave way to outright noise during one of the high points of the group's set, as the guitarists pushed the boundaries between pure guitar riffs and strange noises.

"It's all effects and whammy," Liddiard said referring to the group's sound. "I'm a whammy bar man. That's my thing. I started making weird noises and then graduated to Zeppelin songs."

The group left the stage to a warm reception from the still-fledgling crowd.

Despite the small audiences stateside, Liddiard admitted the lack of recognition can be difficult on a band well-known in its hometown but feels it "keeps the band honest."

Next up were the manic Southwesterners that form the genre-bending, Meat Puppets.

After a 10-minute lull in the music, a group of what appeared to be roadies walked onto the stage. They were fully armed with sweatpants and wild manes of gray hair, one of whom sported a red T-shirt emblazoned with the words "ha ha."

These men, who looked like they could have spent the previous night sleeping on the sidewalk, proved to be no laughing matter. They launched right into the music, thereby unveiling themselves as the Meat Puppets.

The band didn't take time to address the crowd but rather started by playing with a laid-back vibe. They stopped only once, when bassist Cris Kirkwood asked, "How are you?" in the midst of what resembled an epileptic fit, before jokingly smashing his head into the nearest microphone.

From there, the band accelerated into the hardcore tempos of their youth in order to stir up the now-growing crowd.

One of the early highlights found "the brothers Meat" duet on "Plateau" off of their album, "Meat Puppets II." The group showcased their unique vocals on the track, which owe as much influence to classic country as punk rock.

The set ended with a stirring rendition of "Lake of Fire" that, despite being cut off halfway through, showcased the group's improvisational skills with a sweeping psychedelic guitar swirl.

The guitar jam eventually gave way to a gentle, whistling breakdown before ramping up and finishing off with the band drenched in a well-earned sweat.

Next up was headlining act and clear crowd favorite, Built to Spill. The six-man band took their time setting up, arranging a variety of instruments including three guitars, a bass, drums and a cello.

Taking a cue from the Meat Puppets, Built to Spill also came in their Sunday best, dressed in a similar array of sweatpants, faded sneakers and Salvation Army T-shirts.

Despite the casual attire, the band was ready to rock – and so were the fans.

They were energetic from the get-go, screaming out song titles at the band, unaware they would first be playing their third album, "Perfect From Now On," in its entirety.

Leading off with "Randy Described Eternity," the band's soundscapes flourished in the open space of the concert hall.

Back-up notes sounded more prominent, as did Doug Martsch's vocals, which were identical to the now decade-old album.

See SPILL on page 6

Built to Spill performed their third album, "Perfect From Now On," for a crowd full of eager fans on Thursday evening at the Pearl Street Night Club.

Fashion evolution on your television screen

By Heather Wadman
Collegian Staff

The word "evolution" has strolled down many avenues, having been used to explain more than just the advancement of our furry pal, the chimpanzee.

The evolution of television is a prime example.

With obvious technological advances, including the likes of TiVO, high-definition television and plasma screens, TV has only improved with age.

But tube time has not only been revolutionary for the technology. The fashion industry has likewise benefited from the small screen. With television's unfolding came a steadily diverse evolution of style, and believe it or not, a multitude of its characters have played a key role in how we don our duds today.

"I definitely think that TV and movies have a very large role in inspiring people," said Dr. Erica Scharrer, Ph.D, a communications professor at the University of Massachusetts, who specializes in the media's effect on socialization.

Roll back to 1968.

The nation embraced a new friend on its block with a PBS broadcast of the legendary program, "Mister Roger's Neighborhood."

The second Fred Rogers removed his cardigan from his coat rack, audiences eagerly awaited their lesson of the day, be it competition, friendship, divorce, or war. Little did Rogers know, he would set a precedent for generations to come: the vitality of the cardigan in our closet.

Our wholesome companion wore the cardigan like no one else, and inspired men and women of all ages to carry on a tradition likely to withstand the test of time.

One of Rogers' sweaters is hanging in the Smithsonian Institution as an ode to the huge impact his simple, daily ritual had on America.

Flash forward to 1984.

The quirky, rebellious and effortlessly cool Denise Huxtable waltzed onto primetime with a fashion sense that left practically every teenage girl running to the mall – and every mother pulling her hair at the seams.

Denise took going over-the-top to ultimate heights, even for the 80s.

From oversized blazers to parachute pants to combat boots to every crazy-colored pattern known to man, the limits were endless for the eldest Huxtable daughter.

This is the very reason she identified so well with her audience.

Aside from jet-setting teenage girls to the nearest mall to pick up a pair of combat boots, Denise rewarmed a girl that being different was cool. She inspired women to not be afraid to push the envelope a bit, a standard the fashion world has long upheld.

Mega-houses like Marc Jacobs and Yves Saint Laurent recently featured outlandish patterns and forehead-plastered headbands on their runway shows that were reminiscent of Denise: proof that the fearless phenom's eclectic style will live on.

"TV characters are somewhat admired," said Scharrer. "People look up to them for hairdos. They have a huge role in our daily life. The average person spends three-and-a-half hours watching television."

Speaking of hairdos, it simply would not suffice to go forth without mentioning perhaps the most influential haircut of all time.

Jump ahead another 10 years to 1994.

This marked the beginning of one of the most beloved and wildly popular sitcoms of all time: "Friends."

The attractive, bubbly Rachel Green's sophisticated locks blossomed onto setson one along with a slew of lady worshippers. Every woman who owned a television set flocked to their hairdresser, begging for "The Rachel," leaving carbon copies of the famous "Friend" all over town.

"There are a host of examples [of characters]," says Scharrer. "I do think we tend to look up to these characters because they seem to be rather flawless."

Patricia Field, costume designer for HBO's smash-hit, "Sex and the City," jump-started a fashion frenzy that sent women all over the world drooling over the next designer duds to be donned by Carrie Bradshaw and posse.

These and so many more have continued to pave the way for people's style today.

Teen dramas like "The O.C." and "Gossip Girl" send fans searching for Seth Cohen's "geek chic" argyle sweaters or Blair Waldorf's embellished, school-girl style.

Now, here we are, in the present – 14 years since the emergence of "The Rachel," 24 years since daredevil Denise, and 40 years since Fred Rogers graced us with his presence.

And although it has been almost two centuries since Darwin's theory of natural selection, fear not. The next time you are suffering from some evolution nostalgia, you need not look much farther than your own living room.

Heather Wiseman can be reached at hwiseman@student.umass.edu.

Many television characters, including the eccentric Denise Huxtable from "The Cosby Show," have influenced the fashion world over the years.

Researchers link BPA to heart disease, diabetes, liver problems

By Deborah L. Shelton
Collegian Staff

CHICAGO – The debate over the safety of a chemical ubiquitous in the lives of Americans took center stage at a scientific hearing of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration on Tuesday as federal officials, scientists and health advocates gave vastly different assessments of the effects of exposure to bisphenol A.

Bisphenol A, commonly known as BPA, is used extensively in epoxy resins lining food and beverage containers and in polycarbonate plastics used to make countless consumer products including baby bottles and sippy cups. The chemical also has been found in drinking water, dental sealants and even household dust.

Adding to a growing sense of unease about the chemical's potential effects, a study was released before the hearing that linked exposure to bisphenol A with cardiovascular disease, type 2 diabetes and liver-enzyme abnormalities in adults.

Researchers said the study, in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association, offered the first scientific evidence that adults with higher levels of BPA in their bodies were more likely to develop such diseases. This month the federal National Toxicology Program reported the chemical may affect the development of the brains and prostate glands of fetuses and young children.

Pressure has been growing for more government and corporate action on BPA, in part because the chemical is so common that it is difficult for consumers to avoid it.

Some state and federal lawmakers have sought to ban BPA in children's products, and some companies have decided not to produce or sell BPA products. Wal-Mart is phasing out sales of baby bottles containing BPA from its U.S. stores next year, and Nalgene is removing BPA from its popular water bottles.

At Tuesday's hearing on BPA in products that make contact with food, the FDA defended a draft assessment it issued last month declaring that FDA-regulated products currently on the market that contain BPA are safe.

"Right now, our tentative conclusion is that it's safe, so we're not recommending any change in habits," said Laura Tarantino, head of the FDA's office of food additive safety. The agency said more research was needed.

For the study released Wednesday, Dr. David Melzer and colleagues from the Peninsula Medical School in Exeter, England, divided a representative sample of 1,455 U.S. residents ages 18 to 74 into quartiles based on BPA concentrations in their urine. The BPA data came from a 2003-2004 survey conducted by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The researchers found that people in the group with the highest concentration of BPA had almost three times the odds of cardiovascular disease as did those in the lowest quartile, even when factors such as race, income and education levels were accounted for. That group had a 2.4 times higher risk of diabetes.

Higher BPA levels also were associated with clinically abnormal concentrations of three liver enzymes. Researchers did not find a link to any other health problems, including cancer or respiratory disease.

Though previous research in animals had linked BPA to diabetes and liver damage, Melzer said the new finding on human heart disease was unexpected.

Steven G. Hentges, executive director of the Polycarbonate/BPA Global Group of the American Chemistry Council, an industry trade group, noted several limitations of the research.

"Urinary concentrations tell you the exposure over the last 24 hours, but heart disease and diabetes do not occur overnight," he said. "Bisphenol A would have to be measured over the time period when heart disease or diabetes is actually occurring, so that's a major limitation of the study."

Hentges also said the study showed that people were being exposed to very low levels of the chemical, "levels that are far below scientific-based safety standards established by government agencies."

Small amounts of BPA can leach into the contents of food or drinks from some types of plastic containers and the linings of cans. The chemical is excreted in urine, making urinary tests the best available measure of recent exposure, the researchers said.

The authors cautioned that further research is needed to confirm their findings.

"From this one study we can say that the effects of BPA in humans need to be examined more closely," said Melzer, a professor of epidemiology and public health. "Until we are able to repeat these results and clarify that the effects are definitely due to BPA itself, we cannot say for certain that BPA causes disease in humans."

Frederick vom Saal, a professor of biology at University of Missouri, Columbia, said the findings were "absolutely no surprise" to scientists who have studied the chemical, which he described as "one of the largest food contact items in existence." He served on a scientific consensus panel of 38 experts that recently reviewed 700 studies of BPA and concluded that it had a high probability of causing harm.

"If a study comes out of nowhere on a subject that has never been studied, you might say, 'How in God's name can bisphenol A possibly be related to diabetes?'" said vom Saal, who wrote an editorial that accompanied the JAMA study. "But we have a large literature of animal studies that explains the molecular details."

Dr. Anila Jacob, senior scientist for the Environmental Working Group, a Washington-based research and public health watchdog organization, said the study suggested BPA might play a more significant part in chronic diseases than had been thought.

"We don't know causality (in this study), but associations are important in public health," Jacob said. "The first studies of tobacco found associations between smoking and lung cancer. These types of large epidemiologic studies are important in pointing us in the right direction."

Some scientists are urging the FDA to declare the chemical toxic and ban it from products that come into contact with food and drinks.

"We have always been concerned about infants and children because we know they have higher exposures compared to adults and we also know they are more vulnerable because their brains are developing and their organ systems are maturing," Jacob said. "But we believe there is reason for concern for everyone. Until the FDA starts to recognize the toxicity of this chemical, individuals are forced to find ways to reduce exposure to this chemical on their own."

The study was funded by Peninsula Medical School, and the Division of Environmental Health Laboratory Sciences at the CDC's National Center for Environmental Health did the analysis.

Indepedent rock band performs for a full house in NoHo club

SPILL from page 5

The band ran into some technical difficulties early on, with their rhythm guitarist snapping his D string halfway through the song.

This forced the guitarist to sit out for the remainder of the song as well as it's follow up, "I Would Hurt a Fly."

Despite the loss, the song wasn't affected by his absence and proved to be one of the show's highlights. Fans sang along and gesticulated wildly as the band plowed through the album, comprised of crowd favorites.

Even the slower songs hit the crowd hard like the down-tempo "Velvet Waltz," turning from a slow dirge into an all-out crowd enthraller, complete with intricate solos spiraling over a thudding drum line.

The band finished up its set with the album's closer, "Untrustable Part II," before taking a brief break backstage.

Doug Maritsch modestly thanked the crowd in his alarmingly high-pitched voice. He then jump-started his band into an equally high-energy encore, leading them back into their perpetual quest for musical perfection.

Peter Rizza can be reached at prizza@student.umass.edu

Despite a few technical difficulties, rock band Built to Spill managed to deliver a crowd-pleasing performance this past week in Northampton.

Moroccan movie wins over area film festival

UMass' Flavin Auditorium unlocks its 'doors to the sky'

By John Hamilton
Collegian Correspondent

The mood in the Flavin Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts last Wednesday night could be described as both eager and anxious.

Prior to the screening of "Door to the Sky," a Moroccan film presented by the Asian Arts & Culture film festival program, Amherst residents Harriet Goodwin and Trisha Smallman chatted with enthusiasm as they awaited the screening.

"I don't know much about the Muslim culture," said Goodwin. "I'm here to learn about who they are."

She, along with others in attendance, was participating in the Arab Cinema Panorama, a weekly event hosted at UMass' Isenberg School of Management.

Anne Ciecko, a member of the Interdepartmental Film Program and curator of the Panorama event, provided a brief introduction to the film.

"A contemporary classic of Arab cinema, the film is an expression of Islam through a hybrid of classic Islamic teachings and popular Islamic traditions," Ciecko said.

Ciecko also pointed out that Farida Ben Lyzaid, the female director of "Sky," dedicated the film to Fatina Tihra, a Muslim woman and founder of one of the world's oldest universities, constructed in 10th century Fez, Morocco.

In line with her film, the director hoped to "acknowledge that women held important roles in Islamic history and culture," According to Ciecko.

The film depicts the journey of Nadia (Chaidia Hadraoui), a Moroccan emigrant who returns to her home in Fez after having left for Paris many years prior.

A mix of Thandie Newton and Cosby-era Lisa Bonet, Hadraoui's striking features and piercing black eyes express more longing and emotion than any 100-page screenplay could ever hope to convey.

Nadia arrives in Fez for her father's funeral dressed in black punk clothing, with streaks of scarlet dyed into her frizzy mop, and it first appears that this will be just another fish-out-of-water tale.

Surprisingly, the director does not follow the cliché plot points of a westernized woman feeling out of place in her Muslim home. Instead, Lyzaid approaches the story through a route less-often traveled: Nadia must come to terms with the idea that after years of searching for what she thought she could find in the western world, she may actually discover in the place that she had initially left behind.

The film makes oft-repeated use of the panoramic views of the city, a jigsaw puzzle of sandcastles eclipsed by distant gray mountains.

Through this technique, the audience is constantly reminded that they are watching a Moroccan film.

Constant prayer chanting is also heard throughout the film, serving as an ever-present soundtrack to the life that Nadia is taking on.

Initially meant to be an event showcasing two films, the first, a short film entitled "Under the Sun," experienced some technical difficulties, and could not be shown. Had it been screened, it would have been its New England premiere. Director Ali Mostafa, a graduate of the prestigious London Film School, produced this short as a senior project, and is currently working on his first feature-length film.

The Arab Cinema Panorama screenings will continue weekly through December.

"Under the Sun" will be screened next week, along with "Improvisation," a Palestinian film. Other upcoming screenings include the special presentation of "Hometown Baghdad" on Oct. 1 and "My Simple Story" on Nov. 12.

For more information about the Arab Cinema Panorama or any other events presented by the Asian Arts & Culture Program, visit the event Web site at www.umass.edu/fac/asian.

John B. Hamilton can be reached at hamiltonj@student.umass.edu

JOIN THE ARTS CREW!

We're looking for you!

Check out the arts blog!

allaccessarts.blogspot.com

"Because it's AWESOME"

SGA Senate Elections

Vote for your representatives.

Wednesday (9/24) and Thursday (9/25)

Elections will take place at all Dining Commons and the Campus Center.

Elections are openfrom 10AM - 2PM and 4PM-8PM both days.

Brown still threat for UM

FIELD HOCKEY from page 10

sole victory, a 2-1 win over Maine that was won in penalty strokes.

Like UMass, Brown is a growing team and is currently led offensively by freshman Abigail Taft. The 5-foot-6 forward has three quarters of the team's goals (3).

Despite their opponents' struggles, Sowry does not want her players to be thrown off their game by Brown or the unusual schedule.

"We're finding ways to win, which is pleasing," Sowry said. "The interesting part will be turning around and having three games in the next eight days."

The schedule will come into play as the Minutewomen try not to overlook Brown because of back-to-back games against Albany and Syracuse the following weekend. UMass barely escaped a loss against the then-winless Bears a year ago as they put up a fight against the Maroon and White.

The Bears are coming into Amherst as a young team looking to break out of the program's recent struggles. Because of this, Sowry is simply trying to get her team to stick to their game plan and not let the other team dictate the match.

"Sometimes when things are thrown at us it sends confusion throughout the group, rather than taking control, keeping our system and structure going," Sowry said. "So we're looking to do that against Brown, whatever they throw at us, try to play our game and keep our style and tempo."

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Senior midfielder Mary Shea has one assist on the season. Her experience and leadership paired with fellow midfielder Erin Parker work to lead the Minutewomen throughout the season.

Kelly, Powers play key role at reserve

MIDFIELD from page 10

creates a more open shot.

The forward line returns redshirt sophomore Amy Novak and senior Katelyn Orlando, both of whom lost playing time last season due to injury. These two players combined with returning starters King and sophomore Katie Kelly give UMass a dynamic balance of speed and power that the team didn't have at this point last season.

The Minutewomen return seven of 10 players that recorded a goal last season, six of which had multiple scores on the season.

Another problem that hindered UMass in 2007 was the lack of bench production – two bench players last season recorded, seven in total.

Kelly and junior transfer Jill Powers, both reserves, have already amassed the seven-goal mark for the Minutewomen. Powers' versatility alone allows Sowry to rotate players into different positions to keep them fresh and give opposing teams additional lineups to try to contend with.

Outletting the ball is also something that Sowry stresses during practice. Usually the only time one player will bring the ball from the defensive side of the field to the offensive is when they are on a breakaway. However, with the experience of this season's midfielders, the option to go through the midfield with the ball is used more often.

"It's good that we're able to use [each] of those different techniques to get the ball up the field," Shea said. "I think that we have good strength in the midfield, being that we have seniors and [Potts] being very experienced and very knowledgeable, and Erin Parker having such good vision that we're able to hit those channels through the midfield."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Competitive United States saves Ryder Cup for 2010

By Thomas Bonk
Los Angeles Times

LOUISVILLE, Ky. – Here's a history check. The last time the U.S. had won the Ryder Cup, Chad Campbell was about to start out on the Hooters Tour, Anthony Kim was a ninth-grader, J.B. Holmes was finishing high school and Boo Weekley was scrubbing down chemical tanks in Florida.

It's a long way from 1999 at the Country Club in Brookline to what happened Sunday at Valhalla Golf Club, but without that giant, nine-year leap, it's worrisome to chart an upwardly moving graph for the oldest match-play competition in professional golf.

The U.S. team didn't merely win the Ryder Cup, it might have saved it too.

The routine had become depressing and totally deflating for the U.S., after three consecutive defeats, the last two blowouts.

If nothing else, the U.S. proved you couldn't lose them all. You know, you've got to start somewhere.

Almost from the moment the U.S. finished its 16 1/2-11 1/2 upset of the favored European team, the scrambling quickly began on how best to explain it. The stack of theories is thicker than Weekley's drawl, but most of them point to the tactics of U.S. captain Paul Azinger.

Surely, it couldn't have happened without his input, zeal and smarts, and a plan that featured altering the points system, doubling the number of captain's picks, installing a course setup with little rough to favor a style of play, getting the fans involved and shamelessly playing up the underdog role with the absence of Tiger Woods.

That was a terrific game plan, but only if it worked.

The truth is, it's what happened on the course that changed the Ryder Cup, and little of that could have been expected.

The most important reason why Europe lost was because its best players were borderline miserable – exactly what has happened to the U.S. in recent years.

Padraig Harrington, Sergio Garcia and Lee Westwood are Europe's Big Three, but they won no matches in three days, lost seven of them and halved five others.

Oliver Wilson won more matches – one – than Harrington-Garcia-Westwood combined.

In 2006 at the K Club in Dublin, Ireland, where the U.S. was routed, 18 1/2-9 1/2, Woods needed a victory in singles to finish with a 3-2 record, while Phil Mickelson got shut out and didn't win a point in four matches.

Mickelson was 1-3-0 and Woods 2-3-0 in 2004 at Oakland Hills in Michigan in another nine-point blowout, infamously paired together in two losing matches. In 2002 at the Belfry, Woods and Mickelson were both 2-2-1 in a three-point loss to Europe.

The fact that Europe was still close Sunday afternoon at Valhalla, even though captain Nick Faldo was getting virtually nothing from his superstars, is nothing short of miraculous. And although Faldo got raked for resting Westwood and Garcia on Saturday morning, that was the only session Europe won; and his controversial captain's pick, Ian Poulter, finished with the best record on either side, 4-1.

Azinger's formula was unorthodox but successful, made necessary by the presence of six rookies. Kim, clearly a star in the making, along with Hunter Mahan and J.B. Holmes, lost once in a combined 12 matches. Add Weekley's 2-0-1 mark, and that's the basis for a winning formula, in which eight players had at least two victories. Only Poulter, Justin Rose and Graeme McDowell had that many for Europe.

So by late Sunday afternoon, the champagne showers moved in from the west, a totally different direction.

The players on the U.S. side probably woke up Monday morning a little fuzzier than normal, the aftereffects of the previous night's victory celebration. No one wants to project too far down the road right now, but some of them might now be thinking about making plans for playing on the U.S. team at the 2010 Ryder Cup in Wales.

They're going to be favored again. Chances are that's going to be good for the Ryder Cup, and for a simple reason. For any event to remain relevant, it has to be competitive, and the Ryder Cup was teetering on the brink.

There is plenty of time to get worked up about it, but it's certain to be good theater, like Valhalla, where there were fans dressed as leprechauns and matadors and others wearing kilts holding up a cardboard cutout of Colin Montgomerie.

How can the U.S. players respond? Simple. They can hold up the Ryder Cup.

CHECK OUT THE DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG

FOR 24/7 COVERAGE OF UMASS ATHLETICS

WHAT DO THESE MEN HAVE IN COMMON?

THEY'RE ALL PART OF THE DELTA CHI TRADITION. HOW ABOUT YOU?

FRIENDSHIP CHARACTHER
JUSTICE EDUCATION

DON'T MISS YOUR OPPORTUNITY TO BUILD A LASTING TRADITION AT UMASS!

www.DeltaChi.org

Dukes came back, upset Mountaineers

Hofstra came from behind to beat URI

By Kyle Predki
Collegian Correspondent

Seeking revenge of last year's playoffs, No. 5 James Madison found dramatic win this weekend against No. 1 Appalachian State (1-2). The Dukes (3-1, 1-0 Colonial Athletic Association), against all odds, performed an unthinkable second-half comeback.

At halftime, JMU headed into the locker room with a 21-0 deficit weighing on its shoulders. All the Dukes needed was a spark, and Scotty McGee was exactly that. McGee, CAA Football Special Teams Player of the Week, started the Dukes' second-half surge with a 99-yard kick return for a touchdown, setting the tone for the remainder of the night.

JMU quarterback Rodney Landers played an important role in the comeback. With one passing touchdown, two rushing touchdowns and a 42-yard punt, Landers' key performance earned him a spot as the CAA Football Offensive Player of the Week.

Rushing outweighed passing in this bout, with both quarterbacks garnering 100 rushing yards and posting three rushing touchdowns apiece.

Now with a new rank, No. 2 James Madison will travel to Maine (2-2, 0-1 CAA) for its game this weekend.

Richmond 44, Maine 17

Richmond (3-1, 2-0 CAA) proved too much for Maine this weekend as the Spiders cruised by the Black Bears, 44-17. At the end of the first half Richmond led Maine 13-10, but the Black Bears couldn't hold out the Spiders any longer. In the second half, the Spiders dominated the Black Bear defense putting up an astonishing 434 offensive yards – 273 in passing – for the win.

Although Maine's offense is ranked second to last in the CAA, they did find some success through the air, posting 229 passing yards with two touchdowns. On the other side, the Black Bears were limited to 44 rushing yards on 20 attempts.

With the assistance of the James Madison upset, Richmond has earned the No. 1 ranking in the Football Championship Subdivision and will take on No. 19 Villanova (2-1, 0-0 CAA) on Saturday.

William & Mary 42, Norfolk State 12

With help from Adrian Tracy, CAA Football Defensive Player of the Week, William & Mary (2-1, 0-0 CAA) triumphed over Norfolk, 42-12. The Tribe's defense had an outstanding performance, holding the Spartans (2-2) to a touchdown and intercepting four passes.

Quarterback Jake Phillips helped put William & Mary with his four passing touchdowns, three occurring in the third quarter. This was the third match-up between the two schools; William & Mary won the previous two.

Hofstra 23, Rhode Island 20

In the remaining seconds of the fourth quarter, freshman kicker Roger Williams put one through the up-rights and gave Hofstra (2-1, 1-0 CAA) its first CAA win of the season, while making Rhode Island (1-3, 0-2 CAA) winless in the CAA.

Scoring was minimal for the two teams until the last moments of the game. With 3 minutes, 27 seconds left in regulation, Hofstra pressured the Rams by kicking a field goal, setting the score to 20-14. Rhode Island answered back with a one-yard run to knot the score, 20-20. The Pride got one last chance with 47 seconds left and with an 80-play, 68-yard drive, Hofstra marched down the field against the weaker Rhode Island defense in time to win the game.

No. 10 New Hampshire 34, Albany 24

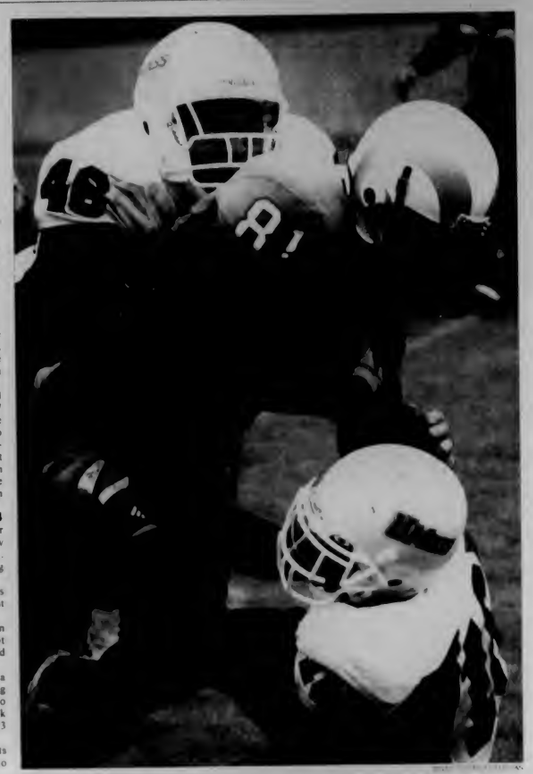
The Wildcats' passing game was too much for Albany's defense in the 34-24 victory for New Hampshire (3-0, 1-0 CAA). Quarterback R.J. Toman led UNH with an impressive 255 passing yards and four touchdowns.



New Hampshire exploded out of the gates and posted a touchdown within two minutes, but Albany (1-2) led the game into halftime, 17-14.

Toman threw for two of his touchdowns in the third quarter and the Wildcat defense kept Albany to a single touchdown in the second half.

New Hampshire headed into the game with a strong rush defense that proved worthy, keeping the Great Danes under 100 yards rushing. But to Albany's dismay they failed to exploit the weak New Hampshire secondary and collected 283 yards passing with a single touchdown.

The undefeated Wildcats jumped three spots in the FCS poll this week and will travel to Dartmouth (0-1) this weekend.

Kyle Predki can be reached at kpredki@student.umass.edu.

Rhode Island senior Tolbert Evans is being tackled by UMass junior Michael Hanson and senior Sean Smalls in a game last season. The Rams are 0-2 in the Colonial Athletic Association.

URI senior Sarah Helldoerfer moves past UMass' Christina Adams in a match last season. The Rams look to be successful as they enter A-10 play.

Richmond starts 2008 with success

St. Joseph's extended streak to five wins last weekend

By Steven Levine
Collegian Correspondent

Although conference play has yet to start, Charlotte (4-3-1) has been slated to repeat as the Atlantic 10 women's soccer champions, according to voting conducted by the league's head coaches in July.

Charlotte forward, sophomore Whitney Weinraub, leads the A-10 in goals, and points and hopes to continue her impressive season after being named to the National Elite Team of the Week on Sept. 10.

Charlotte freshman Oni Benard received A-10 Co-Rookie of the Week honors after scoring the 49ers' first two goals in their 6-0 win over Francis Marion on Sunday.

The 49ers' dream to repeat as A-10 champions will continue as they host La Salle in the conference opener at Transamerica Field on Friday, Sept. 26.

Richmond

Richmond (6-1-1) has tied the best start in school history after Sarah Hilt's penalty kick propelled them past Penn State in the Spiders' double-overtime victory.

The goal came at the 105th minute of the game after junior Kelsey Rdzanek was taken down in the box. Hilt then drove the ball to the left side of the net, passing the Quakers' goalkeeper to secure Richmond's victory.

The Spiders will open conference play Friday, Sept. 26 against Dayton.

Dayton

Dayton (6-3-0) notched its second shutout of the season on Sunday against Ball State.

Senior Amanda Gallow scored the game winner for UD early in the second half, placing the shot perfectly in the upper corner.

The Flyers went 2-0 this week and will start conference play against Richmond this Friday, Sept. 26, at Bajuan Field.

Xavier

The struggling Musketeers (1-6-0) suffered a shutout loss at the hands of Bowling Green State University. The game winner came just 19 seconds into the game and proved to be enough for a loss at the Xavier University Soccer Complex.

The Musketeers now turn their attention towards A-10 conference play, when they host Temple on Friday.

St. Joseph's University

St. Joseph's (5-2-0) extended its winning streak to five games after opening the season with two losses. The victory came against Drexel on Sunday afternoon at Vidas Field.

Senior forward Amanda Morrell scored the game-winner with just over 18 minutes left in regulation. The goal came just 11 seconds after Drexel tied the game at one apiece.

The Hawks begin conference play this Friday at Rhode Island.

University of Rhode Island

Freshmen forward Terese Fair guided the Rams (4-4-1) to a 2-0 week after her performance against Manhattan on Sept. 21. The New York native complemented her four assists with her first collegiate goal. As a result, Fair received honors to the Atlantic 10's Co-Rookie of the Week award.

Fair and the Rams charge into conference play on Friday, Sept. 26, when they host St. Joseph's at the URI Soccer Complex.

Steven Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu

Richmond senior Jesse Wolfe and UMass' senior Vanessa Patry jump for a ball last season. The Spiders begin A-10 play on Sept. 26.

Just in case the "I'm starting an online company" idea doesn't pan out.

Now is a perfect time to take the GRE. Test for grad school. Your scores are good for 5 years—giving you plenty of time to try a few things first. Think of it as having an insurance policy for your future.

Text GRE17 to 78473 for a sneak peek at the practice questions.

gradtestGRE.com

ETS GRE

Standard rates apply. Copyright 2008 by Educational Testing Service. All rights reserved. ETS, the ETS logo, and GRE are registered trademarks of Educational Testing Service (ETS).

Promotion, Booking and Management Company seeks:

Detail oriented, solid communicator and computer skilled multitasking individual for fast moving environment. Savvy with all online media: Facebook, Myspace, Photobucket, iLike etc. wav to mp3 files, invoicing, website updates, solid typist.

$8, 2-3 days a week 10:30-3:30
Send cover letter and resume to artspromo@artspromo.org

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

WRITE FOR SPORTS!!

SPORTS @ DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

comics@dailycollegian.com

Safely stupid.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | 6 | 8 | | 9 | 1 | | |
| 5 | 9 | | | | | | 2 | 3 |
| | | 9 | 5 | | 4 | 2 | | |
| 6 | | | | | | | | 5 |
| | | 1 | 9 | | 6 | 3 | | |
| 4 | 2 | | | | | | 8 | 1 |
| | | 3 | 2 | | 1 | 6 | | |

ACROSS
1 Media regulatory agcy.
4 Overtake
8 Clan pattern
14 Miss. neighbor
15 Young newts
16 South African river
17 Moving vehicle
18 Decisive defeat
19 Earned, as profit
20 High-flown speech
22 Fluff
23 All the rage
24 Singer
28 Prim and proper
29 Sea skate
30 Hot-tempered dispute
31 Brandy cocktail
34 Leaf through hastily
35 Linkletter or Carney
38 Shop-at-home guide
40 60-min. units
41 Hired thug
43 Park at the tip of Manhattan
45 Juliet's beau
47 Cipher code
48 Desert haven
52 Hidden traps
54 Medicinal solution
55 Couples
56 Guard or tackle
57 More than one
60 Bombay wrap
61 Social ties
62 Secondhand deal
63 Prophetic sign
64 Lion's name
65 Concedes
66 Loud report
67 Blunder

DOWN
1 Treats with partiality
2 Rad tablewine
3 Type of goose
4 Occurring at regular intervals
5 In progress
6 Knock for a loop
7 Mach+ jet
8 Quinine water
9 Sites for fights
10 Babies' toys
11 Blast letters
12 Ripen
13 Buntline or Beatty
21 The one here
22 Allegiance
24 Leaves empty
25 Restless desire
26 Head the cast
27 Truck scale units
29 Additional shootings
32 Small amount
33 Fish eggs
35 Taj Mahal site
36 Capacity
37 Burial chamber
39 Straining sound
42 Sitting on the fence
44 New Haven university
46 Kennedy assassin
49 Figure of speech
50 Slither
51 Motion detector
53 Golf course increments
54 Enchantress
56 Tibetan monk
57 Inquire nosily
58 Waikiki garland
59 Exploit
60 Weep aloud

FISHIN' WITH SARAH.

comics@dailycollegian.com

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! By Tim Rickard

Brothers Watt By Will Wilson

Bliss By Harry Bliss

Leold www.leold.com
by Roger and Salem Salloum© 1997

Dear reader

Please send in your comics, so that I have purpose in life, and can stop typing like this.

comics@dailycollegian.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
I can tell that you were pretending to be Luigi and listening to the Mario theme while walking to class. No mushrooms.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
When arguing with your professor for a better grade, he will offer you a tempting deal: Heads = A. Tails = F.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Feed your primal urges today. Indulge in some raw meat, such as DC food.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Word of the Day - Ballbuster (n.): One who won't stop busting your damn balls.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Unfortunately, despite hanging up the phone, the voices in your head will continue to remind you to change socks.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
This week, be a tourist on your own campus. It is a great way to explain why you are taking so many photos.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Q: Why is pornography popular? Discuss in groups of two or three classmates.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
It would be so much easier if your pee could find the toilet itself.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Don't be a sucker for oral sex.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Fatten up your roommate. It's going to be a long winter, and you never know when they will come in handy.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Tune in, turn on, fall asleep.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
One man's trash; another man's cigarette.

Quote of the Day

"Because things are the way they are, things will not stay the way they are."

- Bertolt Brecht

ROCK OUT WITH YOUR CLOCK OUT

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! $10/hr for participating in listening experiments. English must be your first language. 413-545-6837 Voicemail Phonetics_Lab@linguist.umass.edu

Help Wanted

Spring Break 09 Work for Sun Splash -Travel Free www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

Services

Condom Break? Get EC, Emergency Contraception prevents unintended pregancies up to 5 days after unprotected sex.Taperstry

Services

Health 27 Pray Street, Amherst 413-548-9992 Tapestryhealth.org

Announcments

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S Padre, Florida. Information/ Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

Montreal Weekends From $99. Complete RoundTrip, Motorcoach. 3 days, 2 nights. Hotel Downtown. For Details MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

Make money with lottery from anywhere even if you never win benefits. 1-877-

Announcments

526-6957 IDC6920. www.flalottomagic.net/?=c4920

Travel

Spring Break Discounts Free Travel/ Meals Before Nov 1st www.sunsplashtours.com 1800-426-7710

For Rent

2 bedroom plus den in duplex house $950. Also 3 bedroom townhouse two floor unit $1215. Both near bus stop. LaDonna @ 413-665-2203

SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIEDS...

(413) 545 - 3500

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM hopes to add to streak

Brown will bring strong defense in today's match

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Coming off back-to-back wins against Harvard and Vermont, the Massachusetts field hockey team looks to continue its winning ways when it heads to Providence today to play Brown University.

The Minutewomen (5-2) are playing a rare weekday game – a change of pace since they played only one game last weekend.

"We have a huge week coming up, with Brown, Albany and Syracuse," said UMass coach Justine Sowry. "But we have to take it one game at a time. So we have to go and do our homework on Brown."

Though they will not be able to have much time to prepare for Brown (1-4), Sowry said they scouted the team this weekend during their own game.

In the game against Vermont, the defense took a blow when sophomore defender Jackie Tait went down with an apparent injury. The Minutewomen will have little time to see if Tait is ready to return to the lineup or if they must make major adjustments defensively.

The Minutewomen won last year's matchup against the Bears, 2-1, at home and are currently undefeated against Brown, leading the series, 5-0. Sowry, does not feel Brown's record against UMass reflects its play.

"They gave us a lot of trouble last year, with their structure," Sowry said. "So it's really important that we consolidate on our own structure."

The Bears have struggled out of the gate as their offense and defense has yet to hit their strides. Brown has scored just four goals this year, giving up 15. Meanwhile, the Minutewomen have scored twice as many goals as they have let up, scoring 2.00 goals per game and allowing 1.00.

Despite being dominated in many statistics, the Bears have been able to keep games close and remain a dangerous team. Brown was outshot 17-2 in a 1-0 loss last week against Columbia, but allowed just one goal.

Though Brown's defense has been proven to be pesky, the offense has been cold so far. The Bears have scored multiple goals in only one game – their

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 7

Senior midfielder Erin Parker has had two goals and three assists this season. The Minutewomen have improved their midfield skill since last season, which will lead them to a successful 2008 season.

Junior forward Cher King continues to be an offensive threat for the Minutewomen this season, scoring one goal in the six games she has played. The Minutewomen are hoping for a win as they take on the Bears today in Providence.

Experienced middle leads

Sowry has more confidence in UMass for 2008 season

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Knowing one's opponent will be a key principle for the Massachusetts field hockey team in today's game against Brown University in Providence, R.I.

The experience of the Minutewomen (5-2) has shifted up the field this season. The midfield is now equipped with a more experienced sophomore leader in Makaela Potts, as well as senior co-captains Mary Shea and Erin Parker. The incorporation of the midfield has had a dramatic effect on UMass play this season.

Though last year's squad was a defensive powerhouse for the Maroon and White, the offensive productivity this year is unparalleled.

After seven games last season, the Maroon and White had a 3-4 record and scored just eight goals. Now with UMass coach Justine Sowry showing more confidence in her midfield, the playing style went from the fullbacks to the midfielders, instead of just passing the ball through the midfield to the forwards, but that is not the only tactic that Sowry uses.

The speed of junior forward Cher King and sophomore fullback Jaime Bouzazeris enable a quick outlet from the backfield to the forwards if there's a breakaway opportunity on a mismatch, but Potts and the rest of the midfielders are a main focus in Sowry's coaching.

"When you return your entire midfield line from last year to this year – so they've already got a year under their belts of playing together – they're certainly more flexible and versatile in the way that they play," Sowry said of the advantages of having returning starters. "So that's certainly one area [that they excel in]."

Potts scored her first career goal in Sunday's game against Vermont (3-4) and has started every game for the Minutewomen this season.

The experienced lines gives UMass the comfort to spread the ball around and take time to set up plays, even with the loss of four defensive starters to graduation. Sowry likes to pressure an opposing team directly in its backfield to try to force turnovers in hopes of leading to breakaway situations in which the Minutewomen's offense overpowers the goalie and

See MIDFIELD on page 7

Massachusetts takes first, third in only home meet

Minutemen had seven finishers in top 10

BY SAM GROSSACK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts Men's cross country team finished first in the only home meet of the season Saturday. The Minutewomen, recovering from their seventh-place finish last weekend, came in third on its side of the standings.

Four of the top five finishers – and seven of the top 10 – in the 8,000 meters were members of the Minutemen. The Minutemen finished with a score of 19 points; Maine took second, followed by Vermont, Colgate and Connecticut.

Senior Nils Fischer was the top men's athlete of the day, finishing first in 25 minutes, 41 seconds. Finishing four seconds behind him was junior Andrew McCann and in third was senior Jesse Regnier, who crossed the line at 25:46.

Colgate's Ed Sheridan was the first non-UMass athlete to cross the finish line, taking fourth place, followed by UMass' Nicolai Naranjo (25:51), who rounded out the top five.

Jonathan Pierce was next to cross the finish line for the Minutemen, coming in eighth, followed by brothers David and Kevin Johnson, who finished ninth and 10th respectively.

The Minutewomen had a solid outing, showing improvement from last weekend to finish in third place.

Shiyi Zan won the 5,000-meter race, crossing the finish line at 18:21, six seconds ahead of Vermont's Aly Millet, who led the way for the Catamounts en route to their first-place finish.

The next to cross the line for the Minutewomen was freshman Claire Pettit, who finished with a time of 18:57, at ninth overall. Other top finishers included sophomoric Gino Perno, third on the team and 15th overall, and freshman Karen Roa, fourth on the team and 20th in the race.

With such a young team, the Minutewomen are continuing to show signs of improvement. However they will need to progress quicker to make this season as successful as they hoped it to be. The team is getting valuable experience this season that should lead them to many victories in the years to come.

Both teams are off from competition this weekend but will travel to Lehigh University in two weeks to take part in the Paul Short Invitational.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu

UMass Cross Country meet results

Men's 8,000 meters

| Finish | Name | School | Time |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | Fischer | Massachusetts | 25:41 |
| 2 | McCann | Massachusetts | 25:45 |
| 3 | Regnier | Massachusetts | 25:46 |
| 4 | Sheridan | Colgate | 25:47 |
| 5 | Naranjo | Massachusetts | 25:51 |
| 6 | Maisey | Vermont | 25:53 |
| 7 | Bartlett | Maine | 26:06 |
| 8 | Pierce | Massachusetts | 26:20 |
| 9 | Johnson, K. | Massachusetts | 26:26 |
| 10 | Johnson, D. | Massachusetts | 26:31 |

Women's 5,000 meters

| Finish | Name | School | Time |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | Zan | Massachusetts | 18:21 |
| 2 | Millett | Vermont | 18:27 |
| 3 | Connor, C. | Maine | 18:35 |
| 4 | Maxim | Maine | 18:37 |
| 5 | Purtz | Vermont | 18:51 |
| 6 | Burns | Colgate | 18:55 |
| 7 | Pettit | Massachusetts | 18:57 |
| 8 | Powers | Vermont | 19:05 |
| 9 | Rissler | Vermont | 19:07 |
| 10 | Letourneau | Maine | 19:10 |

INSIDE: DOOM JAZZ SETS ON FAC | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 73 LO: 48 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY SEPTEMBER 24, 2008

Canvas class nixed

BY WILLIAM MCGUINNESS AND SHALINI JAYARAMA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Chaplin Kent Higgins went to the University of Massachusetts' History Department and proposed an independent study that would feature students working with political groups to learn the ropes of the political process.

But the proposal did not include the fact that students would be working with Barack Obama's campaign.

Higgins offered credits for canvassing for Obama in New Hampshire

In fact, state ethics laws prohibit the use of University resources to participate in partisan political campaigning. In this case, students would receive two University credits paid for by an anonymous donor in exchange for work done.

According to University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski, Higgins once ran an independent study in which students took an alternative spring break and worked with flood victims and Native Americans in the South.

The course required physical and academic work in exchange for credits. But, Higgins next proposal drew the History Department's suspicion when an e-mail sent to students sounded particularly partisan.

"If you're scared about the prospects for this election, you're not alone. The most important way to make a difference in the outcome is to activate yourself," he wrote. "It would be just fine with McCain if Obama supporters just think about helping, then sleep in and stay home between now and Election Day."

As the news spread to statewide media sources and pressure from them resulted in closure scrutiny from the University.

Following this, Higgins sent another e-mail to potential canvassers, this time to Republican-leaning students.

"John McCain needs your help in New Hampshire, where the race with Obama is still a toss-up!" he wrote. "Reading this email, thinking about it, giving money, making phone calls, registering voters, and voting yourself are all important, but you're really concerned about how to help most effectively, then please COME TO NEW HAMPSHIRE TO CANVAS – as often as you can clear time between now and Election Day!

"If you're concerned about the prospects for this election, good! The most important way to make a difference in the outcome is to activate yourself!"

Blaguszewski said the arrangement is not appropriate.

"We are a public university and public universities can't engage in partisan politics – and we got to provide academic credit – that's playing favorites," he said. "You can't do that."

History Department chair Audrey L. Altstadt said the calls

See HIGGINS on page 3

Foer 'Incredibly Close'

Jonathan Safran Foer speaks in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall last night. The author of "Everything is Illuminated" and "Extremely Loud and Incredibly Close" has his audience mostly captivated throughout.

BY ALYSSA CREAMER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Tonight we will listen to an extremely innovative and exceptionally compelling, contemporary American voice," said Director of Dean's Book Alex Phillips.

Applause filled the packed auditorium of the Fine Arts Center's concert hall on Sept. 23 at 7 p.m. For a few moments, students envisioned what Jonathan Safran Foer, the man behind the "contemporary voice" of "Everything is Illuminated" and the Commonwealth College's Dean's book text selection, "Extremely Loud & Incredibly Close," would look like. Out walked a man who could have passed for a college student in jeans, a blue-collared shirt, green jacket and blue moccasins as he began his discussion with a story about his attire.

"I actually did pack nice clothes to wear tonight," said Foer, who flies in from New York to talk about "Extremely Loud & Incredibly Close." His tale about how three buttons on his nice clothes mysteriously disappeared was a story that many students believed "prepared students for the witty sense of humor and great story-telling abilities," Foer displayed the rest of the night.

"Foer was exactly as I thought he would be," said junior biology Melissa Dion. "The same quirks about Oskar that made me laugh, I could hear in Foer's voice as he talked to all of us, which was totally awesome."

Oskar is the eight-year-old protagonist in "Extremely Loud & Incredibly Close."

Foer made it clear that he was not at the University of Massachusetts to read passages of his book. Instead, he stated that he wanted his discussion to be "more like a conversation and less like a talk." Next, he explained that following a "short" lecture, he would be entering into a question and answer session that he hoped the audience would "be brave enough to have [the session] be exciting." He also said, "I dodge a lot of questions."

Foer explained his inspiration for writing "Extremely Loud & Incredibly Close" with, "I started out writing a completely different book. My life changed New York changed. My ideas changed. My concerns changed." He also described writing as "art [that can] constrain you and allow you to communicate in ways that complete freedom wouldn't allow. When I was writing, I found myself in [constraining] positions all the time, and I began to like those positions."

Natasha Lavey, Phillips' assistant, fed Foer questions written by Dean's Book students.

Foer's first question was how close-ly Oskar resembled him when he was of the character's age. Foer responded by saying that, "people obsess over whether works are autobiographical." Foer insisted that his work was purely fiction, not based on his own life. However, he said shortly afterwards, "I am not like Oskar, but if he didn't come from me, where did he come from? Every book is a part of the author. Some part of me contains Oskar."

About 20 of the 90 students lined up to question Foer had their answers ranging from inquiries such as "what's a good dim like for you" to deeper questions such as "Why is the story never told from the point of view of the mother and why is she nameless?" Foer answered all questions to "the best of his ability," according to several UMass students.

"I think he had a good sense of humor, but I sort of didn't like that he dodged all the questions," said junior finance and economics major Naval Singh. "The whole point of the talk was to get his opinion about [the book]. But that's how authors usually do it. It was what I expected. I knew he wouldn't give really definitive answers. He definitely was smart and funny."

"Of course I had a good time tonight," said Foer. "It's impossible not to have a good time at a college."

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

Huber's grass guzzler

New green fuel pushed

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At a time when green is the new black, a University of Massachusetts assistant professor has helped create a fuel to lessen mankind's carbon footprint. It's garnered so much attention that he will speak on Capitol Hill today to educate legislators on his "green" gasoline.

George W. Huber, an assistant professor of chemical engineering at UMass for the past two years, and two experts from other universities will talk with lawmakers in Washington D.C. at a luncheon sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

He said the main purpose will be to discuss how university research and fundamental studies can create technologies critical to the development of renewable energy, such as UMass' discovery of how to create this new cleaner, greener energy.

"Green gasoline is gasoline that's made from renewable biomass resources. This includes any type of plant material that grows – agricultural waste, wood, wood waste, paper waste. We're focusing on the non-edible part of plants that grow," he said. "[My research group] is developing technologies that take low-cost biomass resources and convert them into green gasoline, green diesel and green jet fuel."

Huber spoke about similar issues on Capitol Hill on Oct. 4, 2007 and said that there are many different ways of producing green gasoline, but that his team uses a one-step process called catalytic fast pyrolysis, one that

See GAS on page 3

George W. Huber displays a vial containing a greener gas that he helped develop.

LACC explores names, cultures

BY NETHA GILL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Latin American Cultural Center hosted a discussion titled "Latino vs. Hispanic vs. Spanish" this past Wednesday and was one of several events honoring Latino Heritage Month at the University of Massachusetts.

José Angel Hernández, an assistant professor in the History department brought home one of the main points of the night saying: "Your identity, as stable as you think it might be, will change depending where you are at." The dynamic is said to transcend "racial category."

Joselyn Almeida-Beveridge, assistant professor from the English department, defined and put into context the terms under discussion.

It was determined that cultural division in the New World began in the 1800s, and the term "Spanish American" was used from 1824 on. "Hispanic" was coined during the Nixon era, and "Latino" was described as a more recent phenomenon beginning in the 90s.

As the discussion went on, the issue on race vs. ethnicity when it comes to being Latino came into debate.

Thematically, the discussion turned to identity and how individuals identify themselves.

The debate posed whether Hispanic, Latino or Spanish people should define themselves as a race or an ethnicity.

The group explored whiteness and blackness in the abstract – even if the Government prefers to use these categories.

Professor Mari Castañeda from the Communications department said that, while her ethnic background is Mexican American/Chicano, she is officially white according to government documents.

But, Castaneda said, "When I am walking down the street I am not treated like a white woman."

Carolina Davila, a sophomore at the University of Massachusetts, said the event provided a good format for debate and exploration.

She said, "[The discussion] was very useful and inspiring for not only Latinos but also any race or ethnicity. It was good to have the three professors there for historical purposes, but we also got to participate by contributing our own ideas and experiences… I hope to see more events like that in the future."

Netha Gill can be reached at nmgill@student.umass.edu.

High costs lead to pass plunge

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the past several years, the University of Massachusetts has seen fewer cars in its student parking lots.

According to Rob Hendry, commuter options program manager at UMass, the number of parking passes issued for the 2008-2009 year has decreased by 10 percent.

This could be caused by prices of gas and the money it costs to keep a car on the road, along with the fact that many students who live off campus have easy access to bus routes.

Hendry also said that the number of freshmen applying for available spots on campus has been decreasing over the last five years as well.

"[The UMass administration] discourage freshmen to bring cars because there aren't enough spaces on campus," he said.

About five years ago, 30 percent of spaces were occupied by freshmen. Since then, numbers have been continuously decreasing.

However, Hendry believes the number of students applying for a parking space will stay relatively static over the course of the next few years.

Out of the 11,000 spots designated to students for on-campus parking, the majority of the spaces have been filled, with the exception of the perimeter lots.

Yet, under a state mandate through the Department of Environmental Protection, UMass is working to reduce the number of cars coming onto campus.

Services such as Zipcar, through which students can register and pay an annual fee, allowing them to use a car by the hour, and GoLoco, a car pooling service that drives people based on their destination, are options being considered at UMass.

However, "there's not enough money to spend on something like that if things don't go well," said Hendry.

Sophomore Kevin DiMuzio, who has had a car on campus

See PARKING on page 3

Lot 25 is half empty, as more freshmen are electing to leave their vehicles at home. High gas costs, monthly insurance bills and an uncertain economy have many students keeping the pass fee in their pockets.

UMPD Police Log – Sept. 15 –21

Compiled by Adam P. Coulter

Monday-

Kevan F. Bordner, 18, of 29 Ashuelot Rd. Northfield, Mass., was arrested in Brown Dormitory at 9:42 a.m. and charged with numerous drug offenses: possession of a Class C drug and possession of a Class C drug with the intent to distribute, possession of a Class D drug and possession of a Class D drug with the intent to distribute, and being in possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Tuesday-

Mark F. Young, 18, of 216 Carver Rd. Plymouth, Mass., was arrested after a traffic stop on University Drive at 9:35 p.m. and charged with possession of a Class D drug, and failure to stop/yield at a traffic signal.

Joseph Taro Rinaldi, 19, of 15 Buckingham Dr. Westford, Mass., was arrested outside of Field dormitory in Orchard Hill at 11:51 p.m. and charged with possession of a Class D drug.

Wednesday-

Leroy J. Walker, 23, of 1040 N Pleasant St. 387 Amherst, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Massachusetts Avenue at 1:32 a.m. and charged with operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license, marked lanes violation, failure to stop/yield and a warrant that had previously been issued in his name.

Joseph R. O'Connor, 18, of 34 Knollwood Dr. Dover, Mass., was arrested in Kennedy dormitory at 9:48 a.m. and charged with possession of a Class D drug, possession of Class D drug with the intent to distribute and being in possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Friday-

Colby N. May, 23, of 118 Cherry Plain SQ. New York City, NY, was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Lincoln Avenue at 12:24 a.m. and charged with two failures to stop/yield and OUI liquor.

Leland Barrett, 34, of 7B Gulf Rd. Pelham, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on University Drive at 8:06 a.m. and charged with a previous warrant and not having an inspection sticker.

Edward James Hutchings, 24, of 4 Butternut Ln. Apt. A West Lebanon, NH, and Eddie Yeung Chan, 21, of 55 Fisher St. Westwood, Mass., were arrested on University Drive at 6:53 p.m. and both charged with unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle and a number plate violation.

David Matthew O'Brien, 20, of 8 Shelton Rd. Swampscott, Mass., was arrested as a result of Liquor Law violations in Lot 44 at 9:11 p.m. and charged with being in possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Matthew James Geary, 19, of 55 Briarwood Rd. Waltham, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Massachusetts Avenue at 11:36 p.m. and charged with OUI liquor, being in possession of liquor while under the age of 21, marked lanes violation and speeding.

Saturday-

Daniel S. Abrams, 17, of 41 Barnard Rd. Marlborough, Mass., was arrested in Lot 33 at 8:51 p.m. when the UMPD got a call reporting a suspicious vehicle. Abrams was then charged with having a warrant issued in his name.

Sunday-

Daniel Louis Dedonno, 19, of 24 Griddle LN Levittown, NY, was arrested in the Southwest Circle at 5:18 a.m. and charged with failure to stop/yield, failure to wear a seat belt, possession of a Class D drug, possession of a Class C drug and being in possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Ryan J. Miller, 21, of 17 Oak Hill Ave. Clinton, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on North Pleasant St. at 3:22 a.m. and charged with OUI liquor, failure to yield at an intersection and possession of a Class D drug.

Adam P Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu

Stabbing unsettles USC

By Kate Mather and Tiffanie Wu
Daily Trojan (USC)

Thursday's fatal stabbing rocked the University of Southern California community, leaving many students saying their once-strong confidence in USC's security system has been deeply rattled.

The stabbing, which occurred outside university-owned housing in the same area as two sexual assaults reported earlier this month, spurred calls for a stronger security presence around USC.

"This is the first event this year that actually freaked me out because the other ones weren't that close and this one was right down the street," said Osman Javed, a junior majoring in electrical engineering who lived close to where the crime occurred.

"I was just kind of shaken," he said.

Soo Park, a senior majoring in political science and international relations, said she lives right next to where the crime occurred and had been walking home just ten minutes earlier.

"Especially in the context of the two sexual assaults, it just really scared me more than anything. We were right in the area," she said.

Vice President for Student Affairs Michael L. Jackson said that although the three events are alarming, they do not reflect the safety of the university campus and its surrounding area as a whole.

"I've been here for 14 years and this is extremely rare and unusual. I don't recall starting a year out like this," Jackson said. "Overall, USC is a safe place. We spend a lot of time, effort and resources into worrying about crime."

Department of Public Safety Capt. David Carlisle said USC is taking every precaution to protect student safety. DPS will increase patrols in the area surrounding the incident, he said. Carlisle also stressed that the string of incidents that started the academic year is highly unusual.

"My message to new students is simple: these three incidents, although serious, are not in any way an indication of what typically happens on the USC campus," he said.

Students registered with the TrojansAlert system were notified of the killing via text message about four hours after it occurred, at about 6 a.m., and then through an e-mail from Jackson two hours later.

Other students who were not registered with TrojansAlert did not receive news of the crime until around 3 p.m.

The delay caused concern among some students and parents.

"This is just a downfall in the whole communication system," said Nancy Johnson, whose daughter, a sophomore, did not receive an alert even though she was signed up for the program. "If it was truly something she needed to be concerned about at that moment, like the tragedy at Virginia Tech, she would've needed to know what to do immediately, and on the spot."

Jackson said the university did everything it could to inform students of the incident in a timely manner.

"One of the dynamics of a situation like this is that you don't get all the information right away. It's frustrating ... I hope and ask people to understand that it is what it is," Jackson said.

In his e-mail to students, Jackson said USC would work on re-evaluating the Campus Cruiser system, which he said makes 4,000 trips each week. Jackson said the service has enough cars late at night but not enough drivers willing to work late shifts. The result, students said, is that they are often left waiting more than an hour for a ride.

"Campus Cruiser is a really good service, but a lot of people don't take it because it takes an hour," said Negar Kahen, a sophomore majoring in biological sciences. "I think a lot more students would take it if it took 10 minutes, or even 15."

Some freshmen, who have been on campus less than a month, said the incidents have made them take off-campus security much more seriously.

"DPS puts up a good front with cars, but outside USC's walls, it's kind of risky," said Sara Chandler, an undeclared freshman. "When I step on campus I'm in protective walls and feel safe, but off campus, no. It's scary... I get nervous. I've been more cautious in where I walk."

Residents who live near the site of the incident said the latest attacks have made them especially nervous about living in the area.

"There are no lights on this street and it is totally unsafe... I believe the patrolling is not that effective," said graduate student Sahil Narang, also a resident of the area. "[DPS] just look around and then go away; there should be proper stations where they should be placed."

–Alexander Comisar and Catherine Lyons contributed to this report.

Students' MCATs revoked

By Randy Kreider
Washington Square News (NYU)

Two Stern graduate students are among the 84 MBA students nationwide to have their scores on the Graduate Management Admission Test revoked after they allegedly cheated on the exam.

The test, also known as the GMAT, is the required entrance exam to attend business school.

On Sept. 9, the Graduate Management Admission Council, which administers the test, announced that it learned that 84 test takers used a test prep site called Scoretop.com that violated the exam's rules. The site allegedly offered what it called "live questions," which later appeared on the actual GMAT.

The 84 people had sent their scores in 569 applications to business schools around the world, according to GMAC, which later sued Scoretop.com and had the site taken down. Many, including the Stern students, have already enrolled in their schools. Some have even graduated. Now, all of their scores have been revoked.

"NYU Stern has two students who are affected," said Anika Davis Pratt, Stern's assistant dean of MBA admissions. "We are evaluating our options under Stern's honor code and other applicable policies. This will be resolved in a way that is consistent with our high ethical standards and the value we place on these policies."

Out of the 84 individuals, 72 were proven to have had access to questions that were on their individual examination on ScoreTop.com. GMAC has decided to allow this group to retake the examination immediately. But the other 12, who were found to have submitted questions to the site from memory, must wait at least three years before retaking the test.

Anat Lechner, a clinical associate professor at Stern, said that seemed like a fair punishment, particularly given the lack of a benchmark to base the decision on.

"I think the only comparison you have is between those who posted the questions and those who benefited from that knowledge," Lechner said.

Though all students involved can be held responsible, those who posted questions deserve more blame, she said.

"If I was one of the GMAC people making a decision on this, I would always punish these people so much more severely because of the way they damage other people's possibilities and present the temptation for other people to act unethically," Lechner said.

For some, the punishment may extend beyond the decision made by GMAC. Representatives of several business schools have said they would consider even greater punishments, including possibly expelling the affected students or revoking the degrees of any alumni involved, depending on the severity of the violation.

But Sonia Marciano, another clinical associate professor at Stern, said GMAC should take responsibility for having loopholes in its system.

"Some of the top schools suggest they may flush all students with any involvement," she said. "This enables these schools to claim that they only graduate students with the highest integrity. Business schools that recognize how culpable GMAC was in how this played out end up with egg on their face. While involved students should have used better judgment, using those students to make a statement may be unjust."

Furthermore, Marciano said, it is important for schools to focus on achieving high standards of ethical behavior in the future.

"GMAC needs to fix what is broken, and we all need to remind ourselves not to exploit every loophole," she said. "For NYU and MBAs to move forward without tarnish, we need to be more aware than ever of the qualities we project. We set out high standards for integrity here and we should reinforce our commitment to those standards."

Peter Tannheimer, a current graduate student in Stern's MBA program, believes students should be held accountable in order to set an example for others.

"All those involved of course should be penalized and have all associated scores null," he said. "Without consequences, the system would fail."

But Tannheimer, a recent GMAT test taker himself, can sympathize with the plight of the prospective business student.

"I, for one, would have looked at those questions, had I known of their existence when taking the exam," Tannheimer said. "So who am I to judge these 72 for their attempts?"

Higgins' plan decredited

HIGGINS from page 1

for involvement were clearly inappropriate because they appeared to be recruiting political workers, which could not be considered a valid independent study opportunity. Then Altstadt terminated any department involvement with the project and any relationship with Higgins.

Democrat or Republican, student political activists agree with the University's decision.

"It's a situation by situation thing," said Matthew Cadwallader, chapter organizer of UMass for Obama. "If there's a nonpartisan group that's offering credit that the school has approved to offer credit for their efforts, then yeah, that's absolutely ethical."

He said involvement in a political campaign offers valuable experience for those interested in the field but agreed the University should not have to pay the bill.

William McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com

Shalini Jayarama can be reached at sjayarama@student.umass.edu

UMass researcher discovers way to turn plants to gas

GAS from page 1

Huber thinks will be the cheapest process to use in the future.

Wood is placed into a long tube called a reactor. The wood gets heated and decomposes into smaller fragments that are put into a catalyst, a substance that increases the rate of a chemical reaction without being consumed or produced by the reaction. Inside the catalyst, the smaller pieces are converted into gasoline, carbon dioxide and water – or green gasoline.

"I've been working on it for about eight years. We were mainly looking at petroleum-derived reactions, and my background is in petroleum chemistry and using catalysis to convert petroleum-derived resources," Huber said. "We started using those skills that we knew for converting petroleum, for converting biomass and renewable feedstock [a raw material used in the industrial manufacture of a product], and we saw lots of opportunities for using these same skills to convert our renewable resources.

"The field of chemical engineering was basically built around petroleum refining, or taking your petroleum products, your crude oil and making a wide variety of fuels and chemicals, and now we're using those same skills that have allowed us to efficiently use those resources," he added.

The two other scientists speaking at the luncheon are James Dumesic, a chemical engineer from the University of Wisconsin-Madison, and Clint Chapple, an expert on plant biochemistry from Purdue University in West Lafayette, Ind. Chapple, who worked with Huber when Dumesic was earning his doctorate at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, has developed a technology that converts sugars into gasoline.

Huber said that developing any alternative to gasoline produced from petroleum, or crude oil is essential to the fight against global warming and that his green gasoline would emit 24 to 25 times less carbon dioxide emissions than regular gas.

Huber said biomass is the only sustainable source of carbon that can be used to make liquid fuels and that the world's energy requirements are broken down into two categories – mobile (transportation vehicles) and stationary (heat, power, electricity, etc.) energy needs. Wind, solar and nuclear energy can be used to meet the stationary needs, but biomass is the only sustainable source for vehicles, according to Huber.

"The area of biofuels is one of the important areas [of helping the environment]," said Dwayne Breger, the director of the Massachusetts Division of Renewable and Alternative Energy Development. He added that transportation vehicles account for one-third of all greenhouse gas emissions.

"We would look forward to this energy becoming commercialized," he said.

Breger, who earned his doctorate from UMass in 1994, stressed that people can also help the environment by making sure that their houses are energy efficient and that their automobiles get good gas mileage.

Huber said that there is a considerable amount of inexpensive biomass resources in the United States, and that if those resources were used, between one-third and two-thirds of the gasoline Americans use can be replaced with green gasoline.

"It's a technology challenge, and it just takes time to develop these technologies, and it takes a significant amount of resources," Huber said.

He said there are also two huge economic incentives to exploring this eco-friendly option. The first is that biomass is much cheaper for consumers than petroleum oil. The second is that Americans' oil money currently goes to the "questionable political regimes" of Venezuela and certain Middle Eastern countries. Green gasoline would keep that money in the United States to pay biomass producers.

The idea of green gasoline was first made public in an article written by Huber and his UMass researchers that appeared in a scientific journal called Chemistry & Sustainability, Energy & Materials last March. Though they had just a few milligrams of green gasoline produced then, they have a number of vials of it now.

He said the project was started from money given by the National Science Foundation and now has some federal funding. He said they have started to pull in some private funding, as well.

Though Huber estimates that it will be between five and 10 years before the substance is available at gas stations, he has worked with ConocoPhillips and other energy companies, all of whom he says are trying to develop their own versions of green gasoline to improve people's standard of living.

Dominic Poli can be reached at dpoli@siggmail.com

UMass researcher George W. Huber

WRITE for news!
news@dailycollegian.com

Fewer passes issued, cost drives concern

PARKING from page 1

since the beginning of his freshman year, said he believes that, although it costs between $40 to $50 to fill his tank, having a car at UMass is a must.

"It's worth it. Even though you could take the bus everywhere, having a car makes last minute errands easier," he said. You don't have to wait for the bus to go get a tube of toothpaste."

For those who live on campus, like sophomore Mary Lyons, having a car is not a main priority.

"Freshman year I didn't think I would need a car, and I don't think it's a necessity for me to have one [now]," she said. "However, I'd really like to bring a car next year, especially if I'm living off campus."

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIV
ISSUE 17

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wawczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olwin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Harley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COPIES EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Gerber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenswaike
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacob
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mulholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kuczwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Wamsun
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cermak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lia DeBenedicts
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Lannard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Tartinen
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FALL AND SPRING SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER OPERATING IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE FIRST AMENDMENT. FOUNDED IN 1890 AS THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALUMNI LETTER OF THE COLLEGE WHICH, IN 1892, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN. IN 1914 AND IN 1938 THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1998. FOR SUBSCRIPTIONS AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
David Humphreys

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michelle Abbasciano

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Out with the income tax

Brad DeFlumeri

Taxes have long been a pivotal issue on which liberals and conservatives seemingly, and thankfully, never agree.

I have spent the first three weeks of classes laughing hysterically while professors and graduate students have "warned against" repealing the Massachusetts state income tax, as Question Number One on this November's ballot gives residents the option to do.

These big-government liberals have fear-mongered their students into thinking that the university itself could very well be closed down if Beacon Hill is no longer enabled to fleece the hard-working residents of this state.

Professor John Brigham, long a far-left wing institution unto himself in the political science department, ended one of his classes early while encouraging his students to attend a "Vote NO on One Rally."

Still others have wasted their students' time with dramatic pleas for activism on this issue, going so far as to say that their jobs and research money could be on the line if the initiative passes.

Imagine. Left-wing professors no longer able to brainwash and intimidate their students into like-mindedness and conduct frivolous research pursuits on the backs of taxpayers while hiding in academia – what a horrible prospect.

The calls for voting "No on One" have understandably come from the liberal political elite as well. "Ending the state income tax would mean laying off teachers, police and firefighters, closing schools and shutting down road projects," claims Senate President Therese Murray.

However, on this issue – as on so many others concerning freedom and economics, Therese Murray and the band of merry Marxists clamoring for high taxes are patently wrong.

It baffles me that anyone can still believe that our state legislature has done even a mediocre job of spending our tax dollars in the last few decades. From the corruption-saturated Big Dig fiasco, which still has state taxpayers on the hook for billions, to the scandalous pensions for MassPort managers and salaries of ineffective MBTA executives, to the unnecessary existence of both a state highway department and a Turnpike Authority, to the general culture of financial malfeasance so pervasive on Beacon Hill for generations, it is clear that if any state is ripe for a taxpayer revolt it is the People's Republic of Massachusetts.

Jeff Jacoby of the Globe wrote in July that "dozens of [public retirees] collect payouts of more than $100,000 a year – former state Senate president William Bulger, for example, rakes in more than $197,000, a fitting cap to a long career spent gorging at the public trough. Scores of "double-dippers" retire early on full pensions, then get themselves hired back on the public payroll at full salaries.

On this issue as on so many others concerning ... the band of merry Marxists clamoring for high taxes are patently wrong.

When ex-Big Dig director Michael Lewis retired last year, his pension was tripled and became immediately payable under a nutty state law that rewards government employees whose positions are eliminated." He continued, "It will never end - not until the suckers get riled up enough to fight back. Not until they start throwing incumbents out of office, instead of blindly reelecting them. Not until they stop letting themselves be treated as ATMs for politicians and doormats for public-employee unions. Not until they force their public "servants" to defer to them, instead of the other way around." Is this responsible stewardship of our money?

Seven states choose to impose no income tax. These states are Alaska, Florida, Nevada, South Dakota, Texas, Washington, and Wyoming. Additionally, New Hampshire and Tennessee limit their state income taxes to dividends and interest income only.

So, as Therese Murray would argue, do these states lack teachers, schools, and firefighters? On the contrary, these states have found that when taxes are lowered, business growth flourishes and unemployment drops dramatically. When done correctly, lowering taxes does not mean cutting needed services. Beautifully, state legislatures are forced to tighten their belts and spend the people's money only on what is necessary – and cut things like expensive police details, bloated salaries for public-sector managers, and mind-boggling public benefits packages compared to the private sector, all on the backs of the taxpayers. Similarly, Question One will force the state legislature to streamline and cut the waste out of the Massachusetts state budget.

When you give workers an economic incentive to be more productive – for example, that they will actually keep what they have earned – output increases. To the millions of over-worked over-taxed residents of the Commonwealth, a taxcut would represent a pay-hike, $3600 on average, according to Carla Howell, who led the campaign to get the repeal question on the ballot. She has also noted that "With less government and no income tax, Massachusetts will become a magnet to private, productive businesses and individuals.

These businesses, it would stand to reason, would have a vested interest in ensuring the health of places like UMass and other state colleges, on whom they will depend for future educated workers.

Voting Yes on Question One would be a push toward making our state more economically competitive and a step toward personal empowerment for the residents of Massachusetts – who would benefit from more money in their own pockets and less in the irresponsible and wasteful coffers of government.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu

'UMass,' with or without 'Amherst'

Parisa Saranj

Trying to take a break from all the heated discussions on politics and economic crisis of the world, I wondered through the news affecting our UMass.

I was somewhat surprised to read that for some, the name "University of Massachusetts Amherst" itself has room for debate. According to an article by Peter Schworm of Boston Globe, some graduates believe that the word "Amherst" diminishes the image and lessens the growing reputation of our school as a research center. I thought to myself some of these graduates must have a lot of free time on their hands.

I could never come up with such argument since Amherst, as a home to various unique things such as a cozy downtown or Emily Dickinson House, has been giving UMass such an exceptional character.

Moreover, the name of the city can point out to the existence of Amherst College and the other three surrounding colleges which all add an importance to the academic status of UMass and the opportunities they provide for taking advantage of all the Five Colleges. However, some of those graduates seemed really serious.

One had argued that if UMass wants to compete with state universities such as the University of Michigan, it must present itself the way those institutions do. Then I remembered my years of community college in California where the University of California, Berkeley or the University of California, Los Angeles were always being discussed among my classmates and professors not only for their academic reputation, but also for their location. It is nationally known that these cities are the identity of such outstanding schools.

According to the history that Schworm provides, once known as Massachusetts State College, it became the University of Massachusetts in 1947. The University officially adopted the name UMass Amherst in 1994. I have heard from many students that the last change in the name of school is very convenient.

It is interesting how for most of us and even for many recent graduates, our school is only UMass. We read it on sports jerseys, or in University e-mail addresses. At the same time, if asked, we always distinguish which UMass campus we attend. We all know that experiences of studying at UMass Amherst are different from UMass Boston, Lowell or Dartmouth.

It is interesting how for most of us and even for many recent graduates, our school is only UMass.

I think by having the location with the name of our school, we can mainly emphasize that we mean the flagship – UMass Amherst, which eventually, in a very self explanatory notion, points out to the distinguished qualities differentiating us from other campuses and even other state universities.

I wonder if those alumni are somewhat shy about mentioning the exact location of the school they have attended some years ago. Thus, it is important to note that UMass Amherst is not what some use to identify as a "party school" any more. The University of Massachusetts Amherst has lost its standing on a national ranking list of crazy, partying campuses. It has almost been a year that UMass Amherst fell off the Princeton Review's list of "Top 20 Party Schools."

Or maybe, the point for those who take pride on UMass being the flagship campus is that our school should not carry the location name. Instead, other schools can have the extra burden.

Nonetheless, I believe there are more arguments can be made on dropping or adding the location to UMass. Obviously, many have enjoyed an on-campus life and experienced life in the town in one way or another. Everyone is free to feel uniquely toward a place, yet the debate seems endless and ongoing.

As I find myself in pondering upon a debate which begins to sound like the "chicken or the egg" discussion, I remembered a friend who mentioned what she does not like about dropping the word Amherst. She spoke of printing the word UMass on the zipped-down sweatshirts. What happens to UMass when it is split in half by an open zipper?

I guess it is always nice to end a discussion or leave it open for further debate with laughter or a joke. I am sure there are many who favor the existence of the word Amherst next to UMass, and many who support otherwise. Nonetheless, it is important to mention why we are here. For many, opportunities our school offers us are rare dreams. For some, these same opportunities are so little and often overlooked. We must remember to not to get caught up with the less important issues while our role is to live and fight for changing our world to one better than what we are living in. Such changes can start from here, UMass.

Parisa Saranj is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at psaranj@student.umass.edu.

Apathetic, uninformed and a bit worried

Matthew Broderick

Come November 4, I will be more interested in celebrating the Red Sox third championship in the last five years (you will see) than the presidential election. Call me ignorant or un-American – I can deal with it –but don't for one second believe that I am the only individual that feels this way.

I have never cared about politics; it is out of my reach and filled with some of the most deceptively corrupt individuals in the world. Due to that, I choose to stay politically un-active and have learned nothing about the presidential candidates. Hell, I could pick them out in a crowd, but their beliefs, goals and history are far beyond me.

Until yesterday, while downing over a sensory numbing Marlboro red with a scrap of a soon-to-be-abandoned opinion paper at my feet, a new idea flew through my head. I was stunned and amazed at the hypocritical deception this thought posed. The idea was almost offensive to my own psyche, but I knew it was an appropriate alternative to my piece on the Needle Exchange in Northampton, which was going nowhere. So for the first, and probably last, time in my life, I am going to give my opinion on the presidential candidates.

For the last 24 hours I have been sleepless, pouring over documents and files of the two men poised to lead our nation. Ok., I browsed their Wikipedia profiles for about 20 minutes each. Anyway, in that time I gathered enough information to have more insight into these fascinating individuals than most of America. With that knowledge, here is my opinion of the candidates from a politically illiterate point of view.

Like all elections, these candidates are divided on a number of important topics. The War in Iraq, health care and the economic crisis are the helm. The War is the biggest issue within the world, and well should be.

Mr. McCain on the other hand would like to send more troops in. Bad idea, buddy.

Personally, I feel Obama simply has the best idea here – to get the hell out. We all have friends or family who are fighting for the comforts we take for granted, but has it gone too far? The time has come to pull our troops back home, thank them for their brave accomplishments, and deal with the world in a new way. "... by deed and by example," which Obama has stated so eloquently.

Mr. McCain, on the other hand, would like to send more troops in. Bad idea, buddy. Learn from the mistake of the man in office now, or should I say the fool you lost to a couple of years ago. On the other hand, both candidates seem ready to solve the energy crisis. I am a little concerned with McCain's idea, to build about 30 new nuclear reactors. Waking up on a Monday morning with multiple heads would completely justify the hatred I have for that day of the week, but I would rather take my chances with the sun.

Ohama looks to address health care by making it universal. This is big talk for which I am sure will be little action – it is just too big of a task. I would appreciate a universal health care system, but, to me, this seems like a point scoring technique for the Democrats rather than truth.

The stances each has taken on these issues are all-important and intriguing, but it was the smaller pieces which I relate better to. I particularly like Obama at this point because he is attempting to quit smoking while campaigning for president. All power to you, man! 100 plus attempts in, and I cannot even muster enough strength to quit when I have a feast to study for, let alone a presidential election.

McCain annoys me because he doesn't seem to play off of his normality. He struggled with math in college, which I can relate to, and I would vote for him in a minute if he was to do away with college math, but he hasn't addressed that issue yet. I also totally support his humor, which he has seemed to tone back since he made a joke about how ugly Chelsea Clinton is (I guess his straight talk attitude is for real).

In all seriousness I understand that we are at the brink of one of the most important days in our country's history. As a citizen of this great country I feel people need to pay closer attention to politics and really make an educated choice. I do not set an example at all of how involved one should be in this election. Like it or not, McCain or Obama will be in office next year. I just can't decide who is more prepared to lead this country in the direction it deserves.

Matthew Broderick is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Ferris924@gmail.com

Unseen wars and silent casualties

Matt Kushi

When you turn on the evening news, there is always one constant. The news may be different from night to night but the one thing that has remained the same since the "War on Terror" began is that you will hear ABC News Anchor Charles Gibson spend a few seconds telling you about the casualties in a suicide bombing or a firefight in Iraq or Afghanistan.

"What is a casualty?" you may ask. Is the report that is given on ABC News of killed and wounded in combat, or is that just scratching the surface?

While one technical version of the definition is killed and wounded in battle, a casualty count is not just the amount of people killed or wounded on a battlefield.

I would define a casualty as anyone that has been affected in any negative way by a war or a traumatic event. For many who experience war in one manner or another, youth and innocence are the first and most devastating casualty. For adults, losing your youth and innocence means that you are losing something precious. You are losing the uplifting energy that once was, for youth is not only a time of life, but it is also a state of mind, as Robert F. Kennedy once stated.

For the actual youths of this world, the small children that experience the horrors of war before they ever should have, they never gain that youthful innocence that is so characteristic of being a child. The real casualties of war are the young exposed to the war and the soldiers that may not only be physically wounded but are also mentally scarred by the war.

Imagine having a childhood where you have no home. Imagine having no parents. Imagine living in terror each and every day for your life. This description should not be foreign to us. This describes another problem that faces us on our own home front: poverty. Added to this already complex situation is the fact of not knowing from one day to the next if you will be shot or die from stepping on a mine. This is the daily life of many young children in countries like Iraq and Afghanistan.

For many who experience war ... youth and innocence are the first and most devastating casualty.

Many of these children – those who are not deemed old enough to carry a weapon – do not understand the war and have certainly never experienced war. How can we expect them to understand the war when we don't fully understand it ourselves? Compare this childhood with the childhood that a lot of Americans have. The differences are startling. Many, but not all, in America grew up with love and kindness. Many children in Iraq and Afghanistan are growing up surrounded by hatred, division and violence. For every child who laughs in joy, somewhere in the world there is a child who cries in agony and despair.

Now I pose a question to you: If you were a soldier overseas and saw these kids suffering, what would you do? In a war where we don't know if a child is really a silent victim of the war or an enemy that could shoot at American soldiers, this can be a difficult question to answer. What I would suggest doing is, for the innocent children that really are suffering, building foster and support homes. Many of these children have had their parents and home claimed by the war. They have nowhere and no one to turn to.

Here, in the United States, we have foster homes for children with no homes and the option for support systems for those who need help in any way. Since we have invested ourselves to this long and unpopular war, why not try to make something decent come out of it by trying to help the youth and those who are suffering? Our efforts should be solidly planted on the foundation of helping the people in Iraq and Afghanistan as the time nears to pull out.

For the many veterans of this Nation and those overseas, we need to reach out and support the soldiers – not only the ones who are so bravely doing their duty, but those that have returned different than when they left. This is why the Walter Reed Army Medical Center is so important to the United States. It is a support group as well as a hospital. What we need to do in Iraq and Afghanistan is to try to make support groups for soldiers over there, on both sides, that need counseling. Yes, we may have people that can provide counseling but do we have a whole organization or system over there to really provide the mass amount of needs that are required until we bring the troops home?

When we finally pull the troops out and bring them home, will we have won the war? Maybe or maybe not, depending on what you though the point of the war was. However, no matter what has been done, we can try to leave Iraq a better place by trying to help the many who have suffered.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

ED/OP FANTASY BATTLE #
BOND V. KIRK

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

People and places seen through art

By Jennifer Turner
Collegian Correspondent

The University Gallery, located in the Fine Arts Center, is opening an exciting and moving new exhibit this week.

"Of People and Places" is to be a poignant collection of photography by both young, emerging artists and those better known and internationally renowned. These gifted artists have displayed work in such major museums as the Victoria and Albert in London, the Sprengel Museum in Hannover and the Jeu de Paume in Paris. For several of these talented artists, this will be their debut showing in the United States.

The images in this collection are very personal to the artists and draw on the relationship between people and nature. Their work is a balance of contrasts and touches on old and new, natural and synthetic. In creating these works of art, the artists have shown a very distinctive side of themselves and their view of the world.

Loretta Yarlow, Director of the Gallery, is extremely excited by this new exhibit. She describes the uniqueness of the artists' work as, "an acute observance of facts and real situations, while at the same time an affirmation of poetry and beauty. Their art goes against the current trend of sensation and hype."

The exhibition is composed of a series of images by each artist, connected by a narrative or essay. Each of the artists' images will tell a story, through the marriage of individual characteristics and the identities of the chosen landscape.

For example, Joel Sternfeld's photographs are, in a sense, a documentary of the beauty and change in our country. He captures our beloved Connecticut River at different times of year, and depicts the intense and expressive shift of the seasons. Clare Richardson's series, entitled "Beyond the Forest," tells the story of Transylvanian farmers whose simple lives and hard work.

The seven artists whose work will be displayed include Joel Sternfeld (U.S.), John Riddy (United Kingdom), Clare Richardson (United Kingdom), An-My Le (Born in Vietnam, currently living in the U.S.), Cuny Janssen (The Netherlands), Rineke Dijkstra (The Netherlands) and Yto Barrada (Morocco).

The exhibit will run from Wednesday, Sept. 24 until Sunday, Dec. 14. There will be an opening reception on Sept. 24 from 6:00 p.m. until 8:00 p.m. This event is free and open to the public. The University Gallery is located in the lower level of the Fine Arts Center.

This innovative exhibit is the University Gallery's newest attempt to continually provide the Five College area with cutting-edge, important movements in the arts and humanities.

For more information about the exhibit or the artists, call the Gallery offices at 413-545-3670 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Jennifer Turner can be reached at jturner@student.umass.edu.

"Of People and Places"

University Gallery

Sept 24-Dec 14

Free

Organic smells, the future of perfumes

Bottles of fragrence oils need to be smelled by hand, individually, to find an all-natural scent.

By Dee DePass
Star Tribune (Minneapolis)

MINNEAPOLIS — For years, "the nose" of Aveda has traveled the Amazon River in Brazil, the flower fields of Corsica and the banks of the Nile in Egypt in search of his aromatic holy grail: a lone, elusive ingredient that just might defy Mother Nature.

But since Aveda has not these days, Aveda's chief perfumer Ko-ichi Shiozawa has returned from his quests empty-handed. His frustration is apparent in the way he rubs his temples and raps his knuckles to a drumbeat of discontent at his vial-strewn desk.

Plant-based, "essential oils are not enough for me anymore. I am obsessed with organic, I must say," said Shiozawa, 67, one of just 400 perfumers nationwide.

His stubborn hunt for an organic plant-based solvent would help Aveda's already fragrant offerings stand out even more in a $170 billion industry that still relies on about 3,000 synthetic chemicals to inexpensively make stable and long-lasting scents.

Founded in Minneapolis 30 years ago and now based in Blaine, Minn., Aveda has become a global champion of upscale, all-natural and "pure essence" shampoos, conditioners, skin lotions and other beauty products. The $7.6 billion Estee Lauder cosmetics firm liked the plant-science concept so much that it paid Aveda founder Horst Rechelbacher $300 million for the company 11 years ago.

Since then, Aveda's revenue has quintupled, and while company officials declined to disclose it, they are quick to credit Ko-ichi and his team with a chunk of the company's success.

"Ko-ichi is the originator of the 'It smells Aveda!' factor," said Dominique Conseil, Aveda's president. A few years ago, he said he challenged Ko-ichi to create more organic essential oils, and Ko-ichi came through. Aveda has increased its percentage of certified-organic essential plant oils from 25 percent to more than 90 percent, Conseil said.

Aveda relies on about 200 essential plant oils and is increasingly demanding that the raw seeds, bark, roots, flowers and leafy ingredients come from organic farms and through organic processes. By mixing a tenth of a milligram of this and a drop of that, Ko-ichi has developed thousands of natural and organic aromatic formulas in his organ-shaped lab that is lined with rows and rows of small glass bottles.

But he is far from content. Turns out, extracting the sweet scent of a blessed flower is mighty hard to do without petrochemical solvents.

"Only the rose" truly retains its sweet flowery aroma after distilling without chemicals, Ko-ichi said.

See AVEDA on page 6

Crowds line up near the food vendors at The Big E on Friday. The Big E runs from September 12 to the 28 and includes concerts from Sugarland, LeAnn Rimes, and Fergie, along side of agricultural events like dog shows and goat fitting.

Doom Jazz brings new twist

Solos and Duo Series begins at UMass Fine Arts Center

By Benjamin Axelson
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center will kick off its seventh Solos & Duos Series Thursday night with Doom Jazz. A Duo with Bobby Previte and Jamie Saft.

Previte and Saft take traditional jazz rhythms, slow them down, and blend them flawlessly with dark black metal tones using an electric bass and an ominous sounding piano, to create a gripping and entrancing experience.

"Doom Jazz"

Bazanson Recital Hall

Sept. 25

$5/$10

Though technically a duo, this project could be considered a piano trio, with Previte on drums and Saft doubling up on the bass and piano. The concert promises to bring a truly unique sound to UMass.

Previte and Saft both have impressive musical histories and countless influences that have brought them to this point.

According to Previte's personal Web site, he fell in love with the drums at the age of thirteen, and was brought up playing soul and rock music in old bars and clubs in Niagara Falls, NY.

From there he studied at the University of Buffalo under great musicians like avant-garde composer John Cage and improvisational master Morton Feldman. After settling into the New York downtown scene, he quickly became hailed as a leader with his powerful drumming and his unclassifiable music.

Previte has performed at a variety of different venues, including the famed Carnegie Hall, and has dabbled and performed music in many different genres. He has been featured in many top musical publications and has appeared on NPR's "Fresh Air," Saturday Night Live, and was "the drummer" in "Short Cuts," a film by Robert Altman.

The Village Voice has called him, "a serious composer with the heart of a roadhouse rocker."

Recently Previte has led several different projects, among which are Drafed In, a solo electronic drum show, and The Coalition of the Willing, a guitar quartet.

Apart from piano and bass, Saft also specializes on organs, synths, guitars and steel guitars. He and Previte have performed together before.

Saft has been featured with a number of groups and performers over his career including The Beastie Boys, Bad Brains, The B-52's, Laurie Anderson, Dave Douglas, Jerry Granelli, Holly Palmer, Marc Ribot's Los Cubanos Postisos, Elysian Fields, Black Beatle, Antony and the Johnsons, Chocolate Genius, Jolo Mayer's Nerve, E-Z Pour Spout, Cuong Vu, Chris Speed Trio Iffy, Jane Ira Bloom and the Groove Collective.

Like Previte, he too is a regular in New York's downtown scene, and is a member of several bands like The Beta Popes, Whoopie Pie, Swami LatePlate, The Shakers and Bakers, Kalashnikov, Pramrod Sexena, and John Zorn's Electric Masada.

Saft was also the pianist for John Adam's opera, "I Was Looking at the Ceiling and then I Saw the Sky."

Outside the performances, Saft also has done compositions for films and television including "Murderball," and "Dear Jaluta."

A quick visit to the Doom Jazz MySpace page gives a good idea about what the Duo is all about. After listening to one or two of their tracks, it's clear that they have developed a truly unique style. Heavy on the drums and precise on the piano and bass, it's easy to see how the pair has drawn heavily on their influences (particularly Feldman) and created something brand new.

Fans of that darker kind of metal will find a new take on their favorite genre that maintains the dark core while giving it a fresh beat, while jazz fans will find a dark twist in traditionally lighter sounding music.

The pair has created a style that crawls along and steadily draws you in with a constant beat and a bass line that plays deliberately just ahead of or behind the beat to place you in a slow head bobbing trance, then electrifies you with a piano riff.

The show will be held Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Bezanson Recital Hall. Tickets are $10 and $5 for students, and are available through the Fine Arts Center box office, 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS.

Benjamin Axelson can be reached at baxelson@student.umass.edu.

Freestyle, freedom hip-hop at Clubroom

Bassnectar merges media types and social issues to forefront

By Matthew Solomon
Collegian Staff

Bassnectar, the San Francisco based musician, producer and DJ, has recently exploded in popularity and can be heard blasting out of boom boxes in abundance from San Fran all the way to Boston.

With what SF Weekly called "probably has the largest cult following of any DJ in San Francisco," Bassnectar will be on the road, hitting numerous East Coast venues as part of the Other Side Tour along with DJ Redshift. During his tour, Bassnectar will be bringing his unique sound right here to the Pioneer Valley.

He will be performing tonight at the Pearl Street Clubroom in Northampton at 9:30 p.m.

In addition to their Northampton stop, the Other Side Tour will be appearing in South Burlington, Vermont at the Higher Ground and then it's back to the West Coast for a while.

A range of diverse and talented collaborators often accompany Lorin Ashton, the primary element of Bassnectar. Bassnectar has also opened in support of acts such as Sound Tribe Sector 9, The Disco Biscuits, The String Cheese Incident, Michael Franti, Heavyweight Duh Champion, KRS One, and FreQ Nasty. According to DJmixed.com "Lorin Ashton (aka Bassnectar) is a musical renaissance man."

Bassnectar is a freestyle, freeform, hip-hop influenced electronic dance music project based in the San Francisco Bay area. According to the DJ Times, "Bassnectar has shaped the musical direction of the West Coast break scene." The SF Bay Guardian called him "innovative, unique, stylish and infectious."

Ashton describes his own sound as "omni-tempo maximalism." His styles are a melding of different elements of a number of genres, including midtempo breakbeat, big beat, old-school hip-hop and dub, drum and bass, grindcore, hip-hop, bluegrass, and jazz.

According to his Web site, "Bassnectar merges music, art, new media, social involvement, and community values; dedicated to a constantly-evolving ethos of collaborative creation, self-reinvention and boundary-pushing experimentation."

The hypnotic, supersonic blend of electronic trance dance trip-hop radiates in his music, making it hard not to dance to the clever grooves and thick melodies. His music is highlighted by heavy basslines, "thick mob scene beats, freakshow energy, emotive melodies, traditional acoustic instrumentation, and fearless mashing of genres, styles, sounds, moods and approaches," said his Web site. At times, it seems to transcend time and space, not completely freezing the world in its tracks but certainly slowing it down for a bit.

According to Ashton's MySpace.com account, his influences are wide and varied including the likes of Nirvana, Simon and Garfunkel, Beethoven, and Native American flute music.

Lorin points out that his influences aren't necessarily evident in his own musical vision. His music is rather a consolidation of every sound he's ever heard, including all of his varying and diverse influences, the soft humming of his mother and the intense pounding of a bangin' bassline.

Bassnectar will play the Pearl Street Clubroom tonight at 9:30 p.m. Tickets are $15 at the door.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu.

Write for Arts!
arts@dailycollegian.com

The elusive organic flower note

AVEDA from page 5

Sure, he can get chemical-free "certified organic" ylang-ylang oils from Madagascar's cananga tree flowers, lavender from Bulgaria, and neroli orange blossom from Egypt and Morocco. But they can produce odors that reek of musty earth, musk or mint -- nothing like the sweet floral scents he craves.

"If I can have these new flowery notes, I am pretty sure Aveda's organic perfume would be quite exciting and interesting," Ko-ichi said. "Everybody knows there's no such thing as an organic flower note. It would be a breakthrough."

And lucrative, he concedes with a chuckle.

Trained as a chemist, Ko-ichi abandoned that career years ago and moved from Japan to Paris, to study French literature at the Sorbonne. He fell in love – with France, a French woman who would later become his wife and perfume.

He landed in a perfume training program in the foothills of the French Alps where jasmine, rose, violet, orange flower and rosemary scents "wafted through the streets." He later worked in Switzerland, New Jersey and the not-so-picturesque Long Island City, NY, where Ko-ichi , a father of four, toiled making pleasant scents for household products.

But all that was before a French friend suggested Ko-ichi join him at Aveda. Ko-ichi recalled asking him: "Aveda? What is that? ... Minnesota? Where is that?"

That was 18 years ago. Austrian-born Rechelbacher tapped Ko-ichi to head Aveda's Botanical Aroma Department after a dinner at D'Amico that lasted for hours. The two discussed essential oils, Ko-ichi's passion for German poetry and all things French.

But 18 years later, he's not reading poetry.

"Grrrr!" growled the normally eloquent Ko-ichi recently, after dipping one of his ubiquitous white scent blotter-sticks into a 2-inch vial of organic jasmine.

The smell is burnt and pungent, like cinnamon-spiced meat left on a grill to decay.

"I would go to the ends of the Earth to find the natural process that could let a flower oil still smell like a flower after distilling," he said. "If it's physically feasible, I'd like to find it."

Two jasmine finds, one from Egypt and the other in India, came close.

The Egyptian jasmine extract was ruled not organic by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Organics Program a year after Aveda had begun marketing it in salons in a new men's line. Aveda had to scramble to get the product back for relabeling.

"We had to switch to the jasmine treated with the petrochemical solvent," Ko-ichi said. Crestfallen, he searched on.

A trip to India in December restored hope. A supplier of supposedly organic jasmine thrust its product under his unforgiving scrutiny. Rigorous farm and lab inspections and ingredient analyses ensued.

The oil, which Ko-ichi blotted and sniffed again and again, passed test after test, delivering sweet, flowery jasmine notes. Ah, the holy grail danced within reach.

But this month, sitting crossed-armed at his desk strewn with dozens of scent sticks jammed into tiny bottles of fennel, rosemary, seagrass and other oils, he is frowning.

"There's something fishy."

The Indians are not returning his calls.

"I am specializing in such a unique field of organic, organic, organic. It is a most difficult challenge," he said, wearily shaking his head. "This is not fun. Not fun."

To cope, the perfumer with the wrinkle-free face and hands clings to his Renaissance passions. He buries himself in mathematics and Italian language books in his study, plays Bach and Chopin on his piano, romps through YouTube in search of the latest performances by Bobby McFerrin and takes walks to clear his head from the endless frustration.

That's not to say he's without successes.

Last year, Ko-ichi introduced Yatra, Aveda's first all-organic, aroma therapy "Pure-fume," to critics' applause. It emits an intense, fragrant punch that comes from environmentally harvested Bulgarian lavender, soft Australian sandalwood (harvested by Aborigines) and South African geranium rose oils. His organic Rose Attar oil launched in February, while his third organic perfume goes on sale in November, just in time for the holidays.

"It is not enough," Ko-ichi sighed. "We must treat [more] flowers with something other than water and find this plant-based [organic] solvent. That is the biggest challenge," he said. "I have to come up with something somehow. But it's getting harder and harder."

John Bailey, chief scientist of the 600-member Personal Care Products Council, said an organic-ingredient mandate for any company would prove difficult. Naturals can develop more complex scents than synthetics, he said, but they also create what he called "a very complex raw-material supply chain."

"When you are making the conscientious effort to use the organic and natural raw materials obtained from China or India or Australia or South America, then that certainly places on you a responsibility to be able to stand behind that aspect of your product," Bailey said. "I can see where he has lots of frequent-flier miles."

Peter Matravers, vice president of Aveda research and development, said Ko-ichi and his nose are up to the challenge.

"He is one of the few perfumers in the world that works with organic essences. And he has an artistry for what I call Zen aroma, where he is able to blend five or six essential oils and make a beautiful bouquet," Matravers said. "Other scientists and other perfumers will have to have 50 or 100 compounds to do the same thing."

Koichi, head sniffer at Aveda, searching through scents of flowers hoping to find a certifiably organic smell from flower samples.

Top Box Office (movies.yahoo.com)

| | Weekend Gross |
|---|---|
| 1. Lakeview Terrace | $15,600,000 |
| 2. Burn After Reading | $11,295,000 |
| 3. My Best Friend's Girl | $8,300,000 |
| 4. Igor | $8,010,000 |
| 5. Righteous Kill | $7,700,000 |

Check out the arts blog!
allaccessarts.blogspot.com
"Because it's AWESOME"

START COMMANDING ATTENTION.
START OUT ON TOP.
START HIGHER
START ONE STEP AHEAD.
START MOVING UP.
START LEADING FROM DAY ONE.
START STRONG.
There's strong. Then there's Army Strong. If you want to be a leader in life, joining Army ROTC in college is the strongest way to start. Army ROTC provides hands-on leadership development to round out your college studies. Plus you can earn a full-tuition, merit-based scholarship. After graduation, you'll begin your career as an Army Officer. With a start like that, there's no limit to what you can achieve.
ARMY ROTC
U.S. ARMY
ARMY STRONG.
Start Strong with UMASS Army ROTC. Visit us in Bldg 79, next to Boyden Gym, or contact Captain Jim Laudato at 978-399-3696 or jlaudato@acad.umass.edu for more information.
©2008. Paid for by the United States Army. All rights reserved.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Peace Corps
26 UMASS AMHERST ALUMNI ARE CURRENTLY SERVING OVERSEAS... FIND OUT HOW YOU CAN JOIN THEM!
Information Meeting:
Thursday, Sept. 25
7pm - 8:30pm
W.E.B. DuBois Library, Rm. 1320
Fall Drop-in Office Hours:
Tuesday: 2pm-4pm
Friday: 10am - 12am
481 Hills South
Stop by and talk to the Peace Corps Campus Representative about how you can gain experience now to become a more competitive applicant.
Life is calling.
How far will you go?

No. 13 Saint Louis remains undefeated

M Soccer from page 10

win over Manhattan.

With a 76th minute game-winner courtesy of freshman Aaron Markowitz, the Rams defeated their longtime cross-town rival before blanking Marist 3-0.

The early flurry of shutouts for the young Rams squad is on pace to better last year's season total of five. Much of this defensive success is thanks to Markowitz's fellow freshman, A-10 Rookie of the Week, Ryan Meara.

Meara has handled Fordham's starting goalkeeping responsibilities flawlessly, making two key saves late in the Marist shutout and posting 18 total saves on the season.

Markowitz has brought Fordham's freshman prowess to the national limelight, as his team-leading eight points has secured the Hudson, NY native a spot on the College Soccer News' National Team of the Week.

The Rams have two more non-conference tune-ups before opening A-10 play with tough back-to-back opponents: undefeated Saint Louis (3-0-3) and wins leader Charlotte (5-2-0).

Saint Louis Undefeated

Entering week four of the 2008 season, No. 13 Saint Louis remains undefeated at 3-0-3 after taking full advantage of senior keeper Pat Disbennett's career-high seven saves to oust Denver, 1-0.

A brilliant late header by junior James Jaramillo off of a 40-yard free kick kept the Billikens current unbeaten streak at 14, dating back to last season's Oct 19 loss at Massachusetts.

This week Disbennett joined UMass' Zach Simmons and 28 other candidates nationwide for contention in the Lowe's Senior Class award, honoring top players for their combined excellence on the field, in the classroom and in the community.

The fifth-year senior keeper has battled a plethora of injuries each season and has emerged to allow only four goals in six games. Jaramillo, a transfer from UCLA, will get his first taste of A-10 action Oct. 10 at La Salle.

Until then, the Billikens will enjoy the tail end of a three game homestretch, facing Northwestern, Missouri State and Creighton at Hermann Stadium.

Two major national outlets have the Billikens ranked in the top ten: Soccer America (No. 5) and CollegeSoccernews.com (No. 9).

Holly Galvin can be reached at hjtruth@gmail.com

Junior forward Mark DeSantis will look to boost the Minutemen starting offense this weekend. UMass this week is working on their offense and set pieces in preparation for the UMass Classic.

Ben Arikian has excelled on the playing field as of late. He has assisted on two lone game-winning and scored a game-winning goal.

Minutemen looking for conference wins

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

This coming week and a half is crucial for the Massachusetts men's soccer team as it heads into its final three games before Atlantic 10 Conference play begins.

The Minutemen's (2-3-1) remaining three games will be the final test to see if they are prepared for the most important part of their season.

Once A-10 play begins, the Minutemen will have to win six of their nine games to make it to the Atlantic 10 Tournament. Making it to the tournament is UMass' goal for this season.

Set pieces

Being successful on set pieces is an important goal-scoring opportunity that the Minutemen have started to take advantage of. During a match, a team can struggle moving the ball down the field and finishing on shots, but with set pieces, a team has a much better chance of following through and scoring goals.

Towards the end of the 2007 season the Minutemen became more successful on kicks, scoring multiple goals off of set pieces in post season play. As this season progresses UMass has scored more goals off of these plays. Because the Minutemen have struggled getting wins this season they need to continue to take advantage of set pieces. If they continue be successful it will lead to more UMass victories.

Arikian's involvement

Sophomore Ben Arikian has played a key role for the Minutemen this season. Last weekend in the Minutemen's 2-1 loss to New Hampshire, Arikian shot a direct kick to senior Mike DeSantis, who scored the lone goal for the Minutemen.

Last Saturday wasn't the first time the midfielder was given an assist off of a direct kick. On Sept. 6 in UMass' 1-0 win against Siena, Arikian took a direct kick at midfield and senior Chris Brown headed in the ball for the win.

Arikian was a threat at midfield last season (two goals and a team-high six assists), and this year he is proving to do the same. So far, Arikian has tallied four points in two assists and a game-winning goal against Boston College in the 3-2 double overtime win on Aug. 31.

Struggling to get wins

Last weekend the Minutemen had another unsuccessful road game in their 2-1 loss to undefeated New Hampshire. UMass began to gel in the match, having many key athletes playing better games than the week before, but still were unable to come out with a win.

Six games into the season and the Minutemen have two victories, although these losses don't matter as much as A-10 games to determine postseason play, it is still important for UMass to win the remaining games.

This weekend could be a different story, because the Minutemen have started to work together as a team. That, combined with home field advantage, should help contribute to the Minutemen's success this weekend at the UMass Classic.

Men's Soccer

Bryant Craft

Freshman Bryant Craft has made a memorable impression on the Minutemen. Craft, as with the entire freshmen class, has had to learn how to play UMass' systems.

"I didn't think Bryant Craft would start right away, he's done a really good job," UMass coach Sam Koch said.

Craft, a midfielder and forward, has started in all of UMass' six games. So far this season he has three points on one goal and one assist.

Addition to honors

Senior goalkeeper Zack Simmons is adding to his list of nominations and honors as he enters the middle of his final season as a Minuteman. Simmons was named one of the 30 candidates nationwide for the 2008 Men's Soccer Lowe's Senior CLASS Award. The award is given to a senior who represents excellence on the field and off.

Last year Simmons was named to the NSCAA Adidas All-America Third Team and UMBRO National Player of the Year. This year he was named to the Soccer America Preseason All-America First Team and the College Soccer News Preseason All-America Third Team.

Not only is Simmons known nationwide as a top goalkeeper, he also holds numerous UMass records. Shutouts (career), career record in 2007 Simmons continues to be a leader for his Minutemen with his experience and skill he will contribute to the success of UMass as they make a run for an Atlantic 10 title.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@collegian.com

CHECK OUT THE DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG FOR 24/7 COVERAGE ON UMASS ATHLETICS AT:
HTTP://WWW.BLOG.MASSLIVE.COM/DAILYCOLLEGIAN SPORTS/

Welcome Back pancake Breakfast & Coffee Bar
Wednesday September 24 8:30 - 11:30 am Memorial Hall
Start your year off with flap jacks & funnies!
Stop by Memorial Hall and enjoy pancakes, sausage and juice, while watching morning cartoons!
In addition, sample our specialty coffee bar and take home some treats, courtesy of the UMass Amherst Alumni Association.
No registration required... just stop in!
The first 200 seniors will receive a special gift. Must present valid ID
Enter to win a $25 UStore gift card.
Seniors can also enter to win a $1,000 cash prize from Liberty Mutual!
Drawing to be held at Commencement Ball on May 21, 2009
Alumni Association · Student Alumni Association
Visit UMassAlumni.com/students for more information

If you are Jewish between the ages of 18 and 26 and you've never been on a peer trip to Israel, this trip is for you....
FREE 10-Day Trip to Israel and there's no catch!
January 3 -13, 2009
We're having the biggest trip ever from UMass and 8-colleges because next year the trip will be much smaller. So this is the year!
You will travel with other UMass students and explore Israel. Visit Masada, swim in the Dead Sea, ride a camel, party in Tel Aviv, hike in the Golan Heights and so much more!
It really is free and with no strings attached!
These are the last days to sign-up at www.israelfree.com. Be sure to choose the UMass - 8-college trip to make sure you have a seat. Step by step instructions available at www.umasshillel.org/israeltrip.
Questions?
Contact Dana at dgolan@external.umass.edu

STOP & SHOP
Stop&Shop
Head back to class with Stop & Shop!
Stop & Shop welcomes you back with special bonus coupon savings!
Exclusive Bonus Coupon
Valid Monday 9/22 - Friday 10/31/08
$5 OFF a purchase of $25 or more.
Plus! At Stop & Shop you'll find...
• A delicious variety of fresh prepared foods
• Natural and organic foods
• A Staples® aisle for school supplies
• Personal care needs
• Redbox™ DVD rentals
And so much more! All priced to fit a student's budget!
Hadley
stop&shop.com

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
* * * * * *
SATURDAY, 9/27/2008
FOUR ON THE FLOOR
LOOKING FOR EXPOSURE?
STUDENT BANDS WELCOME TO PLAY AT SEVEN O'S
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-5788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CUPBOARD APTS

Bull testicles.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 8 | | 3 | 7 | | 5 | | | |
| | | | | | | | | 6 |
| | | | | | | 8 | 1 | 7 |
| | | 2 | 9 | 1 | | 6 | | |
| | | 8 | 2 | | 3 | 9 | | |
| | | 1 | | 4 | 8 | 2 | | |
| 7 | 3 | 9 | | | | | | |
| 1 | | | | | | | | |
| | | | 4 | | 1 | 3 | | 5 |

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Brothers Watt By Will Wilson

Bliss By Harry Bliss

"Marie, forward my calls — I'm working on an ulcer from home today."

Leold

www.leold.com
by Roger and Salem Salloum© 1997

Boy, it takes a while to forget your old girlfriend.
The other night I was waiting in the ticket line at a movie theater with another girl and a nearby public phone was ringing and I really thought it was my old girlfriend calling me to ask if I wanted to meet her for an ice cream later on that night.
Really, after a while my old girlfriend and I weren't any good anymore, anyway.
I'd better start a hobby.
Maybe I'll paint very tiny figurines of the combatants of the Zulu war of 1879.
Yeah, that'll do it.
I'll paint lots of little things I can barely see.

Quote of the Day

"Calamities are of two kinds: misfortunes to ourselves, and good fortune to others..."

- Ambrose Bierce

ACROSS
1 Harrow parts
6 Soap film
10 Wearing wedgies
14 Hunter of stars
15 Pond growth
16 Engage in
17 Artillery burst
18 D.C. old-timers
19 Allure alternative
20 Goes in
22 Spoke for transcription
24 Marsh grasses
26 Cereal grain
27 Type of nuclear reactor
30 Final straightaway
34 X-ray shielding
35 Nose or swan follower
37 Musical syllables
38 Mtn. stat
39 Writers' credits
41 Straw drawn
42 Fry briefly
44 Cordelia's father
45 Pouting face
46 Mavens
46 Renters
50 Auction finish?
51 Surveillance, shortly
52 Road parallel to a highway
56 Pleasantly warm
60 Autobahn auto
61 Lemming cousin
63 False alarm
64 Nastase of tennis
65 Actress Gray
66 Actress Barkin
67 Lustful look
68 Allows to
69 Is on a quest

DOWN
1 Apothecary measure
2 Teheran's place
3 River sediment
4 Type of bridge or wagon
5 Serenaded the sheets
6 Dig a trench
7 Clumsy oafs
8 Wrinkled fruit
9 Good luck source
10 Pullover or cardigan
11 Sentry's command
12 Leer lasciviously
13 Instrument of title
21 Rundown
23 Topless little pies
25 Practice exercises
27 World-weary
28 Take time off
29 Devour
30 Upper house
31 Claw
32 Influence
33 Despises
36 Contend
39 Tete topper
40 Put up
43 More minute
45 Handcuff
47 See the world
49 Hangman's knots
51 Kindled again
52 Flunk
53 Govern
54 Garfield's bud
55 Al or Tipper
57 Mail happening
58 Difficult journey
59 Cravings
62 Annapolis grad

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

FISHIN' WITH SARAH.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Dear reader:

Please send in your comics, so that I have purpose in life, and can stop typing like this...

comics @ dailycollegian.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The time has come to go to sleep for a year and hibernate through the bear market.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You are like the Stalin of the classroom. Let someone else talk for once.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
It's all fun and games until someone gets squirted in the eye.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Word of the Day - Tallywacker (n.):
1. That which tallywacks.
2. One whom enjoys tallywacking.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Break out of your chronic habits, such as your chronic habit.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
With eBail.com, posting bail has never been this easy and fun!

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Tell your dog to stop digging up oil in the yard before ExxonMobil shows up and buys your soul.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your zipper is a window into the unknown.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
This week there will be a major run on the lollipop reserves of our nation's banks. Get yours while they last.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
After today, this date will forever be known as the Great Squirrel Massacre.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Watching soccer is almost as exciting as watching ants carry a piece of cereal.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
For one second you will feel on top of the world. The next, you will realize that we are all on top of the world.

pork sandwich.

COMICS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! $10/hr for participating in listening experiments. English must be your first language. 413-545-6837 Voicemail Phonetics_Lab@linguist.umass.edu

SERVICES

Condom Break? Get EC. Emergency Contraception prevents unintended pregancies up to 5 days after unprotected sex.Tapestry Health 27 Pray Street, Amherst 413-548-9992 Tapestryhealth.org

ANNOUNCMENTS

Spring Break 2009. Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for Group Discounts. Best Prices

ANNOUNCMENTS

Guaranteed! Best Parties! Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, S Padre, Florida. Information/ Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

Montreal Weekends From $99. Complete RoundTrip, Motorcoach. 3 days, 2 nights. Hotel Downtown. For Details MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

Make money with lottery from anywhere even if you never win benefits. 1-877-526-6957 IDC6920. www.flalottomagic.net/?=c4920

FOR RENT

2 bedroom plus den in duplex house $950. Also 3 bedroom townhouse two floor unit $1215. Both near bus stop. LaDonna @ 413-665-2203

FOR RENT

3 bedroom house. super energy efficient. washer/ dryer/dishwasher. newly rennovated. In Amherst, on bus route. $1800 / month. John 413-374-4134

SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIEDS...

(413) 545 - 3500

verizonwireless
Think outside the dorm.
USB727 Modem
$29.99 after rebate
$79.99 2-yr. price – $50 mail-in rebate debit card. With new 2-yr. activation.
Get on America's Most Reliable Wireless Network.
Click verizonwireless.com to find a store near you.
Activation fee/line: $35.
IMPORTANT CONSUMER INFORMATION: Subject to Customer Agmt., Calling Plan, rebate form & credit approval. Up to $175 early termination fee & other charges. While supplies last. Shipping charges may apply. BroadbandAccess is available to more than 256 million people in 258 major metros in the U.S. Limited-time offer. Rebate debit card takes up to 6 wks & expires in 12 months. Offers & coverage not available everywhere. Network details & coverage maps at verizonwireless.com. ©2008 Verizon Wireless. 59880
CNNE-59880-Daily Collegian-11.5x21-4C-9.17

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM scores overtime winner against Brown

Potts tallied second goal of season at crucial moment

NICHOLAS O'MALLEY
BY COLLEGIAN STAFF

With seven minutes left in regulation, everything seemed to be going wrong for the Massachusetts field hockey team. They had outshot their opponent, Brown, 16-6 and outcornered them, 13-3. The Bears, however, had just put up the first goal of the game and were minutes away from stealing the match from the Maroon and White.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 2 |
| Brown | 1 |

Makaela Potts and UMass (6-2), however, did not let that happen.

Two minutes after the Bears (1-5) broke the ice, UMass responded with a goal off a corner. After a timeout, the Minutewomen were able to capitalize on the ensuing corner play that gave Potts her second goal of the season.

"It was executed with absolute perfection," Coach Justine Sowry said. "The ball rolled out to Makaela and no one was going to save that that shot."

After tying the game, the Minutewomen found new life in overtime, scoring the game winning goal only four minutes into the bonus period to beat the Bears, 2-1.

Senior Erin Parker took the team's third shot of the period and was able to put it through. The offensive captain now has three goals this season, second game winning goal.

"Our starting lineup for overtime is actually very solid and all the players compliment each other," Sowry said. "We possessed the ball very well and had patience and when there was an opportunity to shoot, we took it."

Before Brown's goal in regulation, the Minutewomen were hit hard by losing senior midfielder Mary Shea to a yellow card four minutes earlier. With the team's captain gone, the Bears capitalized with their late goal.

"[The goal] came out of nothing really, just sort of a break away situation," Sowry said. "They didn't have many opportunities, but they took their opportunity and put one on the board."

The final score of the game hardly reflected the way the two teams played. UMass dominated Brown in terms of shots and corners. Potts' eight shots were two more then the Bears' total as a team. Seniors Katelyn Orlando and Erin Parker were also part of the Maroon and White barrage on net. Orlando had five shots while Parker had four.

Sowry, however, did not believe her team was able to execute on the opportunities that were given to them.

"In terms of our attacking play, we did not execute well," Sowry said. "Were we the better team? Probably. But in terms of decision-making, there were not quality shots."

The difference for the Bears was sophomore goalkeeper Lauren Kessler and her six saves. Kessler, along with the defense, was able to withstand UMass' offensive pressure for the majority of the game.

"I will absolutely give Brown a lot of credit, they just have so much heart and keep playing," Sowry said. "Yes, their goalkeeper played well, but I think their whole defense never gave up."

Sophomore Jackie Tait was able to bounce back from an injury sustained in Saturday's game against Vermont. Tait appears to be close to returning to top form already, as she played all 74 minutes of the game and put up an assist.

"She didn't practice yesterday, and she's definitely not one hundred percent," Sowry said. "She kept things very simple back there and tried not to do too much."

Despite the loss, Brown continued their trend of close, low-scoring losses in which they were competitive for the entire game. The Bears have played in four games this season that have been decided by one goal.

By beating out Brown Tuesday, the Minutewomen extended their undefeated record against the Bears to 7-0.

Nicholas O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

The Minutewomen, led by offensive captain Erin Parker, is a vastly improved unit this season, scoring an average of 2.00 goals per game. Parker is second on the team in points with three goals and three assists.

Prince Ofosu, a key player coming off the bench, hopes to be a vital partin his team's success this weekend at the UMass Classic.

Tough competition in A-10

Conference play will boast stiff opponents in October

BY HOLLY J. GALVIN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Backed by a redshirt freshman goalkeeper, the Dayton men's soccer team lowered its goals-against average to just 0.85 after this week's Nike Invitational, securing two shutouts that improved the Flyers' overall record to 5-2-1.

Denver native Tyler Picard notched two shutouts, earning Atlantic 10 Co-Rookie of the Week honors with fellow freshman keeper Ryan Meara of Fordham.

A-10 Soccer

In a blowout against Robert Morris, the Flyers scored five times, twice off the foot of tournament MVP Florian DesCamps. DesCamps's efforts also resulted in A-10 Fall Honor Roll notoriety, as he shared player of the week honors with junior George Washington forward Andy Stadler.

Descamps, a redshirt senior, is enjoying positional stability this season. Head Coach Dennis Currier had previously switched DesCamps from defense to forward last year after DesCamps managed to be fourth on the team in points even while playing back throughout all of the 2006 season.

The French standout leads an explosive Flyer offense that remains undefeated at home (4-0-0) thus far.

STRONG FRESHMEN BOOST FORDHAM

Fordham (3-3-1) has battled back after a tough 1-0 double-overtime loss to Villanova, notching shutout victories against Manhattan and Marist. The two wins earned the Rams a No. 10 NSCAA Mid-Atlantic Regional Ranking.

Though winless in three overtime bouts, Fordham proved it can deliver late in a recent 1-0

See M.Soccer on page 7

Sophomore midfielder Chris Vaccaro has tallied one goal on six shots so far this season. Vaccaro has started one game this season for the Minutemen.

UMass surprises foes

Contributions delivered from every position, youth included

By Nicholas O'Malley
Collegian Staff

With the departures of several key players on the defensive end, the 2008 season for the Massachusetts field hockey team was expected to get to a slow start.

The Minutewomen (6-2), however, have been anything but slow out of the gate. This year's start, however, the program's best since 2000.

Entering the season with a defense that was expected to take a step back this season and an offense that had struggled the year before, UMass was considered a team with gross, young talent on defense with potential to improve. That young talent, however, has played far beyond expectations for second year coach Justine Sowry.

Field Hockey

The defense, led by sophomore Jaime Bourazeris and transfer Jackie Tait, has quickly emerged as a strong cohesive unit that has limited the major breakdowns expected from a young team. Freshman goalkeeper Alesha Widdall has been outstanding thus far for UMass, posting three shutouts already this season.

The expected growing pains for the young team have not been noticeable as the Minutewomen's only losses have come against then No. 13 ranked Boston College and then-No. 5 ranked Connecticut.

SPREADING THE WEALTH

The offense for last year's Minutewomen was less than stellar for a team that had a strong defense for its bread and butter. Now-junior Cher King was the main provider for the offense as she led the team with eight goals, followed by three different players with five goals.

Sowry believes that the offense was far too focused on individual play and did not employ a scheme that employed the entire offense. This year, however, the offense has shifted towards a more team-oriented offense that is made possible by new additions to the front line.

The leading scorers for the Minutewomen so far this season include a first-emerging star in sophomore Katie Kelly and junior transfer Jill Powers. The two lead the team in goals with four and three, respectively.

King has taken a backseat in the offense thus far, recording only one goal and no assists. However, she has made great contributions outside of scoring. She is key in bringing to ball up into the circle and dropped back into a midfield spot after defender Jackie Tait was injured.

UMass' offense has not been dominated by underclassmen, though, as seniors Katelyn Orlando and Erin Parker have put up two goals a piece including a game-winning goal for each. Parker is tied for the team lead in assists with three.

HOME SWEET HOME

The Minutewomen are in the middle of a stretch where they play seven out of eight games in the friendly confines of Garber Field. Such a stretch is not unprecedented for UMass, though. During the 2006 season, the Maroon and White, coached by Patty Shea at the time, played eight consecutive home games. The Minutewomen, however, were only able to win two of the games.

Tuesday's game against Brown is a bit of an anomaly in terms of scheduling. Outside of being the only road game for almost a month for UMass, it's a Tuesday game after a lone Saturday game this weekend.

UMass is 3-1 at home so far this season with the sole loss coming in a tight 1-0 match against UConn. Since her arrival, Sowry has led the Maroon and White to a 9-3 home record.

Before Sowry is a different story. In 2006, UMass won only two games at home, going 2-8 while posting an equally meager record of 2-6 the year before.

The Minutewomen have had a great deal of success at home so far, outscoring their opponents 8-to-3.

Nicholas O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Sophomore defender Jaime Bourazeris has emerged as one of the defensive leaders for the young Minutewomen. The Maroon and White have come out to a fast start and have posted three shutouts thus far.

INSIDE: MEN'S SOCCER HOSTS UMASS CLASSIC | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 70 LO: 53 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 2008

More grads compete for fewer positions

BY ERIN KESSELT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Most college students will say they're going to college, to receive a decent education and land a respectable, well-paying job, but there are no such certainties in today's economy.

Fortunately according to employment Web site jobfox.com, there are some professions that are "recession-proof." The top five most recession-proof jobs, according to jobfox.com, include sales representatives-business development, nursing, software design/development, finance and accounting executives and accounting staff.

"The key to landing the top positions is combining cutting-edge experience with important soft skills such as people development and project management," Jobfox CEO Rob McGovern said.

But of course competition for these jobs is extremely high, and sufficient qualifications and experience for these jobs is an absolute must.

Many out-of-school job seekers will find that getting a job is at a premium.

"I would say that for this year's graduates, the economy will be 'soft', as will the job market," finance Professor Robert Nakosteen said.

Nakosteen, a finance and operations expert, is also executive editor of Massachusetts Benchmark, a quarterly journal analyzing the state's economy.

"Fewer jobs [will be] available to graduates, and possibly at lower starting salaries," Nakosteen said. "For the overall economy, it means either very slow economic growth or even decline."

The 'snowballing' decline of the economy began with the housing and automobile sec-

See ECONOMY on page 3

'Stealth' Chlamydia

More places for infection to hide

BY JOSH WALOVITCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

More than half the population of the United States has been exposed to Chlamydia by the age of 20. With over 90 million cases each year and in excess of four million cases in the United States, Chlamydia is the most commonly reported bacterial sexually transmitted infection (STI).

When most people hear about Chlamydia they naturally assume it refers to the STI, but in fact there is another type of Chlamydia that is acquired far more easily.

The pathogen named Chlamydia pneumoniae (CP) is a respiratory disease that is commonly spread from person to person through the air and is capable of causing flulike symptoms.

University of Massachusetts professors Dr. Elizabeth Stuart and Dr. Wilmore Webley are redefining the role that this bacterium could play in regards to a widespread of illnesses.

Stuart and Webley have been researching how the Chlamydia bacteria spread, both inside and outside of the body. Together they have found Chlamydia in the lungs, where it causes inflammation and asthma, and in the blood, where it causes hardening of arteries. Additionally, CP has the ability to pass from a mother to a child as it is being born and they think that Chlamydia may be a co-factor in cancer.

Stuart and Webely have discovered that some treatments for Chlamydia drive the bacteria into a dormant state where it is does not cause any obvious symptoms. Stuart and Webley call this dormant action the "stealth mode."

"This stealth mode happens around the time when conditions in the body become less favorable for the bacteria to grow," Webley said. "When the body

See CHLAMYDIA on page 3

SGA senate elections underway

Students turn out in crowds to support over 50 candidates

BY MICHAEL FOX
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Campus Center concourse at the University of Massachusetts was crowded today with people lining up to cast their ballot in this year's election for Student Government Association senate.

"It's been pretty busy, to be honest it's been a surprise to see so many people, especially commuters, here voting," said Caitlin O'Kelly-Moriarty, one of this year's election commissioners.

About 60 people are running in this year's election, which continues throughout today with voting available at every dining hall and the Campus Center. The candidates are competing for the approximately 40 seats in the senate, divided by each living area's population (with Southwest divided into North and South parts). Each seat represents 500 students. There are an estimated additional six seats which will be appointed by the ALANA (African, Latino, Asian/ Pacific Islander & Native American) Caucus.

The SGA senate, along with the executive and judiciary, is one of the main governing bodies of the SGA. Its duties include reviewing SGA by-laws, creating each year's student activities budget and helping to recommend policy to the rest of the SGA.

Speaker of the SGA senate Shaun Robinson touched on how the strength of the senate lies in the number of voters. "The more people that vote, the more legitimacy SGA receives when it presents itself towards the administration. Also, the higher percentage of voting students on campus, the more SGA is able to act as a collective voice."

The different ideals of each senator reflect on their diverse levels of experience. Sophomore Tyler Langlais is running in his first election for one of the seats in Southwest South. "I feel that as a student who deeply cares about what happens in the UMass community and is willing to help it, it is my duty to become a voice for all of my fellow students," he said regarding his motivations to run.

On the other end of the experience spectrum, two-time senator and former Chair of the Senate Administrative Affairs Committee Kevin Boldus is running as a Commuter Area senator. "As a student senator in 2006 and a senator and committee chair in 2007, I hope to continue my role as a leader in the senate, and bring an experienced voice that will represent my constituent's best interests."

He adds, "I believe the student government must return its focus to the needs of the undergraduate population and the university community. We need to begin to focus on improving student life, such as addressing the issue of the constantly rising student activities' fee. As one of the few senators who voted against increasing it last fall, I would like to continue my advocacy."

Associate speaker of the senate Cheryl Feinstein summed up the whole process. "It's your school, if you want a change, then you need to vote and make yourself heard."

Voting continues from 10 a.m. – 4p.m. and 5p.m. – 8p.m. in every dining hall and the Campus Center.

Michael Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu

Students at Worcester dining hall cast their ballots for SGA senate election going on this week. Over 50 candidates are running, with 40 seats divided between living areas on campus.

Bye week for Minutemen

Senior quarterback Liam Coen and the Minutemen hope to take advantage of this week's open date in order to prepare for next Saturday's home game against Delaware.

New grants for nursing school

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts School of Nursing, along with the new renovation of their building, is set to expand and revamp their program.

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation (RWJF) has granted the nursing school $80,000 to boost enrollment from disadvantaged or underrepresented groups.

"This program aims to safeguard the health of the nation by helping to ease the nurse and nursing faculty shortage," said RWJF President Risa Lavizzo-Mourey in a statement. "This new initiative also will advance our strategic goal of promoting leadership in the health professions."

The program will offer eight scholarships to members of an underrepresented or financially disadvantaged group to help them achieve their goal of becoming a nurse.

These newly recruited students will already have bachelor's degrees since grant is geared toward those who wish to earn a second degree and alleviate the nation's nursing shortage.

The grant is a national initiative launched by RWJF through its New Careers in Nursing Program and the American Association of Nursing (AACN).

The program aims to set nurses on the fast track, giving them the opportunity to take the state nursing licen-ure exam and begin professional nursing practice.

Not only will the program help to address the nation's nursing shortage in general, but also the shortage of faculty nurses. The grant will enforce and enrich the "You Can Be a Nurse" project, all ready in motion at UMass.

See NURSING on page 3

UM Central Heating Plant brings home design award

BY EMILY REYNOLDS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts received the 2008 Pacesetter Plant Award from the "Combined Cycle Journal" at the beginning of the year for the new combined heat and power plant constructed near the Mullins Center.

"For melding state-of-the-art energy conversion equipment, system redundancy, and innovative building design into one of the nation's most attractive, efficient, reliable and environmentally benign CHP facilities," is the inscription on the award.

Although the Central Heating Plant has not gone fully online yet, the award was given for its design and environmentally friendly qualities the plant is efficient, has pollution control, is the cleanest of its size and passes 250,000 pounds of steam a day.

"The University decided to build a new plant since the old plant is antiquated, inefficient and an air polluter since it burns coal," University Spokesman Ed Blaguszewski said.

The $133.3 million project has been over 10 years in the making. The original proposal was in 1995.

The R.G.Vanderweil Engineers LLP and architect Cambridge Seven Associates Inc. were chosen by the UMass Building Authority to design the plant while O&G Industries Inc. was chosen to do all of the construction. John Mathews, assistant director of campus projects for UMass, was chosen as the project manager.

The architecture of the plant was purposely designed to be aesthetically pleasing and to blend in with the surrounding area. The idea being is to make it not look like a power plant.

When designing the plant, the biggest question was how to hide the smoke stacks and the fuel and water tanks. To hide the latter, the tanks were put behind the plant with a large canopy over them. When looked at from the sky, it looks like one building.

See AWARD on page 3

Fraternity sued over sex tape

BY KATIE SANDERS
INDEPENDENT FLORIDA ALLIGATOR

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — A woman filed a $15,000 lawsuit against UF's Delta Tau Delta Fraternity and two UF students, one of whom she had sex with in the fraternity house while the other secretly videotaped the act.

The 20-year-old woman claims invasion of privacy, outrage and fraud among other allegations in the lawsuit, which was filed July 29 in Palm Beach County.

The lawsuit stems from a Nov. 5, 2006, incident when the woman and UF anthropology junior Benjamin Farias, 21, had consensual sex in his room in the fraternity house, according to a Gainesville Police report.

Farias arranged for his fraternity brother, UF accounting senior Kyle B. Kraft, 21, to videotape while hiding under a blanket on another bed without the woman's knowledge, according to the lawsuit.

Kraft videotaped the woman naked for more than 20 minutes before she spotted the camera lens protruding from the blanket, the lawsuit states.

The woman then wrestled with Kraft to take the videotape, and she reported the incident to Gainesville Police.

Spencer Mann, State Attorney's Office spokesman, said a judge found Farias and Kraft guilty of misdemeanor voyeurism in May 2007.

They served 10 days in jail, did 50 hours of community service, spent a year on probation and paid $1,266 in fines, Mann said.

The woman was not a SFC or UF student, according to school officials.

In the lawsuit, the woman blames the fraternity for failing to supervise and control its members as well as neglecting to bestow a "general duty of care" toward the fraternity's guests.

Delta Tau Delta President Thomas Cockriel said Farias and Kraft have been suspended from the fraternity since spring 2007.

Cockriel deferred questions to Jim Russell, executive vice president of the fraternity's national chapter.

Russell would not comment on the specifics of the allegations in a telephone interview but said the incident "is not conduct that we would condone in any way."

The fraternity's last legal run-in came in 2006, about four months before the taping, when two underage students were transported to the emergency room for drinking at the fraternity house in separate incidents, according to UF records.

The fraternity was put on social suspension through fall 2007 and could not recruit new members during spring 2006 and fall 2007, records showed.

Padovani to speak

University of Massachusetts Amherst alumnus and Qualcomm executive, Roberto Padovani, will speak on cellular communications in the Campus Center on Thursday Oct. 2.

The talk is the ninth annual Tang Lecture presented by the College of Engineering, aimed to bring engineering-based company members to campus for a chance to interact with students and faculty.

Padovani's talk, titled "Cellular Communication: What a Ride!" will draw from his experience as a leader at Qualcomm. He received the Innovators in Telecommunications award in 2004 from the San Diego Telecom Council and the Executive of the Year award in 2006 from the School of Electrical and Computer Engineering at the University of California – San Diego. He has also received a fourteen degree from the University of Padova, Italy and his M.S. and Ph.D. from UMass.

Padovani is also an Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers fellow and currently an adjunct professor in at the University of California – San Diego.

– Collegian Staff

Early voting begins for presidential race

BY PETER NICHOLAS
LOS ANGELES TIMES

COLUMBUS, Ohio – The campaign isn't over, but the voting is under way.

Before watching the presidential debates and without waiting for the next round of TV ads, millions of voters who have made up their minds about John McCain and Barack Obama will cast ballots before the Nov. 4 election day, thanks to expansive new early-voting laws.

In parts of Georgia, voting began last week. In Iowa, residents may vote at county auditor offices starting Thursday. Early voting opens Tuesday in Ohio, a battleground state that McCain views as crucial to his chances.

"Some people now refer to October as election month," said Ryan Meerstein, director of the McCain campaign's Ohio operation.

More than 30 states have set up a mechanism for people to vote before Nov. 4.

About 14 percent of the electorate voted early in the 2000 campaign. That figure jumped to 20 percent in 2004, and this time around it could rise to more than 30 percent, according to Paul Gronke, head of the early voting information center at Reed College in Oregon.

Both presidential campaigns encourage early voting, particularly among people who tend to vote sporadically.

Over roughly a six-week period, the campaigns can target these voters with mailings, phone calls and personal visits in hopes of banking their vote. At McCain's local headquarters here last Saturday, about a dozen volunteers made phone calls to Franklin County voters, asking if they had received the absentee ballot application that the campaign has sent to about a million Ohioans.

"It's the easiest way to avoid the election-day lines. Do you plan to use your absentee ballot?" one volunteer asked a voter by phone. She recorded the answers electronically, feeding them into a database kept by the McCain campaign.

"Early voting is one of the big phenomena this year," said Tad Devine, chief strategist for Democrat John F. Kerry's 2004 presidential bid. "This puts a premium on early organization. It affects where you send your candidate and when. It affects where you spend money on television times."

Each side is also tailoring strategies to draw core supporters to the polls early. Literature sent to Ohioans by the state's Republican Party urges people to vote for the GOP ticket as early as possible. The mailer suggests that Republicans will keep the nation safe in a dangerous world. "No terrorist attacks on American soil since September 11," it reads. "Have they given up? Ask the rest of the world."

The Obama campaign has hung posters in hundreds of barber shops across Ohio, providing a toll-free number where people can obtain information about early voting. Obama is shown sitting in a barber chair, wearing a smock.

Obama aides are planning to lure people to vote early in Ohio by handing out concert tickets near the polling sites. The campaign is also considering taking college students to vote early by shuttle bus, with the promise of a happy hour event afterward.

One Obama aide said that in Ohio, the campaign is relying on heavy turnout from students and blacks who have a "mixed record" of voting in past elections. Early voting gives the campaign more than a month to track these supporters and make sure they follow through and vote.

"You have a month to badger people you've identified as supporters," said the Obama aide, who spoke on condition of anonymity when discussing campaign strategy. "If you have a month, you have a better chance of making sure they're turned out to vote. So it's a huge advantage."

In Iowa, another Obama aide said, "We're not really targeting our best Democrats. We're targeting the ones who don't vote very often."

Across the country, states are liberalizing early voting laws. Officials in some states say that by getting people to cast ballots beforehand, there is less pressure come election day on voting machines and poll workers.

"States perceive it to be in their interests," Gronke said.

Ohio has moved to "no-fault" voting, meaning anyone can vote early for any reason. In the 2004 election cycle, by contrast, voters had to provide an excuse. Georgia has a similar law in effect this season for people who want to vote early in person.

About 5 percent of the electorate voted early in the 2004 presidential election in Georgia. This year, state officials hope the number will climb to 25 percent.

"We are seeing a real increase in the popularity of early voting in Georgia," said Matt Carrothers, a spokesman for the Georgia secretary of state's office.

Convenient though it may be to vote early, some prefer the old-fashioned way.

After coming to pick up a McCain lawn sign here the other day, Ken Arnold, a 65-year-old retiree from Columbus, said that early voting is ripe for abuse.

"There is more fraud created by these so-called people who don't want to wait," he said. "It's just an easy way to let them vote without anyone checking their ID."

Staff writer Doyle McManus contributed to this report.

Economy may not recover quickly

Experience key to securing jobs says UMass professor

ECONOMY from page 2

tors. Now, the government has plans to pass $700 billion dollar legislation that will allow the government to buy assets from the financial sector.

But many more, specifically those in Congress, who are currently debating whether or not the legislation should be passed, do not see this plan as being anything of a solution, but rather as an enormous, expensive and a poor last-ditch effort to avoid recession.

Even if the legislation is passed, the economy will still be weak, possibly for an extended period of time.

"The key element is to watch house prices," Nakosteen said. "If [house prices] stabilize, stop falling, and perhaps even rise a bit, we will be out of the economic woods sooner than later."

So with fewer jobs out there and an abundance of qualified people willing to fight for any decent, well paying job that they can find, what can a college grad do to score a job right out of school?

"The most important thing for a graduate to do is get job experience, in whatever field," Nakosteen said.

"This experience will help them if they either want to move into a different job or occupation later, or if they want to go back to graduate school in order to become more attractive in that part of the job market they want to work in."

Erin Kessell can be reached at ekessell@student.umass.edu

Nursing program to expand

NURSING from page 2

which follows these same guidelines.

"Our comprehensive program gives students a solid academic foundation and valuable clinical experience," associate nursing professor Genevieve E. Chandler said in a statement. "As a result we graduate caring and compassionate practitioners with the knowledge, skills and leadership capabilities to advocate for their patients and promote health and healing across clinical settings and cultural boundaries."

Statistics from the U.S. Health Resources and Services Administration show that nurses who enter the nursing profession with a second degree are four times more likely than other nurses to take up a graduate program – which is a perquisite for teaching.

According to Chandler, the school of nursing is also known for encouraging their students to use their "diverse ethnic, racial and life experiences to enrich the learning process," according to the release.

The experience and different perspectives that students bring to the nursing program helps significantly when dealing with patients from varying backgrounds in nursing workforce environments.

For more information about the program visit www.newcareersinnursing.org

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@dailycollegian.com

Antibacterials can't do the job

CHLAMYDIA from page 2

is introduced to antibiotics that would typically kill the bacterial pathogen, it will then go into a 'stealth mode' and at that stage antibiotics are ineffective against a pathogen."

This is best described when you consider the statistic that eight out of every 10 people who have the sexually transmitted Chlamydia do not know they have it. When Chlamydia is in its "stealth mode," there are no symptoms of illness.

The reason people are unaware of having Chlamydia is that when the bacteria enter into this persistent "stealth mode," they will stay there until conditions are more favorable for the pathogens to leave its dormant state and could then cause damage to the body.

People who have Chlamydia and are prescribed antibacterial medication can not count on some medications to completely kill off the Chlamydia bacteria. It is possible that the medication will cause the bacteria to migrate to a different cell in the body and in turn the bacteria's behavior could lead to inflammation in the lungs or the hardening of arteries.

"Chlamydia literally uses these cells as kind of a Trojan horse to get from place to place, from the lung to the joints and to the walls of blood vessels," Webley said.

Chlamydia already has antibacterial treatments. Stuart and Webley's intentions are to create a vaccine that will prevent Chlamydia from even entering the body.

"Society tends to feel that if there is an antibiotic for Chlamydia then it cannot be that serious of an issue or problem," Webley said. "The problem with this mindset is that if Chlamydia is involved with asthma or atherosclerosis, then having these bacteria in your body could lead to deteriorated health, a strain in the immune system or very possibly death."

Josh Walavitch can be reached at jwalavit@student.umass.edu

Dr. Elizabeth Stuart and Dr. Wilmore Webley have been doing research on Chlamydia at UMass. They hope to find a vaccine for the STI.

Increased efficiency

AWARD from page 2

but there is no actual structure surrounding the tanks.

The smoke stacks are hidden by stainless steel screens that makes them less visible. The screens also reflect the light making it look slightly different at different points during the day.

According to the "Combined Cycle Journal," the arched roof makes the building appear smaller even though the contents are quite high and the glass wall on the south end has special glass that reduces heat while letting in a lot of light with very little glare.

There are also a number of 'green' aspects of the building. A simple cycle power plant uses coal to produce electricity, but is only 36 percent efficient. The new combined cycle power plant uses a gas turbine and reuses the same material several times, generating three times the amount of electricity, making this process 82 percent efficient.

In essence, it produces twice the energy with only half of the emissions, which also makes the plant less expensive in the long run.

"The new plant will save the university money, significantly reduce greenhouse gas emissions and increase the power-generating capacity of the campus," Blaguszewski said.

The central heating plant was built next to the Mullins Center for practical purposes. While the plant is new, the school must still use existing utilities. That meant that the new plant had to be within range of the old heating plant so that it could use the 26-mile campus network of steam lines.

While the plant is not being used yet, it is on schedule to run before winter.

"The Central Heating Plant is in the process of some final testing, and we expect it to go into full operation later this year," Blaguszewski said.

There was a test earlier this month to see how the plant did with everything running, and there also has to be a 30-day reliability test to make sure that the plant can run continuously.

The existing plant is set to be demolished sometime next year.

Emily Reynolds can be reached at ereynold@student.umass.edu

